Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of Mr. H. S. PRESCOTT, Missionary to the Blind, Australia.

☞ There are a few subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN who have not yet sent their remittances for 1893. Will they kindly do so by first post, in order to secure the due despatch of future copies? Full particulars will be found above.

Heartily and lovingly we thank our many readers for their kind remembrance of us, whether expressed at this special season or otherwise. And we desire for them and for ourselves a year of increased and increasing usefulness and blessing. The one prayer which we would place in the forefront of all is that of our Lord's intercession when his hour was come: "That they all may be one; as Thou Father art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." It is our earnest wish, above everything else, that we may help forward this dying desire of our crucified, but risen and glorified Lord.

In an early issue we hope to begin a series of brief papers designed especially for the help and instruction of young Christians. The subjects dealt with will be included under the questions: What is Christ to me? What is the Church of Christ? How may I live the Christian life? It will be seen that these three questions will include subjects upon which it is easy for many to be led astray. The systematic attempts now made to indoctrinate the young into the errors of a thinly-veiled Romanism, on the one hand, and the prevalence of Rationalistic teaching on the other, render an effort of this kind specially necessary just now. To teach truth is the best way to counteract error. The style of the papers will, of course, be adapted to young minds, but it is hoped that they will contain teaching which any intelligent young Christian will be able to receive.

"A Message to the Lord's Messengers" is the title of the new annual letter to the members of the Open-air Mission. The writer is Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, who expounds in brief the words of Micaiah in 1 Kings xxii. 14, "As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak." This is an excellent motto for all who open their mouths in the name of the Lord. Mr. Moule speaks helpfully on the use of experience in the preparation for work. "Let the preacher whose daily duty lies in business life, make proof of the Lord's grace to keep him absolutely true to his blessed will in uprightness, in truth-telling, in absolute fidelity, in thoroughness, and in purity of talk and word, and he will have one of the noblest preparations for preaching always going on." Copies of the letter (price 1d.) may be had from the offices of the Mission, 11, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

It is stated with much confidence that the Government intend, in the coming session of Parliament, to deal with the repression of intemperance. Such action, should it be taken, as we sincerely trust it may, will certainly not be premature. The evils caused by strong drink have for years been growing, until they have assumed proportions that amaze and shock all who take any interest in the well-being—moral and spiritual—of these islands. The magistrates at Limerick have resolved not to grant any new drink licence unless three old licences shall have lapsed.

What a lurid light is thrown upon the contrasts of modern life in the accounts furnished in the newspapers of the Christmas and New Year's festivities. On the one hand, luxurious feasting; on the other, squalid starvation, relieved, it is pleasant to find, by the generosity of the Christian public. Yet great as has been the flow of charity, what a mass of unrelieved misery there must have been all around us! How saddening it is to read of the accounts of such scenes as those which transpired at the Christmas dinner given by the Dockers' Union. Three thousand children were furnished with tickets, but 4350 squeezed themselves into the rooms, and when it was found that many would have to forego their dinner "the previous babble of sound and incessant motion swelled into what was almost a scene of wild disorder and despair." After express wagons had been sent out for additional food, a dinner was given to all, but it was found that some of the children were too ill to eat, having been without food too long. One little patient was clad in nothing more than a thin cotton dress, and a large proportion had neither shoes nor stockings. All this in the wealthiest city in the world.

The many friends of the young poet William Watson must have read with deep interest and gratitude his "New Year's Prayer" in The Daily Chronicle of Monday. It is surely a welcome sign of his recovery from the mental strain that caused his recent breakdown. We fervently echo the aspirations of these noble lines:—

In the blanched night, when all the world lay frore,
And the cold moon, the passionless, looked down
Commiserating man the passion-curst—
Man made in passion and by passion marred—
Through the pale silence, on the New Year's verge,
This prayer fled forth, and trembled up to heaven:—

"O Thou whose homestead is eternity;
Who seest the hunger and the toil of men,
And how the love of life and wife and babe
Is brother of hate and sire of deeds of death;
Give peace—give peace: peace in our time, O Lord!

"But if we needs must march to peace through war,
Spare not the sowers who amid thy corn
Mingled the lethal seed of this red flower;
The whirlwind let them reap who sow the wind:
Make terrible thine arm against all thieves,
Whether in mart or on imperial throne;
And scatter with thy thunder the unjust
Who turn thy pleasance to a wilderness,
To battlefields thy vineyard; with mailed feet
Trampling the joyous vine of life in blood."

The new year has brought a respite to the British ten-year-old operative. Until he reaches his eleventh birthday he may not enter the mine or the factory. Here is a photograph of this young British workman:—

A Lancashire half-timer is a child from eleven to fourteen, who gets up at 5.30 a.m., commences work at the mill at six, in an atmosphere of from eighty to ninety degrees, where his or her attention is kept constantly on the stretch till 12.30, with an interval of thirty minutes for breakfast. Then home to dinner, and to school in the afternoon.

How can the weary child be expected to attend to a dreary book after such a day's work? "Bed in the afternoon" seems more like the treatment required. The friends of the children cannot rest until the age of exemption is twelve at least.

In this matter Austria, Germany, Denmark, and Switzerland were in 1891 already ahead of Great Britain; and now France and Spain have left us in the rear. If we are consistently to claim to be a Christian country, we must at least keep step in the treatment of our own flesh and blood with the Continental nations.

How best to relieve the poor in our great cities has been under discussion in the correspondence columns of The Times, and a pretty general consent has been given to two propositions, viz., that indiscriminate almsgiving does harm, and that proper organisation, or intercommunication between almoners, is required to prevent overlapping. But when the Bishop adds that "a quarter of the money now contributed for the relief of the poor in the East End would suffice if only there existed real co-operation among the distributors of charity," we think he over states the case. At all events, we trust our readers will not be prevented from helping liberally the well-known and accredited workers whose self-denying labours are recorded in our columns.

Strenuous opposition continues to be made to the opening of the "Reformed Spanish Church" in Madrid. Those native Protestants who belong to that community have, for the past twelve years, been endeavouring to secure the consecration of their "Bishop-elect," but the consent of the Irish Bishops is still withheld. By the personal interest, however, of Archbishop Lord Plunket, nearly £10,000 have been subscribed for the new building. We have long been of opinion that the simpler the form of religion in a priest-sick country like Spain the better; and that the progress of the Gospel will be the more rapid in so far as it rids itself of clerical formalities from which the people are longing to be free.

We observe with satisfaction that the Board of Trade has issued a notice on the subject of transmission of seamen's wages, extending the operation of the present scheme to inland places as well as to sea-ports, to which it has hitherto been limited.

With much thankfulness we place on record that progress has been made during the past year in the work of the medical missionary. A complete list appears in this month's Medical Missions at Home and Abroad of every medical missionary at work possessing a British qualification, and his field of operations. It is at once a cause for gratitude and a subject for prayer. It is Britain's answer to the world's cry for help which no enemy nor half-hearted friend can gainsay. It represents a combination of religion and science to an extent which the world has never before seen. Last year the list contained 156 names, this year there are 164. Of these, sixty-three represent workers in China, forty-six in India, thirty-one in Africa, nine in Palestine. For the women of the world who have long waited for the coming of Christ, the dawn is appearing; eighteen women are amongst the noble band.

All the Churches are debtors to the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society. It was instituted in faith, it has been maintained with vigour. In 1871 only seven students were connected with it, now there are twenty-nine. Its income then was £1200, now it is more than £6000. During the last ten years fifty men have gone abroad who were trained by this society. During the past year it lost, through death, one to whom it was most indebted—its secretary, Dr. John Lowe. On his successor much depends. The work must go forward. The medical missionary possesses a key to open many a door for Christ, at which the teaching missionary would knock in vain.

In the "Life of Mrs. Booth" is reprinted a letter written in 1865 to myself, in which she asks, "Will you, my dear brother, define for us what standard we are to put before the people, if we are not to tell them to seek and to believe to be saved from all sin?" I have no copy of my reply, but I think I should have said then, as I certainly say now, that we have no other standard but that of the Lord Jesus, "Be ye perfect as your Father in Heaven is perfect"; and that of his Apostle, "He is able to save them to the uttermost who come unto God by Him; seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."

Mrs. Booth asks, "Where is there the slightest proof that Paul's thorn in the flesh is inbred sin?" I never suggested that it was.

But while the thorn was not inbred sin, it was given on account of inbred sin in the Apostle, lest he "should be exalted above measure by the abundance of the revelations" he had received. If what we have heard some profess—"The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me," had been true of Paul, as it only was of Jesus, there would have been no need of the thorn in his flesh, as there was no need of it in his Lord.

It seems incumbent upon me to enter a kindly note of remonstrance against the inaccurate representation of "Plymouth Brethrenism," whose leading doctrines are stated to be:—

1. The abrogation of the law by the Gospel.
2. The existence of a dual nature in the converted.
3. The imputation of Christ's righteousness to those who are really not righteous.
4. Only-believism.
5. The Second Advent of Christ.

On the first four of these points (says Mr. Booth-Tucker) Mrs. Booth distinctly joined issue with the Brethren, denouncing the doctrines in question as mischievous, dangerous, and totally unscriptural. On the fifth point she declined controversy, on the ground that it was non-essential to salvation.....

1. The first point is misunderstood. The Brethren taught that the law was abrogated as a covenant of works, or as a ground of justification, not as a summary of moral obligation. In this they were and are at one with the Reformers and the Puritan Divines.

2. Scripture definitely teaches two antagonistic forces in the believer—flesh and Spirit (Gal. v. 16, 17). I will not quote Rom. vii., although I have no doubt as to the existence of the law of sin in the members of the most advanced believer. Rom. vi., viii., xii. show that victory is gained by yielding our members to the quickening power of the indwelling Spirit of Him who raised from the dead the individual Jesus — the Christ with his members.

3. The doctrine of imputed righteousness (though not the above travesty of it) is not peculiar to the Brethren, but is one of the leading doctrines of the Reformation, and one of the nine points in the "Basis" of the Evangelical Alliance. The imputation of Christ's righteousness to the believer, and much more than this, is included in John's declaration, "Ye are IN HIM that is true, even in his Son, Jesus Christ" (1 Jno. v. 20· see also Rom. vi. 11, R.V.).

4. If the charge embodied in this composite and uneuphonious word has any meaning, it may be identified with the chorus—

> Only believe and you shall be saved,
> And Heaven is yours for ever.

But I very much doubt if this was ever sung in a distinctively Brethren's meeting. So far as my recollection serves me, it had, like the Salvation Army, a Methodist origin. For myself, I heartily believe it; though I entirely agree with Mrs. Booth that it is not the appropriate message for unconvicted sinners. An error has been met with in individual cases to this effect: "Only believe you are saved and you are saved." And a similar mistake is sometimes found in "holiness" and—"faith-healing" circles—"Believe that you have the blessing, and you have it"—"Believe that you are healed, and you are healed."

5. I scarcely think that Mrs. Booth would have considered "non-essential to salvation" a sufficient reason for disregarding any doctrine; although she showed her wisdom in not making the "blessed hope" a subject of controversy. It had been well if all who believed it had imitated her in this.

Although I am not connected with the "Brethren," amongst them, as amongst other bodies, are some of my oldest and dearest friends. I should not have referred to this unless I had been identified with them by the writer of this book, and consequently with their views, which are inaccurately stated, and stigmatised as "a hodge-podge of doctrine." I do not endorse all their teachings; I deplore their divisions; and in some cases their essential Popery (from which, however, no denomination, perhaps none of us individually, is wholly free); but none have done more in the past century to maintain, to make manifest, and to magnify the essential truths of the Gospel of our salvation than the body referred to. R. C. MORGAN.

Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

THE watch-night service here was largely attended by the people of the neighbourhood, and at the close of the meeting fifty pledges were taken.

On Sunday morning Rev. F. B. Meyer preached from his motto text for the year, "He is able" (2 Tim. i. 12), and afterwards received into church-fellowship seventy persons, of whom very few were transfers from other churches. In the evening he preached to a large audience of young men, a hundred of whom accepted his invitation to a social gathering at the close, when earnest addresses were delivered.

The pleasant Sunday afternoons for men are becoming a great success.

THE SPECIAL IRELAND MISSION.

AT a meeting of the Dublin Committee of the late special mission it was reported that Rev. John M'Neill and Mr. Burke have agreed to devote the months of March and April, at least, to evangelistic work in Ireland. It was also reported that Major Whittle, accompanied by his daughter and Mr. G. C. Stebbins, had accepted the invitation of the committee. Major Whittle and his co-workers promise the months of January and February to the mission. Mr. Merton Smith has also placed himself in the hands of the committee, with Mr. Bell, of Montreal, who accompanied him, and sings the Gospel. Messrs. Smith and Bell have immediate engagements in the North of Ireland, but will be prepared for work under the committee early in February. Letters were read from Revs. G. C. Grubb and C. Inwood regretting inability, owing to previous engagements, to take part in the mission.

It was arranged that Major Whittle, Mr. Stebbins, and Miss Whittle should hold a week's meetings in the Metropolitan Hall, Lower Abbey-street, commencing New Year's Day. The committee confirmed Major Whittle's acceptance of an invitation to hold a mission in the Town Hall, Kingstown, which is to commence on Sunday, January 15.

On Sunday last Mr. Merton Smith, assisted by Mr. O. Ritchie Bell, began evangelistic services in Railway-street Presbyterian Church, Lisburn. The first meeting was held at 8 a.m., when the Lord was manifestly present, making the unsaved willing and anxious to come to Christ.

There was a large congregation at noon in the church. In the afternoon a meeting was held in the Lecture Hall for children and young people, and was largely attended. The largest meeting of the day was in the church at 8 p.m. At all these services the various churches in the town were represented.

There was a spirit of earnestness and power—much to gladden the hearts of God's children, and to cause them to expect large blessing through the visit of these brethren to Lisburn.

THE YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE.

ON Wednesday afternoon last week the Duchess of Teck opened a bazaar in St. James's Hall, in connection with the Young Helpers' League, of which she is president. The hall had been transformed for the nonce into an old English village, with gabled houses covered with snow, and a vista of winter landscape stretching away behind the platform. The Duchess was accompanied by Princess May, They were welcomed by Lord Kinnaird and Dr. Barnardo, in behalf of whose institutions the League members work.

After an address from Lord Kinnaird, Mrs. Evered Poole, the chief warden of the League, explained its origin, history, and present position, remarking that its chief object is to bridge over the tremendous chasm that yawns between the East-end and the West-end. There are now 12,500 helpers, 56 habitations, and 175 ladies and gentlemen who are local presidents. Each habitation aims to collect sufficient money to endow a cot in Her Majesty's Hospital for Waif Children at Stepney, and there are already in existence ten such cots, each called after the name of the lodge or habitation that supports it.

The Duchess distributed prizes to those young helpers who had sent in the best work, and new members of that body were presented with silver badges. The Duchess and her daughter then inspected the various stalls, with their useful or ornamental contents, and visited the workshop fitted up in an adjoining apartment, where boys from Dr. Barnardo's Home were busily engaged in carpentering, wheel-making, brush-making, printing. They also examined a model of a ward of Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Children at Stepney Causeway. There were little patients in each cot.

After this the boys of the Leopold House Home went through military and naval drill, and gave with bells a very charming imitation of village chimes, the girls from the Village Home, Ilford, following with their musical drill which was a pleasing success.

The proceedings were very interesting, sales seemed vigorous, and the bazaar was kept open on the succeeding day.

"BEHOLD THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH."

TO THE CONVENERS OF CHRISTIAN CONFERENCES IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

"But at midnight there is a cry,
BEHOLD THE BRIDEGROOM!
Come ye forth to meet Him."—Matt. xxv. 6. (R.V.).

DEAR BRETHREN,—As "partakers with you in the tribulation and kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ," may we be permitted to suggest for your consideration the present urgent need for sounding forth an alarm to a slumbering Church, and to the world that lieth in the wicked one, in view of the accumulating indications that "the LORD is at hand"?

I.—The stirrings among the Jewish people of a national life that has lain dormant for many many centuries, but which is now displayed and asserted in various quarters of the world and under manifold aspects, point to the blossoming of the long barren fig tree, and to the early fulfilment of the xxxvii. chapter of Ezekiel. Meanwhile, in the spiritual sphere, we are witnessing the conversion, not only of some notable witnesses to the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth, but of considerable numbers of Jews in places widely apart, to the joy of missionaries who had long laboured amongst them without much visible fruit of their labours.

II.—What lover of Gospel truth can shut his eyes to the great falling away, into superstition and formalism on the one hand, and unto unbelief on the other, which has characterised the past generation, as well as the time in which we now live? Many are drawn aside into the practices of the Roman apostasy, many more into doubting the authority of Holy Scripture. Rome is working ceaselessly, with a vast army of devoted followers, to complete her destiny, and then to meet her doom; whilst in Protestant churches and colleges Christ's foes are found in his own household. And lest we should be charged with taking an insular and narrow view of the position of the Church of Christ, we have but to turn to America and to the Continent of Europe, to convince ourselves that the pretensions of the Papacy were never more audaciously pushed forward; whilst Puritan simplicity in life and worship was never at so low an ebb in nations which formerly were permeated with pure Scriptural teaching.

III.—If, as we believe, the "early rain" was at Pentecost, is not the world now receiving the "latter rain" before the harvest is all ingathered? (James v, 7, 8.) What is the present outburst of missionary activity on behalf of the Jews, the Mohammedans, and the Heathen, but a further confirmation and sign that we are rapidly approaching the consummation of the Christian era? "The blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great GOD and Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus ii. 13, R.V.) exerts a most powerful twofold influence upon believing hearts. It is an incentive to holiness; "Everyone that hath this hope set on Him, purifieth himself even as He is pure" (1 John iii. 3, R.V.); and it is the greatest stimulus to missionary zeal and self-sacrifice. We seem to hear a proclamation of the word in Rev. xix. 7, "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready," in every successive conference for promoting Scriptural holiness; and surely we behold obedience, on an unwonted scale, to our Saviour's parting command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation" (Mark xvi. 15), as witness the numerous offers of service on most perilous fields of labour from men and women in every rank of society.

We appeal to you, therefore, beloved friends, to take into your prayerful consideration the value of a united testimony to the imminence of the stupendous events which attend and follow our LORD'S appearing; and, if it seem good to you, to make the Second Coming of Christ a central subject at your conference in the year 1893; if so be that God by his Blessed Spirit may honour such testimony to the coming glory of his dear Son, for the arousing of a vast number of believers out of worldliness and sloth, and that a multitude of the unsaved who have "hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth," amid the increasing insecurity of property and the development of anarchy, yet "may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man" (Luke xxi. 26 and 36), by "laying hold of the hope set before them" (Heb. vi. 18), whilst the day of salvation still shines upon them.

We are, dear Brethren,

ONWARD EVER.

ONWARD ever! take this motto,
Bind it round thy heart to-day:
See, time's tide, with ceaseless flowing,
Bears thee on its breast away.
Yes, another year is added
To the number gone before;
And the thoughts, the words, the actions—
Though to thee forgotten lore—
All are gathered, weighed, and counted
On the great eternal shore.

Onward ever! still pursuing
In the path where duty leads;
Let thy soul be large with mercy,
Stifle not the prayer she pleads.
Light the darkness, cheer the weary,
Throw the arms of love around,
Sow the seeds of truth and wisdom,
With hope's flowerets strew the ground;
Yet awhile, the fruits shall blossom,
And in heavenly bowers be found.

Onward ever! and whilst lending
Strength to weary, sight to blind,
Thou, thyself, with strength increasing,
Shalt Life's pathway clearer find;
And, the wreaths for others twining,
Peace shall cluster round thy brow,
And the light for others shining
Joy's bright smiles shall o'er thee throw,
Till no cloud shalt cast a shadow,
In the land to which you go.

Onward ever! firmly treading,
Crush beneath thy feet the thorn;
Weeds and briars of sin besetting,
Let them by the roots be torn.
Not depending on thy merits
To attain to bliss above,
Still let Faith within thy spirit
Be a Faith that works by Love,
Winning gems of fadeless splendour
That shall grace thy crown above.

Onward ever! up the mountain,
Through the valley, o'er the plain;
In the Saviour meekly trusting,
That thy life be not in vain;
Calmly on his love relying,
Joyful, then, thou'll greet the day
When Time's tide shall cease to bear thee
On its restless breast away,
And to hail thy birth in glory,
Saints shall sing their welcome lay.

LUCY BATHAM.

Leighton College, Southport.

A HYMN OF PRAISE.

A NEW song unto Thee,
Oh, tune my lips to sing!
Thy witness I would be,
My Saviour and my King—
The witness to some longing heart
How good, how pitiful Thou art!

The changeful days go by,
The years so swiftly roll—
But, changeless, Thou art nigh,
Salvation of my soul!
And year by year revealeth still
How Love outblossoms in thy will.

I thank Thee for the past—
The way thy hand hath led;
I praise Thee that at last,
Recalling seasons fled,
I know thy grace was shining o'er
Even the shadow-scenes of yore.

Oh, let thy Name be blest
For all life's sunlit flowers,
For comfort, joy, and rest,
That wreathe the present hours!
All praise for countless mercies given,
Our Father-God, Who art in heav'n!

I thank Thee that my heart
Can trust for future days;
The living Lord Thou art,
Thy Will appoints my ways;
For coming good, for joys to be,
My Shepherd, sing I praise to Thee!

And higher still the chord
Shall echo far and wide
That tells Thy love, my Lord,
Redeemer, Crucified!
And pardoned souls shall swell the strain—
"No sinner seeks Thy face in vain."

Take up your trembling notes,
Oh, saints within his light!
Through earth and heaven floats
The anthem infinite—
The music deathless ages ring:
Thine is the glory, Christ, the King!

A HANDSOME GIFT.—"A Friend" has promised £500 towards the rebuilding and extension fund of the Paddington-green Children's Hospital.

A New Year's Greeting.

"The Lord Jesus be with thy spirit." 2 Tim. iv. 22.

Usually, when people wish each other a happy New Year, they mean a year of happy circumstance, a year of gladsome event. But that is not the first thing to be thought of. The great thing is to come out of a New Year better in soul and character than when we entered it.

We can never tell what a New Year may bring; how it may open out; what consequences it may entail. We can glance backwards, but to see into the future is beyond us. We have no means of determining the course of events, or the turn circumstances may take. We have not gone this way heretofore. But our true life is not a life of circumstance; nor is our true good at the mercy of events. These may serve as a scaffolding which, though essential to the rearing of the building, forms no part of the fabric itself.

The vital point concerns the spirit we are of—all else is drapery and detail. It is not a question of escaping this or gaining that. Rather it resolves itself into a question of inward demeanour: How am I to comport myself in this New Year of vicissitude, which greets me with face as expressionless as that of the Sphinx? Have I so learned Christ that, let what will befall, the light of the Christly spirit shall gleam through all? If losses are appointed me, shall I bear them in the Christian spirit? Or, if bereavements, if new trials and infirmities, shall I so meet them, in the temper and mind of my Saviour, that, however rough the outward aspect of the year may be, it shall indeed prove a blessed and successful New Year?

Paul's salutation to Timothy, as given above, accentuates this point. Paul had been brought before Nero the second time. The Second Epistle to Timothy, therefore, ranks as a farewell letter. Its whole style, tone, and contents mark the man whose house is set in order. How calm he is, how soul-sustained, how assured of an amaranthine crown, how ready to be offered!

And how tender! How his heart goes forth to his dearly beloved Timothy! He would like to see him before winter set in; but, whether or no, he has a salutation to send, the last that is recorded, and it is this: "The Lord Jesus be with thy spirit."

No one knew better than Paul did what it was to have been weather-beaten and storm-tossed. More than the far-famed Ulysses himself had he been tossed on life's billowy sea. Even then he knew that he was appointed as a sheep for the slaughter. But none of these things move him. The Lord Jesus is with his spirit, and hence he dwells on the sunny heights of jubilation. And, as enriched himself, he would have Timothy enriched in like manner.

To the eye of Paul loomed increasing trials for the infant Church. Errors were creeping in; evil men were multiplying. Timothy would have rough weather and stormy seas to encounter. But Paul's greeting discounts all. The spirit companionised by Jesus is more than conqueror.

I. There is a peculiar depth and richness of meaning in the form of this salutation.

It occurs nowhere else. It calls attention to the most mysterious and distinctive feature in the human constitution. It presents the Lord Jesus in the closest possible relation to his redeemed. For whatever may be the precise distinction between the soul and the spirit, there can be no doubt that the spirit is the innermost part of man's nature, and that in which he specially holds fellowship with God. Hence, if we may speak of health of body as good and health of soul as better, health of spirit is best of all. The concerns of the spirit are supreme in the case of each one of us; and how much this involves probably none but God can appreciate. It is in virtue of the spirit in us that we take rank above the animal, that we are capable of religious thought and feeling, of conscience and responsibility, and that we hear, even in an unconverted state, at times the footfall of the Almighty.

Paul's salutation, therefore, concerns the marrow of need and the acme of blessing. "The Lord Jesus be with thy spirit." Then, though thy body be much mauled about, and thy soul pierced with many sorrows, thou shalt have abounding compensation in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting.

II. The precise character of this salutation will appear from a consideration of the temple of Solomon.

The temple was, like man's constitution, threefold. There was the outer court, for the general congregation, answering to the body; the inner court, for the officiating priests, answering to the soul; and the innermost court, the Holy of Holies, answering to the spirit.

The parallel here is much closer than one might suppose. Take, for example, this innermost court. Who dwelt there? The Lord only. Unless He were there the chamber was vacant. Is it not so with respect to the spirit of man? Yes, the proof is complete. At the centre of unrenewed Being is a vacuum, a void, a sense of lack, a feeling of desolation that nothing can relieve. Man's nature is such that whatever the body and soul may have, the inner sense of emptiness remains. The Lord has deserted the temple, and the glory of the Shekinah is gone.

Pre-eminent, then, among greetings is this one:—"The Lord Jesus be with thy spirit." The spirit is his peculiar abode. No person or thing can take his place. The spirit is vacant which He does not inhabit, and, if vacant, then desolate.

Another instructive feature in the parallel is this, that the holiest of all had no natural light. There was no window in the Holy of Holies. Unless the Lord himself was the light of it, and unless the glory of God did illumine it, this innermost court was outer darkness.

How true is this of the spirit of man! No natural light can penetrate the dark spirit. All the wisdom of the schools will not furnish you with so much as a spark of spiritual illumination. "The Lord Jesus be with thy spirit"; for no one has an illuminated spirit whose experience this is not.

III. The bearings of this greeting are very precious. If the Lord Jesus be with thy spirit, thou shalt never be solitary. However lonely thy path in life may become (and it has grown lonely indeed with some of us), there will be the heart-cheer of living fellowship with the Lord—a portion more sufficing by far than any amount of earth's conviviality and friendships.

Another result will be that in his light thou shalt see light. How many lose heart in the battle of life! They bear up bravely for a time, and then despondence ending in despair begins. As one after another of the footlights of this world expires, they ask themselves, "Why struggle on? Why battle more? Is life worth living? It is not. We have no heart left for further action. Let us drift with the stream, and give ourselves over to remorseless fate."

Not thus shalt thou ever hold soliloquy with thyself "if the Lord be with thy spirit." His light is "the life of men"; his outshining is everlasting brightness. No beam emanating from the uncreated light can ever expire. Let the worst come to the worst, yet cannot life be shorn to thee of its meaning or existence of its sweetness.

What can better bring out the value of our New Year's greeting than the demeanour of Paul, the aged, in the circumstances under which he sent it? Nero's brutal sentence has no terrors for him. He greets Timothy from his own felt experience of good. The greeting is a legacy of priceless worth. "The Lord Jesus be with thy spirit." That is all, and that is everything. The Lord fulfil the greeting to every reader of The Christian, that whatever the New Year may bring of circumstance and event of joy and sorrow, all may be sanctified and transfigured by temple service and Divine communion.

AN OFFER FROM MR. MOODY.

Mr. Moody has returned from his long and successful religious campaign in Europe with ever deepening conviction of the great need of trained Christian workers in the white harvest fields of the world. In England, Ireland, and conservative Scotland the same conviction became manifest during his labours in their great cities. The perplexing question has been how to meet the crying need. One of the best practical answers to the question is being given by the organisation of Christian training-schools, where earnest men may be fitted, by the most direct and practical training, for immediate service in the very fields where the need is greatest, and where the waiting harvest is most abundant. The blessing of God has so manifestly attended these efforts, that even the doubtful and timid have been constrained to approve and support the movement.

The latest of these institutions, organised in this country by Mr. Moody and under his presidency, is the Northfield Ladies' Training School, just closing the first term of its third year. It was with great joy that all connected with this school welcomed home its dear President, as one rescued from a watery grave, and rejoiced with him in the success that has crowned its work. In his mind the question of the practicability of such schools has been finally settled.

The one thing he now insists upon is to press forward, enlarge the work, and multiply the workers. He would have this Northfield school enlarged, and its benefits and blessings extended to greater numbers of earnest Christian women who long to do better service for Christ and humanity.

To this end Mr. Moody proposes to open more rooms for students at the regular rates of fifty dollars per term of three months, and to continue his special offer of admitting twenty-five students chosen and sent by societies of Christian Endeavour at the reduced rate of thirty-five dollars each per term. In addition to this, Mr. Moody announces that a friend has placed at his disposal ten free scholarships for the next term, to be given to such worthy applicants as may be recommended. These scholarships cover all expense of room, board, and tuition. This rare opportunity will no doubt be eagerly and gratefully accepted.

Full particulars as to course of study and terms of admission may be obtained on application to the Principal, Miss Lillie L. Sherman, East Northfield, Mass.—New York Evangelist.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.—The life-boats of the Royal National Life-boat Institution, of which there are now 305, have been unusually busy during the past year, which has been a stormy and unsettled one. The boats were called out on service 335 times, resulting in the rescue of 834 persons from the peril of drowning, and, humanly speaking, in the majority of cases from death itself. The cost of maintaining the institution's fleet of life-boats is very heavy, and the annual subscriptions and assured income are altogether inadequate for the purpose. More help is thereore much needed. The secretary is Mr. Charles Dibdin, 14, John-street, Adelphi, London.

Mr. Moody's Story of the Sea.

BY REV. H. B. HARTZLER.

The return of Mr. D. L. Moody to his home and schools at Northfield, after one of his long evangelistic campaigns, is always an event of interest in our quiet town. His latest return, a week ago, was an ovation, for he came as one snatched from the jaws of death, after an absence of fourteen months in Europe and the Orient.

News of his coming had preceded him, and when his train reached Mt. Hermon station, near ten o'clock at night, about 300 young men, students and teachers of the school there, swarmed around and through the train, with torches, music, and cheers, to welcome their friend. At the next station, as he stepped from the train with his wife, he dropped into the heart of another company of friends, neighbours, and students, who had come in conveyances from various places to speak their welcome. From thence, on the way home in his carriage, he could see, beyond the Connecticut River, all the seminary buildings and many private dwellings blazing with a glad illumination — innumerable "lights in the windows" for the home-coming friend. By the roadside stood, under the light of a lifted torch, the ladies of the Northfield Training School, cheering, singing, and waving white handkerchiefs as the Moody carriage passed.

Near his own home Mr. Moody found the street blockaded by a solid phalanx of three or four hundred young ladies of the seminary, with teachers and friends, who kept the whole procession at bay until they had given a joyful welcome with beautiful song. Though near the midnight hour, I noticed that, instead of driving to his own door, Mr. Moody's carriage passed up another street to the home of his blessed mother, now nearly ninety years old. She must wait not a moment longer to see the face of her boy!

On Sunday morning, following the night of his arrival at Northfield, Mr. Moody told the story of the disaster and rescue of the Spree, the church being crowded in anticipation of his coming. He said he would do on this occasion what he had never done before—make his own the subject of discourse. He thought it might serve a better purpose than a sermon just then, and it would save him from being called upon to tell the story to each neighbour and friend individually. The story was told with suppressed emotion and with a glow of devout gratitude to God, making impressions never to be forgotten.

My last day in London (said Mr. Moody), was a pleasant one; a day of promise it might have been called, for the sun shone out brightly after some of those dark, foggy days so common in London. A company of friends gathered at the station to see me off, and I suggested that they sing my favourite song, "Then shall my heart keep singing," but they said they did not feel like singing that just then! I was the only one in the little group who seemed to feel like singing. I couldn't sing with my voice, but deep down in my heart I sang, for I was going home—home to meet my loved ones!

You land people have not, perhaps, a very clear idea of what those great Atlantic steamers are like. I embarked on the Spree, a vessel about 490 feet long, with 700 passengers on board, representing Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Russia, Hungary, and other countries, besides our own. There were many from all parts of our own country, returning from trips of business and pleasure. There were persons of all ages and both sexes—old fathers going over to America to spend their last days with their sons who had gone before to build up homes in this land of promise; men and women in middle life; and many children, some of the brightest and most beautiful I have ever seen.

When about three days on our voyage, I remember, I was lying on my couch, as I generally do at sea, on my good fortune, and feeling very thankful to God. I considered myself a very fortunate man, for in all my extensive travels by land and sea I had never been in any accident of a serious nature. I thought of how my wife and children had escaped the cholera, and the quarantine at New York. The steamer that sailed before theirs, and the one that followed after, both had cholera aboard and were detained in quarantine, while the one that bore my loved ones, being a swifter sailer, reached New York and landed her passengers before either of the other two had arrived.

While engaged with these grateful thoughts, I was startled by a terrible crash and shock, as if the vessel had been driven on a rock. I did not at first feel much anxiety—perhaps I was too ill to think much about it. But my son jumped from his berth and rushed on deck. He was back again in a few moments, exclaiming that the shaft was broken and the vessel sinking. I did not at first believe it could be so bad, but concluded to dress and go on deck. The report was only too true. The captain told the affrighted passengers, who had rushed on deck, that there was no danger, and some of the second-cabin passengers returned to their berths, only to be driven out again by the inrushing water, leaving everything behind them.

The officers and crew did all they could to save the vessel. But it was soon found that the pumps were useless, for the water poured into the ship too rapidly to be controlled. There was nothing more in the power of man to do. We were utterly, absolutely helpless. We could only stand still on the poor, drifting, sinking ship, and look into our watery graves. All this time, unknown to the passengers, the officers were making preparations for the last resort. The life-boats were all put in readiness, provisions prepared, life-preservers in hand, the officers armed with revolvers to enforce their orders, and the question was evidently being debated in their minds whether to launch the boats at once, or wait. The sea was so heavy that the boats could hardly have lived in it. Two of the passengers had loaded revolvers ready to blow out their brains if the vessel should go down, preferring death by bullet to death by drowning.

At noon the captain told us he thought he had the water under control, and was in hopes of drifting in the way of some passing vessel. The ship's bow was now high in the air, while the stern seemed to settle more and more. The sea was very rough, and the ship rolled from side to side, with fearful lurches. If she had pitched violently but once, the bulkheads must have burst, and the end come. The captain tried to keep up hope by telling us we should probably drift in the way of a ship by three o'clock that Saturday afternoon, but the night closed upon us without a sign of a sail.

THAT WAS AN AWFUL NIGHT,

the darkest in all our lives; seven hundred men, women, and children waiting for the doom that was settling upon us. No one dared to sleep. We were all together in the saloon of the first cabin—Jews, Protestants, Catholics, and sceptics—although I doubt if at that time there were any sceptics among us. The agony and suspense were too great for words. With blanched faces and trembling hearts the passengers looked at each other, as if trying to read what no one dared to speak. Rockets flamed into the sky, but there was no answer. We were drifting out of the track of the great steamers. Every hour seemed to increase the danger of our situation.

Sunday morning dawned, without help or hope. Up to that time no suggestion of religious services had been made. To have done that would almost certainly have produced a panic. In the awful suspense and dread that prevailed, a word about religion would have suggested the most terrible things to the poor souls. It was necessary to divert their minds, if possible, or they would break under the strain. But as that second night came on we held a prayer-meeting with the concurrence of the captain. Everybody attended, and I think everybody prayed, sceptics and all. Surely the cries of the dear little children were heard in heaven.

With one arm clasping a pillar, to steady myself on the reeling vessel, I tried to read the ninety-first Psalm, and we prayed that God would still the raging of the sea and bring us to our desired haven. It was a new Psalm to me from that hour. The eleventh verse touched me very deeply. It was like a voice of Divine assurance, and it seemed a very real thing, as I read: "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." Surely He did it. I read also from Psalm cvii. 20—31. One lady thought those words must have been written for the occasion, and afterwards asked to see the book for herself.

I was passing through a new experience. I had thought myself superior to the fear of death. I had often preached on the subject, and urged Christians to realise this victory of faith. During our Civil War I had been under fire without fear. I was in Chicago during the great cholera epidemic, and went around with the doctors visiting the sick and dying. Where they could go to look after the bodies of men, I said, I could go to look after their souls. I remember a case of small-pox where the flesh had literally dropped away from the backbone, yet I went to the bedside of that poor sufferer again and again, with Bible and prayer, for Jesus' sake. In all this I had no fear of death.

But on the sinking ship it was different. There was no cloud between my soul and my Saviour. I knew my sins had been put away, and that if I died there it would be only to wake up in heaven. That was all settled long ago. But as my thoughts went out to my loved ones at home—my wife and children, anxiously waiting for my coming, my friends on both sides of the sea, the schools and all the interests so dear to me, and realised that perhaps the next hour would separate me for ever from all these, so far as this world was concerned—I confess it almost broke me down. It was

THE DARKEST HOUR OF MY LIFE!

I could not endure it. I must have relief, and relief came in prayer. God heard my cry, and enabled me to say from the depth of my soul, "Thy will be done!" It was all settled. Sweet peace came to my heart. Let it be Northfield or Heaven. It made no difference now. I went to bed and almost immediately fell asleep, and never slept more soundly in all my life. Out of the depths I cried unto the Lord, and He heard me and delivered me from all my fears. I can no more doubt that God gave answer to my prayer for relief, than I can doubt my own existence.

About three o'clock at night I was aroused from my sound sleep by the voice of my son. "Come on deck, father," he said. I followed him, and he pointed toward a far-off light, rising and sinking on the sea. It was a messenger of deliverance to us. It proved to be the light of the steamer Lake Huron, whose look-out had seen our flaming signals of distress, and supposed it was a vessel in flames. Oh, the joy of that moment, when those 700 despairing passengers beheld the approaching ship! Who can ever forget it?

But now the question was, Can this small steamer tow the helpless Spree a thousand miles to Queenstown? Every movement was watched with the intensest anxiety and prayer. It was a brave and perilous undertaking. The two vessels were at last connected by two great cables. If a storm arose these would snap like thread, and we must be left to our fate. But I had no fear. God would finish the work He had begun. The waves were calmed; the cables held; the steamer moved in the wake of the Huron. There were storms all about us, but they came not nigh our broken ship. Seven days after the accident, by the good hand of our God upon us, we were able to hold a joyous thanksgiving service in the harbour of Queenstown—just one week ago to-day, as I stand here among the friends and neighbours I love so well. The rescuing ship that God sent to us in our distress had just sufficient power to tow our vessel, and just enough coal to take her into port! There was nothing to spare! Less would have been insufficient. Her captain also is a man of prayer, and he besought God's help to enable them to accomplish their dangerous and difficult task. God answered the united prayer of the distressed voyagers, and brought them to their desired haven.

The nervous strain of those eight days and nights of suspense was something fearful. It was more than anyone could long endure without help. The minds of several passengers gave way under the strain, and they had to be put under restraint. A young Austrian, who had left his betrothed in Vienna, leaped overboard in despair, and was drowned before our eyes, in spite of all we could do. It was a most pathetic sight to see a young mother, with two beautiful children, sitting in dumb anguish during the first forty-eight hours, never taking her eyes off her little ones; and if the ship had gone down, I have no doubt she would have gathered them to her bosom and gone down with them in her arms. There was a Russian Jew, who had taken passage without the knowledge of his relatives at home. It was pitiful to see his distress, as he confessed his sin, beat his breast, and denounced himself as

THE JONAH OF THE COMPANY.

Kneeling upon the deck, with tears streaming down his cheeks, he cried to Jehovah not to visit the punishment of his sin upon all those unfortunate people.

At the conclusion of his thrilling story, which I have but partially and very imperfectly reported, Mr. Moody read the two Psalms referred to, with new and deeper apprehension of their preciousness and power. This unique Sunday's service, shared by Mr. Moody's friends and neighbours, and some 700 students and teachers of his schools, will not soon be forgotten.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,

Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

THE VALLEY OF ACHOR.—Joshua vii.

Was it a sudden gust of temptation that swept Achan before it when, with the rest of the host, he entered Jericho? or was it that some long growth of unjudged evil flowered into that act which has made his name a reproach to all after time? It is impossible to say. Only the terribleness of his fate seems to indicate something more than a transient yielding to sin. This, at least, is clear, that in the late afternoon of the day of Jericho's capture, and before the lurid flames of its conflagration rose to heaven, he had pilfered one of those robes of exquisite texture for which the plain of Shinar was famous, together with gold and silver—the latter coined, the former in a wedge, and had borne them surreptitiously away.

We can imagine him bringing them into his tent, where he probably found it necessary to acquaint his children with his deed, for if they had not been party to the crime, and its concealment, they could not have been involved in his terrible fate. With their help he dug a hole in the sand and hid the spoil, which by the special ban of Joshua had been devoted to Jehovah.

The whole proceeding had been conducted in such absolute secresy, and he was so confident of the collusion of the inmates of his tent, that, amid the general inquiry for the thief, he braved detection, and held his peace until the unerring finger of God pointed him out, as if it said, "Thou art the man."

But what anguish he must have suffered in the meanwhile! Long before his deed was unmasked, conscience had borne witness against him, and the lot had been cast within the circle of his heart. The scene in which he played so prominent a part on the plains of Jericho was rehearsed where no crowds of awestruck spectators gathered round, no blanched faces looked upon his, and no horror-stricken messengers ran to the tent to unearth the hidden treasure.

When the first excitement of his new acquisition had passed, and the fever had subsided, the dull heavy sense of wrong-doing began to gnaw at his heart. In the lull of reaction, conscience spoke, and when he marched with the rest up the long ravine to Ai, when he saw his comrades turn to flee, when he joined in the breathless rush back to the camp, when he met the relatives of the six-and-thirty men who had fallen in the battle, when he saw the dismay beneath which Joshua and the elders of Israel were overwhelmed—he knew, by an unerring spiritual perception, that it was his sin that was bringing shame and disaster to Israel. It must have been a positive relief to him when his secret was torn from his breast, and there was no need for him to preserve an appearance of comparative unconcern. Let us turn aside and study this scene in which Achan's sin was detected and dealt with, for whilst we do so we may learn something of the action of that sharp two-edged sword which pierces to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and discerns the thoughts and intents of the heart.

I.—WE SHOULD GRIEVE MORE FOR SIN THAN FOR ITS RESULTS.

Joshua rent his clothes and fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of the Lord until the evening, smarting from the disgrace inflicted upon his people, and aghast at the results which would probably ensue so soon as the tidings had been bruited abroad. Judging simply by human standards, the very worst consequences might be expected when the nations of Canaan suddenly discovered that the Israelite hosts were not invulnerable; much as when the Aztecs saw the first Spaniard fall from his horse, and realised that they were not, as they supposed, demigods, who had alighted on their shores from some celestial sphere. This was his fear, that the Canaanites and all the inhabitants of the land should hear of it, and compass them round, and cut off their name from the earth.

As soon as we have committed sin, we look furtively round to see whether we have been watched, and then we take measures to tie up the consequences which would naturally accrue. Failing this, we are deeply humiliated. Saul was much more moved by his desire for Samuel to worship the Lord with him, and so honour him in the presence of the elders of Israel, than by his disobedience to the Divine will. We dread the consequences of sin, more than sin; discovery more than misdoing; what others may say and do more than the look of pain and sorrow on the face that looks out on us from the encircling throng of glorified spirits.

But with God it is not so. It is our sin, one of the most grievous features in which is our failure to recognise its intrinsic evil, that presses Him down, as a cart groans beneath its load. The boy grieves because sickness shuts him away from his companions, the excursion on the river, the game in the woods, the swift gliding over the deep-blue ice on the ringing skate; but the mother grieves over the disease, of which the burning fever or the laboured breath is the symptom. In the heart of the mother sorrow for the disappointment of the child is almost obliterated by the eager anxiety that bends over his bed.

Very few of us realise what sin is, because we have had no experience of a character without it, either in ourselves or in others. People speak of being entirely delivered from sin, but they know not what they say, or whereof they affirm. None that has been born of woman, save One, has ever had the experience of a perfectly sinless character. Babes seem pure as before the unfolding lily has been freckled or soiled by contact with earth-stains, but they had been purer; Christian maidens are sweet and lovely, but they had been lovelier; saints seem blameless and harmless, but they had been saintlier—if they had not been originally connected with a fallen race. And it is partly because we have never met with an absolutely sinless character that our conceptions of the evil of sin are so partial.

It is, of course, possible to learn something of the exceeding sinfulness of sin by viewing the agony, heart-break, and shame, of the dying Lord; by remembering its infinite cost to the love of God; by recalling the comparisons of Scripture, in which the most loathsome forms of disease are its chosen types; or by considering the worm that never dies, the fire that is never quenched. And yet the true way to a proper realisation of sin is to cultivate the friendship of the Holy God. The more we know Him, the more utterly we shall enter into his thought about the subtle evil of our heart. We shall find sin lurking where we least anticipated, in our motives, in our religious acts, in our hasty judgment of others, in our want of tender, sensitive, pitying love, in our censorious condemnation of those who may be restrained by the action of a more sensitive conscience than our own, from claiming all that we claim to possess. We shall learn that every look, tone, gesture, word, thought, which is not consistent with perfect love, indicates that the virus of sin has not yet been expelled from our nature, and we shall come to mourn not so much for the results of sin, as for the sin itself. This is the godly sorrow that needs not to be repented of. Here are tears which angels catch in God's tear-bottles. In hours like these we approach most nearly the world where sin is hated, not because it cost us Paradise, for that has been more than replaced, but because it is sin.

II.—WE SHOULD SUBMIT OURSELVES TO THE JUDGMENT OF GOD.

"And the Lord said unto Joshua, Get thee up; wherefore liest thou thus upon thy face?" It was as if He said, "Thou grievest for the effect, grieve rather for the cause. I am well able to preserve my people from the assaults of their foes, though all Canaan beset them, and I am equally able to maintain the honour of my name. These are not the main matters for concern, but that a worm is already gnawing at the root of the gourd, and a plague is already eating out the vitals of the people whom I have redeemed. With my right arm I will screen you from attack, whilst you give yourselves to the investigation and destruction of the accursed thing."

Whenever there is perpetual failure in our life, we may be sure that there is some secret evil lurking in heart and life, just as diphtheria breaking out repeatedly in a household is an almost certain indication that there is an escape of sewer gas from the drains. It may not always be possible for us to go direct to the spot where the evil has made its lair. But we may be sure that there is an accursed thing somewhere in our midst, and that, therefore, we cannot stand before our enemies. Somewhere there is a fault in the insulation of the wire through which the currents of Divine power and grace come to us; and it is useless to pray that they may be renewed until we have repaired the defect. Much of the time spent in public and secret prayer would be better employed by subjecting our dealings with each other and our walk before God to a searching scrutiny. It is a mistake to be on the face pleading with God for a blessing, and especially for the blessing of Pentecost, whilst there is some evil thing in our hearts needing to be dealt with ere the Divine energies can come to us. It is not a question of God's willingness or unwillingness, but of the laws of the spiritual world, which make Him unable to ally Himself with consciously-permitted sin. "Neither will I be with you any more, except ye destroy the accursed from among you."

Hast thou, reader, been beaten back in thy Christian work, or exposed to perpetual defeat by some petty temptation? Then it would be well to call a halt, not to hold a prayer-meeting, but to order thy heart-life before God, that, if thou canst not discern the evil thing that lies at the root of thy trouble, He may discern it for thee, whose eyes are as a flame of fire and in his hand a sharp sword.

(1) In searching out the causes of failure we must be willing to know the worst, and this is almost the hardest condition. Ostrich-like, we all hide our heads in the sand from unwelcome tidings. It is the voice of an iron resolution, or of mature Christian experience, that can say without faltering, Let me know the worst. But as we bare ourselves to the good Physician let us remember that He is our husband, that his eyes film with love and pity, that He desires to indicate the source of our sorrow only to remove it, so that for Him and for us there may be the vigour of perfect soul-health and consequent bliss.

He will communicate the result of his search by methods which are known to his delicate tenderness. Do not get into a fever. Do not rush from one to another for advice. Do not bewilder yourself with trying to detect his voice amid the tumult of voices that are sure to clamour for hearing when you bend down your ear to listen. "Be still and know." The responsibility of showing you your mistake is wholly with Him if you have placed all in his hands. Leave it there and wait. If He has anything to say He will say it clearly, unmistakably, and certainly. If He says nothing, it is because the set time has not come. But to-morrow, in the morning, He will speak to you and tell you all. In the meanwhile, wait and trust.

(2) When God deals with sin He traces back its genealogy. Notice the particularity with which twice over the sacred historian gives the list of Achan's progenitors. It is always, "Achan, the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah" (1, 16-18).

There in the early morning, Joshua and Phinehas stood to discern the transgressor with the aid of the Urim and Thummim of Judgment. The princes of Israel passed before them first, and the Prince of Judah was taken. Then the families of Judah, and that of the Zarhites was taken. Then the Zarhites and Zabdi was taken; then Carmi; then Achan. How his heart must have stood still as he saw the inevitable closing in of his destiny, like the contracting walls of a chamber of horrors on a hapless victim.

But sin is sporadic. To deal with it thoroughly we need to go back to its parentage. All who have carefully watched the processes of the inner life bear witness that a long period will often intervene between the first germ of sin, in a permitted thought or glance of evil, and its flower or fruit in act. We generally deal with the wrong that flames out before the sight of our fellows; we should go behind to the spark as it lay smouldering for hours before, and to the carelessness which left it there. We only awake when the rock disintegrates and begins to fall upon our cottage roof; God would lead us back to the moment when a tiny seed, borne on the breeze, floating through the air, found a lodgment in some crevice of our heart, and, although the soil was scanty, succeeded in keeping its foothold, till it had struck down its tiny anchor into a crack, and gathered strength enough to split the rock which had given it welcome. And by this insight into small beginnings our God would forearm us against great catastrophes.

What we call sin is the outcome of sin permitted, days, perhaps weeks, before, which, in the meanwhile had been gathering strength within the heart. An avalanche is the result of the dislocation of a few flakes of snow, which had fluttered from their place weeks before the villagers were overwhelmed and smothered in their beds. There is reason therefore for the advice of the wise man, "Keep thy heart above all that thou guardest, for out of it are the issues of life" (R.V. marg.). If we would be kept clear from great transgression, we must see to it that we are cleared from hidden faults, so subtle and microscopic that they would elude any but a conscience kept sensitive by the grace of the Holy Spirit.

In the light of these thoughts we shall better understand what is meant by one of the deepest passages in the Epistles. James tells, and none could better discourse on such a theme than the saintly president of the Apostolic Church, that "Each man is tempted when he is drawn away by his own lust and enticed." A word which surely suggests that temptation is not wholly a matter without the soul, as some think! And he goes on to say, "The lust, when it hath conceived, beareth sin; and the sin, when it is full-grown, bringeth forth death." Mark those words, when it hath conceived, beareth—they are very deep. In nature there is an interval, a period of incubation. Just as, to change the metaphor, a germ of disease may lie in the system for years without breaking out in the flesh; or a seed may be in the soil, waiting for the conditions favourable for its growth.

If, therefore, you have fled before Ai, do not be content when you have discovered Achan, but continue your search till you have learnt what gave rise to him, and so through the links in the long chain till you discover its remote ancestor in something which you did not suspect for the moment, but which was the guilty progenitor. And Achan's own words shall enforce the necessity. "I saw...I coveted...I took."

(3) It is a good thing at times to muster the clans of heart and life. We must make the principal tribes of our being pass before God. The public, and private, our behaviour in the business, the family, the church, until one of them is taken. Then to take that department and go through its various aspects and engagements, analysing it in days, or duties; resolving it into its various elements, and scrutinising each. The auditor of accounts in some great business-house, called in to discover the source of leakage, will for obvious reasons eliminate from his inquiry certain of the ledgers representing the more prosperous branches of the trade, and thus he narrows his inquiries within a smaller and yet smaller area.

This duty of self-examination should be pursued by those who have least relish for it, as probably they really need it; whilst they who are naturally of an introspective or morbid disposition should not engage themselves in it to any large extent. And whoever undertakes it should do so in reliance on the Holy Spirit, and give ten glances to the Blessed Lord, for every one that is taken at the corruptions of the natural heart. It is looking off unto Jesus which is the real secret of soul-growth.

III.—WE SHOULD HOLD NO PARLEY WITH DISCOVERED SIN.

"And Joshua, and all Israel with him, took the son of Zerah, and the silver, and the mantle, and the wedge of gold, and his sons and his daughters, and his oxen, and his sheep, and his asses, and his tent, and all that he had. And they brought them up into the Valley of Achor, and all Israel stoned him with stones, and they burned them with fire, and stoned them with stones." Then Jehovah repeated the words which had preceded the capture of Jericho, "And the Lord said unto Joshua, Fear not... see, I have given into thy hand, the king of Ai, and his people, and his city, and his land."

Then up the long defile Joshua marched with thirty thousand men, the mighty men of valour, with him. There was a sense in every breast of an integrity which had put away all cause of failure and defeat. The preparations were skilfully made; the appearance of flight on the part of Israel drew forth the men of Ai to headlong pursuit, and the city was left at the mercy of the ambush, which at the sign of Joshua's uplifted javelin arose, entered the city, and set it on fire. And in that very place where Israel had met with so disastrous a defeat, the people took great spoil, specially of cattle, which they drove down in triumph to the camp at Gilgal.

God never reveals an evil which He does not require us to remove. And if heart and flesh fail, if our hand refuses to obey our faltering will, if the paralysis of evil has so far enfeebled us that we cannot lift the stone, or wield the knife, or strike the flint stones for the fire, then He will do for us what must be done, but which we cannot do. Some are cast in a mould so strong that they can dare to raise the hatchet, and cut off the arm just madly bitten, and before poison has passed from it into the system; others must await the surgeon's knife. But the one lesson for all the inner life is to be willing for God to do his work in us, through us, or for us.

So the Valley of Achor becomes the Door of Hope. From that sterile, mountain-guarded valley, Israel marched to victory; or, to use the highly-coloured imagery of Hosea, it was as though the massive slabs opened in the cliffs, and the people passed into cornfields, vineyards, and oliveyards, singing amid their rich luxuriance as they sang in their youth in the day when they came up out of Egypt. Ah! metaphor as true as fair! for all our inner life, there is no Valley of Achor where the work of execution is faithfully performed, in which there is not a door of hope, entrance into the garden of the Lord, and a song so sweet, so joyous, so triumphant, as though the buoyancy of youth were wed with the experience and mellowness of age.

THE TWO NATURES.

Dear Sir,—In the very interesting life of Mrs. Booth just published there is a rigorous assault made upon the doctrine of the two natures of the believer as generally held among Christians. But it is very evident from the way in which the doctrine is attacked that it is not understood, and that what is assailed is a distorted and exaggerated conception of the doctrine, which no one who follows Scripture teaching would for a moment acknowledge.

Thus, for example, the doctrine assailed is supposed to involve the absurdity of the believer possessing two souls, and the assailant triumphantly asks:—

> What becomes of this old wicked, black, soul of man at death? If it is immortal it cannot die. If it forever remains unclean, it cannot enter Heaven. If it is not redeemed or washed in the blood, it must go to hell. So that a real believer, according to this view, will have one soul in hell and another in Heaven!

It would seem that Mrs. Booth was attacking a statement in some tract or pamphlet in which the writer had incautiously used the word "soul" instead of "nature," and of this mistake she makes the most; but no intelligent Christian would ever admit that by the expression two natures, is meant two souls.

Elsewhere, however, it appears that Mrs. Booth herself held the very doctrine of the two natures; for how else are we to understand these excellent words of advice, contained in a letter to her eldest daughter when about sixteen years old, and after her conversion? For her mother in the letter thanks God that she is his child.

> It is in yielding ourselves up, my dear child, to be led by the Spirit in everything, that the peace and the victory comes. This requires us to crucify nature—that is, not to let nature have its own way; but when inclination, or temper, or pride, or desire would lead us one way, and conscience and the Spirit another, we must follow conscience and the Spirit, and put down and trample upon nature.

No one could desire a clearer recognition of the conflict between "nature" and "the Spirit," and what Mrs. Booth calls nature is what others would call the old nature, or what Scripture calls "the flesh."

Yours very truly,
Henry E. Brooke.

REGENT'S PARK CHAPEL.—The first annual meeting of the Young Men's Christian Union was held a few days ago. Colonel Griffin presided, and short addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Pierson and F. B. Meyer. The report by the hon. sec., Mr. Sydney B. Harman, showed a membership of ninety-five. Besides these there are a large number of young men associated with the work. The Union provides devotional and social meetings for the young men of West London.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE looked its best on Friday evening, when over 2,000 East-end children were regaled with a Christmas dinner, organised by the Ragged School Union on behalf of the editors and readers of the Young Man and Young Woman magazines. Lady William Lennox graced the proceedings with her presence, as did also Rev. W. J. Dawson and Mr. F. A. Atkins. Rev. W. R. Mowll gave a stirring address, and Dr. Barnardo's band brightened the proceedings with music.

For the Young

"SWIFTER THAN A WEAVER'S SHUTTLE."

Job vii. 8.

Have any of you seen a weaver at work? He sits in front of his loom. There are many threads before him running the long way, spread out in a broad row. These are called the warp. In order to make cloth he must work in other threads, one by one, from one side to the other. These cross threads are called the weft. The tool that carries the thread from side to side is called the shuttle. Now, if the weaver is to make headway, this shuttle must be made to work in a very lively fashion, and perhaps it will require to make fifty trips back and forth before one inch of cloth is woven.

If ever you pass a weaver's shop, listen. Amid the noise of the working of the loom, you may hear the song of the shuttle, bright and clear, as it flies in front of the weaver, impelled by the quick tug of his hand. It is very long since I heard its merry lay, but I do not think I can ever forget it.

I suppose Job must have spent some of his youthful hours in a weaver's shop. With his boy's keen eye and inquisitive mind, he was eager to learn the ins and outs of the old-fashioned craft. And now when he is a man, in sad trouble, and needs an illustration to show how fast his days are passing away, he can find no better than that furnished by his visits paid long ago to a weaver's shop. And he says, "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle."

Perhaps you do not believe that time flies as fast as that. To some of you time may be of very little value. A single day may seem a very long time indeed; a year may seem to you as a never-ending period. The idea of a day flying past swifter than a weaver's shuttle in its flight is more than you can grasp. It is just here that the experience of those who are older may be of some value to you.

There is no greater mistake that a boy or girl can make than to suppose that there is for everything plenty of time. Perhaps there is some excuse to be made for you, for "plenty of time" is a phrase that you may hear repeated very often. But if you believe it in the sense that time is of little worth, and act upon it, you will only regret it once—that is, all your after life.

It would be a delightful way to pass an evening in your holiday, and a profitable one, too, to write a little paper entitled, "The Value of Ten Minutes." I think very likely you would find that the difference between the man who holds a good position, who is respected, trusted, and listened to, and the poor fellow whom nobody cares for, is just about ten minutes. The one as a lad was up betimes; he was practical, and well ahead with his home lessons. If he said he would be home at a certain time, his mother had tea ready to the minute, and he never kept her waiting.

The other was a dawdler. When he left bed in the morning he didn't wake up; you could see him almost any day running to school ten minutes late, his boots unlaced. But do not let us be too hard on him, perhaps he lived amongst dawdlers, and he learned the habit by example. There he is to-day, well meaning no doubt; but nobody cares to depend on his word. The work he promises to be done promptly is sure to be ten minutes too late to be of use. His motto was "plenty of time," and he has lived up to it.

Why do I tell you this? That you who are young may begin well. Whatever you have to do, do it promptly. Do not dawdle. There is a way a boy and girl can get into if they will, of doing a thing at once. Acquire this habit and you will never lose it. When the effort is first made, the inclination to make it may be only as strong as the tiny thread that the spider spins. Persevere, it will grow strong as a band of steel, and it will serve you all your life.

Look at that beautiful porcelain ware on the mantelshelf. That design upon it was painted while the clay was yet soft, even before it was glazed. The lines of your life are being drawn while the clay is soft, while you are young in years. For you the days fly swifter than a weaver's shuttle. Neglect your opportunity and a flaw will soon be seen shining through the glaze. People will call that your character. A pretty thing that to live for ever.

There are other lessons that thoughtful boys and girls may receive as to the swift flight of time, teaching that active, wide-awake people, are called to do the best work of the world. Read your Bible. There you will find that its men of mark, from Abraham downward, were men of prompt and resolute action. Continue the study, and it will become apparent that "Go quickly" is the very language of heaven. It came pat to the angel's lips as he executed his mission by the side of the empty tomb. "Rise up quickly" were the words of the angel that called Peter in prison to renew his active life.

We can read them into the daily life of the Lord Jesus, and He needs must speak them to the traitor Apostle as he was planning snares for his Master's feet. They fell from his lips again to inspire Paul with the need of immediate action. "Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem." And what are the closing words of the Book of Revelation? Are they not "I come quickly"?

If boys and girls would be true friends to Jesus, worthy of the name, you will regard time as a good gift of God; you will so employ it day by day that your life may be spent in doing the work well and wisely that He gives you to do. Do you not think that Job was right about the hurried flight of time when he said "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle"?

MOSES.

By the river's brink they laid him,
'Mid the flags which stately grew,
While his sister watched the infant,
For its danger well she knew.
There the daughter of King Pharaoh
Came to bathe, with maidens fair,
And espied the ark upbearing
All a mother's heart's love there.

Then from midst the flags she drew him,
Safely there he had been kept,
And we read, when first she saw him,
Lo, the darling infant wept.
Then she claimed him, and she named him,
Though of Israel's host she knew,
And she called him "Moses," saying,
"From the river him I drew."

"Moses"—name so bright, resplendent!—
Thus within a palace grew,
But the teaching of his mother
Gave him Israel's God to know;
And ere long, the palace leaving—
Sweet for us indeed to tell—
He despised its wealth and pleasures,
"Seeing Him invisible."

Happy choice! regretted never,
Though awhile reproach to bear,
For when Jesus stood in glory
Moses, with Himself, was there.
Happy choice! for Egypt's glory,
Long, oh long! has passed away;
But his joy will be for ever.
Is his choice, thine dearest, say?

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Holiday services for children and young people were commenced at the Hove Town Hall, West Brighton, on December 27, and are being continued throughout this week. They are conducted by Mr. A. G. Dodderidge and Mr. Norman Bennett, assisted by several University men, the special meetings for girls and young ladies being addressed by Miss Etches.

Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, Ealing, Jan. 15 to 22; St. Leonards, Jan. 28 to Feb. 5; Mr. G. Goodman, Stockwell Orphanage, to Jan. 7; Mr. Herbert W. Pewtress, Mission Hall, Fraser Green, Chiswick, to Jan. 6; Rev. Martin J. Hall, Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Jan. 7 to 17; Mr. H. Hutchinson, a United Mission, Wesleyan Church and Schoolroom, Leytonstone, Jan. 8 to 16; Newcastle-under-Lyme, Jan. 17; Swinton, Jan. 18; Manchester, Jan. 19; Altrincham, Jan. 20; High Lane, Stockport, Jan. 21 to 23; Rev. W. S. Standen and Rev. Martin J. Hall, Trinity Church, West Hampstead, Jan. 20 to 27; Mr. Livesey Carrott, each Sunday in January, at Bolton Rooms, Drayton-gardens, S.W., at 3.30.

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAY MEETINGS.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, assisted by University men, St. John's Gymnasium, Upper Holloway, Dec. 28 to Jan. 7, 1893; St. Augustine's Church Room, Highbury New Park, Jan. 8 to 18; and Blackheath, Jan. 1 to 20; Mr. T. Lewes Sayers, Christ Church, Bromley, Kent, Jan. 8 to 17; St. John's, Penge, Jan. 22 to 28; Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, at the Town Hall, Hove, to Jan. 14.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Jan. 8, S., Daniel iii. 1-15; 9, iii. 16-30; 10, iv. 1-17; 11, iv. 18-27; 12, iv. 28-37; 13, v. 1-9; 14, v. 10-16.

MISS LEIGH'S CHILDREN'S HOMES

A CHOLERA INCIDENT.

In one of the slums of Paris lived an Englishman and his English wife, with their three little girls, aged respectively four, six, and seven years. The father was a whip-maker by trade; but, alas, for his wife and family, a hard drinker! The wife, a delicate, hard-working, sorrow-saddened woman, bravely did her utmost to help to keep the wolf from the door, and a roof to their heads (ironically called a home), by assisting her husband to make the lashes for the whips. The poor children scarcely ever had food sufficient for their daily wants. So hungry were they at times that they were fain to feed themselves with the refuse scraps which a neighbour's liberality bestowed upon their dog.

The mother, reduced in strength from want and suffering and work, was seized suddenly one morning with the cholera, and at once removed by her husband to the nearest hospital, only, however, to die there. That night the father came home soddened with drink, lay down with his three children in the same rags in which his wife had been taken ill, and in the morning was found black to his waist with the disease. He was taken to the hospital, but died within a few hours. On hearing of his death, application was at once made to the British Embassy and to the French authorities for permission for the three orphans to be received into Miss Leigh's Homes, where at the present time they are comfortably housed and fed and clothed.

Five children in one family in Paris, touched with the feeling of the sorrows of these little ones, have undertaken to maintain one of them at the Children's Home. Are there no children in England who will follow their example, and at this holiday season deny themselves for Christ's sake? The maintenance of each child in the orphanage costs £16 a year. Will not some parent, as a thank-offering for the deliverance of his or her child from sickness and danger during the past year, or stirred by the prospect of doing a deed of love for the Master's sake, act the part of the good Samaritan to the remaining orphans, and thus help to ease the burden of expense falling on the Paris Homes? The secretary's London address is 22A, Queen's-road, Bayswater.

ON SOUL WINNING.

Dear Sir,—I am surprised you have had so few letters upon this interesting and, I think, profitable subject. I send the following facts, hoping they may encourage other earnest but timid souls to use the opportunities that are constantly occurring to us all.

A few months since I went out one afternoon for a walk, mentally asking the Lord to direct my steps. I live quite in the country, and that afternoon went in a direction I had not been before. I came at length to two cottages by the road side. An old man was standing at the door of one. I spoke to him, and asked him if he would not come to a simple Gospel service lately started in the village? He said he was so "laid up" with the rheumatics he could not go far, but I found by a little more conversation he was really in trouble about his sins, and anxious to know they were put away.

I pointed him to the finished work of Christ, and quoted many texts of Scripture to him. He drank in the Word of Life, rested upon Christ, and is now a happy believer.

I believe there are seeking souls here and there all around us who would be really glad of a simple word of help, and if we place ourselves at the Lord's disposal and depend upon him, He will direct us to them and give the power and courage we need.

Some years ago I was allowed to be similarly helpful to a poor old man mending the road. My own sister, when a girl of about fourteen, was in anxiety of soul and prayed that an elder sister, who slept in the same room, might speak to her. The sister looked up from the Bible she was reading and spoke to the younger sister, and was the means of leading her towards, if not into, the light.

Yours, G. M. H.

PASTOR A. G. BROWN announces that the year just closed has been most prosperous in the number of conversions and actual addition to the Church. This is believed to be directly in answer to special and united prayer.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 8.—1 SAMUEL XXVIII.

This was the climax to which Saul's sins led, and it sealed his fate (1 Chron. x. 13, 14). He went back to that which he had put away, and sought counsel of a familiar spirit. The soul of man cannot be satisfied except it hold fellowship with the unseen; if not with God, then with the demons who rule the darkness of this world. Spiritualism is the rebound of the heart from the negations of infidelity. The refusal of God to answer Saul was occasioned, not by the greatness of his sins, but by his own refusal to turn from them. To the froward, God shows himself froward. (Prov. i. 24-32; Isaiah lix. 1 2.)

In the moments of extremity we turn to those who, even though they have opposed us, have ever shown themselves our truest friends by rebuking our sins. True friendship must be founded on respect, and it is they whose holy characters have given weight to their words to whom we turn in hours of peril.

It is probable that God permitted the evil spirit to simulate the appearance and voice of Samuel. It is very wonderful how many voices speak to warn us, though they often fall on unheeding ears. Man will, however, not be turned from his purpose, but, thinking that there is no hope, casts himself headlong to despair. Saul is the Judas of the Old Testament.

MONDAY, JANUARY 9.—1 SAMUEL XXIX.

This incident must have been the outcome of earnest prayer on David's part. It had been an evident sin for him to leave his countrymen and take refuge with Achish. A sad lapse in his faith! Would that we never said with him, "I must one day fall"! However, one of the consequences was the necessity of accompanying the Philistines with his armed men in their invasion of Canaan. It put him in a great perplexity, because, for the last sixteen months, he had led Achish to suppose that he was making forays against the south of Judah. Achish implicitly believed his account of his expeditions, and had concluded that there was an impassable breach between David and his people (chap. xxvii. 12). He did not hesitate, therefore, to invite him to the battle. Thus, as the outcome of months of deceit, David was on the point of fighting against his own people, over whom he was expecting shortly to be made king. It is thus that we often find ourselves brought into positions of extreme difficulty by unbelief, deceit, and sin. There was no resource but in prayer, and we can imagine how earnestly David sought deliverance from an almost inextricable maze, and it came in the refusal of the Philistine nobles that he should go with them into battle. So in the morning light he departed, without losing his character with Achish, or incurring the charge of treachery to his own people.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 10.—1 SAMUEL XXX.

It had been indeed a wonderful deliverance from an almost insuperable difficulty. The crooked had been made straight and the rough smooth. But there was still chastisement permitted—temporary sorrow and anguish of heart, which in turn gave place to exceeding joy. In the midst of the crushing calamity, which led some of David's followers to propose to stone him, and whilst his own heart was bleeding for the loss of his wives and children, his first and natural resort was in God. There is almost sublimity in the words, "But David encouraged and strengthened himself in the Lord his God." He afterwards inquired of the Lord, receiving a promise which must have been as balm to his spirit, comforting him during the days consumed in the pursuit of the Amalekites.

Our Master does not treat his servants as the flesh (represented by Amalek) does its faithful votaries. He does not leave us when we fall sick, but nourishes and cherishes us. Oh that we who bear the brand-marks of Jesus were more faithful to Him, who does not deal with us as we deserve, and who sticketh closer than a brother.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11.—1 SAMUEL XXXI.

Suicide came quick on all the other sins that had gradually swept the ill-fated monarch swifter and swifter to his doom. There is no telling to what lengths the smallest sins, if indulged against light and knowledge, may not conduct us. Jealousy of David had been like letting in of water, now the floods had come which refused to be stemmed or turned aside. The suicide thinks less of the judgment of eternity than of that of time; more of man than of God; rather of the ills of the body than of the fever of the soul. O my soul, see to it that thy main endeavour be to accustom thyself to stand daily before the judgment-seat of Christ! Exercise thyself to have a conscience void of offence toward God and man! Judge thyself that thou be not judged! If thou yieldest to sin, get thee at once to confession and renewal!

The men of Jabesh-Gilead give us a beautiful example of gratitude. Saul had delivered them in the hour of their extremity, and they did not forget his kindness in that dark day of defeat and dishonour. So should it be with us. Jesus hath redeemed us by his precious blood, and now, though He can never fail in the battle, yet while the conflict is still raging, let us not hesitate to throw in our lot with Him, suffering that we may reign, dying that we may live, one in the shame and one in the glory.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 12.—2 SAMUEL I.

It is remarkable, and more than a coincidence, that an Amalekite claimed to have slain Saul. Though it was probably a lie, in order to obtain a larger reward from David, yet we may gather the lesson, that where we spare the flesh the flesh will not spare us: mercy is ill-expended on anything so dangerous and deceitful as the choices of our own nature, so set on self-gratification, but so sure to bring us down into humiliation, defeat, and death.

But how strikingly the magnanimity of David's spirit approves itself. Amid the lawlessness and violence of an outlaw's life, the education of his soul had been ever advancing. He would condone no deed which injured the Lord's anointed, even though it put the promised crown in his grasp. There was no doubt in his heart that God could fulfil his own purposes and promise without the aid of sin, in himself, or anyone else. And this conception of God, as perfectly holy, was far in advance of the prevailing notions of the time. Be sure that God will deliver you without your putting forth your hand to anything that conscience can condemn.

In the Song of the Bow, David gives himself up to the strains of the loftiest poetry and noblest affections. He could not have written such an elegy unless he had really loved and lamented. And in such an outburst of grief over one who had been the curse of his life, we must discern the work of the Blessed Spirit of God. Let us ask Him to create within us a love as tender and disinterested to all who hate us, and despitefully use or persecute us.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 13.—2 SAMUEL II.

The blessed habit of inquiring of God for direction was not discontinued as David stepped up to a more assured position on the death of Saul. His steps were still ordered by the Lord, who delighted in his servant's way. From how many blunders should we be saved if we leant less on our own understanding, and in all our ways acknowledged Him. There is no haste for those that wait on the Lord. They know that He will give, and they abide his time. It is a certain belief with them that God is preparing deliverance for them, and them for it.

The reign of David in Hebron, preceding by seven years his ascension to the throne of the entire realm, was a prefiguration of the reign of Jesus over his Church as distinguished from his reign over the world. From Hebron the bands of mighty men went forth to war with Ish-bosheth, just as the warriors of the Cross are ever pouring forth to engage in deadly conflict with the unbelief and evils around. But the end is not yet. The Church has still to ask that God would give Messiah the heathen for his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14.—2 SAMUEL III.

Abner's career is an interesting study, because reflecting too well the principles which animate men. He was a prince and a great man, according to David's estimate of him. But his course was shaped by desire for self-aggrandisement. He knew that David was God's appointed king, and that through him the redemptive purpose was to move (vv. 10, 18), and yet for his own advancement, he set up Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and maintained him on the throne by all the energy that he possessed. It was a deliberate attempt to thwart the will and purpose of God. Woe to him that striveth with his Maker! The attempt, of course, failed. But with his own hand he shattered the fabric he had taken so much trouble to rear. Piqued by Ish-bosheth's natural remonstrance at his treatment of one of his father's wives, Abner suddenly turned against him, tried to make the best terms for himself with David, and met his own fate in the act. But whether in fighting for Saul's house, or plotting against it, self-interest was the clue to his actions, and, seeking it, he lost all. They that seek their lives lose them. Those who knowingly oppose the will of God prepare for themselves swift destruction. No weapon that is formed against the reign of our blessed Lord shall prosper. They who oppose Him shall consume as the crackling of thorns in the flame. F. B. M.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JANUARY 15.

ENCOURAGING THE PEOPLE. Haggai ii. 1–9.

GOLDEN TEXT, Psa. cxxvii. 1.

FIFTEEN years have elapsed since the foundations of the temple were laid (Ezra iii.). There has been little, if any, progress, owing to several causes:—First, the opposition of their semi-heathen neighbours (Ezra iv.); secondly, the death of Cyrus and the succession to the throne of Cambyses, called Ahasuerus (Ezra. iv. 6), and after him, of Gomates, the usurper, called Artaxerxes (Ezra iv. 7, 8), to whom the adversaries appealed against the Jews with such success that the work was delayed until the accession of Darius (B.C. 521). A work that is clearly of God and for God may meet with severe, and, for a time, with successful opposition. God wins his greatest triumphs by turning the apparent successes of his adversaries into ignominious defeats.

The two prophets by whom God encouraged the people were Haggai and Zechariah (Ezra v. 1). Of Haggai nothing is known beyond his name and what his prophecy tells us. Two things we learn from him—first, that some of the richer men of Jerusalem, too easily discouraged from building the temple, were building fine homes for themselves and living in luxury in sight of the unfinished temple (Hag. i. 2—6); secondly, that God was giving tokens of his displeasure in withholding from them the fruits of the earth (i. 6—11). These judgments gave force to the prophet's message. The prophecy with which this lesson deals, delivered on the last day of the Feast of Tabernacles (ii. 1, with Lev. xxiii. 33—36), was designed to encourage the people.

A DISCOURAGED PEOPLE (1—3). Nothing so effectually hinders God's work as discouragement in the workers. For this reason Gideon wisely sent back 22,000 of his men (Jud. vi. 3). In no circumstances is discouragement justifiable. It is always and only the result of unbelief (Deut. xx. 1—4). Neither the strength of their adversaries nor the decree of the King of Persia could have hindered the building if the people had not lost confidence in God.

It is significant that Haggai mentions only the discouragement resulting from the contrast between the temple of Solomon and this new house (3). The ancient men who wept at the laying of the foundation first suggested this contrast (Ezra iii. 12). Nothing could have been more disastrous to the work itself. They may have unwittingly delayed the work of God for fifteen years. How much evil may result from a single discouraging word or act!

THE PROPHET'S COMMAND (4, 5). It is addressed, not to the leaders only, but to all the people (4), for God's work requires, on the part of all his people, "the work of faith." The command "Be strong" can only come from God. Strength does not come at our bidding; but He gives what He commands (see Psa. lxviii. 28). To be weak and insufficient for his work is therefore not our calamity but our sin.

His presence with them was the reason for their encouragement. It was no new promise, but one which was made to them at the beginning (5). Their sin had not made Him unfaithful to his covenant. It is the presence of God that counts. Neither the strength nor the subtlety of our adversaries can do anything against Him. Napoleon used to say that God was with the strongest battalion. We may rather say, that is the strongest battalion which is with God (Rom. viii. 31).

ENCOURAGING PROMISES (6—9). Read the prophecy with Heb. xii. 26-29. In the fulfilment of God's purposes of blessing judgment and mercy mingle together. Egypt and the nations of Canaan, were shaken to make way for his people's blessing. And the vision of Daniel showed the complete shattering of the image of Gentile monarchy, as connected with the setting up of the kingdom of the Son of Man (Dan. ii. 44). The shaking and removal of what is outward will not affect what is spiritual and eternal.

The Desire of all Nations (7); or, as R.V., "the desirable things." In the first sense, it is evidently a prophecy of the coming of Christ, who is in Himself that which all men really need. "That which the whole world sighed for—knowingly or unknowingly—light to disperse its darkness, liberty from its spiritual slavery, restoration from its degradation—could not come to us without some one who should impart it to us."—Pusey. In the R.V. it refers to the gifts which all nations shall bring to the Messiah. Compare Isa. lx. 5-7, 11-13. The prophecy looks far beyond the first coming of Jesus.

The latter glory of this house (9) would exceed the former, from the appearance of Christ in the temple (Mal. iii. 1) and the inauguration of his new dispensation. External glory is not the feature which He values most. The glory which his presence gives is not now confined to one city. We are his temples. Our highest glory is in being indwelt by Him (1 Cor. iii. 16). Should not every part of those temples utter his glory (Psa. xxix. 9, margin)?

Death of Dr. Andrew Bonar.

The year 1892, which saw the decease of Mr. Spurgeon, Dr. Cairns, Dr. Donald Fraser, Dr. Allon, and other leaders in the religious world, has registered in its expiring hours the departure of one almost as widely known, certainly as deeply loved, as any of those we have mentioned. At half-past ten on Friday evening there passed away to his heavenly rest the venerable and venerated Dr. Andrew A. Bonar, who for nearly forty years has been pastor of the Finnieston Free Church, Glasgow. Though the Great Reaper has found in him a shock of corn fully ripe, Dr. Bonar's decease will be universally mourned, and will be regarded by multitudes in both hemispheres in the light of a a personal loss. He was one of the truest and choicest spirits that modern times have known, and we cannot but feel that our world is much the poorer now that he has been removed to another sphere. Dr. Bonar was at the weekly prayer meeting in connection with his congregation on Wednesday night, and at that time he was in his usual health and spirits; but on Thursday morning he took a chill, from the effects of which he never recovered, and he fell peacefully asleep on Friday night, the members of his family surrounding his bed.

In July, 1886, we gave a portrait and somewhat lengthened sketch of Dr. Bonar's ministerial life, but the following details will be welcomed by our readers:—

Dr. Bonar was born in Edinburgh on May 29, 1810, and received his early education at the High School, out of which he passed as gold medallist and dux. Similar honours rewarded his diligence and perseverance in the Edinburgh University. After passing through the Theological Hall he was licensed to preach the Gospel in 1835. A couple of years were passed in missionary work in Jedburgh, and in connection with Dr. Candlish's parish in Edinburgh; and in 1837 he was ordained to the ministry in the collegiate charge in Collace Parish, where he laboured for twenty years. As an Evangelical minister, Mr. Bonar soon began to make his mark. Loving his work, nd entering into it with ll the vigour and earnestness of his soul, he obtained a firm hold on the affections of his people, by whom he was much beloved.

From Photograph by Mr. J. Stuart, Glasgow.

In 1839 he, along with Dr. Black, of Aberdeen, Dr. Keith, and Mr. Murray M'Cheyne, were appointed by the Church of Scotland to proceed to Palestine and inquire into the condition of the Jews. As a result of this undertaking a mission to the Jews was established, and, as carried out by the Free Church, has proved not only one of the most active, but also one of the most interesting of the present day. During that tour through the Holy Land Dr. Bonar accidentally dropped his Bible into Jacob's Well. He looked upon the volume as irrecoverably lost, but, to his surprise and gratification, it was brought up from the bottom of the well some years ago by a Samaritan, and sent home to the owner. It was to him a precious relic, and though prizing it highly, he consented to its being deposited in John Knox's house in Edinburgh, where it now lies.

As may easily be imagined, Dr. Bonar took the side of the Evangelical party in the Church of Scotland during the long conflict which ended in the Disruption in May, 1843. He was one of those who came out, and he carried the great bulk of his congregation with him. For thirteen more years he continued to labour in Collace, when in 1856 he was called and inducted to the pastorate of the Finnieston Free Church, Glasgow. This was a sphere where his dauntless energy could find full scope. His church was soon a centre of earnest Christian work, and he gathered round him a band of workers who devotedly assisted their pastor in his endeavours to raise the social and moral condition of the people in the district. In this sphere he laboured during the remainder of his life, keeping together a congregation numbering over 900 members.

Sixteen months ago he was assisted in his work by Rev. D. M. M'Intyre, who was appointed colleague and successor. As an illustration of the good health which has attended him during his long and useful ministerial life, he was only absent twice from his pulpit through illness. When the General Assembly of the Free Church met in Glasgow in 1878 he was elected moderator, and through that trying session he performed the delicate duties of the chair with consummate ability. In 1887 he celebrated his jubilee as minister, and on that occasion he was presented with a cheque for £4000 and many addresses of congratulation.

During his long life Dr. Bonar was associated with many of the most eminent men of the Church, such as Rev. Murray M'Cheyne, Rev. William Burns, of China, and Dr. A. N. Somerville, all of whom have predeceased him. An outcome of his his love and esteem for Mr. M'Cheyne is to be found in the memoir of that sainted minister, a publication which has obtained a world-wide reputation, and has been the means of blessing to multitudes all over the world. As a writer on Evangelical subjects Dr. Bonar occupied a high position, and his works on "Leviticus" and "The Psalms," have proved very helpful to many students of the Old Testament. In his relations with his ministerial brethren he was most happy—always ready and willing to help them in every possible way. He was a man of wide Christian sympathy, and was one of the most catholic ministers in Scotland. To do good was the main object of his life, and every project having that end in view had his cordial support. He was very ready to assist in good work, and he never allowed his denominational position to interfere with it. All Evangelical efforts had in him a ready helper, and hence, when Messrs. Moody and Sankey came to this country in 1874, Dr. Bonar was among the first to welcome them, and he retained to the last a warm affection for these American friends.

Though active in pastoral work, Dr. Bonar never took any leading part in what may be called the more business part of the Church's work. He seldom attended the meetings of the Presbytery, but whenever he made his appearance he always received a hearty greeting, and there seemed to be a rivalry among his brethren as to who would first extend to him a kindly greeting, and give him a hearty shake of the hand. The blamelessness of his life and the saintliness of his character gave him an influence among his brethren which nothing else could. His counsel and advice were always ready, and his voice was ever on the side of charity and good will. For him to say a hard thing of any brother was most painful, and it was ever done with that tenderness and love which made it evident that the task he had set himself was one from which he would gladly have escaped. These occasions were few and far between, and their very rarity made them all the more remarkable. They never had the effect of alienating from him the love of any brother, because it was felt that his utterances were those of strong and earnest conviction, and that they lessened not his affection for the man against whose opinions he felt himself compelled to speak. In his death the Glasgow Presbytery loses the last of its Disruption heroes, a band which is now becoming very small indeed.

Dr. Bonar was the youngest of seven sons, two of his brothers being eminent ministers of the Free Church. His eldest brother, Dr. John Bonar, of Greenock, died about eighteen months ago, and Dr. Horatius Bonar, of Edinburgh, the well-known hymn-writer, died about five years ago. Dr. Bonar leaves five of a family—his only son, Dr. James Bonar, of London, and four daughters, three of them unmarried, the eldest being the wife of Mr. Wm. M. Oatts, of the Christian Institute, Glasgow.

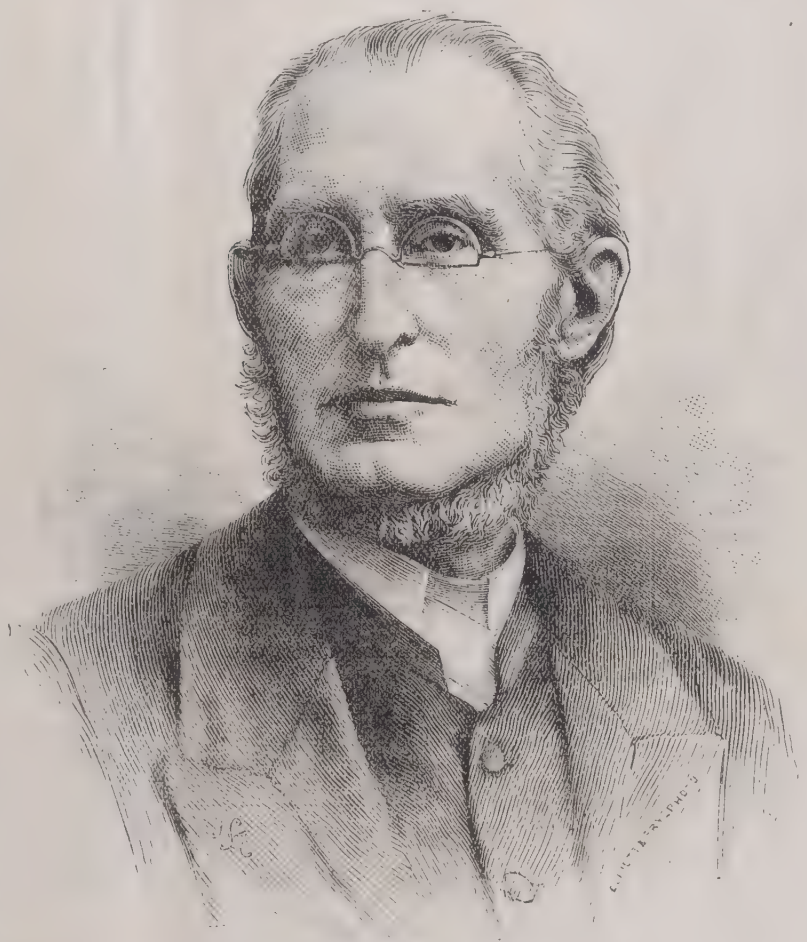
Romanism at Home.

The following is extracted from a letter written, under date December 9, to one of our constant readers by a friend in Calais:—

"Yesterday the new Romish Bishop of Arras preached here, and I went to hear him, being anxious to judge for myself of the revival of spiritual life in the Church of Rome, of which some speak so hopefully. I can only say that his sermon from beginning to end was undiluted Mariolatry—Mary the gate of Heaven, the refuge of sinners, etc. It was truly a sickening spectacle to see him stand in the pulpit in mitre and gold apparel, posing theatrically with his massive crozier and his episcopal ring, feeding the great congregation with such poison, instead of the Gospel of Christ. I wished that some of the Christians in England who are inclined to dally with Popery could have seen it thus undisguised."

YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE.—Princess Victoria Mary of Teck has consented to become vice-president of the Young Helpers' League (in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Orphan and Waif Children), on behalf of which Her Royal Highness Princess Mary Adelaide Duchess of Teck, who is the president, opened a bazaar at St. James's Hall last week, as noted elsewhere.

REV. H. R. REYNOLDS, D.D.,



PRINCIPAL OF CHESHUNT COLLEGE.

OUR portrait this week outlines the features of a man who has long been held in high esteem in the Christian world. By a large circle of acquaintances, the Principal of Cheshunt College is beloved for his simple piety and gentleness, and by thousands of students at home and abroad he is admired for his ripe scholarship and remarkable ability as an expositor of the Word of God.

HENRY ROBERT REYNOLDS was born in 1825, at Romsey, Hants, being the son of Rev. John Reynolds, and grandson of Dr. Henry Revell Reynolds, for many years physician in ordinary to George III. The influence of an eminently Christian home and the impressive preaching of his beloved father combined to inspire him in very early life with a desire to become a minister of the Gospel, and in due course he entered Coward College, now merged, with other institutions, in New College. He also studied at University College, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1848, four years after taking his B.A. degree. College life was with him a period of serious equipment for a life of study; and when he began work as minister of the Congregational church assembling in the Old Meeting House, Halstead, Essex, it was with a definite purpose to find spiritual light and peace and joy in full-hearted Christian service.

In 1849 he removed to Leeds, and undertook the oversight of the East Parade Congregational Church. The zeal and harmony of the people among whom he laboured greatly encouraged him, and his twelve years' pastorate there still occupies a large place in his heart. They were years of loving toil, attended by very fruitful results. Bible-classes for the young people were a special feature of his ministry, and to-day many devoted Christian workers trace their first impulse to the gatherings which he promoted and conducted. His physical state was not equal, however, to the great strain of the duties which he undertook, and nervous exhaustion compelled him to relinquish the public ministry in favour of the less exciting labours of the College Professor. He was succeeded in Leeds by Rev. Dr. Conder, who died a few months ago after a long and faithful ministry.

College work had frequently been pressed upon Dr. Reynolds, but he instinctively shrank from it. At length he saw beyond doubt that it was the work which unerring wisdom had decreed for him. In 1860 he accepted the presidency of Cheshunt College, and has since continued, with one or two brief interruptions, to discharge the responsibilities of that post. During a long period his health was far from vigorous, but, battling hard with physical weakness, he has held on his way, and of late enjoyed a considerable accession of bodily strength. For a long time he was compelled to eschew all attempts at public service, but more recently it has been his privilege and joy to speak words of sympathy and counsel to beloved students at ordination services, and in other ways to unite with fellow-workers.

The college now styled "Cheshunt" was founded by the late Countess of Huntingdon, at Talgarth, Breconshire, and was opened in 1768. Twenty-four years later it was transferred to Cheshunt. The object of the institution is not to serve the interests of a party, but, to cite the language of the successive reports, "to promote the extension of the Kingdom of Immanuel, by the publication of his glorious Gospel, and the doctrines of his grace;" and the young men who are educated at the College are left entirely free in their choice of the denomination of Christians among whom they may prefer to exercise their ministry.

Dr. Reynolds has had the peculiar privilege of labouring at Cheshunt for thirty-two years. Although he has been but little before the world, he has exercised a great and widespread influence. A well-informed writer in The Echo, two years ago, in the course of a "pen-and-ink portrait," said:—

> For manners, Dr. Reynolds would make either a bishop or an ambassador. But behind the quiet, grave demeanour there is hidden a man the like of which is not often to be found in any Church. He is never in evidence; but his influence amongst the Nonconformist preachers and teachers is constant and strong.

In 1869 the University of Edinburgh recognised the mental and moral calibre of Dr. Reynolds, and added his name to its roll of Doctors of Divinity. The special work of the Doctor at Cheshunt is in the departments of Theology, Exegesis, and Ecclesiastical History, and in all these he has made important contributions to literature. "Beginnings of the Divine Life," first issued in 1858; and "John the Baptist," the Congregational Union Lecture for 1874, both went through three editions. In Bishop Ellicott's well-known "Old Testament Commentary" the books of Hosea and Amos were treated by Dr. Reynolds, who also furnished two volumes on the Gospel of John to the "Pulpit Commentary." Besides writing many smaller works, Dr. Reynolds, in conjunction with the late Rev. Dr. Allon, edited, for eight years, The British Quarterly Review, and subsequently, for five years, conducted The Evangelical Magazine. His important contributions to "Kitto's Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature" and "Smith and Wace's Dictionary of Christian Biography" also deserve grateful mention.

It was fitting that this worthy pastor and accomplished scholar, formerly famous as a preacher, and during many years distinguished as a College tutor and lecturer, should be represented in the "Preachers of the Age" series, now being issued by Sampson Low & Co. "Light and Peace," the title of the volume, is the golden chain which binds together sermons and addresses delivered at various times, all of them chaste in language and inspiring in their spiritual character.

We are not wont to prophesy, but will quote a terse and interesting prognostication from the "portrait" already referred to:—

> Men will still come under Dr. Reynolds's influence—he will move many a mind, make many a character, and guide many a useful and eminent life. Possibly the world will never know very much of Henry Reynolds, and the Churches may hear less; but as one unknown he will be yet more strongly felt. In his own denomination he may, for a while, be a little overshadowed by the much-advertised splendour of Mansfield College, Oxford. But to him who waiteth all things happen; and Cheshunt will hold its own, and its men take foremost places in the Congregational churches, and the influence of Dr. Reynolds will deepen as the age values more and more solid learning, true earnestness, and moral force.

It is our sincere hope that our esteemed friend may long continue the very useful ministry to which the Lord has called him; and that many whom God may yet send forth from college life into the great harvest-field, will join with those who have already gone out, in invoking a blessing upon the pious endeavours of the beloved President of Cheshunt College.

FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

Dear Sir,—The great calamity which befell our country last year taught me that in England we have true disinterested friends, who came to the rescue from motives purely humane and generous. This makes me bold in writing to you about the terrible state into which our part of the empire is now thrown. The crops in our province of Toula (as well as in about ten provinces of Russia) have again completely failed; in fact, far more so than even last year. Our peasantry after the recent distress are now on the very verge of starvation. The oats, as well as the rye, have been burned by the scorching sun of last summer. Potatoes have also perished from want of rain. So we have to face the fast-advancing long winter, with its misery, want, and woe.

But we do not lose courage and faith; for we have a firm hope that God, who did not forsake us last year, will again find faithful servants to help our brethren in their calamity. For the ensuing year I am president of the Red Cross Committee in the district of Bogorodizk, with a population of 150,000 inhabitants. So you may be sure that any help your readers might send will be most thankfully received and carefully distributed among the needy. Duty to my wards in misery has given me the courage to seek the assistance of your columns.—Yours most truly,

Count Vladimir Bobrinskoy.

[We would earnestly endorse this pathetic appeal on behalf of a suffering people. Friends who can help may either communicate direct with Countess Bobrinskoy, Villa St. Georges, Cannes, France; or remit through us.—Ed.]

SALVATION ARMY IN FRANCE.

Writing from 3, Rue Auber, Paris, Mrs. Booth-Clibborn says:—

We can report real and blessed progress all along the line. The conversions among Roman Catholics are specially encouraging. Among these is a young count who has run through two millions of francs; he came into our hall to laugh, was convicted of sin, and wept over his wasted, dissipated life. To-day he is engaged in manual labour on our territory; such a wonderful, sudden change in a man I have rarely seen.

We have put 941,000 publications, including copies of the Scriptures, into the hands of the French and Swiss public this year! Forty-five cadets are now in training, and a beautifully devoted band they are!

Our Rue Auber meetings continue to be very well attended. On a recent evening I held a never-to-be-forgotten meeting there. The hall was more than full; we had a little difficulty at first, owing to one or two young men who wished to disturb, but we gained perfect silence through moral suasion; a blessed after-meeting followed, where nine souls sought pardon.

I have lately visited eighteen towns in Switzerland, and a mighty time of blessing and soul-saving God has given us. My husband visited posts in German Switzerland. The ground in France is so very different to England and America that it is difficult for friends to realise what enrolling 1240 soldiers this year means! Every day we have cheering news from our devoted self-sacrificing comrades. I am in need of help to send to those who are in hard black Catholic towns.

THE DUKE OF FIFE has consented to become president of the Association for Oral Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, 11, Fitzroy-square, W., in succession to the late Earl Granville. His Grace recently paid a long visit to the Association's School for Children and Training College for Teachers.

From a Worker's Note-book.

I.

THE DISCIPLINE OF FAILURE.

Glancing the other day through an old book of notes that I had made some years ago—records chiefly of various kinds of charity work, or bits of philanthropy done from time to time—I was struck by the many strange, sad, and also amusing experiences that such work involves. As I read deeper into the stories and recalled them to mind, now in the calm of after days, when all the worry and fuss and bitterness had passed away, the feeling of their value as moral object lessons forced itself insensibly on my mind. They had been such wise teachers, worth all the theories on which we are so fond of leaning when we first take up any work new to us, and perhaps especially religious work.

Amongst the lessons they had taught, certainly not the least valuable, I believe, were those from pages over which, at the time, had been scrawled a large "F." There were a great number of "F's" in the book, more than I had imagined; one came across them continually from the very first page down to almost the last entry. And yet, somehow or other, time had changed these "failures," and they had grown to be valuable notes and comments on the success of the whole. Some of them were very raw and youthful attempts, very ignorant and clumsy, wanting in life's experience, but there was not a single blunder for which I was not now grateful, because there was not one which had not left behind its sediment of truth.

A few extracts from these notes may be helpful to some who would do their quota in working for those around them, and who, perhaps, have felt now and then that depression and sense of utter discouragement which arises from taking a too immediate view of failure, and not seeing every incident as a spoke in the wheel of experience. The first entry, marked with an "F," occurs right at the beginning of the diary, and refers to Sunday-school teaching. It runs thus:—

"Monday. Called on the mothers of two boys to inquire why the lads had ceased to attend my class. First mother: 'Well, Miss, to say the truth, Tom doesn't seem to care about morning school (when I taught). He always goes reg'lar in the afternoon, not that he's anything agen you as I knows of, only he doesn't seem to care.'

"Second mother: 'It's not the boy's fault, Miss, that he doesn't come any longer, it's his father; he says he won't have the lad told one thing by you in the morning, and just the opposite by the afternoon lady, and so he goes to the chapel now.'"

Too insignificant, this, you may say for anyone to have jotted down—just the non-attendance of a couple of Sunday-school boys—yet surely not insignificant if such failures were the first arousings to the realisation of two great elements of success in Sunday-school work.

Take the first case. Here was a boy listless and inattentive, uninterested, and because he was so, and because others were more responsive, I had left him alone and given my attention to them—to those who interested me. And the lad had ended by staying away, and my influence as regards him was nil. I had failed because I had undertaken the class in the wrong spirit, and looked upon the work all too lightly, not realising the serious responsibility involved in any attempt to influence a soul; and that to awaken ten or twelve young minds to a sense of their relation to the God who made them is not necessarily accomplished by a mere course of Sunday-school lessons.

Is not this a constant cause of failure among teachers, and one reason why the teaching bears so little fruit? "Oh! I took a class because the vicar asked me!" Imagine any secular teaching taken up on the ground that the head master wished it, regardless of the teacher's knowledge of the subject in question! And yet we dare to become teachers of religion—religion, the hardest of all subjects, because it requires not only head knowledge but heart-knowledge—while we are not yet sure ourselves of its great foundation truths. Here I had been chattering a copy-book piety to the few boys who chose to listen, taking no heed to the individual character and idiosyncrasies of each, or fitting in my lesson so as to bring all in touch with it.

As to preparation, that had consisted in a vague desire to be "religious" myself, and to hope that some day my class would grow to be so also; and for the intellectual part of it, a general skimming of the lesson on Saturday night, so that on the Sunday I could hurl into the class a handful of religious small shot in the hope of perhaps hitting someone. Oh, these vague misty hopes and wishes, without the seriousness of endeavour! The shallowness, the rowdyism and immorality of the crowds who pass through our Sunday-schools, and grow into godless men and women, is the cry of the day; but how should it be otherwise if a teacher's preparation at all resembles this sketch?

On the human side he will need a deeper, sounder knowledge of the Bible and its literature, if he is to interest his boys and also to meet the spirit of scepticism which lurks even in the atmosphere of a Sunday-school. The young lads who work the week long in the factory or office are caught by this spirit, and fascinated by its novelty and by the enthusiasm of its supporters. Small blame to them if their attention flags when, on Sunday, they have to listen to teachers who have never thought deeply and decided for themselves on such questions, and so who are utterly unable to meet that eager curious spirit of inquiry, which being stifled, settles for the time into indifference.

Said a boy to me not long since, "That man who talks in ———— Hall, he says the cleverest people don't believe the Bible now," etc. For answer, you tell the lad he should not listen to the secularists who hold forth at every street corner; but I submit that if you only stifle down the germ of doubt in his mind, and do not enter into his doubt, or cope with it till you are satisfied its attraction and power have vanished, that germ will grow and ripen with the boy, and reappear with tenfold strength.

On the other hand, intellectualism is but the lower half of a teacher's preparation. "Not a glimpse of the far land gets through our comments and glozes"; true, these last are needed, but beyond all, it is the glimpse of the glorious farland—the heavenly vision—that is the power of the lesson. In so far as the teacher has himself caught this, in so far will he succeed, and the intense passionate earnestness to speak that which he has himself heard, will be the greatest of all powers in dispelling doubt or mere indifference.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.

Sir,—Allow me to call the attention of your readers, of whom so many are friends and supporters of Miss de Broen's work at Belleville, Paris, to its present needs. A lady, who is now in England but who has been during several months taking her part in this most important and interesting mission, writes to me:—"The weekly and Sunday gospel meetings continue. In the large iron room, 130 women to whom the gospel is made known meet for work twice a week, receiving each half a franc's worth of bread. The English classes, soup kitchen, and temperance meeting, are sustained."

There are other efforts connected with the young, but hitherto Miss de Broen has been unable to re-open the medical mission and the dispensary from the insufficiency of the funds at her disposal. I can speak from personal knowledge of the incalculable blessings which have accompanied this branch of the work, and can understand the cravings of the poor people for its resumption. Will not some Christian friend to whom God has committed the means, supply £400 for the stipend of the medical attendant and supply of medicines for the year upon which we are now entering?

Yours truly, A. A. Isaacs.

Christian Progress in India.

THE missionary statistics for all India were first collected by Dr. Mullens in 1851, and since then have been decennially issued under the auspices of the Calcutta Missionary Conference, in which are representatives of seven of the largest missionary societies labouring in India. The returns for 1890 have just been published, being for nine years only. They show a marked advance in all departments of Christian work that can be tabulated, excepting in the important one of accessions to the Christian community from outside; but it is important to bear in mind when investigating such tables that, however accurate, they very imperfectly represent all true spiritual work, alike in individuals and communities, and this is probably more true of India than of any other sphere of missionary operations.

The statistical progress made will appear from the following comparisons:—

	Date.		Number.
Native Christians	1881	....	417,372
	1890	....	559,611
Congregations	1881	....	3650
	1890	....	4863
Communicants.....	1881	....	113,325
	1890	....	182,722
Native ordained agents..	1881	....	461
	1890	....	797
Lay preachers	1881	....	2488
	1890	....	3491
Male day schools.....	1881	....	3461
	1890	....	5311
Scholars	1881	....	131,244
	1890	....	179,207
Girls' schools.....	1881	....	1275
	1890	....	1673
Scholars	1881	....	50,121
	1890	....	71,300
Zenanas open	1881	....	7532
	1890	....	40,513
Sunday schools.....	1881	....	1867
	1890	....	3564
Sunday-school scholars..	1881	....	61,688
	1890	....	135,565

1. The rate of increase in the general body of the native Christian community is disappointing, being lower than in previous returns, which were 53 per cent. from 1851 to 1861, 61 from 1861 to 1871, and 86 from 1871 to 1881.

The proportionate increase is very irregular, and not such as was anticipated.

It has been lowest in South India, where the number of native Christians is greatest, and highest in the Punjab, where before the rate of progress was low.

2. The most marked advance has been in female education, especially in the number of day schools and zenanas open to Christian instructors. And this is most significant, because it is clear evidence of the great change of sentiment relative to the status of women which is passing over Hindu society, and a fine testimony to the collateral success of missions, for where their boys' schools have been most numerous and efficient, has arisen the strongest desire for female emancipation.

3. Sunday schools show a great advance, and it is probably far greater than it seems, for the returns under this head are not general. It is worthy of note, that almost all Mission day schools give more Christian instruction than day schools in England, for not only are the lesson books saturated with moral and religious truth, but the Bible is in daily use, and the evidences of Christianity taught.

It is significant of the great loosening of prejudice that great numbers of Hindus and Mohammedans now attend the Sunday-schools.

4. The advance that has been made seems to have been in the nurture of the mission communities rather than in their enlargement. The former, certainly, in such communities is important, but is there not danger alike of missionaries and native workers becoming too much absorbed in work other than the preaching of the Gospel to the heathen, with a view to their conversion? The comparatively slow growth of not a few of the Christian communities seems to suggest enquiry as to the methods employed, and the need of the Divine Spirit to make them effectual.

5. Statistical tables can only give the outward signs of Christian work. They are always inadequate, and sometimes even deceptive, although the tables in question and all those issued each decade since Dr. Mullens in 1851 compiled the first, have been collected with great care and a most conscientious desire to be accurate. But there are three other features of missionary effort throughout India, worthy of far more attention than usually or now they can receive.

(a) The number of secret disciples is unusually great. Some missionaries of large experience and sober judgment, suppose that their number does not fall short of the avowed adherents. However this may be, their great number attested by various witnesses is an important evidence of the success of missions b yond the avowed lines.

(b) Christianity, in a general but real sense, is undoubtedly advancing. A knowledge of Bible truth and doctrine is greatly on the increase. Heathen superstitions and beliefs are dying down. Christian sentiments and beliefs are taking their place.

(c) There are evidences of Divine power and grace, the Holy Spirit at work taking of the things of Christ and revealing them to men. What is wanted, what should be looked for, wrought for, is more of that Divine power.

6. No reference has been made to the returns from Burmah and Ceylon. They present the same general features as those we have given.

JOURNAL OF ISAJ STEPHANJAN, AN ARMENIAN EVANGELIST.

October 17.—Started by steamboat to Saljan, a town in which I had worked for a short time before amongst Mohammedans, and had distributed many Persian and Turkish New Testaments. I took a place on deck, third class, and there saw two Tartars who were disputing with some Russians about seats. At last they seated themselves by me.

One of the Tartars said to me: "I know thee. I once went to see thee in the caravanserai, in a small room, and I heard from thee, and thou showest to me in our Koran, that in Jesus alone salvation is to be found, and that Jesus is the First and the Last. Thou toldst me then that the name of Ali is not even found in the Koran. In order to prove this I searched in the Koran and did not find it." He gave me this account to prove that he knew me. So a door was opened for me, and I began to declare the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The other Tartar, whose name is Shukur, said: "God has led us here to hear his sweet words that our hearts may be made glad, but from the Russians we have only heard vile words." At their desire I gave them New Testaments. They wished to pay for them, but I gave them free of charge. I also spoke to the Russians, and my Tartar friends translated. I also gave them New Testaments. There were also two German women, to whom I spoke and gave New Testaments; they were able to speak Russian, and the Tartar translated again for me; they were very glad and thankful.

My Tartar friends came from Wataga, and when we reached that place they constrained me to remain a few days with Shukur, who assembled some Tartars in his house, and I preached the Gospel to them. Shukur is a fruit-merchant. The next day two Armenians came to make purchases of him. They were astonished to see me, an Armenian, dwelling with Tartars. I told them that the Tartars wish to hear the Word of God. But these Armenians pressed me to spend a night with them. I found about thirty persons there who wished to hear God's Word. They were living in a large room. Many heard the Word with joy; others were displeased with what I said. In the night, when we were all in bed, I heard a voice close to my head, crying: "Brother! brother!" When I opened my eyes I saw a poor man by my side; he wanted to hear more of Jesus. The next day I returned to Shukur; he gave me for my journey bread and cheese and fruit.

October 21, Saljan.—In the market I met a Mollah (Mohammedan priest) and some others with him. I said to the Mollah: "We see in the Holy Scriptures that the way of salvation is to be found only in Jesus, and we read also in your Koran, that Jesus is the First and the Last, the King of the earth, and that He will come in the last day as a Judge to judge; Jesus is God, the Son of God, this is in the Gospel and your Koran confirms it." The Mollah could not contain himself and cried out: "Enough of your blasphemy!" But a Tartar youth amongst the crowd answered and said: "Mollah, thou art the blasphemer because thou deniest Jesus the Saviour; thou deniest Him who is the Son of God; thou denicst the Creator of all things. How long wilt thou deceive us and lead us to hell? Thou knowest very well how this young man has proved in our assembly that Jesus is God, the Son of God." The Mollah cried out: "Kill this youth! Whoever kills him will be blest." Then some standing by struck him on the head so that he bled in two places; but he answered: "You and your fathers are murderers, but I thank Jesus that his word is to-day fulfilled in me."

I soon left the place, but the same night, about eleven o'clock, someone knocked at my door. When I had opened it, I saw the youth with another man. They came in. The youth had his head bandaged; he wept bitterly and complained that his father had taken away his New Testament and thrown it into the fire. "Fear not," I said, "I will give thee another."

Then he pointed to his friend and said: "This man, my friend, has also believed in the Lord Jesus." He continued: "When thou for the first time provedst in our assembly, from the Koran, that Jesus is God and the Son of God, my friend said to me, 'Dost thou see? The Koran itself bears witness that Jesus is the Son of God—Jesus is the right way; but our Mollahs always deceive us.' Then I answered: 'To-morrow we will go to this Christian and buy the Gospel. I believe Mahomet's name is also in the Gospel, we will read and search.' The next day we came to thee, and then we heard that Mahomet's name is not to be found in the Gospel otherwise the Tartars who have had New Testaments given to them, and have read them, would long ago have published it in the newspapers.

"Then you gave me the Gospel of John, and to my friend the Gospel of Matthew. As I read therein, 'The Father loved the Son, and hath given all things into his hand. Whosoever believeth in the Son hath everlasting life. He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him,' and 'God so loved the world,' etc. (John iii. 16-18), then I went to my friend and said, 'Read this.' When he had read it, he said to me: 'We also will believe, that we may be saved.' And from that day we have believed that Jesus is our Saviour, and every day we went out into the field and read the Gospel together and prayed as the Lord taught us (Matt. vi.)."

I said to him, "Why didst thou speak out to-day so publicly in the market? and thou hast been beaten, and thy father has turned thee out of his house?" "Because Jesus says, 'Whosoever confesses Me before men, him will I confess before my Father who is in heaven'" (Matt. x. 32-36). He read in the Gospel himself, and said, "I thank the Lord that to-day all is fulfilled in me. I will bear all things for Jesus' sake." He found all these places in the Scripture and read them to me.

Then he said: "The Saviour says something more in Matt. xxviii. 19, that we do not understand; what is baptism?" We then read together Acts viii. 30, of the Eunuch. At once they wished to be baptized. The same night we went all three to the river Kurrah, and after many earnest questions, all of which they both answered in the affirmative, we all went into the water, as did Philip and the Eunuch, and they were baptized in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. When we were all come up out of the water, we kneeled down and I prayed, and when I had ended praying, the youth who had been beaten, whose name is Ahmed, began to pray in this wise: "O my Saviour Jesus, I thank Thee that Thou hast opened mine eyes to find the way of salvation which is in Thee. I thank Thee that Thou hast cast thine enemies out of my heart, Satan and his confederates, Mahomet, Ali, Hassan, Hussein, Abass; I pray Thee take them away also from the hearts of my father and mother, who are thine enemies, and who have driven me away from their house for thy truth's sake; this I beg of thee, O Jesus! Amen." He prayed with many tears.

Then they wished to take leave of me. "Where to?" I asked. "We do not know—wherever the Lord will; but if we stay in Saljan the people will kill us." "But," said I, "have you any money?" The one whose name is Djavad had three roubles thirty-five copecks; but Ahmed had nothing—no money, and no clothes, excepting his underclothing which his father had left him. I took these (my poor brothers) into my dwelling, and gave Ahmed my old clothes and three roubles, for I had no more, and advised them to walk to Lenkoran (two days' journey), and then to go by boat to Persia; so the two youths took leave of me and departed.

RESCUE OF YOUNG WOMEN.—The Society for the Rescue of Young Women and Children has received a grant of £50 from the Goldsmiths' Company, and £20 from the Fishmongers' Company.

MISSION WORK IN DUBLIN.

Dear Friends,—It is a long time since I have had the pleasure of telling you some of the very interesting facts that we have constantly to tell if only we had time to note them down. Each day brings its own innumerable details, and it is only when we can sit down and ponder over the days and weeks which have flown by, that we recall stage after stage of our happy journey.

The visiting through the various districts of the city introduces us to scenes of utter misery—empty rooms, squalid neglected children, men vainly seeking work, illness and hunger tempting them to drink; and, worst of all, utter ignorance of the way to be saved—no Bible, no hope—what is to be done? All unexpectedly, the kind Christian visitor enters, and, after a little talk, a cheerful invitation is given to the evening meeting, and for the children to the nearest mission school. In a short time, if you call in to that room again, truly you may say, "What hath God wrought?" Such a change! A cheerful welcome. "Well, my husband is a changed man; in the evenings when he returns from work, after his tea, he calls the children to tell him what they have learned in school; they repeat the texts and give him the teaching they got, and so he gets interested. And now," says the poor woman, "we love to go to the meetings to hear more of what we never heard before."

A gentleman passing down a back street was attracted by a little crowd of children on a doorstep. One little girl stood on the path below, with a little cane in her hand. "Now," she said, "all have sinned." The children repeated "all have sinned," and paused. "And come short," continued the little teacher, and again the others repeated the words; and so on, to the end of the verse; a word of explanation and a hymn followed. "Well," said the gentleman, "things are altered in Dublin, when you can hear children teaching God's Word in the open street unmolested."

It is wonderful how little interest Protestants take in this work of bringing Roman Catholics to a knowledge of salvation. Whole families during the past year have left Rome and come to the Saviour, through the simple mission teaching, to which they are attracted by hearing Bible truths contrasted with the teaching of Rome. A poor woman, who with her husband and family are rejoicing in the Light, heard of her father's death in the country. Broken-hearted that she had not been with him to tell him all she had learned, she set off; she had a hard fight for her mother and brothers and sisters, but the Lord gave her victory, and she brought them back with her; she sent the boys and girls to the mission schools, and they are all now a happy family, united in the Lord.

I could tell of mothers of families, dark and bigoted, being brought out by means of the children in the schools bringing the truth to their parents, and coaxing them to come with them to the evening meetings, where they were led quietly out of darkness into God's marvellous light.

The work is very complete, with its various departments all working together, the visitors going from room to room reading and teaching; the schools for the children in four different parts of the city; the discussion classes and Gospel meetings every night in different centres—about 200 R.C. men assemble in one of them; the large adult Sunday-schools each Sunday; the handbills, containing most interesting questions, contrasting Rome's teaching with Scripture, diligently distributed with striking results.

A number come to my mind as I write. I will give one example. A bigoted R.C. watched us. On more than one occasion he tried to gather a mob to stone us; he followed us in the street to tear up the tracts we dropped. One morning curiosity led him to read one, and he exclaimed, "Well, there is some sense in this after all—no abuse of the B.V.M." It so impressed him that he came to our meeting, was interested in what he read, and, after a while, came and shook hands with us, saying, "I believe you have the truth—forgive me for my cowardly acts." He asked for a Douay Testament and some controversial tracts to take to the country.

So the truth spreads. Not only in Dublin but throughout the land the blessed message is welcomed, from the missionaries itinerating through the country, speaking in the open-air in fairs and markets; talking personally to Roman Catholics; singing sweet hymns, which attract the Irish wonderfully; selling the Douay Testaments and other suitable books for Roman Catholics; you would be amazed to hear the numbers sold on their last tour, and how little opposition they met. A gentleman from London, hearing of this work when it was first proposed, said calmly, "It is madness—cruelty—to send young men out to be murdered." But, thank God, not one has been hurt, and they come back joyfully recounting what the Lord has done by them.

Ireland is open throughout. More men of the right sort are needed—men yielded to God, cleansed and filled with the Holy Ghost, and ready to lose their lives for Christ's sake. About £200 would just now secure the services of extra workers. When will Christians deny themselves, and come to the help of the Lord against the mighty?

Faithfully yours,

Ellen Smyly.

MRS. GINEVER'S HOMES.

In her new report, entitled, "Under his Wings," Mrs. Ginever informs us that during the past year 170 orphans have been fed, clothed, and educated in her three homes. She says: "Often have we been put to our wit's end to try to make both ends meet, and as often have we had to give it up as a bad job, so that, in spite of my desire to keep from debt, it has not always been possible. My faithful co-workers who have been for so many years actively engaged in caring for the orphans, had to wait for months for their salaries, and frequently laid out their own cash to supply the daily needs.

"No bed has remained unoccupied in consequence of the low state of the exchequer; as vacancies have occurred they have been immediately filled up, for I love to think of the Lord Jesus looking with joy on our bright happy children in their beds and cots, knowing full well it is his desire that not one of these little ones should perish. It is our work to fill the houses with needy orphans, leaving Him to supply all their wants, through his redeemed and ransomed followers. At the risk of being thought imprudent, I must plead guilty to not only filling every bed and cot, but bringing into use three bassinettes, and thereby adding three little infants to my large family, so that our number is now 170 and three babies."

Mrs. Ginever goes on to say that the applications last year were numerous beyond precedent, scarcely a day passing without several appeals reaching her. Many of the cases which she has been enabled to receive are children upon whose families has come a reverse of fortune. Aiming in particular to prevent respectable orphans from becoming waifs and strays, Mrs. Ginever has done her best to shelter such. Marked success has attended the placing out of the girls, she is encouraged to hope that the boys will fare as well. The work at the home for crippled and afflicted orphans at Broadstairs has a pathetic interest. Mrs. Ginever says:—"Our cases are mostly incurables, some having had a limb amputated, several have spinal and other deformities, others suffer from hip disease or consumption. All, however, are not incurably diseased, some who have passed a most delicate childhood under this roof, are now strong enough to get their own living, and many strong boys have been transferred to other Homes, who were brought to us weakly babies, crippled through rickets."

Communications to Mrs. Ginever, may be addressed: Kingsdown Orphanage, Pemberton-road, Upper Holloway.

The Strangers' Rest.

This Christmastide was a busy time at the Rest. On Boxing Day 350 men responded to an invitation to tea, followed by a Christmas-tree distribution of warm knitted articles, and addresses by Messrs. W. H. Seagram, B. Sinclair, and others.

On Tuesday the doors were besieged for admission to a roast beef and plum pudding supper; and again seafaring men of various nationalities crowded in. The season of the year afforded many a point for earnest spiritual appeals and faithful warnings against drink from the various speakers. The guests not only listened with intelligence and attention, but not a few of them indicated a desire for an interest in the prayers of their hosts, and for personal converse about spiritual things.

In addition to the necessity for material support, there is plenty of scope for further personal help in the ordinary meetings at the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street.

CHRISTIAN NURSES.

I observe with pleasure that you have been touching lately upon the question of Christian nurses. Whilst one rejoices in the earlier efforts in this department of service for Christ, such as Elizabeth Fry's still living institution in Devonshire-square, E., you will be glad to make it known that kindred endeavours are afoot and have proved means of unspeakable blessing to many.

Besides the deaconesses of Mildmay, numbering about 120, there has been a nursing institution in existence for very many years at that same centre, with a staff numbering from eighty-five to 100 earnest Evangelical women, not one of whom goes forth to a new case of sick nursing without special prayer with the superintendent. The ceaseless activities of Romish and Ritualistic agents in many departments of life, and their access to sick rooms and hospitals, should stimulate Evangelical Christians to like watchfulness and energy.

The Mildmay nurses have for sixteen years been in charge of the Doncaster Infirmary, and for briefer periods they have ministered to the sick in other smaller hospitals and convalescent homes, and in a nursing mission to our soldiers at Malta, but the greater number are available for private nursing. Many sufferers have had to bless God for "words spoken in season to them that are weary," through these faithful women during long and trying days, and in the watches of the night.

Mildmay has not blown a trumpet before its varied and beneficent organisations for the souls and bodies of sin and sorrow-stricken humanity and for the honour of its heavenly Master; it seems the more incumbent on one who knows the facts, but who is not responsible officially for its operations, to speak a word for these quiet workers, "whose praise is not of men, but of God."

A BORDER MISSION.

One of the most successful home missions in the south of Scotland is energetically conducted in the manufacturing town of Langholm. Twelve years ago it was formed at the close of a very fruitful series of tent meetings held by Messrs. Hall and Graham. Since then men of decided Christian principles, drafted from the various churches, have kept the mission going, and made it a centre of active Christian work. Preaching the Gospel, tract distributing, visitation, and personal dealing forms the backbone of the mission operations.

Its membership has never been large, yet its record of work is considerable and full of interest. During those years over five thousand indoor and open-air meetings have been held, and more than ten thousand Gospel addresses delivered by well-known ministers, evangelists and lay preachers. Booklets and tracts to the number of twenty thousand have been circulated. Evangelistic work in outlying districts, involving walks from twelve to twenty-four miles, has been overtaken. One of two series of special meetings are held every year. Whilst no permanent record is kept of conversions, it is estimated that four hundred persons have been brought to a definite profession of faith in Christ, and that a large number have been helped to live a higher Christian life.

The restraining influence which the mission has exercised in the town cannot be gauged. Workers who have been trained in this mission are now wholly devoted to Christian work at home and abroad. The twelve years' expenditure has only been a little over £500, and has been fully met by collections and donations. Its work was perhaps never in a more hopeful condition than now. Many of its meetings are crowded to excess, and sinners are finding their way into the kingdom of Christ.

MR. CHAMPNESS'S WORK.—In reporting a recent address by Rev. T. Champness at Aldersgate-street, it appears that our reporter misapprehended some of his statements with respect to Mrs. Argent, mother of the young missionary killed in China. The rooms occupied by her as chapel-keeper in the East-end, we are informed, are built partly above and partly below the vestries at the back of the chapel, and cannot properly be called a "cellar." She left this appointment three months ago. The new schools referred to have already been built and opened, and a tablet to the memory of the late Wm. Argent has been placed there; beyond that his name is not in any way connected with the building.

MR. RABINOWICH AND HIS WORK.

A MEETING of more than ordinary interest was held at Mildmay Conference Hall on Wednesday evening last week, to hear of the Lord's doings in Russia among his ancient people, the speaker and guest of the occasion being Mr. Joseph Rabinowich, of Kischeneff. The dense fog which prevailed at the time no doubt prevented a larger attendance, but the hundred or more friends who braved the unfavourable elements were well repaid in the pleasant hour that was spent. Mr. J. E. MATHIESON, who presided, referred to Exodus ii., and said that God is not unmindful of the cry of his people under an oppression greater than that of Egypt, found in the anti-Semitic spirit which prevails in France, Germany, Austria, and especially in Russia. He urged all who long for "the peace of Jerusalem" to be instant in prayer for the Jewish people, scattered abroad at this time.

Mr. RABINOWICH, who spoke for the first time without an interpreter, expressed his joy at seeing his English friends face to face once more, and graphically depicted the transitions of thought in regard to Jesus of Nazareth through which his mind had passed. Ten years ago, while holding a high position in the Jewish community, he visited Jerusalem, there to study "the Jewish question" on the spot, intending to return to Russia with a carefully-prepared report of his investigations. He had come to see that not by civilisation nor education were his people to be saved; and then the thought was borne in irresistibly upon him, as he gazed upon the Holy Sepulchre—"Suppose that after all Jesus Christ should have been the Messiah!" He had taken a New Testament with him as a "guide-book" to the country, and when he consulted it his eye fell on the words, "Without Me ye can do nothing." Again he looked, and read, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name He shall give it you." So remarkable did these passages seem to him as a possible, and even probable, solution of the whole subject, that he could not set them aside and—to use his own words—"I returned to my country leaning upon these two crutches, and when asked by my friends for my report, I could only refer them to those words."

This not unnaturally created a sensation; the newspapers took the matter up, he was suspected of being a political agent, but when the police superintendent learned that he preached Jesus, he granted the necessary permission. Thus he has been able in the synagogues to declare the Messiahship of our Lord, and laid at the door of his hearers the sin of rejecting Him.

Mr. Rabinowich laid great stress on the special character of his work. While the work of missionaries generally is to take the great Remedy to the Jewish people, the special work God has given him to do is to uncover their wound and to show to the Jew the depth of degradation into which he has fallen by his rejection of Christ. Again, all other efforts to evangelise the Jew are made from without, but his is a voice from within the synagogue itself. Since the opening of the fine hall, built with money subscribed chiefly in the West of Scotland, in memory of the late Dr. Somerville, over 600 Jews have listened to him preaching Christ as Israel's only hope, while by means of the small printing press presented to him by Scottish friends, tens of thousands of his sermons in Hebrew, Russian and Jewish jargon have been circulated, not only all over the Russian empire, but in all parts of the world.

As an instance of the effect his testimony is having on Jewish hearts, the following letter, which was read by Mr. David Baron, may be quoted:

Dearly beloved brother in our Lord Jesus of Nazareth, my dear teacher and highly respected Mr. Joseph Rabinowich—I am baptized, I am redeemed, I am a Jew, a Christian of the seed of Abraham. I am too excited to put down on paper the details of the events.

The 25th of October was that great day in my life, of which the angels in Heaven, even they, gave praise and glory to the Most High of the redeemed lost sheep of Christ. The 26th of October I took the Holy Sacrament. On Sunday evening I sent you a telegram about my baptism. I received your dear letter full of Christian love to me, and it gave me great joy. I salute you, my dear teacher. I have no words to express my feelings of gratitude to you.

I hope that in a week's time I shall be able to get from the governor all my formal documents, and also my passport, and then I will go to you to see you face to face.

I am not gifted with the words, I say again, to express my feelings, my heart is full.

Do you remember when in summer you and Mrs. Rabinowich were at tea in the garden, and I before taking leave went into your hall "Bethlehem" to pray to the Lord? Oh, I prayed earnestly then with tears, and it helped me and I was much encouraged. I remember well the blessing you gave me.

Well now, the results of your prayers for me are the following: repentance, baptism, and the crucified Lord in my heart. The tracts, the sermons, the New Testament, and also my Bible you gave me, were taken away from me by my friends and relations. These all and my clothes were torn to pieces and burnt.

Well, in one morning as I got up, being left without clothing in this most cold weather, I was obliged to flee for life, and went on foot to Kiev, thirty miles off.

There is much to tell you. I hope, with the Lord's help, I shall be with you soon, and then there shall be much to pray and give thanks to the Lord for the past.

In conclusion, I can only exclaim, I am a Christian! I am a child of Christ! I am a member of Christ's Church till death!

"Let Israel hope in the Lord: for with the Lord there is mercy and with Him is abundant redemption. And He shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities."—Psal. cxxx. 7, 8.

Now, may peace and mercy from God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen. And may it also be said so in Heaven.

The God of Israel is with us. Your loving brother in Christ and faithful servant,

Kiev, October 26, 1892. ILIAS OFFENHEIM.

Rev. Theodore J. Meyer and Rev. John Wilkinson afterwards gave short addresses, testifying to the good work which Mr. Rabinowich is doing, and commending him to the sympathies of British Christians. A large party of American missionaries passing through England en route to Acola, in the province of Berar, India, were present at the meeting, and lent interest to the proceedings.

The Week of Prayer.

WEST-END MEETINGS.

THE West-end meetings are being held daily this week in Portman-rooms, Baker-street. On Monday the subject was:—

HUMILIATION AND THANKSGIVING. — Confession of the Church's sins of omission and commission, compromising, and understating God's truth, mistrusting his power, neglecting his call, and keeping back his due. Prayer for grace to put away whatever hinders individual, family, national, and congregational blessing; and for a special blessing on this year's observance of the Week of Prayer, which begins with New Year's Day. Praise and Thanksgiving: For God's revelation of himself in his Word; for the fruitful observance of the Week of Universal Prayer; for the increase of brotherly love, missionary zeal, and desire after holiness.

Mr. DONALD MATHESON, who presided, read Psa. xxxii., and briefly remarked on the privilege of meeting together, apart from denominational distinctions, for united prayer. Tokens of blessing have been granted in many parts of the foreign field, and there are indications that God is about to pour out his blessings on the churches at home.

Prebendary EARDLEY-WILMOT, M.A., selected as his text the words:—"Thou art the same, and thy years shall have no end" (Psa. cii. 27), or, as quoted in Hebrews, "Thy years shall not fail."

The subject before us is Humiliation and Praise, and this Penitential psalm (cii.) begins with contrition, and ends with a note of confident thanksgiving, the key to which is found in the unchanging character of God, the changeless love of Jehovah. As we stand at the opening of another year, we do well to confess that we have left undone what we ought to have done, and have done what we ought not to have done. What then? We rest on the faithfulness of Him who hath promised, on the Covenant love of God in Christ, and we know we have forgiveness.

And similarly our praise rests on this changelessness of God. We know not what in the way of change and trial the year may bring, but we know that He is faithful, that He hath promised that all things shall work together for good to them that love God," and knowing this we rejoice in the Lord.

THE CITY MEETINGS.

The City meetings this year are being held in the Lecture Hall of the Y.M.C.A., 59 and 60, Cornhill. It is gratifying to observe that a large proportion of the attendants are young men. At the noon meeting on Monday, the speaker was Rev. W. J. DAWSON, whose words were few but helpful. He emphasised the importance of hope in Christian service. It is, he said, so easy to be discouraged and to allow the weaker elements within ourselves to overcome us—so easy to deceive ourselves as to the real impression Christianity is making upon the world, and gradually, through slackness of hopes, to fall into deadness of heart and coldness of faith. The trumpets of the New Year, that blow to us another period of time, are trumpets of hope that call us to the new battle. At this time we feel specially called upon to scrutinize ourselves, and resolve, in the strength which God may give us, that the future shall be better than the past. There is in Christian work no danger more serious than desultoriness, lack of aim and real purpose—the dissipation of energy over too wide a space. Many Christian lives are ruined for lack of concentration. We need to collect our powers of heart and mind and soul, and to concentrate them upon the great purpose of living like Christ and making the world around us Christ's world. In conclusion, the speaker urged upon Christians to seek grace from God that they may interpret Christ to their fellows as Christ Himself interpreted the Father to the world.

The meeting beginning at one o'clock was presided over by Rev. W. BLAIR NEATBY, M.A., who derived instructive lessons from Nehemiah ix. and Deut. viii. A review of the past cannot but excite in us a sense of our failure on the one hand, and of God's grace on the other. Hence humiliation and praise, and a ground of confidence in supplication as to our future course. Experimental victory and fruitfulness in service are conditioned upon abiding in Christ: "The branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine." He is the great soul-winner; and if we abide in Him we shall bear much fruit; if severed from Him we shall be like branches detached from the vine, without use or beauty. We must receive from Him sustenance moment by moment. These thoughts directed several earnest petitions to the throne of grace; and both the meetings were very stimulating.

TUESDAY'S MEETINGS.

The subject on Tuesday was:—

THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL.—Prayer for the demonstration in power, of the Spirit in the Church; Pleading the specific promise of the Ascending Lord (Acts i. 8); prayer that "the Holy Church throughout all the world" may be more humble and diligent in the study of the Word, in discerning God's purposes, and in obtaining his promises; more active in her witness for Christ, in the observance of his Sabbath, and in obedience to his will; more faithful in her protest against Romanism, Sacerdotalism, Latitudinarianism; and more eager in her looking for his glorious appearing.

Dr. H. R. REYNOLDS (whose portrait and sketch we give this week) gave the address at Portman Rooms, of which the following is a summary:—

We are seeking by prayer a deeper realisation of the oneness of the Catholic Church of God. The manifestation of the sons of God to each other does, by the nature of the case, involve the revelation of the brotherhood. The root of this idea is the oneness of the Divine life, and that it always corresponds with itself. The Church is not the aggregate of societies, but the sum of all God's sons who recognise and respond to the grace of God given in Christ Jesus. Their union with each other follows, rather than precedes the union with Him. They are one, as the Father and the Son are one.

The sign of this union cannot be in the union of their organism, but in the identity of the Spirit which dwells in each member of the mystical body. The sentiment of union is becoming day by day stronger than the strength of the separating walls of partition. It is burning into a white heat, which will consume and illumine; when this process takes full effect, the world will believe. The tangle of ecclesiastical organisations is arbitrary and artificial; the inner resemblances, the real identity of supernatural life, are necessary and permanent. The one are seen, the other are invisible. The one are perishable, the other eternal. Has not the time come when we can distinctly discriminate the features of the sons of God? Do they not gleam from behind their veils? Let us review briefly a few of them:—

(1) Faith in Christ. Sacraments, worship, ministries are primarily aids to this faith, which, when realised, is greater than them all.

(2) The Christian humility which must characterise all who have received an utterly unmerited gift.

(3) The blending of penitence with praise, of joy with sorrow, of Divine strength with human weakness. The methods in which this unique blending of opposed emotions is brought about may differ; but none can misunderstand this prime feature of the Divine life in man.

(4) The practical outcome of this Divine life in the manifestation of the Spirit of Christ to all men, in holy living and eager longing to save all souls, to lift every burden and meet all the agonies of human life.

(5) The sacred calm, which can face the mystery of human destiny, and is the harbinger of the day for which all other days were made.

ALDERSGATE STREET.

Archdeacon Sinclair, of St. Paul's, gave an address earnest and very appropriate to the occasion here, on Monday, based on the 23rd Psalm, especially on the words, "He restoreth my soul." At the close, Mr. R. Paton, who presided, called attention to the many important agencies which had been the outcome of this daily prayer meeting.

MELBOURNE JOTTINGS.

BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

EVANGELISTIC.

The evangelists, Messrs. Edwards and H. Klein, were so cheered by the results of their efforts in the Theatre Royal that they carried on services for a fortnight afterwards in the Freemasons' Hall, where good fruit was gathered to the glory of God, and many of the Lord's children refreshed, while not a few backsliders were aroused. These evangelists have since been holding services in suburbs and outlying places, and everywhere the story of the cross has brought triumph to the name of Jesus. No newspaper notice has been taken of these hearty gatherings, even when in Melbourne; and I have seen no record of them in any religious publication. They were carried on under the auspices of the brethren, which may account for this. I would the day had come when a more Catholic spirit prevailed amongst all who call themselves Christians, and when no mere "ism" or special doctrine taught, should place any party beyond the general recognition of the lovers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

THE YOUNG.

The great Christian Endeavour Convention had no sooner ended than the annual meetings of the Victoria Sunday-school Union were begun. It was a good fortnight, prayer and praise meetings, sermons to teachers and senior scholars, communion service, practical lesson studies, soirée and public meeting, and an evening of choir singing, were all conducted with wonderful harmony and spirit, proving the efficiency of the executive of this useful Union and the untiring energy of its able secretary, Mr. Jackson.

A VISITOR.

Rev. William Morley, Wesleyan minister from New Zealand, recently visited Melbourne, and during the short time he remained in town preached on several occasions to most appreciative audiences. His ability as a preacher is much enhanced by the particularly eloquent manner in which he reads the Bible. Not that he does this in any dramatic way, but in his ordinary style, with a good round, clear voice, and much real unction, which shows him to be familiar with the teaching of the passage, which, by his reading, he brings out in a most striking way. If Mr. Morley only reads the Scripture at a service it is productive of great good. His sermons, too, delivered without note or manuscript, have been a great treat to all who have heard him.

CHURCH MEETINGS.

During the past week or two we have been having an embarras de richesse in the way of Church meetings. The Presbyterian Assembly has had a long session, during which, amongst other interesting meetings, was one convened by the Women's Missionary Union, which is becoming a thoroughly live organisation. In the two years of its existence fifty-seven branches have been formed throughout Victoria, whilst the Union has assisted in carrying on mission work not only among the Chinese in Melbourne, but to the heathen in China, Corea, and India, and in the North of Australia among the Aborigines. Many excellent speeches were made in the course of the evening, those attracting particular attention were by Miss Newcombe, from India, and Mr. Cheok Hong Cheong. The Baptist Union of Victoria and Melbourne Christian Temperance Union have had a number of stirring meetings.

THE CARNIVAL.

On November 1 the great Melbourne carnival was held, and, for the first time for a number of years, was a wet day. This seriously interfered with many Sunday-school picnics, which now fall due on this public holiday. Many places are described as priest-ridden; Melbourne may be said to be horse-ridden.

THE SPIRIT OF GAMBLING

seems to permeate all classes. I have before me a very rough paste-board gaming table of circular form, in various colours, with the names of the horses running for the cup written on the different radial divisions. This is made by an eight-year old boy in a State school, where it seems the children amuse themselves with gambling for cherry-pips, buttons, and even halfpence.

HON. JAMES M'BAIN.

We have recently sustained a national loss by the death of the Hon. James MacBain, President of the Legislative Council, who was one of that stamp of men Victoria could ill afford to part with at the present juncture. Recently so many prominent religious men have become mixed up with the boom companies that have collapsed that those who had not come within the sweeping vortex of "the haste to be rich," which has caused so much shame and sorrow in this land, are more than ever looked upon as strong minded, and the sort of men to be trusted. Sir James MacBain was always known as the steady, persevering, honourable Christian man who realised that present duty was an act of service for the Master.

AN AUSTRALIAN GEORGE MÜLLER.

We are about to sustain another loss, though in another way—Rev. W. Lockhart Morton (our young George Müller), who, besides his ordinary pastoral work as a Presbyterian Minister, has carried on salvage work of an interesting description, having established Homes of Hope for inebriates, which have, by the blessing of God, proved a great success. He is about to leave for South Australia, where, in addition to rescue work, he is to establish a missionary training home, much after the method of your worthy Dr. H. G. Guinness at Harley House. Our loss will be the gain of the sister colony, and we must wish Mr. Morton God-speed in this undertaking. Judging by Mr. Morton's always sunny face, one would say the life of faith is the brightest life on earth.

Melbourne, November 19.

Mr. George Müller.

An overflowing congregation met at Bethesda Chapel, Bristol, on Sunday week, to meet Mr. George Müller, the founder of the orphanage for 2,050 children at Ashley Down.

As Mr. Müller has spent the greater part of the last fifteen years in missionary tours throughout the world, and is now in his eighty-eighth year, the opportunities of hearing his voice in public are very few. Since his return to England in July he has confined his ministrations to the orphan houses, so that the announcement that he would preach excited unusual interest.

Taking as his subject Isaiah ix. 6, 7, he gave a powerful vindication of the fundamental doctrines of our Lord's divinity and the atonement, deducing also useful and practical lessons from the titles ascribed to Him. Mr. Müller spoke with all his wonted earnestness for fifty minutes, and it was evident that in spite of his advanced years he still retains much of his natural vigour of body, as well as of mind.

Wilton House of Rest, St. Leonards.

The comfort of winter visitors has been specially considered and provided for in the alterations and additions that have been recently completed. The sanitary arrangements have also been perfected, and the house is now rendered warm and comfortable in winter, while in summer the beauty of its situation is unsurpassed along the South coast. The following extract from a letter received by Mr. Russell Hurditch (in connection with whose work the House is sustained) shows how the benefits of Wilton House are appreciated. Very many testimonies of a similar kind have been received. A minister reports: "We were indeed most comfortable and happy at Wilton House, and feel greatly established in health from the visit to your happy home, with its healthful society and Christian help. The real benefit, bodily and spiritually, received will enable us to pursue our Christian work with re-newed vigour. Brightness, cheerfulness, and spiritual profit entwine at Wilton House into a threefold cord that invigorates all encircled by it."

MEDICAL MISSIONARIES.—The New York Medical Missionary Record gives a list of 359 medical missionaries, seventy-four of whom are lady doctors, only those possessing full medical qualification being included. The Presbyterian Church of the United States has 48; the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 32; the Methodist Church of the United States, 30; the Church Missionary Society, 25; the Free Church of Scotland, 20; the United Presbyterian Church, 10; and the Church of Scotland, 8; the Presbyterian Church of Canada having the same number. As regards nationality, the United States has 173; Great Britain, 169; Canada, 7; and Germany, 3. As regards countries occupied, China has the largest number, 126; India, 76; and Africa 46.

CHICAGO NOTES.

There has been a marked flurry in ministerial circles throughout the land, over the death of Jay Gould, the man of many millions. Some strong texts of Scripture were quoted, such as "The rich man died also and was buried." "Riches and the fool" was one topic; the "selfish man," etc., ran all through the many discourses preached last Sunday. The press all over the land has echoed the voice of the people, that this great Money King was a dangerous man. He was buried, but no general grief was shown. The world cares nothing for his memory; not a college, hospital, or any great benevolent institution is the better for his having lived.

How different the feeling when Mary Allen West, Editor of The Union Signal, tried to escape for her life by a trip abroad, and death caught her in distant Japan. Touching exercises were held in Willard Hall in the Temple; representatives from the leading organisations of the temperance woman's work were present. Loving memories were called up. It was announced that similar meetings were held half way round the globe. She was one of the great and good souls of earth. Over the beautiful portrait carried into the hall a circle of living green was woven, and upon a white panel were the words, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Miss Scudduth, who for years toiled side by side with Miss West, summed up her remarks in these words, "That life is long which answers life's great end." Pastors and people were glad to bring their tributes in rich effusion to the funeral of one so worthy. The memory of the just is as ointment poured forth.

Church building in and near Chicago is the marvellous feature of this period. The Methodists seem to lead, and now have 127 churches. The corner stone of a new Bethany Home on the north side was laid with imposing ceremonies. It is designed to accommodate fifty-six aged people, and will cost about 25,000dols. In the near future will be added an orphan asylum, and a hospital.

The calls for benevolent work were never more urgent, and new missions must open very soon. Among the well-to-do Italians a blessed work of grace has broken out, and a few prominent men have been converted. One man has a Bible-reading service in his tallow shop, with from twenty to fifty in attendance. He shows signs of a true evangelist.

Among the French population a spirit of inquiry is abroad, and the old formalism of Catholicism is looked upon as something of the past. One of the city pastors has received a large number of hopeful converts into his church from the old and useless system of high pretensions and effete faith. Thirty-two Roman Catholics lately attended a prayer-meeting, and were deeply impressed with the spirit prevailing in the service. Perchance the dawn is coming of a brighter day.

Congress had hardly been called to order before a bill was introduced to repeal the Sunday closing of the fair, but there are many in both branches of the National Legislature who will not go back on their former acts. The people are awake; telegrams, letters, delegations, and strong leading men are bracing up the Senators and representatives, who have this cause at heart. It is strange that so many ministers advocate a compromise.

The Sabbath Union has taken up the matter in real earnest, and a two days' meeting is being held in Chicago. All the prominent workers have been invited, and they will have something to say.

The evangelists are hard at work in various fields, and tidings come from far and near of many revivals.

From the World's Fair there comes the good tidings that a Children's Temple will be built. Mrs. Potter Palmer threw open her mansion for a fair, and some 25,000dols. is the result. With added gifts this will make the building and the undertaking a success.

Mr. B. F. Jacobs says the Sunday-school building will also go up, and will be attractive to all Sunday-school workers.

The arrival of Mr. Moody in safety from his perilous voyage is a matter of deep interest to many of his old friends and the Christian public.

THE MARCH OF CIVILISATION.—Tramcars are to run ere long in the streets of Thessalonica. The concession has been obtained by Hamdy Bey, a local Crœsus.

DARKNESS AND LIGHT IN S. INDIA.

REV. I. H. HACKER, L.M.S., Neyoor, Colachel, Travancore, writes:—"We have been having a most instructive illustration of the great hold Hindoo notions have upon the rulers of their native state, in a ceremony which our Maharajah has been through under the guidance of Brahmin priests. In order to gain some privilege which to us seems of doubtful value, he was ordered to be weighed in gold, and this gold made into coins to be distributed to the Brahmins. On the morning when the ceremony was performed, the Maharajah rose to visit the royal temple, where he spent some time in worshipping the idol and repeating prayers. He then retired to his palace, changed his clothes, put on all his royal apparel, and armed with a shield and sword, he again went to the temple.

"There were assembled all the Brahmins of the state, standing round the scales where the ceremony was to be performed. The King then walked round the scales three times, prostrated himself before the sacred part of the temple, and, receiving permission of the priests, he mounted the scales. Gold coins were put into the other until the Maharajah, with shield, sword, and all his ornaments, rose high in the air. He was then allowed to descend, and having told the Brahmins to take the gold, he returned to his palace. This ceremony, in which the King was 'worth his weight in gold' to the priests, cost 200,000 rupees, or £20,000—all given to the Brahmin caste, wasted, simply that the Rajah may have the privilege of seeing the Brahmins at their food. But even then he is not allowed to eat with them, as he is considered of lower caste then they. This is a most striking instance of the mighty power that priestism still has in the high places of India; and we must pray that the time may soon come that this native king may be weighed and not found wanting by our Heavenly Father.

"Under the shadow of this heathen system, and in a sense unknown by the rulers of this State, God is gathering, one by one, the poor, despised people into his kingdom: and if one from a little higher caste comes to us, I cannot describe the trouble we have. Some months ago a bright young fellow came to me at Trevandrum saying that he wanted to become a Christian, that he had found Jesus Christ to be his Saviour, and asking if I would baptize him at once. I said, 'No'; but if he would come to me at Neyoor, he could stay with me for a time, and we would then see if he could bear reproach for Christ. He came, and has been with me ever since, growing in knowledge. However, his trial came.

"There came from Trevandrum six or seven of his friends, with his mother. I told them that so far as I was concerned the young fellow was free to go back with them, but that if he said, 'I want to serve Jesus Christ,' I could not send him away. They promised him everything—as much wealth as would tempt him, a beautiful wife, and a comfortable home. But none of these things moved him. Then they threatened to disinherit him, to cast him off, to bury his name away from them for ever. But he stood firm. Then his mother began crying, 'O my son, my dear son, my only son, do not leave me! What am I without you? I am barren, alone, desolate!' Tears filled the eyes of all of us. It was too hard to bear, but the young man said, 'No, mother, I am under the shadow of the King of kings, and must serve Jesus Christ. I will come to you as a Christian, but not without. I will come in three months' time to you as a Christian, and see if you will receive me.' There the interview ended, and the mother and her friends went away, but the youth remains here, and may lose all things for Christ. Will you pray for him?"

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION is about to extend its work to the Willesden and Brondesbury districts, a large site having been secured in Willesden-lane. A temporary iron building is being erected, and is to be opened on Thursday, January 5. A number of ministers and others of various denominations have promised to take part in the afternoon and evening meetings.

ABERSYCHAN, MON.—Mr. W. B. Witchell has for some six months been conducting on Sunday afternoons in the Wesleyan Chapel a Young Men's Bible Class with growing attendance and deepening interest. Much real work has been done, the careless and indifferent being brought in, and some led to the Saviour. The class is becoming a centre of power in the neighbourhood.

WORK IN SOUTH WALES.

DEAR SIR,—It will interest many of your readers who have so heartily and generously supported us in our efforts to benefit temporal and spiritual the masses of colliers, tin, iron, and steel workers of South Wales, to know that I have, through mercy, completed fourteen years of service for God in these regions. Never were our labours so much appreciated by those in whose interest we toil, or blessed by God, as at the present time. The Gospel services, temperance meetings, children's services, sewing meetings, night schools for men and women, Band of Hope meetings, pictorial services, reading rooms, rescue, and preventive work are pushed forward with most encouraging results.

At our Dowlais branch 600 to 800 of the very poorest people are gathered every Thursday evening to the Band of Hope pictorial service, and numbers sign the pledge nightly. I have received a letter from the Midlands written by a young man who ten years ago was a scholar in our ragged school, Pontymoile. A sermon on the Prodigal Son led to his conversion, and though he has had much persecution from a drunken father, he has found the Gospel to be the power of God unto salvation, and he is now a candidate for the ministry.

While we are cheered by seeing so much fruit to our labours, we are more than ever in need of the prayers and practical sympathy of Christians.

Yours sincerely,

THOS. M. WINTLE.

Pontymoile, Pontypool, South Wales.

The Railway Mission.

MISS EDITH TILBY, who has been working in connection with the Clapham Junction Branch of the Railway Mission, has been appointed by the committee to take charge of the work in Dublin. At this time of religious awakening and inquiry in Ireland Christian railway men have many opportunities for spreading the Gospel in their journeys through some of the remote parts of the country. It is hoped that through Miss Tilby's efforts many of the men will be led to give themselves to God, and become missionaries to their fellow countrymen.

A Railway Mission conference and meetings for deepening of spiritual life will be held in the Railway Mission Hall and Guildhall, Bath, on February 12, 13, and 14. Speakers, Revs. Hubert Brooke, E. W. Moore, J. B. Figgis, J. J. Luce, and J. G. Mantly. The local secretary is Miss M. R. Williams, 33, Green Park, Bath.

A new iron hall to seat 250 people has been opened in connection with the New Cross branch of the mission. Two very successful meetings were held in the Pavilion, Brighton, in the interests of the mission on December 13. The mission is in much need of funds at present to meet pressing demands.

From Father Chiniquy.

IN a remarkable letter to Pastor Frank White, acknowledging the assistance given to his work by friends in Britain, Father Chiniquy says:—"The crop of precious souls gathered into the granaries of the good Master during the past six months is among the most abundant we have ever seen. In spite of my eighty-three years of age, I have continued, during this period, to sow the good seed of the Gospel among my countrymen, who, to the number of more than a million and a-half, have emigrated from Canada to the United States. Thousands of these have come, in spite of their priests, to hear the message of life; and not less than five hundred have publicly given up their errors to accept and follow the Gospel of Christ. It is by the help you send me that I am able to travel and scatter the seeds of light, truth, and eternal life among the perishing multitudes whom the Pope keeps enchained to the feet of his idols."

Father Chiniquy's address is St. Anne, Kankakee County, Illinois.

MRS. MOTTRAM DURBIN, writing from The Manse, Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo, Ceylon, asks gifts of tracts, cards, magazines, or anything suitable for giving away. "We have much visiting here, in the hospitals and barracks, as well as in bungalows, and should be most grateful for Gospel literature at any time. May I ask the sender to enclose the name, so that I may have the pleasure of thanking him or her? Friends at home may help much in the work abroad in this way. May we also express our sincere and hearty thanks to the kind friend who sends us regularly THE CHRISTIAN?"

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

AN Association has just been inaugurated at Fords field, S.W.

Mr. Joseph Ball, who has done good work at Winnipeg, has become general secretary at Calgary.

Mr. S. R. Mabin is leaving the Plymouth Y.M.C.A. to take up the general secretaryship at Devonport

The next British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s is arranged to take place at Sheffield, June 13—16 next.

Sunderland Association has lately celebrated its "majority." In 1871 there were 169 members; now there are 675.

The membership of the Cork Association has increased by thirty-three since the opening of the new building by Mr. Moody.

Mr. William Henderson has been appointed assistant travelling secretary to the Scottish Union of Y.M.C.A. and Fellowship Unions.

The report of the Brandon Association (Canada) is full of encouragement, and shows that during the past year there has been earnest work to good purpose.

By a series of meetings arranged in the West of England by Mr. H. Roberts, travelling secretary, the Congo Balolo Mission has benefited to the extent of over £100.

Since October 1, 120 new members and subscribers have joined the Ipswich Y.M.C.A., while the Sunday afternoon Bible Class is now attended by over sixty young fellows.

The Record, organ of the Winnipeg Association, states that during the recent week of prayer for young men the special meetings were blessed in the conversion of not a few.

At the annual meeting of the Redruth Association, it was reported that forty-four members and associates had been admitted during the past year, making a present total of 169.

Dartmouth Y.M.C.A. has reached the end of its third year. At the annual meeting a clear balance-sheet was presented. The Association is now looking out for a building to purchase.

Mr. Earp, president of the Cape Town Association, who was recently on a visit to this country, is an enthusiast in Y.M.C.A. work, and is doing much to spread it throughout the principal towns of South Africa.

Mr. Charles G. Roger has been conducting a series of evangelistic meetings in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Stirling. The Stirling Observer states: "We believe much good has been done, and that a lasting impression has been made."

A sub-district conference was held on Thursday last week at Whitehaven, with the object of discussing work in small towns. Delegates were present from Workington, Harrington, etc., together with Messrs. John MacInnes (Exeter Hall), J. F. Curwen, J. C. Moor (travelling secretary), and others.

Dunlop Association annual social meeting was held on November 21, when about 130 attended. The report showed the membership is reduced, but gave hope of an early increase. Testimony has been given to the spiritual blessing derived from the fellowship meeting, which has been held weekly without a break since its inauguration on November 16, 1860. The regular evangelistic work has been carried on with unabated interest.

Says the Montreal Witness: "One of the most attractive places in Montreal to-day is the new Y.M.C.A. building. This is pretty well illustrated by the crowds which gather there nightly to visit the reading-rooms, enjoy the brightness of the parlours, or engage in the work of some of the various educational classes now in progress. The secretary, Mr. Budge, and members of the reception committee are to be seen, in every direction, alert for the arrival of strangers. The popularity of the place is on the increase.

The second industrial and loan exhibition in connection with the youths' section of the City of London Association was held last week at 186, Aldersgate-street. The section is organised for the benefit of boys and youths between the ages of thirteen and seventeen who are employed in City offices and warehouses. The industrial section of the exhibition has this year been thrown open to all boys and youths under seventeen, the subjects for which prizes have been given including models, wood-carving, carpentry, fretwork, and drawing.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES.

The Y.W.C.A. at Winnipeg is finding excellent openings for service amongst the working women of the city.

The members of the Sydney Y.W.C.A. devote much effort to the factory girls. Lately they gave a tea to a thousand of these. Earnest Gospel addresses were delivered.

The new home of the Ipswich Association will, in future, be known as Gainsborough House. Of the £250 required for fitting up the house £234 has been subscribed.

The Book World.

JANUARY MAGAZINES.

The Reaper begins the year with several heart-searching articles, expositions and outlines, and reports of work at home and abroad. (Marshall Bros.)

Service for the King gives an abstract of a lecture by Canon Girdlestone, on "Inspiration and Life." "With our Mildmay Deaconesses" is a very readable section of the magazine. (2d. Shaw & Co.)

The Gospel Magazine has now been edited by Dr. D. A. Doudney for fifty-two years. The January issue contains a portrait of Rev. James Battersby, and many articles of an eminently experimental type. (6d. Collingridge.)

Church and People, Echoes of Church Pastoral Aid Work, contains, among other items, a full report of the united meeting at Exeter Hall, with portraits of the Bishops of Rochester and Sodor and Man. (1d. Offices: Falcon-court, Fleet-street.)

The Missionary Herald of the Baptist Missionary Society appears with a coloured wrapper. The intelligence is more strikingly presented, and there is a portrait of Mr. W. R. Rickett, treasurer of the Society. (1d. Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street.)

Keeping pace with the times, The Free Church of Scotland Monthly is blossoming into portraiture. In the current issue there is a full-page group of six living Heroes of F.C. African Missions. The Monthly well sustains its freshness and varied interest. (1d. Nelson & Co.)

The Band of Hope Chronicle appears in a more attractive form, with a wrapper. There is a portrait and sketch of Mr. Martin Field, the founder of the premier Band of Hope. Several addresses for Band of Hope meetings form a valuable feature. (U.K. Band of Hope Union.)

The Evangelical Magazine has completed its century. Number 101 has some striking articles, including "A Bird's-eye View of Life," by Rev. Dr. Stalker, and the first of a series of articles on "The Indwelling Spirit of the Living Christ," by Rev. Thomas Dunlop. There are also a portrait and sketch of Rev. W. Hardy Harwood, of Union Chapel, Islington.

The Expository Times (6d. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh) is in its fourth volume, and the January issue has much that will interest Bible students. Rev. John Reid, of Aberdeen, writes on "The Spirit and the Spirit-Born," expounding John iii. 8; and Bishop Ellicott continues his suggestive studies on the teaching of our Lord as to the authority of the Old Testament.

The Clergyman's Magazine (6d. Hodder & Stoughton). — Canon Tristram opens with a very instructive article on "Eastern Customs in Bible Lands." It is the first of a series, and devoted to the illustration of the work of our Lord as teacher and healer. Rev. A. C. Thiselton, of Shrewsbury, begins a course of thoughtful homilies on the book of the prophet Habakkuk.

The Baptist Magazine contains a portrait and sketch of Rev. John Thomas, M.A., of Myrtle-street Chapel, Liverpool. Dr. Culross writes on the personality of God. Dr. Green opens a study on results of New Testament criticism, and the first article is given of a series on Christian baptism, from the pen of the late Rev. T. G. Rooke, B.A. (Alexander and Shepheard.)

In The Girls' Own Paper (6d. R.T.S.) there is a judicious mixture of the musical, the domestic, the educational, the artistic, the social, and the fantastic. We would direct special attention to the wise article on "Our Friends the Servants." In the companion serial, The Boy's Own Paper, stories by Talbot Baines Reed, David Ker, and Henry Frith are running their course; and the part has other attractions.

The second number of The Young Gentlewoman (6d. Howard House, Arundel-street, W.C.) shows a decided advance on the first, and lays the groundwork of a sure success. It was a happy idea to combine the development of youthful literary and artistic talent with charitable aid. With so many encouragements to improving study, we can scarcely imagine the heights of accomplishment to which the next generation will attain.

The Church Missionary Intelligencer is a great instructor on the work of God in heathen lands. The number consists of eighty full pages of information, "Notes on other Missions" showing a sympathy which extends beyond merely denominational interests. Mr. James Monro, C.B., writes strongly and well on "Compromise as an Expedient in Religion." There are many interesting items of news from the African and Indian fields. (6d. Church Missionary House.)

"Choice" is the word that fitly qualifies the contents of The Quiver (6d. Cassell & Co.) One can reckon on not finding anything doubtful in its pages, though there is plenty of breadth and beauty. It has succumbed to the modern cry for portraits, and this month three well-known contributors, Rev. E. Hardy, Dr. Hugh Macmillan, and Miss Everett Green find places in the gallery. Dr. Thain Davidson asks, and essays to answer, the question, "Where is Heaven?"; Mr. Hardy begins a pilgrimage "In the Footprints of Paul"; and there is the usual modicum of fiction.

Good Words has some weighty words on the hardening or softening influence of the Gospel, from the pen of the late Archbishop Magee; an interesting account of the saltland in Cheshire; and other able articles. In The Sunday Magazine, Rev. Andrew Mearns lets some wholesome light into "The Common Lodging-houses of London." Archdeacon Farrar is portrayed as he appears at home. Mr. Stead summarises the life of Mrs. Booth in his uniquely graphic way; speaking of the new biography, he hazards the assertion that "of no other woman, save the Queen, could such a book be written and read." (Isbister.)

The Missionary Review of the World is a strong number. Dr. Pierson, editor-in-chief, opens with a general glance at some great facts in an article entitled "Our World." He is followed by Dr. Josiah Strong, on our time, his article having the propositional title, "The Nineteenth Century one of Preparation." Events lead him to conclude that the world is about to enter on a new era. Rev. F. Edwards, B.A., of Harlow, Essex, writes on "A Century of Missions," an article full of telling facts and arguments. The issue is a good one, of a serial which is always filled with deeply important matter. (Funk and Wagnalls.)

In The Century there is a delightful little sketch of the life-work of Dorothea Dix, who devoted much patient and persevering effort to securing an amelioration of the condition of the insane in America. Some of those who knew her regarded her as "the most useful and distinguished woman that America has produced." The frontispiece of the number is a very fine engraved portrait of Whittier. In its contents and get-up The Century is a marvel of excellence, both literary and artistic. The same may be said of St. Nicholas, the sister magazine for the young. In this issue the City of Boston is cleverly sketched by pen and pencil. "Polly Oliver's Problem" is a story that will convey a fruitful lesson to young ladies wishing to do good. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

Mr. F. A. Atkins's trio are, in their contents this month, full of living and personal interest. In The Young Woman (3d.) Mr. Guinness Rogers gives a character sketch of Mrs. Gladstone; and Mrs. L. T. Meade very frankly describes herself through the inevitable interviewer. There is a galaxy of talent in the production of The Young Man (3d.). We are deeply interested to know from the sketch of the Duke of York that among the favourite hymns of our future king are "Nearer, my God, to Thee," "O God, our help in ages past," "I heard the voice of Jesus say," etc. Dr. Stalker crowds a great deal of valuable comment and counsel into his characterisation of the life and career of Moses. In The Home Messenger (1d.) Rev. H. Price Hughes tells how he signed the pledge, Rev. F. B. Meyer is sketched and portraited, and Miss Annie Swan discourses experimentally on courtship. (Partridge.)

Footsteps of Truth. (1d. Shaw.) A good beginning is made with a portrait of Sir Arthur Blackwood. The articles are sound in substance, and cover a wide range of teaching. Christian workers will find many suggestions for instructive addresses in these pages.

The Baptist Handbook for 1893 (2s.) contains a large amount of denominational information. The Diary edition (3s. 6d.) will prove of special service to pastors. (Yeale, Chifferiel, & Co., 31 to 37, Cursitor-street, Chancery-lane, E.C.)

Two searching penny booklets, by Rev. H. Jones, M.A., are Satan, the Prince of the Power of the Air (R. J. Masters (32, Wilton-road, Victoria Station, S.W.), and The Church of the Living God and its Counterfeits (W. G. Wheeler, 52, Paternoster-row). Both contain interesting biographical remarks, their author having had a singular career through fidelity to duty in the line of what he believed to be the mind of God.

A Spurgeon Daily Calendar, artistically got up by Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co., has been published by Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster. (1s.). The preserved utterances of the great preacher contain many sparkling and suggestive sentences well suited as food for daily meditation. Through this popular medium we trust our departed brother will yet speak day by day to multitudes of willing and pondering listeners.

Temperance Notes.

The new magistrates for Coventry include no fewer than seven teetotallers.

It is no longer considered a breach of etiquette for guests to decline wine when dining with the Queen.

The Mayor of Louth, who is a total abstainer, is making a New Year's gift of 200 pairs of boots to the needy children of sober parents.

"The sale of intoxicants," declares Dr. Richardson, "is the sale of insanity, the sale of disease, the sale of crime, and the sale of poverty."

Temperance principles are spreading in agricultural districts. Quite a number of farmers in Norfolk, writes a correspondent, are now total abstainers.

Mrs. Temple, wife of the Bishop of London, has issued an appeal to the women of England urging teetotallers and moderate drinkers to strive together to stem the tide of drunkenness.

The Bishop of Exeter says:—"It is hard to say whether impurity, drunkenness, or gambling commits the deadliest havoc in our land now They are all unclean spirits from the mouth of hell."

According to a letter written by his Comptroller, there is no vice the Prince of Wales so much deprecates as that of drunkenness, and he has closed all the public-houses on his Sandringham estate.

In a paper contributed to the January number of the Newbery House Magazine Sir Dyce Duckworth draws attention to the condition of persons addicted to drink, and contends that the evils arising from their habits demand amended legislation with a view to their prevention.

Mr. William D. Thomson, who has acted as the General Secretary of the Greenock Total Abstinence Society for the past twelve months, has been unanimously reappointed to the position for another year; the success which has attended his efforts having more than realised the expectations of the committee.

The London correspondent of The Liverpool Post says that the Government Licensing Bill will be in the direction of Local Option worked through County Councils. Mr. Asquith, who has charge of the measure, is said to have been in communication both with leading Temperance reformers and authorised representatives of the liquor trade.

In a stirring editorial note, The Y.M.C.A. Magazine says:—"We would earnestly ask every Christian to consider whether in the face of the degradation of our country and the sin and misery caused by the prevailing drinking customs, he can conscientiously aid and abet the drink traffic as a seller, a customer, or a consumer. To our mind the moderate drinkers, and chiefly the Christians among them, are responsible for the continuance of the drink curse. If moderate drinkers alone were concerned in keeping up the traffic, it would not exist for six months."

The Bishop of Chester, wishing to correct some misapprehensions with regard to his licensing scheme, denies that the rate of 5 per cent. interest mentioned was definitely part of the scheme, as a much lower rate would undoubtedly suffice. He also explains that he has from the first guarded against the employment of the surplus profits to aid the rates. The Bishop points out that the public-house he would establish would be one in which alcoholic beverages would be deposed from their aggressive supremacy, and different and more beneficial attractions provided.

Francis Murphy, the temperance evangelist, has begun a series of meetings in New York, and his son is holding in New Haven meetings which the daily press describe as successful to an unusual degree. Mr. Murphy has, beyond doubt, been the means of doing a great deal of good, sobering up a good many people, cheering up a good many homes. We trust (says an American paper) that he and his son may start an old-time total abstinence reform in the East that shall sweep the country. It is a very much-needed thing, and a repetition of the Washingtonian movement would be a splendid tonic to this generation.

The Wesleyan Conference Temperance Secretary, Rev. G. Armstrong Bennetts, has issued an important circular to the District Temperance Secretaries, in which he calls their attention to the following resolution of the Conference on the subject of betting and gambling:—The Conference deeply deplores the widespread prevalence of betting and gambling, and expresses its grief that the newspaper Press of this country stimulates these vices by devoting so much space to the publication of sporting items. The Conference, therefore, directs the Temperance Committee to continue its exertions for the suppression of these evils by encouraging the use of the pledge against betting and gambling, and by all other means within its reach. The Conference also expresses its opinion that the most vigorous efforts should be made to combat these evils by the pulpit, platform, Press and Sunday-school.

Obituary.

PROFESSOR PAULUS CASSEL.

The death is announced of Professor Paulus Cassel, D.D., late minister of Christ Church, Berlin, and missionary of the London Jews Society. Dr. Cassel was appointed to the position in 1868, and resigned after twenty-three years of devoted and useful service. His eloquence and popularity as a preacher and lecturer were renowned, and God's blessing rested on his labour amongst his brethren, the Jews, whose cause he valiantly espoused in the anti-Semitic agitations in Germany. He made several important contributions to theological literature.

MRS. WARDROPER.

One who has done noble work by the side of Florence Nightingale and other leaders in the cause of nursing, and who is described as "the pioneer of hospital nursing," has passed away in Mrs. Wardroper, who died on December 15, in her eightieth year. Being matron in St. Thomas's, she was chosen to carry out in that hospital the aims of the Nightingale Fund in the training of nurses. She was named first superintendent of that school, and continued such for twenty-seven years, till her retirement in 1887. That school, under her, has been more or less the model of all the subsequent nurse-training schools. At least 500 nurses were trained by her. She was greatly loved by many, and will be widely mourned.

MR. RICHARD MAHONY.

Many will hear with sorrow of the death of Mr. Richard Mahony, of Dromore Castle, co. Kerry. Inheriting, some forty years ago, a large estate and a beautiful mansion, he at once set himself to discharge the many duties of a resident landlord. He acted as a father amongst his people, and in course of time the outlying parts of his estate, which had been uncultivated, were converted into land on which his tenants could live and thrive.

A cultured scholar, an eloquent speaker, and a forcible writer, Mr. Mahony was also a religious man. The revival in the South of Ireland, in 1861, began in the hall of his Castle. We hope in an early issue to enlarge upon this important event, and to give other details, with a portrait of this highly-esteemed and beloved Christian brother.

REV. DR. FALDING.

On Thursday evening last, Rev. Dr. Falding, Principal of the Yorkshire United Independent College, died suddenly, aged seventy-four, at the house of his brother-in-law, Mr. Samuel Plimsoll, at Folkestone. A few days previously he took a chill, and laryngitis supervened with fatal effect.

Dr. Falding was a Yorkshireman by birth, and his life was a busy, unselfish, and useful one. He was a graduate of Glasgow University, which conferred upon him the degree of D.D. in recognition of his distinguished services and high character. It was after a period of pastoral work that, in 1851, he undertook professorial responsibilities in Rotherham College, in which some ten years previously he was a student. Rotherham and Airedale Colleges were amalgamated in 1888, and Dr. Falding found his sphere much enlarged, but he was equal to his work, and earned the sincere love and gratitude of students and churches. He filled an important place in public life, and was chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1888.

MORESSA, WIFE OF PASTOR JACOB.

We deeply regret to announce the death of Moressa, wife of Pastor Jacob, of Oroomiah, after the brief illness to which we referred on December 22. With her devoted husband, she endured many privations and incurred much fatigue in her cross-country journey to Persia, after making a tour of Great Britain. Brave hearted and intelligent, as well as earnest in the service of God, she hoped soon to recover from her illness and assist the Pastor in extending the work of his mission to the Mohammedans; but the Lord purposed otherwise. The labourer's work was over on November 12th, and she entered into rest.

In our issue of Feb. 11 last, we gave a sketch, with portraits, of our very interesting friends. During their last visit to Britain they attended a goodly number of meetings and conferences, and made known on many occasions their plan to send forth evangelists from among the native converts from Mohammedanism. They were assured of help in this undertaking from friends in Britain. Pastor Jacob will have, in his present sorrow, the sincere sympathy of Christians near and far, who have learned to esteem him highly for his work's sake.

MRS. OSCAR MICHELSEN.

It is with pain that we announce the death of Mrs. Michelsen, wife of Rev. Oscar Michelsen, the missionary by whose instrumentality the inhabitants of the island of Tongoa, New Hebrides, were won from cannibalism to Christ. Mrs. Michelsen had been to Norway with her husband on a visit to his friends. She was staying for a brief period in England, and hoping soon to return to resume her work for God and the souls of the people for whose evangelisation she had devoted her life.

Mrs. Michelsen, née Jane Langmuir, was a native of New Zealand, and for twelve years was the fellow-labourer of the missionary-evangelist of Tongoa, who was sent forth as the representative of the Otago Presbyterian church. During a period of rest she and her husband had been earnestly considering plans for the extension and deepening of the work. On Friday evening last, after an illness following upon confinement, she fell asleep. When the news reaches the island, the natives will universally lament the loss which the husband so keenly feels, left alone with the care of four young children.

The writer of these lines, who has recently read the manuscript of Mr. Michelsen's forthcoming book, "Cannibals won for Christ," can realise in some measure the great void which this occurrence will cause in Tongoa. Beloved and trusted by the people, this brave and tender-hearted lady was a Divinely-sent helpmeet to her husband, with whose grief many in northern and southern hemispheres will sympathise at the throne of grace. In an early number we purpose to give a more extended sketch, with the portrait of our departed friend.

CAPTAIN JOHN VINE HALL.

This well-known seaman, who commanded the Great Eastern on her first voyage to America, died on Christmas morning, at his residence in Hampstead, in his eightieth year. The funeral service in the house, and then at Hampstead Cemetery, was conducted by Dr. Monro Gibson, of whose church he had been a member during the last ten years. From a biographical notice in The Times, we learn that Capt. Hall began his nautical life at the age of fourteen. He was appointed to the Great Eastern on the death of Capt. Harrison. For a few years he resided at Sydney as manager of the ships of the Panama and Australian Steam Shipping Company. For nearly twenty years he has resided in Hampstead.

Dr. Gibson relates that he first met Capt. Hall at his prayer-meeting in December, 1882, when in the vestry he poured out his heart with deep emotion, as a humble, earnest believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and became a regular and most devout worshipper till his health failed. During his long illness he gratefully welcomed the frequent visits of his pastor, always inquiring and conversing about Christian truth, and fervently joining in prayer.

After a long life of activity, courage, and responsible authority, to be reduced during three years to comparative helplessness, was a special trial, but he was never heard to murmur, and constantly praised God for his goodness. This is also the testimony of his brother, Dr. Newman Hall, who has been privileged to be a frequent visitor in his sick-room.

His other sorrowing brothers are Mr. Warren Hall, and Rev. Arthur Hall, of Hastings, who has just published a thrilling book for boys, entitled "I WILL; or, The Adventures of a Boy who would go to Sea." This volume contains several allusions to his brother. Captain Hall has left one son, Newman H. Vine, who is a deacon of the church of Rev. J. Nunn, at Haverstock Hill.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessing on special meetings to be conducted by Mr. John M. Scroggie, in Fraserburgh, N.B., beginning January 8.—For blessing on seven days' services by Mr. Opie Rodway, Stroud, at Congregational Church, Bishopsworth, near Bristol, to commence January 7.—For blessing on an eight days' mission in Bermondsey, being conducted by Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society.—For blessing on an eight days' mission at Weston-super-Mare by Mr. Matthew Burnett, commencing on January 14.—For a week's mission at St. Alban's Parish, Liverpool, commencing January 16, by Mr. Henry Lakin.—For one whose earthly all is in the Liberator Building Society, that it may please God to send her suitable employment.—For special services by Mr. H. M. Barnett at Bournemouth, January 8—15.—For a Christian worker of long standing, that a deep affliction may be abundantly blessed, and be relieved in God's good time and way.—For blessing on a series of addresses on the way of salvation, by Col. Jacob, to be given in St. Paul's Schoolroom, Balls Pond, from Jan. 8—15.—For blessing upon an eight days' mission to be held in the Central Schoolroom, Gipsy-hill, S.E., by Rev. Thos. L. Johnson.—For evangelistic meetings in the Gospel Hall, Shrewsbury, commencing Sunday, 8th, conducted by James Wharton.—For blessing on mission in Ruabon, by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker, January 8 to 17. PRAISE to God for having raised up my wife and two children from very severe illness, having been almost given up by the doctors.

Evangelistic Notes.

Hexham.—Most encouraging evangelistic services have lately been held here by Mr. Bayliffe, and there is evidence that real work has been done. Many of the careless have been awakened, while backsliders have been restored and believers quickened.

Mr. Matthew Burnett, who has been staying at Hastings for a few days, addressed on Sunday afternoon the P.S.A. in that town, and was greatly pleased by what he saw and heard of the results of the work. On Jan. 14 Mr. Burnett begins at Weston-super-Mare, whence he goes to Newmarket and Belfast for Gospel temperance missions.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has conducted an eight days' mission at the Congregational Church, New Shildon, Darlington. His labours were blessed to many, especially to believers. The downcast have been cheered and the weak strengthened. Not content with three services each Sunday and nightly services during the week, the evangelist addressed two meetings for mothers, and four for children. Members of all denominations heartily joined with us in the mission. D. K.

Glasgow.—Mr. Charles Inglis has recently closed a fortnight's special services in Glasgow. God has indeed blessed the message; every night souls have professed to find Christ. One case was that of the son of a minister, who had fallen through drink and lost a good situation. We believe God met him and saved him. He has since been re-instated to his former position. The Bible readings given by Mr. Inglis every day were largely attended and greatly blessed to believers. J. H. PAYNE.

Dr. J. W. Chapman, of Bethany Church, Philadelphia, has concluded a united mission at Erie (Penn.), which Rev. J. Caughey describes as follows:—"The meetings grew in interest from the very first. Never before had there been in Erie such cordial co-operation and union of feeling in all the churches. The preacher's simplicity and directness in presenting the Gospel and deep conviction moved his vast audiences till hundreds of the Christians present were ready to pledge themselves anew to their Lord and Saviour, and to enter upon a more consecrated life, and scores of the unconverted were led to seek earnestly the great salvation."

REV. W. HASLAM begins on the 7th inst. a mission at All Saints' Church, Hoole Cheshire. He hopes subsequently to conduct meetings at St. Saviour's, Manchester.

Personalia.

Dr. and Mrs. Murray Mitchell celebrated, the other day, at Nice, their golden wedding.

Bishop Tucker's letters speak of a most successful journey as far as Kikuyu. He hoped to reach Uganda on Christmas day.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, we are pleased to learn, is now much stronger and better in health, though still sensitive to attacks of cold.

Professor M. D. Jones, of Bala, is slowly recovering from his somewhat serious illness. He will not, however, resume work for some weeks.

Dr. A. T. Pierson has next month to deliver the "Duff Missionary Lectures" in Scotland; hence he will be absent from the Metropolitan Tabernacle in February and March.

Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., has, with the New Year, assumed the duties of chairman of the Congregational Union—a position which has previously been occupied solely by ordained pastors.

Mrs. G. S. Reaney is enlarging her monthly magazine, Our Mothers and Daughters, which will in future be published from the office of Great Thoughts. The new volume commences next month, and a large staff of able writers will contribute.

Mrs. Pennefather is, we much regret to hear, very seriously ill. The latest bulletin is that she is sinking slowly, but is free from pain. Many will pray that this beloved and honoured sister may be sustained by God's presence in her last weakness.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, in the January issue of The Christian Treasury, says:—"There is cause for encouragement in the work. The meetings for prayer, etc., are earnest and lively, and on Monday evening decidedly on the increase. Some sixty are joining the church on the first Sunday of the New Year, though most of these are young people from the schools."

Mr. E. J. Kennedy, of Exeter Hall, is the "worker" described in the current Pearson's Weekly. In the form of an interview he gives a comprehensive and excellent account of the work carried on at Exeter Hall on behalf of young men. It is not correct, however, to designate Mr. Kennedy as the "Secretary of the Y.M.C.A."; he is only secretary of the Exeter Hall institution. Neither should we have expected Mr. Kennedy to speak of the Aldersgate-street Association as "one of our branch establishments"; it would be equally true to call the Exeter Hall work a branch of Aldersgate.

IRISH NOTES.

A branch of the "Out-and-Out Band" has been established in Nenagh under hopeful auspices, and promises to be a great blessing in the town and neighbourhood.

A fortnight's series of evangelistic services has been held in the Methodist Church, Derrygonnelly, co. Fermanagh, by Revs. J. Wright and J. Dickson. Several decided for Christ.

A united evangelistic service was held in Ballymacarrett Congregational Church, Belfast, on Monday week, in which ministers of various denominations took part, and there was a crowded attendance.

According to time-honoured custom, Watch-night services were held on Saturday night in nearly all the Methodist churches in Ireland, and in several Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches also.

Mr. R. Semple, of the Hibernian Band of Hope Union, has been conducting Gospel Temperance services with great acceptance and success at Cranagill, near Portadown. Mr. S. Glasgow, of the Irish Temperance League, has been holding similar meetings at Cosbystown.

The excellent work begun in Loughbrickland, co. Down, some time ago through the labours of Messrs. Peatt and Crozier, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, continues to prosper under the fostering care of Mr. Thomas Senior. The annual reunion was held on Tuesday evening week, Rev. R. Cole presiding, and earnest Gospel addresses were delivered by several ministers and friends.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Lord Provost of Dundee has given the usual New Year's tea-party to some 800 of the poorest of the town folk.

Ten thousand copies of Dr. Wells's "Jubilee Story" of the Free Church have been circulated in the Highland districts.

There is a decline in the number of students joining the theological colleges of the Established and Free Churches this winter.

A Christmas feast was given in the City Hall, Glasgow, to 3000 poor people, the cost being defrayed by the merchants of the city.

At Dysart, Fifeshire, the Free Church pastor reports that "the prayer meeting more than fills the hall, and over a hundred attend the Bible-class."

A monster temperance fête and bazaar has been held in Aberdeen, extending over several days, in order to raise £3000 for aggressive temperance work.

A pleasant and profitable social gathering was held last week in St. Catherine's Hall, Aberdeen, in connection with the Christian Policemen's Association.

We regret to hear that Rev. John Smith, of Broughton-place United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, will require three months further rest before he can resume pastoral work.

Evangelistic services are to be held at Nairn by the Free and United Presbyterian Churches conjointly. In none of the places visited last winter by Messrs. Moody and Sankey were the ministers more united.

The Glasgow Tent Hall Free Breakfast, the Children's Sabbath Dinner in the same place, and the four children's Day Refuges in the four quarters of the city, which are all supplied from one fund, are £500 short. Mr. John R. Miller, 2, Somerset-place, Glasgow, is hon. sec.

Over 300 members have been enrolled in the Glasgow Bible Training Institute under Mr. John Anderson. The course of study embraces apologetics, exegetics, and practical work. Three free scholarships have already been provided. The temporary quarters are at 1. Blythswood-square.

Many will hear with regret that the patriarchal Free Church pastor in Thurso, Dr. Taylor, has had a shock of paralysis. He is the oldest minister in the Free Church, and would probably have been relieved ere now of the most onerous duties of the pastorate if his congregation could agree on a colleague and successor.

COCK FIGHTING.—By a somewhat incomprehensible course of reasoning seven Scottish judges have decided that this debasing and brutal "pastime" does not come under the Cruelty to Animals Act, albeit in the case before them one bird had died and the other was seriously injured. It is to be hoped that the matter will not be allowed to rest here.

ORCHESTRAL BAND.—The Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. have two bands under instruction, a brass band and an orchestral band. The latter commences its public performances, under the leadership of Mr. J. E. Borland, F.C.O., at the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Meeting, on Sunday next at 3.15. There are a few vacancies in both bands for performers desiring to glorify God in the use of their musical gifts. Application to the Secretary, 186, Aldersgate-street

RECEPTION TO MISS WILLARD.

The English Temperance world has accorded a welcome to many a distingnished visitor from other shores, but probably none ever had such a welcome as will be given to Miss Frances E. Willard, the American temperance leader, at the great united Temperance demonstration, which will be held in Exeter Hall on Monday evening, January 9, at half-past seven. Lady Henry Somerset will preside, Madame Antoinette Stirling will contribute several solos, and the National Choral Society under the leadership of Mr. J. A. Birch, and accompanied by the grand organ will render musical selections.

The catholicity and indeed the internationality of the gathering may be judged by the speakers, including among others Canon Wilberforce, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Mr. Robert F. Horton, Rev. Father Nugent, (Liverpool), Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Miss Soonderbai Powar (India); Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Dr. Norman Kerr, Mr. W. T. Stead, Alderman Ben Tillett, L.C.C., Mr. J. R. Raper, U.K.A., and Mr. J. Malins, G.C.T. of Good Templars.

The widest interest is being displayed in anticipation of the meeting, which bids fair to be an unprecedented one for numbers and peculiar interest. Several illuminated addresses are to be presented to Miss Willard, and her address in response will, of course, be the principal feature.

It may be noted in this connection that Miss Anne Whitney, the Boston sculptor, has just completed a bust of Miss Willard for Willard Hall in the great women's building at Chicago; and that for the pedestal the poet Whittier furnished the following verse:—

> She knew the power of banded ill
> But felt that love is stronger still,
> And organised, for doing good,
> The world's united womanhood.

These were almost the last words that came from the pen of the great anti-slavery poet.

THE C.T.C.A.

The members and friends of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association held their annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Wednesday in last week. In the afternoon Mr. William Isaac Palmer, of Reading, presided over a conference, when Messrs. Barrett (Nottingham), Vincent (Bristol), and Butler (Brighton) delivered brief addresses on different sections of the work, followed by a discussion in which many took part and valuable suggestions were offered for extending the operations of the Association.

After tea, the annual meeting was held, Mr. George Williams in the chair. The report, given by the secretary, Mr. L. Courtney, bore evidence of considerable progress during the year, and called forth expressions of gratitude for Divine blessing. Three hundred and fifteen new members have been added to the roll. Branches are now formed in Leeds, Leicester, Southsea, Bristol, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Hull, Carlisle, Dublin, and Belfast, four of these having been opened during the year. Preliminary arrangements have been made for branches in Liverpool, Manchester, Sheffield, and Nottingham. Six new libraries for commercial rooms have been sent out, making a total of 207, eighteen old ones having been renewed. Four hundred and forty-four Bibles have been placed in hotel bedrooms, making a total of nearly 12,000. An increased number of meetings for Bible reading and prayer have been held in hotels in connection with the branches. Valuable help has been rendered to several cases of great distress amongst travellers, widows, and orphans, and some travellers have been assisted in obtaining situations.

Addresses were delivered by the Chairman, Messrs. C. Ackland, G. D. Leatham, and others, all of whom testified to the importance of the work carried on by this Association.

The Christmas Boat.

The evening of Wednesday, Dec. 28, was a happy time at Miss Child's "Welcome Home," Ratcliff Highway, London. The Christmas Boat, laden with useful gifts for sailors of all nations, was anchored in the dining-room, where nearly three hundred seamen received presents and words of Christian cheer from the hands of Mr. Robert Paton and others. Many were the blessings invoked upon the heads of distant friends who had helped to send along the cargo of good things. Meetings in various languages were held before tea and after, addressed by Miss Child, Miss Tuck, Mrs. Constantine, of Smyrna, Captain Tottenham and wife, William Luff, and many seamen and others. One young Russian testified out of a full heart that twelve months before, at the unloading of the last Christmas Boat, he found Jesus and Jesus found him.

THE C.I.G.M.

1. Object.—The evangelisation of Ceylon, India, and elsewhere, as the Lord may lead. Work among special classes, such as soldiers, sailors, railway employés, postmen, police, and coolies, is a feature of The Ceylon and Indian General Mission.

2. Character.—Evangelistic and unsectarian, embracing all who love the Lord in sincerity and truth.

3. Constitution.—To have a small Advisory Council at home to assist in the management of the home work. To receive applications from candidates, accept as probationers those who appear to be suitable, to do what in it lies to promote missionary interest at home, receive contributions for the work and remit to the foreign field, retaining what is necessary for home expenses, and in short manage the affairs of the mission at home.

4. Support.—The mission to be supported by the freewill offerings of the Lord's people. The needs of the mission to be laid before the Lord in prayer, no personal solicitations for money being authorised. There will be no borrowing nor debt incurred, therefore no guarantee of support can be given to the members of the mission. The funds to be faithfully distributed, but each member is expected to recognise that his dependence for the supply of his need must be on God who called him, and for whom he has gone to labour, and not on any human organisation.

5. Church Government.—As the mission is undenominational, we do not intend to set up any new form of Church government.

Each missionary may be appointed to a part of the field in the district in which the denomination he belongs to is working. We will thus be helpers of all, and will not bring in any division.

As we extend to entirely unoccupied fields, each missionary first on the field is at liberty (subject to the approval of the Director) to adopt that form of Church government he believes to be most suitable to the circumstances.

The object of the mission is to raise up self-supporting, self-governing, and self-extending churches.

Director, B. Davidson.

[The inauguration of a new mission is a very important step. We are not sure that the above principles are the best that can be devised. We submit them to the friendly consideration of our readers interested in Missions and Missionary Methods.—Ed.]

Mr G. Clarke at Workington.

At the invitation of a committee of clergy, ministers, and laymen of all the Protestant churches of the town, working with the committee of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. George Clarke has recently held a Gospel mission in Workington. The large hall, capable of seating some 1,500 persons, was for the last week taxed to its utmost capacity, culminating on the last Sunday with two crowded gatherings, one in the afternoon for women only, and the other at night for men only.

The work of grace amongst us has been very largely the topic of conversation amongst all classes. All sorts of people have been reached. A dominant feature of the mission has been the preponderance of men at the evening gatherings, and the power of God's presence has been felt.

Many cases could be told of individual conversions, which seem to be of a striking nature, but enough will be said if your readers will unite with us in praise over those who have professed decision, and prayer that we may be enabled to so "feed the lambs" that not one will be lost. J. S.

Workington.

SUNDAY LABOUR AND DRINK.—Half a million persons, it is said, are in one way or another employed on the Lord's Day in connection with the drink traffic in England, and two hundred thousand of these are young women.

MR. WM. FORBES recently gave a social tea to some of the young women engaged as entertainers at "Olympia," Kensington. The Gospel is preached at these meetings, and every endeavour made to influence the young people in right directions. Mr. Forbes, who is also open for general evangelistic work, may be addressed, 71, Tollington-road, N., where, too, he would be glad to receive aid towards his work among theatrical's.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Mr. WILLIAM ISAAC PALMER, of Reading.

☞ There are a few subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN who have not yet sent their remittances for 1893. Will they kindly do so by first post, in order to secure the due despatch of future copies? Full particulars will be found above.

We would remind those who have been interested in the special gatherings of the past week for united prayer that there are several daily prayer meetings sustained in London all the year through. The duty and privilege of public united prayer are matters of perennial value, and we commend these gatherings to all who can possibly attend them. Perhaps our readers can inform us of other daily gatherings in London besides the following:—

186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.; noon.
Exeter Hall; 1 p.m. (except Saturday).
Y.M.C.A., 59, Cornhill; 1.30 p.m.
56, Old Bailey, E.C.; 1 p.m.

Rev. John McNeill, accompanied by Mr. J. H. Burke, has now entered on a two months' campaign in the south and centre of Scotland. The following are his engagements for January and February:—

January 8th to 13th, Motherwell; 15th to 20th, Coatbridge; 22nd to 27th, Falkirk; 29th to 3rd February, St. Andrews; 5th to 10th, Perth; 12th to 17th, Haddington; 19th to 26th, Dumbarton.

The Irish Evangelisation Society is meeting much encouragement in Galway. A strong reaction has set in in favour of Protestantism, and the people are becoming intolerant of priestly domination.

It has been arranged to hold a conference in London in the end of April on the Progress of the Gospel on the Continent. Delegates from the Reformed Continental Churches are expected to attend. Amongst others, Père Hyacinthe and M. Eugène Reveillaud will give addresses. We believe this will be the first gathering of the kind held in England. It will be a deeply interesting occasion to those who desire to see a torch of Gospel fervour flaming in those countries where the Church of Rome, as a potent influence, seems to be on the decline.

A friend who has been in the habit of sending his copy of our paper to the Antipodes writes that he has just received the following from Melbourne:—

I am much obliged for those lovely CHRISTIANS, and now I lend them regularly. It is the most helpful of any weekly publication I know. My copy gets well read. We usually finish reading it on Sunday; then I lend it to a near neighbour on Monday or Tuesday until Thursday; then it is posted to Melbourne, whence two or three copies of them are together posted to Brisbane. Many often get sent up the country to the township of Ingham, 300 miles, and some into the Bush. One knows not the power for good that one copy may be; much better than storing them away.

We give these words, believing they may suggest to many a fresh means of rendering useful service to friends in other lands.

A Special Commissioner of the Daily News has been investigating the state of things among the poor in the Borough and Rotherhithe. Starting with the assertion that the poverty is "normal," and not exceptional, he proceeds to show how pitiful that normal destitution is. His cases are, he states, not picked out for effect: they are given just as he found them, but they are simply heart-rending. One man had been tramping about in frost and fog for five weeks in search of work. The home is stripped bare, and the five children are in a deplorable condition. Another (said, strangely enough, to be a Salvationist) had been out of work eight months, and but for the help given by some Christian workers, the family would be in absolute starvation.

Without detailing further the sad stories given, we may quote a sentence wherein the writer sums up the case:—

To tramp the stony streets for three months in quest of work, to live on dry bread and charity tickets, and to see their half-famished children die off like flies in autumn—that is the common experience of people down in these horrible depths of destitution in the "normal" winter when we think there is nothing much the matter.

The one gleam of relief in reading these painful articles is afforded by the touching thankfulness of the people—especially the poor, weary mothers—when the hand of Christian love ministers some relief. Economists may not find in such gifts a cure for the winter's distress; but while some grand remedy is being contrived, no one could calmly contemplate the leaving of these women and children, to say nothing of the half-frenzied men, to starve and die. The obvious lesson is, that every mission-worker in a poor district ought to be enabled to administer present relief in such cases when discovered.

There appears at present to be a renewal of the attempt to bolster up Spiritualism, with all its absurd follies. It is lamentable to find the names of those who have been regarded as leaders of religious thought lending themselves to such an endeavour. On the other hand, Mr. Maskelyne, who claims to have investigated the developments of Spiritualism to the farthest possible limit, said only a few days ago:—

If there had been anything in the remotest degree approaching the nature of genuine phenomena connected with it I must have discovered it. But I am bound to say I have never met with anything genuine except the movement of a table. Chicanery and trickery I have found in plenty. Cupidity and credulity, fraud and folly—these are the foundation stones of Spiritualism, and the superstructure is entirely in accordance.

We cannot but view with sympathetic interest the founding of the Church Protestant Aid Society, which has been organised for the purpose of succouring Evangelical members of the Church of England in districts where Ritualism and Romanism prevail. The prospectus sets forth definite spiritual aims, to be sought by purely spiritual means. Passing over merely ecclesiastical questions, the promoters emphasise the importance of fidelity to revealed truth; and, bearing in mind the fact that the days are evil, they call upon faithful men to hold fast that which they have received of the Lord, to whose speedy coming they add a bold and timely testimony.

It is sad indeed that any such protest against error should be required. Yet it is undeniable that the Reformation is contemned, if not denounced, by hosts of clergymen of the Church of England, who put the Church in the place of Christ, and repudiate any channels of grace beyond the "sacraments" which they dispense. Evangelical Church people are thus addressed by the new Society:—

We urge the Lord's people who are distressed on account of the absence of Gospel teaching, and are deprived of spiritual worship, in every town and village where it is impossible for them to worship in Romanised or worldly churches, to meet together, and, in the absence of a faithful minister, to speak "one to another" (Mal. iii. 16), and worship God in spirit and in truth. To encourage and support them in doing this the Church Protestant Aid Society has been established, with a view to helping them to secure temporary places for worship during the present distress.

The organising secretary, Rev. J. J. B. Coles, M.A., 7, Oxford and Cambridge Mansions, N.W., will be glad to supply further particulars. The deeps of spiritual life in the Church of England should be stirred by this appeal, which is couched in terms so solemn that we are disposed to regard it as a very important testimony, addressed to a very large section of British Christians.

In the Preacher's Magazine for January there is an instructive article by Dr. Monro Gibson on "The Inspiration of the Scriptures as Related to Questions Concerning their Origin." He counsels his readers not to condemn hastily or accept in a hurry the conclusions of criticism. If, however, "he that believeth shall not make haste" in these respects, neither shall he, if a learned investigator, be in a hurry to arrive at conclusions inconsistent with a living and loyal faith in Christ. Christians who hesitate to allow all the claims of criticism are often charged with frowning on inquiry. We do not think the charge justified; for what unsophisticated common-sense students in all directions are objecting to, is the confounding of legitimate investigation with wild and destructive speculations.

Though saying nothing new, Dr. Monro Gibson says much that is true in his striking article. Here is a sentence or two:—

No conceivable alteration of date can affect the great prophecies concerning the Jewish nation in the Old Testament, or touch the still more important prophecies of Christ and his kingdom. These stand out larger, clearer, stronger, more impressive and convincing than ever; and as for any minute matters of detail that may have been rendered doubtful by the progress of inquiry, he that believeth shall not be nervous in the least.

Certainly not, in view of the many questions raised by doubters which inquiry has for ever solved. With regard to the oft-propounded question: "Does the value of such a Psalm depend upon its being written by David?" we may answer "No"; but if the Great Teacher quoted that Psalm as by David, then the value of his word, or the record thereof, is seriously affected if the hostile judgment of the critics were proved infallibly sound.

In reference to recent correspondence on the Sabbath obligation, an esteemed correspondent points out that the glory of the moral law, which includes the fourth commandment, is its universal application. "The Sabbath was made for man," throughout the world; and there is nothing in the command to limit the seventh day to one from any definite point of time. Our correspondent inquires:—

Where, or when, has the Divine command to keep, and the human obligation to observe, the fourth commandment been weakened, or set aside, any more than the other nine? Do not Christians, in the keeping of their Sabbath, as truly and essentially keep the fourth commandment as did, or do, the Jews? Is it not with them equally and truly "six days labour," and then "the Sabbath of the Lord their God"?

I. N. Q. asks our opinion and that of a few of our readers:—

1. How far ought Christians to have friendship and fellowship with those who hold, but do not teach publicly, certain eschatological doctrines which he names, but which we need not particularise?
2. Can either of these be said to be fundamental?
3. Are we, who most emphatically do not hold these views, right in asking those who do, to take missions for us, and in standing upon the same platforms with them?

We reply in the order of the questions:—(1) We think this is answered by Rom. xiv. 1: "Him that is weak in the faith receive ye; but not to judge his doubtful thoughts." (2) How far the views are hurtful may depend upon the extent to which they are pushed. Some mistaken views are not carried to their logical results; if they were they might be found to affect truths as fundamental as the Atonement. (3) Each case must be decided upon its own merits. The new commandment is to love one another. In the atmosphere of love a great many speculations like those mentioned will fall into oblivion. There is scarcely one vital or practical question that divides true believers: they are almost all speculative difficulties, which those have no time to discuss whose one object is to do their part in the evangelisation of the world. All who are in Christ and walk consistently are entitled to Church fellowship. But if they insist on teaching doctrines different from those held by the body with whom they are associated, exclusion becomes a necessity, for "how can two walk together except they be agreed?"

A recently published sermon by Dr. Dale, printed in The British Weekly, deals with the question, "Who are the sons of God?" With all his usual force and fulness of illustration he considers this important subject, and answers it thus:—

To be sons of God we must share the life of God, and the life of God is a life of righteousness, purity, compassion, holiness, love. Where these are not, the life of God is not. Where these are not, men are not, in the great sense, the sons of God, for those who have not the life of God cannot be His sons.

But Dr. Dale, while denying that "all men are the sons of God," asserts that "God is the Father of all men." He reconciles the apparent contradiction by differentiating between what he terms the Merely natural relationship to God, on the ground of which all men may be described as His "offspring," and that ethical and spiritual sonship which implies the actual realisation of the life of God in character and conduct.

Such is the position which Dr. Dale elaborates in his sermon, and to which Rev. John Thomas, of Huddersfield, in a letter to the same paper, takes exception. He refers to our Lord's conversation with the Jews, recorded in John viii., which Dr. Dale had quoted in support of his statement that Christ Himself limited the sonship of men. Mr. Thomas contends that the true inference from Christ's words is that He limits the Fatherhood of God. Says Mr. Thomas:—

If moral distinctions are to be maintained we must be bold enough to tell the wicked and impious, as Christ told them, "God is not your Father. . . ." There is, of course, an intelligible sense in which God, as creator and sustainer of life, is the Father of all men, but this is precisely because in this sense all men are the sons of God.

In Mr. Thomas' opinion there is no permanent resting-place between obliterating moral distinctions by declaring the universal sonship of man, and clearly affirming, as Christ did, that there is an important sense in which God is not the Father of all.

But the preacher and his friendly critic both leave out an essential element in the argument. Jesus, in the fundamental series of parables in Matt. xiii., divides mankind into wheat and tares; the wheat being those who, having received the word of the kingdom, (v. 19) are the sons of the kingdom; and the tares the sons of the evil one. In John viii., Jesus not only denied that God was the Father of those to whom He was speaking, but plainly said, "Ye are of your father the devil." The Apostle Paul told the Ephesians (ii. 3) that they "were by nature children of wrath, even as the rest." The Apostle John (1 Ep. iii. 10) says that by their conduct "the children of God are manifest and the children of the devil." This evil fatherhood and sonship between the devil and men is as distinctly asserted as that believers "are all sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus" (Gal. iii. 26).

It is accepted as truth that all mankind are the offspring of God; that the genealogy of Jesus is traced back to "Adam, the son of God"; and that in the parable of the prodigal son, God has the heart of a father towards sinful men. In what sense, then, are men children of the wicked one, and how did they become so? They are sons of the wicked one by having become impregnated with his evil nature; and the means of that impregnation was the obedience of faith—his faith in and obedience to the evil one. Adam was the son of God by creation; he became a son of the evil one by believing and obeying Satan, incarnate in the Serpent; he became a son of God by faith in Christ Jesus, implicitly promised immediately after the fall, as the seed of the woman, who should bruise the Serpent's head with his bruised heel.

Thus, by creation the offspring of God, man became morally and spiritually a child of the wicked one, a partaker of the diabolic nature, by believing and obeying Satan's lie against God and his false promise to himself; and as many as obey the Gospel become morally and spiritually the sons of God by faith in Christ Jesus. Some of the deepest truths of the Gospel become clear and simple when we regard them as the reversal of what took place at the Fall.

Mr. Tallack, of the Howard Association, and other writers, have been communicating to the columns of The Times some startling and deplorable facts as to the horrible state of prisons in Morocco and the cruelties practised on prisoners. It is to be hoped that our Government will spare no effort in seeking, by diplomatic pressure and representation, to bring about a change for the better. As one correspondent of The Times remarks, these abominable methods are "a great blot on modern civilisation."

It is noteworthy as illustrating the tendency of educated thought in Italy that Signor Bonghi, in an interesting paper in one of the Italian reviews, appeals to the Pope to forsake political questions for those bearing upon religion. He asserts that "a radical reform is wanted to bring the spirit of the (Roman) Church into harmony with the Gospel." As the work of a distinguished member of the Chamber, himself a Romanist, Signor Bonghi's article will, of course, receive much attention in Italy.

The persecution of the Jews in Russia, if for the moment somewhat less intense, appears only to have given place to a renewal of the cruelties practised against the nonconformists. From many places come reports of brutal treatment inflicted upon Stundists who declined to embrace the faith of the dominant Church. Crowds inflamed by drink supplied by the authorities have taken part in the persecution of those whose only offence is their nonconformity.

CENTRAL INDIAN HILL MISSION.

The superintendent of this mission, writing from Ellichpur, Berar, India, sends seasonable greetings to home friends and co-workers, tells of the joy of service, and adds the following account of recent work, penned by Mr. Drake, one of the missionaries:—

About three weeks ago a party of us, four in number, visited a "mela" (religious fair) at Bhairam, a place famed for gatherings of this kind. Starting on foot about 6 a.m., with one gari (cart), to carry our boxes of books, tent, provisions, etc., we managed to arrive about nine o'clock. Arrived, we pitched our tent about the centre of the village, under the partial shade of some babul trees. We were early, the main day was on the morrow, and but few people had yet come. The midday hours were too hot for much exertion, so we waited a while, and then, with music and singing, commenced our little campaign.

That day, the following night, and all through the next day garis came pouring in with their human loads of intending worshippers, till at last the whole place was teeming and swarming with the multitudes present. Various large tanks supply water for the different castes. The great idol itself lies, perhaps, a couple of hundred feet higher than the few houses that form the village, and is approached by a hundred irregular steps. On these steps, almost from top to bottom, stood fakirs begging alms from all passing up and down. I noticed that the natives, in ascending, repeatedly stooped and touched the steps, and then placed their fingers reverently to their foreheads. The offerings were various, ranging from goats—of which hundreds were sacrificed—to a cocoanut or a little fruit and oil. Bhairam Dev we now found covered with a thick coating of "sendur" (red lead)—much more so than when we saw it two months earlier—and decorated in every direction with strings of flowers.

Through the kindness of the "Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures" (Mrs. Robertson's, Hampstead), we were able to distribute to many a portion or the whole of the New Testament. A considerable number of tracts were also sold. It was gladdening to mark in many cases a real attentiveness to the Word spoken. But who can say whether any rays of the light of truth penetrated the veil of heathen darkness and superstition, and touched those hearts for whose redemption Christ's precious blood was spilt? During the two days of our stay many hundreds obtained something—a New Testament, a portion of Scripture, a tract, a word spoken. We are only able to reach the few, comparatively, in spite of frequent meetings and other efforts at different points of the ground.

Missionary Methods.

THE circular of the Ceylon and Indian General Mission, in our last issue, embodies the idea recently mentioned by us of a new mission to India. The constitution consists of an Advisory Council, and a Director. The chief use of an Advisory Council is to give confidence. It has no power; this lies in the Director. The Advisory Council assists, but the Director rules. Is there Scripture precedent for this arrangement?

The view of Support given in the circular is more fully stated in a communication we have since received from another source:

Command.—"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He would thrust forth labourers into his harvest."

Example.—"As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. When they had fasted and prayed, they sent them forth."

The greatest care should be exercised in accepting those who offer. "Lay hands suddenly on no man." Prayer will make the way clear for those whom He would thrust forth, and the Divine voice shall be heard; otherwise it is possible to clear away difficulties that He would have remain.

"So they being sent forth by the Holy Ghost" (Acts xiii. 4). God acts mediately in most of the affairs of human life. A church, or a committee of "faithful men," agreed upon certain broad principles, and acting on behalf of the scattered Church of God, may consider applications—accept or reject—give their judgment and advice as to route, locality of labour, etc.; but it should be ever kept before the mind that the worker is being "sent forth by the Holy Ghost"; therefore each one should as far as possible be left a free agent.

Support.—All workers should be sustained from home. Matthew x. lines are unworkable in a heathen or Romish country. Moreover, it is unscriptural, because "for His Name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles" (3 John 7) thus treading in the steps of the Apostles.

It is advisable, however, so to arrange the support as to give the greatest room for faith. A definite salary is to be avoided, as this tends more or less to clip the wings of faith; on the contrary, a worker going forth in dependence upon God is thus kept in a healthy state of soul, for his "expectation is from Him."

Gifts from home to individual workers, otherwise than through the Mission, should not be made known, except as a matter of praise to God; or if known, should in no wise be taken into account. One man or woman may be "strong in faith," and God may, nay will, honour that faith and send through his servants for the supply of such. "Trust in the Lord, . . . and verily thou shalt be fed." To equalise such gifts is to rob the worker of the reward of his faith.

Other thoughts occur to me, but as they refer more especially to the details or actual working out of the principles, I need not trespass upon your time.

This view is referred to, not with disapproval, in a letter just to hand from a missionary at a foreign post, concerning a society with which he is not connected:—

Going the round of the stations one is struck by the earnestness of the workers. . . . Nearly all the missionaries whom I have met have told me how sometimes, yea often, they have not known where the next meal was to come from; many and many has been the time that they have been obliged to live upon a few shillings a week. Christian friends in England cannot know of this state of affairs, or how could they allow it to exist any longer? Imagine some of them alone in distant stations in this position. It is hard, indeed, to be pressed for funds in the home country, surrounded by those who know and love us, but how much harder without a friend near! Our friends do not desire abundance, but only sufficient; they are willing to endure hardness for Jesus Christ. Are there none in England who will help to bear their burdens?

Our correspondent's appeal we second heartily. But his letter also seems to us to raise the question whether the principle of sending out missionaries without definite provision is a sound one. We leave it for the present for the consideration of our readers.

Revival our Greatest Need.

BY REV. WM. ROSS, GLASGOW.

REVIVAL is our greatest and most pressing need. To obtain it for ourselves, our congregations, and for the world, ought to be one of the supreme objects of our ministry. There are three considerations of the utmost weight which demand our earnest attention:—(1) Revival is our greatest and most pressing need. (2) Revival has enabled the Church to reach the highest point in Christian character, and the highest landmark in attainment and Christian effort. (3) Revival, habitual and unceasing, is the teaching of God's Word, the lesson of experience, and the pledge of the world's subjugation to Christ.

Revival is the greatest and most pressing need of the believer and of the Church. By revival, we mean that healthful condition of Christian life and experience which enables the individual believer and the Church, in the power of the Holy Ghost, to meet the claims of God, the opportunities in Providence, and the needs of the Church and the world. It need scarcely be said that this is not the normal condition of the believer or of the Church. The experience of the Psalmist is only too familiar to us: "My soul cleaveth to the dust, quicken Thou me according to thy Word"; or that of the Apostle when he said, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me?" In the Christian life there too often seem to be three distinct experiences: a time of declension, a season of conscious burdening, and an experience of conscious power, when one can say, "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me." Between conscious declension and conscious power there is a great variety of experience; throughout it all the yearning of the soul is for revival and personal experience of the presence and power of God. There are those who can understand Horatius Bonar as he sings these minor notes:—

Return to me, my oft-forgotten God,
My spirit's true though long-forsaken rest,
Undo these bars, re-enter thine abode,
In Thee and in thy life alone would I be blest.
Remould this inner man in every part,
Reknit these broken ties, resume thy sway,
Take as thy throne and altar this poor heart,
Oh, teach me how to live! oh, help me to obey!

In our own experience as ministers and Christian workers, have we not known of many who had made a hopeful start in the Christian life? Yet after awhile their life, instead of being constantly aggressive, became dwarfed, and the life was shrivelled if not withered. Dr. McDonald, of Ferintosh, whom the Lord so signally blessed in Scotland upwards of half a century ago, and to whom the Lord gave such multitudes of souls, had often to deal with young believers, and to warn them in regard to the future of their life. He used to put the question to them thus: "Why is it that so many who make a hopeful profession at the beginning seem so quickly to fail?" and he answered the question by saying, "It was because they started business without capital." By this he meant that the indwelling of the Holy Ghost as the Spirit of Power for a pure life and devoted service was not personally and specially asked for and obtained as a conscious possession; hence the failure.

Whether we look at the condition of the believer from within or in regard to his environment, we are constrained to acknowledge that in the majority of instances the one need of the soul is spiritual power. Job cried, "Oh that it were with me as in months past, when the candle of the Lord shone upon me." The Apostle, in writing to the Hebrews, complained that he was under the necessity of nursing babes who ought by that time to have been teachers; and we know how Paul, with singular earnestness and force, was anxious to forget the things that were behind, and to press forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

As we look over the Church of God are we not conscious that the men and women to whom the word of the Lord comes now, and who are capable of saying: "I will hear what God the Lord will speak," are comparatively few? Among the mass of Christians is there not a keen sensitiveness in regard to personal needs, and even to the enjoyments of the world and the power of the flesh, and is there not a corresponding dulness in regard to the authority of his Word and the working of his Spirit? Take the Church as a whole, and is she not to a large extent like the man with the withered arm? It is a paralysed hand that is steward of the inexhaustible resources of the Kingdom; the wealth is there, but there is a lack of spiritual power; it is not available for the present and pressing needs of the moment.

The Church is too often like the beggar sitting at the beautiful gate of the Temple, constantly asking alms, instead of standing up in the power of the risen Lord, and then walking and working and praising God. Have there not been individual men whose lifetime of service has been characterised not only by frequent revival, but by almost unceasing experience of spiritual power and spiritual results? How many of us to-day can honestly speak of such an experience? Opportunities occur in God's providence, and they pass by unimproved; we are either living in the past or in the future, but the present we know not how to turn to the best account.

We say, "There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest," but He says, "the fields are already white unto the harvest." Where is the church to be found that has fairly grappled with and been successful in winning the hundreds of thousands in our great cities that are still unevangelised? Is not the picture of the Church presented so often in quotation, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners"—rather a devout imagination than a present reality, in the face of the gigantic evils that oppress the spiritual life and deaden our surroundings everywhere? The drink traffic, the opium traffic, the gambling spirit, the constant breaking up of sacred and social ties—all proclaim our powerlessness. They are still rampant in every quarter of the globe. We rejoice in what has been done for foreign missions, and the marvellous blessing that has followed feeble effort, but we are still constrained to acknowledge that while the harvest is great, the labourers are few.

We are constrained to ask, Is the Church then called to a vain task when her Lord commands her: "Go ye into all the world and disciple all nations; preach the Gospel to every creature"? Or is it that she has been trusting too much to her learning, and reason, and organisation, and temporal resources, and too forgetful of the one spiritual power that can alone make her strong to subjugate the world?

In succeeding weeks we will consider the other two subjects mentioned in our first paragraph.

GOD often breaks the cistern to bring us to the fountain. He withers our gourds that He Himself may be our shade.—R. M. McCheyne.

The Coming of Christ, AND The Coming of Antichrist.

The coming of Christ—how happy the hope, yet how intensely solemnising! The coming of Antichrist—how awful the expectation!

A free meditation, not a treatise, on the promise, and some reference to the warning, may be found appropriate to the opening of another year.

The day and the hour of the coming again of the Son of Man are unknown, but the event itself is clearly revealed, and it is a truth of great practical importance as well as one of deep interest. "What saith the Scripture?" must ever be the method of our enlightenment.

Here we learn that He who at his first coming finished the work thereby designed is, when God shall have accomplished the number of his elect, coming again in glory, power, and majesty, to complete many other purposes, fruit of the former coming. "This Jesus, who was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye beheld Him going into heaven." "As the lightning cometh forth from the east and is seen even unto the west, so shall be the coming—the presence—of the Son of man." "Behold He cometh with the clouds, and every eye shall see Him."

Quickly! and yet, as we view time, it seems long. How many, since these words were uttered, have departed this life! But such promises do not refer to us primarily in our individual condition. They concern the universal Church of God in its corporate condition, and therefore the individual believer as a member thereof. Suffer me to commend this principle of interpretation to the reader It might solve other difficulties.

As to those who have departed before the fulfilment, the word concerning them is, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." "The dead in Christ shall rise first: then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Such is the next truth in the order of resurrection. Christ was "the first fruits of them that are asleep." The first fruits, a sign of the coming harvest. "Then they that are Christ's at his coming"—in his presence, on his arrival. What a history will every one have! Have our libraries hundreds of books? Here are millions of histories, and each one will be an illustration of the grace of God in Jesus Christ.

The Father's house, where the Lord Jesus went to prepare a place for the children of God, will be specially the abode of the family of faith. Their inheritance is not on earth, but in heaven. It is "reserved in heaven for you who, by the power of God, are guarded through faith unto the salvation ready to be revealed in the last time."

What a change will take place in the world when the Son of man shall have sent forth his angels, and when they shall have gathered out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity. Then will seasons of refreshing come from the presence of the Lord, who will send Jesus, whom heaven receives until the times of restoration of all things. Then will the promises to the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob be fulfilled. They will as a nation find that Jesus of Nazareth is their own promised Messiah, and look unto Him whom they pierced; He will gather them to their own land, and ere long they will blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit. They will be missionaries to all countries which have not heard the fame of the Lord, neither have seen his glory.

The Lord Jesus will reign the universal King. All things will be put in subjection under his feet. The earth will be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. The creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. He will administer justice to the poor of the people, and save the children of the needy, and break in pieces the oppressor. In his days shall the right-minded flourish. Mankind on earth, as well as the Church of the first-born above, shall be blessed in Him; all nations shall call Him blessed. And the whole of this happiness will be the fruit of the sacrifice of Him who endured the Cross, who poured out his soul unto death, and who was made an offering for sin. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied.

All God's truths rightly held, that is, in spiritual power and in the heart, become influential and practical. The great and holy truths we are now considering are indeed so. Most softening, sanctifying, stimulating. Preeminently, the truth of the coming again of Christ helps to keep the living Person of the Lord Jesus before us, and what is more important and needful than this! In reference to particulars, a few may be touched upon.

At death the natural ties of husbands and wives, parents and children, brothers and sisters, are loosed, and as such they are terminated for ever. But the members, reunited in Christ, will know each other and be for ever with Him as members of his Father's family.

Do we need establishment, refreshment, and stimulus? The range of truths in the 15th chapter of the 1st of Corinthians is thus applied: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not vain in the Lord."

Are we suffering affliction through following the Lord? "Be patient, brethren, until the coming of the Lord." For yet a very little while, and He that cometh will come, and will not tarry. God will recompense rest to you that are oppressed by others, at the revelation of the Lord Jesus from heaven.

This truth also calls upon us to be ready to give up the account ourselves and of our service, and to be at our post of active duty, as servants awaiting their Master's return.

It should nurture heavenly-mindedness—the seeking of the things that are above, the setting of our mind on heavenly things, and not on the things that are upon the earth. For we died with Christ, and our life is hid with Christ in God, and when Christ our life shall be manifested then we also shall with Him be manifested in glory. This truth should induce self-purification. "If He shall be manifested, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him, even as He is, and every one that hath this hope on Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure."

Upon all subjects our minds require to be balanced by means of different portions of truth; and the particular part of the truth which should accompany the knowledge of the coming of Christ is the coming of anti-Christ. We read how, through not paying attention to the latter, and not rightly dividing the word of truth, and holding each part in its due proportion, some were exposed to fearfulness, and were troubled by a report that the day of the Lord was present. Forewarned they had been, and they should have been forearmed. But the unwelcome side of the manifestation of Christ's second coming was forgotten, although the apostle had told them that there would be a falling away—"the" apostasy first, and that "the" man of sin would be revealed.

The Lord Jesus foretold the coming of false Christs. The apostle John writes of there being already in his day many anti-Christs, and he speaks of one in particular who is coming—"the anti-Christ." In passing, I note that the word "anti-Christs" refers to persons who corrupt, take from, or add to the truth as it is in Jesus, or who intrude into his work or offices. But there will arise one in particular, and the Apostle Paul denominates him as "the man of sin," "the son of perdition," and "the lawless one." He says, as already noticed, that the day of the Lord will not be, except this falling away come first, and the person spoken of be revealed. His coming, his presence, will be according to the working of Satan, and most awful dishonour to God, and evil to man, will result—deification, blasphemy, persecution, delusion, apostasy. Therefore, instead of ignoring these things, or thinking they may not apply to us, we must prepare our minds for them, and ever strive to learn more about the great truths of the coming of Christ and the coming of anti-Christ, both of them.

As to the person himself, it is said of him, "whom the Lord Jesus will slay—consume—with the breath of his mouth, and bring to nought by the manifestation of his coming—his presence."

As to the tokens of Christ's second coming, we are told that there will be signs in the sun, and moon and stars, with distress of nations in perplexity; but believers must not lose hope, nor give way to gloomy fears, but be ever looking for Christ's glorious appearing; so that when these things begin to come to pass, they can look up, and lift up their heads, viewing them as tokens that their redemption draweth nigh.

In the first epistle to Timothy, we also read that the Spirit saith expressly that in later times some will fall away from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons. I do not go into details, but would draw the attention of ministers of the Word who may see your pages to what is said in connection with the above truth: "If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ."

Let us in conclusion return to the bright side of the prophecy. The Lord Jesus, our Saviour, the Head of the Body, the Church, will come again! Let us pass through this New Year seeking to be ready for, and desiring and looking for, what Scripture calls the blessed, the happy hope, even the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ; knowing that He gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works.

THE ELECTION PETITION TRIALS have afforded abundant proof that during the late election there was a terrible amount of hard drinking, with very little money cost to the drinkers. It is to be hoped that the result of these trials will facilitate the passing of Mr. Caine's bill for the closing of public-houses on election days.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD.

EBAL AND GERIZIM.—Joshua viii. 30.

THIS was one of the most impressive scenes that occurred during the occupation of Canaan. Jericho and Ai were heaps of blackened ruins, their kings and people utterly destroyed, their dependant villages mute with terror. And all through the land the rumour ran of the might of Israel's God. And beyond the horizon of the visible, into those realms of evil spirits, which had too long filled the chosen land with horrid rite and obscene orgy must tidings have come that struck the knell of their supremacy. There must have been panic there, in those dark realms, like that which Milton celebrates in his sublime Ode to the Nativity.

The nations of Canaan appear to have been so panic-stricken that they offered no resistance, and made no attempt at molestation, as all Israel went on a pilgrimage of thirty miles to perform a religious duty, which had been distinctly, and more than once, commanded by the great Lawgiver, whose words constituted their supreme directory.

"It shall be," so the word stood, "on the day when ye pass over Jordan unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, that thou shalt set thee up great stones, and plaster them with plaster, and thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law" (Deut. xi. 26; xxvii. 2). Joshua lost no time in obeying these minute and urgent injunctions, and within two or three days after the fall of Ai, perhaps within three weeks of the passage of the Jordan, the people were assembled in the valley of Shechem, which lies from East to West, sentinelled on the north of the sterile slopes of Ebal, rearing itself gaunt and barren against the intense blue of the Eastern sky, and on the south of its twin-giant Gerizim, "a majestic mass of limestone, with stately head and precipitous sides, but fruitful and picturesque, girt with foliage and beauty."

The valley between these two is one of the most beautiful in Palestine. Jacob's well lies at its mouth, and all its luxuriant extent is covered with its verdant beauty of gardens, and orchards, and olive groves, rolling in waves of billowy beauty up to the walls of Shechem, whilst the murmur of brooks flowing in all directions fills the air. The width of the valley is about a third of a mile, though the summits of the two mountains, in the lap of which it lies, are two miles apart. It is remarkable that where the two mountains face each other and touch most closely, with a green valley of five hundred yards between, each is hollowed out, and the limestone stratum of each is broken into a succession of ledges, "so as to present the appearance of a series of regular benches." Thus a natural amphitheatre is formed, capable of containing a vast audience of people; and the acoustic properties are so perfect in that dry and rainless air, that Canon Tristram speaks of two of his party taking up positions on the opposite mountains, reciting the Ten Commandments antiphonally, and hearing each other perfectly.

Thither Joshua led the people, that, by a solemn act, they might take possession of the land for God.

I.—THE ALTAR ON EBAL.

Ebal was stern and barren in its aspect. There was a congruity, therefore, between its appearance and the part it played in the solemn proceedings of the day. For far up its slopes gathered the dense masses of the six tribes, who, with thunderous Amens, twelve times repeated, answered the voices of the band of white-robed Levites, as standing with Joshua, and the elders, and officers, and judges, in the green valley, they solemnly repeated the curses of the law.

But that was not the first proceeding in that holy ceremonial. Before the people took up their assigned places on the mountain sides an altar was reared on the lower slopes of Ebal. Special instructions as to its construction had been given in the Book of Deuteronomy. It was to be built of unhewn stones on which no iron tool had been lifted; probably to guard against any attempt to set forth the likeness of God, and to discountenance the florid and lascivious ornamentations of which the surrounding heathen were so fond. God loves simplicity and purity in our worship, and deems that service most acceptable which is most spiritual, least tainted with the material and sensuous.

There they offered burnt offerings and sacrificed peace offerings. The burnt offering was what was known as a sweet savour offering. The whole of the victim was burnt. "It was an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord" (Lev. i.). Herein the Holy Ghost signified, secondarily, our duty to present ourselves without reserve to God, but primarily the devotion of our blessed Lord to accomplish his Father's will in our redemption. He held nothing back, there was no reserve. He emptied Himself, and He did it ungrudgingly, for He said, "I delight to do thy will, O my God." How sweet this was to the heart of the Father. If on the one hand there was anguish such as only God could feel, on the other there was the gratification of delighted love. "Therefore doth the Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again." "Mine elect in whom my soul delighteth," is the Father's own verdict on his Best-beloved.

The peace-offerings also belonged to the sweet-savour offerings, but they were not wholly consumed, a part of them were eaten by the offerers to testify that in them they had fellowship and communion with God. So that in the sight of Israel Joshua and other chosen representatives partook of portions of the sacrifices, and obeyed the Divine injunction, "Thou shalt eat there, and thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God." If any of the native Hittites, peering out from behind great boulder-stones were spectators of that scene, they must have been impressed with the thought that Jehovah delighted in the happiness of his people, and that his service was as the scent of clover, or as the feast of children at their father's table. We feed on the peace-offering when we meditate on the love and death of our blessed Lord, and enter into some of the Father's thoughts of satisfaction at the work He did, and the spirit in which He did it.

As we pass into the Land of Promise we must be watchful that we do not leave behind the devout and loving consideration of that precious blood by which we have been redeemed and which is our life. Our highest and most rapturous experiences can never take the place of this. Constantly we must remind ourselves and others that we are redeemed sinners, and that all our hopes of salvation, our fellowship with God, our motives for service, are derived from what our Saviour did when He bore our sins in his own body on the tree.

But because He died there, we need never stand there. Because He counted not his life dear to Himself, those gaunt and forbidding slopes have become the scene of blessed communion with God. We sit and feast with Him, and from peak to peak the joy chases the terrors of the curse, and smiles look out on us from the old rocks, whilst the torrents tinged with the light of the sun flash and sing. Because He shed his blood, unlike the field of Gilboa, there shall be dew and rain and fields of offerings even on Ebal, until its terraced slopes resemble those of the opposite mount of blessing. Ah, blessed Lord, how shall we thank Thee, who hast redeemed us from the curse of the law, and made Ebal so choice a trysting-place with God?

II.—THE LAW IN CANAAN.

Around the altar strong men reared great stones, and plastered them with a facing of cement, composed of lime or gypsum, on which it was easy to write all the words of the law very plainly (Deut. xxvii. 8). In that dry air, where there is no frost to split and disintegrate such inscriptions, written on the soft cement with a stencil; or, on its polished surface, when dry, with ink or paint, as in the case of the monumental stones of Egypt, would remain for centuries. As the time could not have admitted of the inscription of the whole law, it is probable that the more salient points were alone committed to the custody of those great cromlechs to perpetuate to after generations the conditions of the tenure on which Israel held the lease of Palestine. They were a standing protest against the sins which had blighted those fertile valleys, and an incentive to the obedience on which so much of the future hinged.

But when we turn from the literal to the metaphorical, and ask for the underlying typical meaning of this inscription of the law on so prominent a position in the Land of Promise, we are at first startled. What can it mean? Is there a connection after all between Law and Grace? Are those who sit with Christ in heavenly places still amenable to law, "under the law," as the apostle puts it? Is it not true that, by our union with Christ who died, we have passed out of the sphere in which we were married to our first husband, the Law, and have left it behind us? Are we not, therefore, discharged from the law of our former husband and married to another, even to Him that was raised from the dead?

There is but one answer to all these questions. We have died to the covenant wherein we were holden. We do serve in newness of the spirit, and not in oldness of the letter. We are not looking to our obedience to merit the favour of God, or to win aught of the blessings of the Gospel. But it is also true that faith does not make the law of God of none effect, and still, in the Land of Promise, He promises to write it clearly on the tablets of our hearts. In each one of us there is an Ebal with its altar and its stones. The soul comes back again and again to those first principles of the perfect life, not by compulsion from without, but by the impulse of the Holy Spirit.

The case is this. When we yield ourselves entirely to the Spirit of life which is in Christ Jesus, and which passes freely through us, as the blood through artery and vein, He makes us very sensitive to the last commandment or desire of Him whom He has taught us to love; we dread to see the shadow of suffering pass over his face more than to feel the pang of remorse rend our hearts; we find our heaven in his smile of approval, and the "Well done!" that glistens in his eyes when we have done aught to the least of his; we are conscious of the pulse of a love which He has instilled, and which supplies us with the highest code for life—and so insensibly whilst we yield ourselves to Him, we find ourselves keeping the law after a fashion which was foreign to us when it was a mere outward observance, and we cry with David, "Oh, how I love thy law, it is my meditation all the day."

The most punctilious observer of the law, as a means of obtaining the favour of God, and heaven at last, never kept it as those do who do not think of it at all, but who love Christ infinitely. A woman that has become a wife will do service in a house, and to her loved ones, which the gold of the Indies could never procure from the hireling. She needs never to be taught what to do, her instincts tell her that. She needs never to be taught when to do, her heart tells her that. She needs never the rebuke for not doing, because her love prompts her to do exceeding abundantly beyond all that could have been asked or thought. "Sacrifice and offering Thou wouldest not." "Mine ears hast thou bored. ...I love my master, I will not go out free."

So we find that when we have crossed the Jordan of inward death, and have learnt something of the blessedness of the risen life, and the power of the Holy Spirit, and the good things which God has prepared for them that love Him, we begin to keep, not the ten commandments as such, majestic and great though they be, but that law of perfect love which rears its altar and its stones on Mount Ebal, and makes a blessing linger where a curse had brooded.

III.—THE CONVOCATION.

When these rites were fulfilled, the third and concluding scene of this extraordinary transaction took place. In the centre of the valley the ark rested, with its group of attendant priests and Levites. Hard by, Joshua and the leaders of the tribes, elders, officers, and judges. Then up the slopes of Ebal, finding seats standing on its terraced sides, were Reuben, Gad and Asher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali; whilst up the slopes of Gerizim were the larger and more important tribes of Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Joseph, and Benjamin. It was as though the voice of blessing must be louder than that of cursing—a prediction of its final prevalence and triumph.

Then Joshua read aloud all the words of the law, the blessing and the curse, according to all that is written in the book of the law. There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read, not before all the assembly of Israel, and the women, and the little ones, and the strangers that were conversant among them. And as he solemnly read, whether the blessing or the curse, each several item was responded to by the Amens that thundered forth from thousands of throats, and rolled in reverberating echoes through the hills. Earth has seldom heard such shouts as those!

It is well worth our while to ponder the list of blessings appended to obedience in that memorable 28th chapter of Deuteronomy, that we may discover their spiritual counterparts, and, having found them, to claim them. Let us, first, be quite sure that we are right with God; next, that we are on his plan and doing his will; also thirdly, that we are set upon his glory, altogether irrespective of our own interests; and we shall find ourselves able to claim blessings of which we little dreamt. The Lord will open his good treasury in heaven and make us plenteous for good, and establish us for an holy people unto himself.

Nor can we better close our meditation than by asking that the Holy Spirit may so indwell and guide us that we may choose what He ordains and not swerve an hairsbreadth to the right or left of the narrow path of obedience, keeping his commandments, obeying his biddings, perfectly conformed to his will. Thus shall Ebal cease to frown, and Gerizim rain its blessings upon us.

MR. RABINOWICH'S REPORT.

Last week we gave an account of the meeting held at Mildmay, in order to welcome Mr. Joseph Rabinowich on his third visit to London. Since then the London Council for Rabinowich has issued its annual report. This mainly consists of a translation of a statement by this leader in Israel, who begins by briefly recalling the story of the past years. The present position is fairly summarised in the following paragraph:—

"As regards the results of my work of these eight years I need not make any boast, for they are well known all over Russia, as well as abroad. I will only say this much, that it would be wrong to measure the results of my work by the number of Jews who have joined the Christian Church every year, or by the quantity of water used for their baptism—for this is not joining the Church by adding a name to the roll, nor is that a baptism which is only outward—although I am always aiming at this, and I always rejoice to see Jews baptized in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. I feel that I am not sent by the Lord to preach Christianity but Christ, namely, Jesus whom God has raised, according to his promise, as a Saviour unto Israel; not to preach unto them church government, but the Kingdom of God, which is soon to be revealed by the appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ. And I certainly do no wrong by saying I have filled all Jewish communities, even as far as Siberia, with the message of the Gospel, and it would be difficult to find a town in Russia where there are not some who have heard of the crucified Jesus who became unto us the 'Wisdom of God, Righteousness, Holiness, and Redemption.' 'Faith comes by hearing;' that the many letters which I have in my possession fully testify."

To Mr. Rabinowich's letter the Council add a few fervent words, stating that—"The position of our Jewish brethren in the Russian Empire seems to be one of acute crisis, and may become—more than ever—one of extreme peril; and we desire to accentuate the urgent and constant need of believing intercessory prayer by all lovers of Israel at this time of trial and perplexity, that Jehovah may hear not only the cry of his Jewish people in the day of their adversity, but the cry of Christian hearts on their behalf, so that the persecuting spirit may be stayed, and that many broken and bleeding hearts may be healed by the revelation to them of Jesus as their Messiah and Coming Deliverer."

This report, which may be had of Mr. James Mathieson, 47, Phillimore-gardens, Kensington, W., ought to be prayerfully pondered by all lovers of Israel.

HOUSE OF REST, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.

The first meeting of the New Year promised well for the gatherings, which from time to time will be held in the Pillar Room during 1893. A crowded attendance, earnest and pointed addresses, definite and believing prayer were some of the characteristics which marked the meeting on Friday last.

In the afternoon Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke from 2 Timothy i. 12 and 14, on the two-sided deposit, that of the Christian with Christ, and that of Jesus with the Christian. Mr. Meyer pressed home the application, and urged all who had not yet done so to have definite transactions with Christ that day.

Rev. H. Sharpe, of Trinity Church, Hampstead, also spoke, and later several bright earnest addresses were given by various ministers.

The Aged Workers' Home is complete and only awaits funds to be opened for the friends awaiting admission.

A STRIKING STORY FROM CANADA.

The Grande Ligne Mission, of Quebec, was established by Mme. Feller, from Switzerland, in 1836, for the conversion of French-Canadian Roman Catholics. At that time there was not upon the American continent, as far as known, a single French-Canadian who had renounced Romanism; to-day there are over 50,000 French-Canadian Protestants in America.

The parish of Maskinongé is situated upon the Canadian Pacific Railway, about midway between the cities of Montreal and Quebec. In the county of 42,000 inhabitants there were only four Protestants, all the rest being French Roman Catholics. In the village and parish of Maskinongé there were only two Protestants. In 1889 the people agreed to build a new R.C. church. An offer of eight acres of land on the east side of the river was made; the Bishop, according to the ritual of the Romish Church, consecrated the ground, planted the cross, and said the parish church should be built there.

This made the people on the west of the river jealous, and they offered thirty acres of land on their side if the church were built there. The priest considered that thirty acres would produce more for him than eight, so the Bishop came and nullified the former formal dedication. The people on the east side resolved to build the church on the lot the bishop first consecrated, and voluntarily taxed themselves accordingly. They rushed forward the work of building with all speed, and in two months had their large frame church completed. But the bishop sent them word that they should have no priest. This did not deter them from using the building, for they met in it regularly on Sundays and went through their prayers without a priest. In June, 1891, Father Hendrick entered the church, advanced to the altar, and holding aloft his crucifix, cursed the building and threatened to excommunicate those who refused to obey the Church. The men turned on the priest, so he was glad to make his escape. The cursing of the church and the action of the people spread through the country, and the community was greatly aroused.

Under these conditions the Grande Ligne Mission sent a missionary, Rev. A. Burwash, to Maskinongé, to see if true Gospel work could be done there. This first visit was unsuccessful, but he went back, and spent some days visiting the people, reading to them the words of the Saviour, and praying with them. He received an invitation to come to the church on Sunday and talk to the people. This was on November 15, 1891, and ever since he and other missionaries have preached in that cursed church.

The results have been most encouraging. A number of men sent in their names to the priest that they were no longer Roman Catholics. One brave man had the courage to tell the bishop to his face: "We will soon have a Baptist church here, and more of the coming generation will attend it than the Roman Catholic church." Early last May, those very men who said to Mr. Burwash on his first visit, "We are Roman Catholics, and have no idea of becoming Protestants," went into the church, took down the altar, broke it up for kindling wood, and removed every emblem of Romanism, including crucifix and pictures, also the images of St. Joseph, St. Anne, and the Virgin Mary. In July, Rev. W. S. Bullock, a young and earnest missionary, was stationed at Maskinongé. Miss S. Piche, one of the successful teachers of the Institute at Grande Ligne, was also sent to conduct a school for the children, and the work continued to prosper; the congregation consisted of thirty, nearly all being men.

The time was coming for organisation; so in August they remodelled the church and built a baptistry, so that the ordinance might be observed according to apostolic practice. All necessary arrangements were made, and the council met on August 25 to receive and organise the converts into a Baptist church. Truly it was a wonderful day for Quebec. At two o'clock the church was full; over two hundred Roman Catholics were present, and over seventy Protestants came to rejoice with and welcome the converts. Ten men and one woman were publicly baptized. An impressive and joyous service was held in the evening, when the newly-organised church observed for the first time the Lord's Supper.

The great change in Maskinongé has made a profound impression on the whole Province. Thousands of French-Canadian Catholics have lost faith in, and are sick and tired of the whole system of Romanism, and none knew this better than the priests and bishops, so they use all the artful and lying means they can to keep the people from leaving the Romish Church.

The friend in Canada who sends us this narrative says:—"To anyone familiar with the terrible incubus which oppresses the Province of Quebec, and is over-spreading our whole Dominion, coupled with the spiritual deadness of our Protestant Churches, the occurrences at Maskinongé seem marvellous, and, like an electric blaze, shine hopefully amidst the surrounding gloom."

ERIN'S ONLY HOPE.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

We have been privileged to look over a large number of reports penned by Scripture Readers in all parts of Ireland. These are in the form of simple personal letters addressed to Capt. Kearney White; coming, as they do, from large towns, small hamlets, and remote districts, they present a faithful and vivid picture of varied experience in carrying the Word of God into the homes of the Irish people, and spreading abroad a knowledge of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ. It is evident from the united testimony of men labouring far apart and under widely diverse circumstances, that a "wide door and effectual" is being granted for the Gospel among the peasantry and working classes of Ireland; and that many Roman Catholics are willing (and in some cases anxious) to hear the simple story of the Cross when and in language whichthey can understand.

We may give a few brief extracts. One Scripture Reader, serving in a village district, says:—"I am thankful I can now go out day by day telling poor sinners of the precious love of Christ. . . . I have lately had many interesting cases amongst Roman Catholics. They tell me their troubles, and I point them to Him who has said, 'Come unto Me, and I will give you rest.' Some of our best work has been done among the sick and dying, who are often most willing to listen."

Taking next a letter dated from a busy town we find the Reader saying, "The Lord has given me acceptance with the people. One woman said I was a great comfort to her. Two men in the infirmary were very thankful to be visited. . . . The Lord is blessing the work and making it the means of bringing dark souls to Himself."

Another, writing from a country town, tells of a recent visit to outlying parishes where the peasants welcomed him heartily from house to house, and asking for "a bit of reading from the ould Book." Two Roman Catholics followed him to a quiet part of the road; they professed anxiety, and enquired more fully concerning the way of life. Of several such there appears to be strong hope.

Another, working in a rural part, writes: "On Friday last I visited four Roman Catholic houses where there were sick. The priest was just after leaving two of the places. The patients welcomed me and spoke about confession. I told them 'I hope you confess your sins to God, who only can forgive.' I told them of his love and of the blood of Christ shed on the Cross. Two told me plainly they had learned that the priest could not forgive and that they were now

TRUSTING IN JESUS ONLY.

There are in this parish those who have accepted Christ through the reading of the Word."

From several country districts very similar testimony comes, showing, as one puts it, that "Roman Catholics are beginning to thirst for the good news," or as another expresses it, "The Gospel is spreading among our Roman Catholic people;" while yet another remarks, "A good many on the —— property look out for me now, are glad to listen, and are very much shaken as to their faith in the Church of Rome."

But we need quote no more; the extracts we have given illustrate work extending from Donegal to Cork, and indicate clearly that in all manner of places, among all manner of people in "the distressed isle," God is blessing greatly the work of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. Surely were this fact generally recognised, many more would feel it a joy and a privilege to support this important work. Communications may be addressed to the Secretary, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

A PERSONAL DEALING.

BY D. A. MOXEY, M.D.

I HAD been speaking from the words of the leper, "Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean," and the answer of the Saviour, "I will; be thou clean." In the after-meeting, a middle-aged professional man, a lawyer, came to me in a state of deep anxiety. I took him back to the leper's experience of the Almighty power, and the undeniable willingness of the Saviour to cleanse, when he suddenly threw his arms up, and exclaimed in a tone of desperation, "I know He is able to save me, I know He is willing to save me; but I can't say He has saved me."

"Sit down," I said, "and compose yourself." After a little I continued, "Do you admit that He is the only Saviour?'

"Yes."

"Do you admit that He can save you to the uttermost if He has a mind to?"

"Yes."

"And you say you know He has a mind to—that He is willing to save you?"

"Yes."

"Are you willing to be saved, and in his way?"

"Yes."

"Then, how do you know you are not saved?"

"I do not possess a single evidence."

"Where are you looking for such an evidence?"

"To my own consciousness."

"Where does your consciousness reside?"

"In my heart, I suppose, and manifested through my feelings."

"In other words, your emotional nature?"

"Well, yes, perhaps so."

"My friend," I said, "you desire to carry about your knowledge of salvation in your heart, and to find it there. You are expecting assurance from a most unreliable quarter, the heart being 'deceitful above all things,' and from a vile place, for it is 'desperately wicked.' I prefer to obtain that knowledge from my waistcoat pocket." He looked surprised. Then I drew forth from the pocket my little Testament, and said, "This is an untainted source—truthful, above all things, and desperately holy. Moreover, it is the one and only place wherein you can obtain the assurance of salvation."

"God," I continued, "is the Deviser of the plan of salvation, the Executor, and the Applier—'salvation is of the Lord'; 'Behold God is my salvation.' Who, then, would you like to be the assurer of your salvation? Not yourself, surely, and the worst part of you? Not a man, for 'no man can save his brother'? Not an angel, for it might be Satan who can transform himself into an angel of light? Not Satan, who is a liar and a murderer? Who then?

"God Himself!" said the inquirer, solemnly.

"Yes," I replied, "stick to that. Three thousand years ago, David prayed, 'Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.' This is what you want, is it not?"

"It is."

"Then we come back to the question, How is God to say it? You answer, 'To my consciousness through my feelings.' God says, 'No; in my Word, through your faith."

I now handed him my Bible (Revised Version), and asked him to read 1 John v. 13. He turned up the passage, and read aloud, "These things have I written unto you, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, even unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God."

"What do you make out of that?" I asked.

"That a believer has eternal life, and may know it."

"How?"

"From the things written—God's Word, the Bible," he said.

We then read the Saviour's own assurances in John iii. 16, 36; v. 24; and vi. 37, 47. As he read the last-named verse out of his own Bible, "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life," he looked up with a smile, and said quietly, "I believe," and I "have." I can say now, "He has saved me."

This interview took place many years ago, but I noted down our conversation at the time, and it was substantially as herein recorded. I met him frequently afterwards, and found him always a humble believer, resting his assurance of salvation on God's word. God's assurance was his assurance.

A TALE OF THE SEA.

THE British and Foreign Sailors' Society had a memorable Christmas gathering of some three hundred bonâ fide seamen. Miss Annie Macpherson spoke with power and blessing from the Lord's Word "Watch." The sailors responded as to the voice of a mother and friend. Her nephew, Mr. Merry, who is preparing for China, was also greatly helped of the Lord. After tea, a full-rigged Bethelship was unloaded of her cargo of Christmas gifts for our sailors. Zion's songs made glad the heart, while words brimful of blessing were spoken by several.

The large hall of the Sailors' Institute at Shadwell, packed full as it was, never looked more bright, beautiful, and inviting. It was most cheering to hear testimonies from seamen and others, who some years, months, and even days before, found the Lord, or rather the Lord found them, in that very place. Some were seeking the Lord that same night, but space will only admit of one thrilling tale from the sea. It will illustrate the hardships and dangers of a sailor's life, and the need of loving sympathy, bowels of compassion, the hand outstretched to save—"as good for the body as the soul." One dear fellow had just escaped from awful mental, moral, and physical perils. His ship was a hell afloat, and her end was fitting the terrible experience of the voyage from Philadelphia.

SAMUEL HYMAN was steward on board the ———. Her captain was a type of a few, alas! not yet extinct. He starts the voyage with the principle that by abuse, wickedness, cruelty, the men will flee the ship directly she arrives, as from a cage of wild beasts. This class of ship starts by robbing the whole crew of more than half their wages, the captain sharing with the crimp. She ends by the crew running from such a terrible inhuman prison, leaving the other half or portion of their wages. And the men are entered upon the ship's articles as deserters!

In this case the most blasphemous, filthy, and abominable language was used by the captain and mate the whole voyage. Men were kept up in their watch below, made to scrape the sides of the ship, though in half a gale of wind! The mate kicked about this poor fellow till he sickened, and it was well for him the voyage was short. The mate assaulted another seaman, but he drew his knife, and the tormentor was cowed. The cook was assaulted by the captain, and he threatened if the attack were renewed he would defend himself by his knife. Hyman said, "Though I have been to sea many years and have good discharges, and know my work, yet the captain used to slap my face, and he kicked me, and may have ruined me for life. God kept me from using my carving-knife. The second mate, a God-fearing young Scotchman, used to cheer me up and say, 'Never mind, steward, it will soon be all over.'

"We were loaded with 2000 barrels of naphtha and paraffin. When we passed Havre she blew up with a terrific explosion. She was immediately on fire, and the fire ran up the masts and yards in a few minutes. Nine of the crew, I suppose, fell in the flames, including the sick abused sailor, the mate, and second mate. Three of the seamen were blown overboard and picked up. One, with fractured head, went in hospital; another is still there with arm and leg broken. The captain got his wife up through the skylight and over into a boat, and she said, 'Oh, steward, I have left my jewellery.' I said, 'Thank God you have saved your life.' I lost everything.

"The Consul at Havre sent me direct over here. I am without food or shelter; I cannot even change my clothing. What a change when I came into this meeting to-night. I did pray for God to have mercy upon me and help me. He has already answered my prayers."

Here was a very fine West Indian sailor who had passed through this terrible experience. God did answer his prayer. A ship is secured to take him to Barbadoes. Friends at the Mansion House gave money for his food en voyage. Dr. Barnardo gave him a rig out of clothes. And in other ways the Lord has blessed him in soul and body. Such cases need individual dealing, thorough, Scriptural, Christian. Mr. Carnegie, the good missionary in charge, reports that the Sailors' Samaritan Fund is exhausted, and he has had to borrow.

A MADAGASCAR CONFERENCE.

ON November 6 and 7 meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life of believers were held at Ambohimandraso, Betsileo, Madagascar. The majority of those present were country teachers, pastors, and evangelists, and their wives, who, being considered the most earnest of native workers, were specially invited to these meetings. Among the subjects considered were "Prayer" and "Hindrances to a Spiritual Life." One of the hindrances mentioned was the lack of "assurance." It is a conspicuous fact that there is a great lack of "assurance" amongst the native Christians here. I remember speaking to a young man—a professing Christian—on this point, and he replied, "As for myself, I think that with salvation it is very like examination time; we prepare ourselves for it, and do our best to win the prize, but we don't know till the end whether we shall win it or not."

It was felt to be a most solemn, earnest, searching time. The sincere desire of many after that "holiness without which no man shall see the Lord," and to be "filled with the Spirit," to have power with God in prayer, to have power for service, was evident from the utterances of both men and women who were striving to know how to live and act as the Master would have them.

At the last meeting of the series the question was asked by the president, "What have you had these days that you can take home with you?" Again, confession and testimony mingled with exhortation and praise to God.

It was at this last meeting that the senior missionary, Rev. T. Rowlands, remembering it was the anniversary of his arrival thirteen years ago (and also that of his esteemed colleague, Rev. D. M. Rees, one year ago), took a brief review of the past thirteen years. Then there were only eighteen small preaching stations and schools, and no resident missionary; now there are over sixty places in the district, where children are taught on week days, and the Gospel preached on Sundays, etc. Of the hundred and more assembled that day, only a very small proportion were out of heathenism then. He asked those who were church members thirteen years ago to stand up. A dozen or more did so, but when he qualified it by saying "Those who were Christians knowing themselves saved then," a number sat down.

It was a most affecting sight to see so many having but recently come out of heathenism, and almost all having been born and brought up in perfectly heathen homes, where ancestor worship and superstition are rife—met together as a band of Christian workers seeking to attain to a higher life.

Let it not, however, be supposed that the Malagasy Christians as a whole are of the above-mentioned type. The churches are still decidedly weak, and will require careful nursing for many years to come. Many of the Christians are mere "babes in Christ." Only a small proportion are joyful, victorious, successful Christian workers.

HE KNOWS.

"He knoweth the way that I take."—Job xxiii. 10.
"I am the Lord thy God which leadeth thee."—Isaiah xlviii. 17.

STEP by step He leadeth us
With tender loving care;
Well He knows the way we take,
And all we'll meet with there;
The many tempting paths of sin,
The many lurking foes,
The thirsty desert—heated plain—
He knows, our Father knows.

He knows, our Heavenly Father knows,
Exactly when and where
The wayside cross will need the help
Of his strong arm to bear;
He knows "deep waters" must be passed
Along the journey home,
When strength to wrestle with the waves
Must come from Him alone.

But He will lead his lovèd ones,
When weary and oppressed,
To the "Rock," whose grateful shadow
Invites to perfect rest.
He knows, too, where the pastures lie
Of tender grass, and green—
O Israel's Shepherd, lead thy flock
Full oft to feed therein.

For the Young.

LITTLE CYRIL'S WORK.

"I wish I could do something to help the poor people, mother," said a little boy of six, one cold winter's afternoon.

"What makes you think of that just now, darling?"

"I believe it is because I am so warm and comfortable in this nice pretty room, and because I have so enjoyed my play with little Sissie."

Little Sissie was the daughter of a poor woman who lived in Mrs. Alford's district. She had been sent for to play with Cyril, whilst her mother went to fetch some work. Nurse had taken her home, and was now downstairs getting Cyril's tea ready, and he was watching the falling snow.

His little playmate had been quite lost in admiration at all his toys, and it had been half Cyril's pleasure to show off on his new rocking-horse, which he could ride now quite bravely, only holding the reins! He had heard his mother give orders to have a basket packed with tea, butter, sugar, and cakes for Sissie to take home with her, and ever since he had been thinking and thinking why he could not help some of the poor people too.

Cyril knew that the reason Sissie's mother did not wish her to stay alone whilst she was out, was because there were so many wicked people living in their street that she could not trust her little girl by herself, lest she should come to harm. He remembered, too, having heard only the Sunday before, when a strange clergyman had preached, that many of the poor people were neglected, and had little opportunity of being good and hearing of our Father and Jesus Christ. He had added:—

"Will not some of you, who have happy homes yourselves, spare something for others, that clergymen, kind City missionaries, and lady workers may be enabled to go amongst them, teaching, comforting, and helping them to be good?"

Cyril's mother now drew her little son closer to her, and said:—

"My darling, I will tell you what Lilian Hatch did for a long time to help the Society we heard about last Sunday. I do not see why you should not take up her work, although you are many years younger than she was when she began."

Cyril's eyes filled with tears, for he had loved Lilian so much, and she had been taken to her heavenly home a few days before. Although Cyril knew she was safe with Jesus, yet he missed her coming in and out; she had always been so bright and amusing, and told him such nice Bible stories.

"Well, Cyril," continued Mrs. Alford, "Lilian always took a great interest in mission-work, and whenever the magazine came she always looked out the children's portion to see if there was anything she could understand. Children are apt to think their hands are so small and their words so weak that they cannot do anything really useful in helping forward the Lord's work, but it is a great mistake. Lilian wrote for a collecting box, and was quite content to get pennies, halfpennies, and even farthings to put in it. She sometimes had presents given her of money, and she always put some of it in her box. Then she asked ten people to promise to give her a penny a week. This she used to collect herself, and she found that those ten people who paid up regularly enabled her to send up £2 3s. 4d. a year to the Society. She used to ask her friends in such a winning way, that they felt they must give something for her box. Lilian's mother told me also she used to pray regularly that God would bless her work, and the work of the Society. We know the influence of a child's prayer must be very great. You see she did three things: 1, she worked herself; 2, she interested others; 3, she prayed for the Society. She has left a very sweet memory behind her, dear little Lilian."

Cyril's large eyes were fixed on his mother's face; he was very, very interested. Presently he said:—

"Mother, may I have a box, and begin at once?"

"You may, if you promise to go on regularly with it. I want my little boy to learn to help others."

Nurse then appeared, to say tea was quite ready, and would Master Cyril come up at once. He said: "Yes, nursie; but I want to tell you, I am going to help poor people myself, because mother says I may."

The little boy told her all about Lilian's way of working as he trotted up to his nursery; and nurse told him she would be his first subscriber of a penny a week, because she wanted to help too. That evening Mrs. Alford wrote to the Society asking for a box to be sent. After waiting a few days a parcel came by post addressed to Master Cyril Alford.

"How lovely!" cried Cyril. "I like my box much better than mother's."

"Come along, Master Cyril," said nurse. "Here's my first penny."

Little friends, have you such a box? If not, ask your parents to send to some Missionary Society and get one for you.

JEWISH CHILDREN IN TUNIS.

Dear Christian Friends who Love the Jews,—I must let you have a share in the joy of the deeply interesting gathering of Jewish children, under the auspices of the London Jews Society, at which I attended to-day. Fancy 500 children under direct Christian teaching day by day; and I use the word "direct" with intention, for the aim of Mr. Flad, and of the masters and mistresses of the school (now, thank God, the larger number of them truly Christians), is to lead the children to a knowledge of the Saviour, as the Messiah come down to save them.

To-day was the Christmas treat for the girls, the boys having had their's yesterday; and a pretty sight it was to see the files of gaily-dressed children, half of them in native costume, pass in orderly manner from their class-rooms to the large room set apart for the Christmas-tree. Here they were welcomed by Mr. Flad and his wife, and when the head master had opened with prayer for God's blessing, a little demonstration of the children's progress was given.

Sweet hymns of thorough Evangelical teaching were sung, with all the happy intonation of voice which does so much to give effect to the words, the dear young mistress standing before the elder class, her whole soul going out to help her girls to do well. That was sweet enough, but there was something better to follow, namely, a proof of the solid foundation of truth that was being stored in their minds. This was brought out by questions proposed by Mr. Flad, such as "Give me a verse from the Old Testament to prove that Christ was to be born in Bethlehem." Instantly several hands went up, and one girl being chosen; she gave Micah v. 2. The subject was carried on to show that Christ came to be a blessing to Jew and Gentile, and how. And then Isaiah v. 3 was quoted. Then I caught, "Were your fathers commanded to offer sacrifices?" and Lev. xvii. 11 was given. Then this was compared with the New Testament, and Heb. ix. 22 and 1 John i. 7 were mentioned by different girls; and so on, till there was a clear showing of the Messiah having come and why He came.

After this there was more singing, and presently the young mistress gave an interesting allegory which drew all attention, and as its meaning was unfolded we saw a life-like picture of the state of man's heart, its need of cleansing, and how alone it could be done. With such a pleasant, happy way of teaching, and so full of earnest desire, it is no wonder that a few weeks back, when the teacher was laid aside by illness, I heard that her girls suggested to the one who went to take her place, "May we not pray for mademoiselle soon to be well again?"

A magic lantern display finished the entertainment, and then the happy party were dismissed with cakes and oranges.—Yours in Christ,

THE MALAGASY SLAVE.

Mrs. Peill writes:—"I have received £14 2s. 8d. towards freeing the young Christian slave mentioned in your columns. This amount has been given by twenty-seven contributors of all ages. The first donation was from the three little children of an Indian missionary, who came with happy smiles to bring me 1s. 2d. A dear girl, who hopes to be a missionary herself when grown up, sends 2s.; and five brothers and sisters in Newcastle send each a like amount; while another little brother and sister in Sussex contribute 5s. Four contributions, including the largest one, come from Ireland, among them £1 from "A Working Man," which I cannot acknowledge direct as he gives no address."

[Over £3 has been contributed by young friends through our columns, so that only £3 more is needed to make up the amount required.—Ed.]

AN OBJECT LESSON IN WAIFDOM.

The thermometer on Wednesday evening last week showed many degrees of frost, but if the weather had any effect upon Dr. Barnardo's two thousand waif-and-stray guests, it was to increase their apparent appreciation of the well-lighted and comfortably heated hall of the Edinburgh Castle. Eighteen years ago this annual supper was established, and it has ever since been a bright spot in the memory of thousands of homeless and hungry children.

The young people are gathered together in no haphazard fashion. Dr. Barnardo's agents for some time have been studying the Metropolis as a whole, and they made it their business to visit all its areas of destitution. Districts as distant as Deptford, Islington, Holloway, Lambeth, and Westminster were searched, and likely guests were interviewed on the subject of the great gathering.

They certainly were a motley group—genuine waifs and strays of the street, lodging-house children, children who appeared as if that human product "mothering," had never been expended on a single unit among them. But certainly they were no strangers to discipline. The way in which they fell into order, obeyed commands, and kept quiet (most wonderful of all), was a revelation to some who had visited the Hall on similar occasions years ago. The self-denying, earnest labours of the elementary school teachers must be reckoned with in gauging the morals and the manners of child-life in the slums of the Metropolis.

Nor was the utter misery to be seen which not long since appealed so keenly to the feelings. One was thankful to see that boots and shoes, if a little tattered, were worn, and if the garments had patches in plenty, there were fewer rags than formerly.

The programme for their entertainment, after the hearty meal had been discussed, was most satisfactory. A lantern disclosed the wonderful history of Dick Whittington, and, in order to give the story a modern significance, one who had been a lad in Dr. Barnardo's Homes, but who now holds a responsible and honourable position in the musical world, was present to lead them to appreciate the fine music of the euphonium.

Sweeter than the music, perhaps, was the jingle of 2,000 sixpences, which a friend had kindly given to Dr. Barnardo for his guests. The promise was freely given that, so far as was in their power, not one of the coins should be laid on a publican's bar.

But the best was kept to the last. After Rev. W. J. Mayers had well acquitted himself as entertainer, Dr. Barnardo laid his friendly intentions before his audience. If a boy or girl present was homeless, friendless, and destitute, they might stay behind, and he would put them up comfortably for the night, their cases would be individually examined, and those found worthy would be taken into his large family. Seeing that it numbers close upon 5000 already, one could not but wonder at his Oliver-Twistian faith in "asking for more." About fifty little waifs took him at his word, so doubtless that evening's work will have a decisive influence on the course of many a young life.

THE DOOR OF HOPE, for Friendless Girls in Torquay, has issued a modest little report, which tells of good work steadily done. Last year eighteen women and one infant were received, making thirty in all since the opening of the home. Most of these have gone into service, others are still in training. God has blessed the work in the conversion of several. Some interesting cases are given in the report, which may be had from the Home, 3, Lymington-terrace, Upton-road, Torquay.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 15.—2 SAMUEL IV.

David was careful, and rightly so, to guard against any appearance of complicity with these evildoers, who counted on a generous reward for their action in destroying the one obstacle that lay between himself and the throne of Israel. Avoid all appearance of evil, and be very careful that the world and men around may find no cause of stumbling or offence. The only time when we should attempt to vindicate our character should be when there is a risk of our involving the cause of our Lord; then we must take every measure to put ourselves beyond suspicion of rebuke.

How natural it was for David to allude to the living Lord and his redeeming mercy (9). That surely may be the keynote of our lives. "I am He that liveth." "Yea, rather, that is risen again." And as for His redeeming grace, shall it not be the theme of our songs as long as life and immortality endure? Whatever be the adversity through which you are passing now, be sure that, if you will be patient and trustful, and do not fret yourself in any wise to do evil, the time will come when you will be able to look back on it, as often you can look back on a fog, or a mist, or a wood from the clearing where you stand, and then you will be able to say with David, "The Lord redeemed me from all adversity."

MONDAY, JANUARY 16.—2 SAMUEL V.

All the weary years of waiting were forgotten on that glad day, when the people came of their own accord to David, and made him king. How glad he must have been that he had done nothing to hasten by unrighteous actions of his own that consummation. When God has promised thee aught, leave Him to accomplish it, and in the meanwhile, let thy soul be as a weaned child, as a child weaned from its mother. Never forget that the minds of men are absolutely at the disposal of God.

Let us learn how absolutely blessed and happy they are, who rely wholly on God. He makes us great in power and influence, when we have so learnt the lessons of adversity, that He can do it without injuring the tone of our inner life. And our safety and victory are sure when we can say that the Lord, the God of hosts, is with us. Then, as event succeeds to event, like views cast on a screen, we shall come to perceive that the Lord has purposed to bless others by our means, and that all our possessions are entrusted to us, not for ourselves, but for his people's sake. Oh that we could acquire the art of counting all we have as only ours in trust for others!

Jesus has a claim to be King over united hearts, because of our kinship with him, His achievements, and the Divine promises (1-4); but when He is enthroned, it will only be the commencement of new conflicts, in all of which He will surely deliver us.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 17.—2 SAMUEL VI.

It is very important to do right things in the right way, that is in God's way. Many great and good works have been sadly marred by the want of obedience to precise instruction. It was perfectly right and legitimate for David to bring up the Ark from the neglect to which it had been consigned since the Philistines had sent it back; but it was a sad mistake to consult the mighty men of Israel, or to follow the example set by the Philistines in the mode of its conveyance. There was a definite instruction in the Levitical law, which had never been superseded, and David had no right to substitute the new cart for the shoulders of living men (Num. vii. 9; 1 Chron. xv. 12-15).

It is not enough to attempt to do a right and good thing: we must wait on God, searching his word, trusting Him for direction, refusing to lean on our own understanding, or merely human precedent. Religious enthusiasm can never take the place of single-hearted practical obedience, doing exactly as we are told.

The ark which was the death of Uzzah was blessing to Obededom and his house. There is no cause to fear, if only we obey the laws of behaviour which God Himself has indicated. Approach Him apart from Jesus, and He is a consuming fire; come to Him in Christ, and He is as the genial summer sunshine.

The Church, like the ark of God, needs no human hand to steady it, as though it dreaded aught from man. God will interpose for his own great Name's sake.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18.—2 SAMUEL VII

It is out of the restful heart that the noblest projects proceed. Mary, who sat at Jesus' feet, broke the alabaster box on his sacred person, to anoint Him for his burial. When David had rest, he spoke about the building of the temple. The tranquil lake reflects more of the solemn pomp of heaven than the rushing stream. Prosperity had not injured David, when he spoke thus. When we are prosperous let us always consider how to use our opportunities to promote the well-being of the Church of Christ and the welfare of man.

The intention of David was accepted for the deed, and there fell to his share such a volume of exceeding great and precious promises as to startle him! Ah! my soul, thy God is quick to notice thy smallest yearnings to honour Him, and will reward beyond all that thou canst ask or think. But when God has passed his word of promise, let us go in to sit before Him, as if to revel in all the good things that He has unfolded before the eyes of our soul, and as we do so, let us claim that He should do as He has said. It is not enough for God to promise. We must claim the fulfilment of his word, and then we may calmly and joyfully reckon that it will be even so (29).

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19.—2 SAMUEL VIII.

What a bridle is to a horse, so was Metheg to the land of Philistia (margin, 1 Chron. xviii. 1). But David took it, so that the Philistines were reduced to servitude. So with the Moabites, and the Syrians. There may be some errors in these numbers, but there is no doubt as to the greatness of the victories achieved by the warrior king. "The Lord gave him victory, whithersoever he went" (6 and 14). Notice that victory against the Lord's foes and ours is a gift, to be claimed by faith. Do not let it be a matter of doubt with thee, whether or not thou shalt succeed. That is already assured. Thy God hath commanded thy strength. As we follow in his triumphal train, we go from strength to strength, from victory to victory. Only be sure to dedicate the spoils of war to God. Count them his, and use them for his service (11). Surely there was a prophecy of the formation of the Church out of Gentile materials, as well as Jewish, in the fact that the spoils of the surrounding peoples went to the building of the temple. When we are most eager in prosecuting the wars of the Lord, let us not be careless of home administration. Here, too, David sets us an example (15). The culture of our hearts should proceed side by side with our Christian activities.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 20.—2 SAMUEL IX.

Like Mephibosheth, we are the children of an apostate race, by nature children of wrath, sprung from the hating and hateful family of Saul. We have no beauty or attractions to merit the favour of the king. As for obedience, we are lame on both our feet. The thought of being admitted to the royal palace had probably never occurred to this lame scion of a fallen household in his wildest dreams. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." "What is thy servant, that thou shouldest look upon such a dead dog as I am?" "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord." But Mephibosheth had been included in the covenant. He may have been altogether ignorant of it, but David could never forget it (1 Sam. xx. 14-16). And the son inherited in the affection with which the father had been loved by David. So do we enjoy the results of that covenant entered into between the Father and the Son. We are accepted and loved in Him, chosen in Him before the world began, and joint heirs with Him in his glory. Though he had no claim on David of his own, he was admitted to sit at the royal table, to inherit all that his grandfather had forfeited, and to be treated as one of the king's sons. Here I see myself, as Thou hast blessed me, oh my Father, with all spiritual blessings in my Saviour; but why it is, I cannot understand, and shall not, in all the golden time that is to be.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21.—2 SAMUEL X.

It is said that Nahash had sheltered David's family in times of trouble, hence this embassage of consolation to his son. The insult offered David through his ambassadors was an extremely gross one, and reminds us of the way in which men insult God in their treatment of his faithful servants. In his preparations for the fight, Joab mentions two possibilities which were more or less probable, but he says nothing of a third, that he and Abishai might both be defeated. This does not seem to have occurred to him. He did not expect defeat. And when we are engaged in God's work, and in fighting his battles, we should count on victory. Ah, brother, let us be of good cheer and play the man. Quit yourselves like men; be strong; yea, be strong. And since we have neither wisdom nor might of our own, let us rely on the Lord to do what seemeth Him good.

The spirit of the New Testament is distinguished from that of the Old, in its refusal to avenge insult and injury. This may be left to the hand of God: we are not to be trusted with the sword of judgment. But He will recompense. The maledictions of the Psalms may all be read as prophecies of the evils with which God will reward the proud doer the persecutor and profane, the tyrant and oppressor Oh, rest in the Lord, trust in Him, be still.

"God hears thy sighs and counts thy tears—
He shall lift up thy head."

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JANUARY 22.

JOSHUA THE HIGH PRIEST, Zech. iii. 1—10.

GOLDEN TEXT, Heb. iv. 14.

ZECHARIAH, who was priest as well as prophet (i. 1 with Neh. xii. 16), was contemporary with Haggai. To the prophesying of these two men the success of the second attempt to build the Temple is due (Ezra vi. 14). The visions, of which this lesson is one, were given on the 24th day of the 11th month, corresponding to our February and March, just five months after the work of building the Temple was recommenced (Hag. i. 15; Zech. i. 7).

The design of this vision was to encourage the people. Perhaps the fear of the most devout among them took this form:—For their sins God had driven them into captivity and had suffered their city to be destroyed, and their Temple to be demolished. Had He not just reason for being displeased with them still (Hag. i. 3-11)? Of what use was it to build a Temple for a people who had forfeited God's favour? Is there not the same reason for rejection now as before? The vision is God's answer to that fear. Joshua represents the whole nation. The work done for him is done in effect for all. The complete fulfilment of the prophecy in verse 10 is yet future.

JOSHUA (1, 3). His priestly calling fitly represented the nation, whose chief glory was in being set apart as a holy nation unto the Lord. See how true this is of our calling, too (1 Pet. ii. 5). Priestly service is not committed to a special order of men, but is the privilege of every believer. His position is also significant. Where should a priest be but in the presence of Him to whom he ministers? See Deut. x. 8; 2 Chron. xxix. 11. "Before the Lord" should now be true of us everywhere. No consecrated spot of earth is more fitted for priestly service than another. Live before the Lord, ministering to Him, and make every duty an act of worship, every meal a feast unto the Lord, and every place to be holy ground. His filthy garments (3) represented the people's true character before God. How could God accept service from a people thus defiled? They must "be clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

SATAN (1, 2) gives yet a darker hue to this picture. His name means adversary (margin). He is the same who has opposed God and his people from the first. Neither innocent Adam (Gen. iii. 1), nor righteous Job (Job i. 8), nor the Son of God Himself (Matt. iv. 1), nor any of his people (1 Pet. v. 8, 9) escape his attacks. Banishment from the favour of God has only confirmed his obstinate rebellion against Him. His work was to resist, to accuse, to denounce Joshua (1) The filthy garments with which Joshua was covered gave Satan his power. His charges were true. How little do men think that the same Satan who entices and allures them into sin will yet appear in their most solemn moments to accuse them! Whatever garb he wears, regard him as only an adversary.

THE ANGEL OF THE LORD (1) is the speaker in verses 2 and 4. There is no mistaking whom He represents. He is the Advocate who undertakes Joshua's cause, and ours too. Joshua could say nothing, for the filthy garments condemned him. The Angel of the Covenant, who is also "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," can alone deal with such a case. Note his rebuke. (2) It is not addressed to Satan directly, but to the Lord. The throne from whence Satan demanded righteous judgment upon Joshua and his people becomes the source of Satan's rebuke. Two facts are mentioned. (1) God's choice of his people. He foresaw their sin when He made choice of them, so was not likely to cast them off because of it now. (2) The work already done. They had been brands in the fire. God had not plucked them out in order to put them into the flame again.

The Angel's work upon Joshua (4, 5). The double work represented the removal of sin, and the being clothed with garments of salvation (Isa. lxi. 10). Everything is done for Joshua. The work of cleansing and reclothing is out of his power entirely. Compare what was done for the prodigal (Luke xv. 22). "The fair mitre" (5) is described in Exod. xxviii. 36, 38. It was, on the one hand, a testimony to the holiness of God, and, on the other, to the unholiness of man's best service. It was God's provision for the iniquity of our holy things.

The command (6, 7). Everything done hitherto refers to Joshua's standing before God. This word refers to his walk. Every man whose sin is put away will give evidence of it in his obedience to the Divine Word.

A promise for the future (8—10). "The branch" (see Isa. iv. 2; xi. 1); "the stone" (9) is explained by other Scriptures as our Lord Himself (Isa. xxviii. 16; Eph. ii. 20, 21). If the "seven eyes" are in the stone they are explained in Rev. v. 6 as the seven Spirits of God. In Christ was the sevenfold fulness of the Spirit's power.

Andrew Alexander Bonar.

REMINISCENCES BY A FRIEND.

I do not propose to attempt anything in the way of a biographical statement, or to deal with the external facts of Dr. Bonar's life, but to jot down two or three incidents connected with his career as illustrative to some extent of his character, if I may do so in a free and unconventional manner. Many are beginning, perhaps for the first time, to realise the uniqueness of the figure and personality which has been so suddenly removed. We hear that in Glasgow the portraits, which have long filled the shop windows, have suddenly all been sold off, and the new demand can hardly be supplied. Perhaps the very quietness and restfulness of this dear old man, have allowed us all to become somewhat insensible to his noteworthy and almost historic character and position.

It is nearly forty years since I was first in the way of hearing about him. He was then the minister of a country congregation in a remote district, and was accustomed to ride about on a white pony. He had been for some years colleague of a somewhat peculiar old gentleman belonging to the extreme moderate school in the Presbyterian Church. Not very long since he told me that a member of that gentleman's family asked him the question, "Do all you young men preach that it is necessary for people to be converted, or is it just yourself?" To which he answered, "Oh, every one of us preaches what the Word says—that it is needful for all to be born again."

The white pony referred to was connected with a singular story which used to be told in the country district. It was to the effect that a Perthshire farmer met Mr. Bonar one morning, and in the broadest Doric asked him, "You'll be gaun to Pairth the daay, Mister Bonear?" And the answer was (in the peculiar intoning and musical voice which his friends well remember), "No, I'm going to Jerusalem." He was, in fact, on his way to that most interesting mission to the Jews in Palestine, of which the record, dated May 2, 1842, now lies before me.

He went to the parish of Collace in the year 1838; in 1839 the mission of inquiry left for Palestine. In 1843 his colleague Mr. McCheyne died, and he himself became a minister of the Free Church of Scotland.

The Jewish Mission party consisted of Dr. Keith, afterwards well-known by his books on prophecy; Dr. Black, who became a Free Church professor; Mr. McCheyne, and Mr. Bonar. The story of the mission was written, I believe, entirely or nearly so, by Dr. Bonar, and in the original edition was illustrated by very interesting drawings from the pencil of Mr. McCheyne, which fact, I believe, is not generally known, but for which I have Dr. Bonar's authority. Mr. McCheyne was also the author of many beautiful hymns, some of which still hold their place in public worship.

I have often talked over the subject of McCheyne with his biographer, and some of the things said about him are perhaps worth noting. It was an unfailing source of wonder to Dr. Bonar to think of his old friend, whom he had parted with as a youth, having been, as he said once, "Already forty years in glory," and, as he said lately, "already fifty years," there! He led me to think that he had not had all McCheyne's papers in his possession, and that those which he had were chiefly the correspondence with himself and a few friends. He also, in answer to inquiries from me, stated that McCheyne had been engaged in marriage for a year or two before his death. As none of his letters to the lady in question, or any extracts from them, have ever been printed, I think it is still possible that at some future date, when all those concerned are no longer alive, some portions at least of this correspondence may see the light.

I believe that some years ago an Edinburgh newspaper contained letters on the subject of the profits accruing from Dr. Bonar's "Life of McCheyne." These profits, from a book which has been reprinted perhaps oftener than any other book on spiritual things in our day, must have been very great indeed. Dr. Bonar received a comparatively small sum, and had, I think, no interest whatever in the copyright, which was secured originally by some remaining members of the McCheyne family, and was sold by their representatives some years ago to an Edinburgh publisher.

With reference to McCheyne's character, I once ventured to say to Dr. Bonar that there were two things that struck me much. The first was the remarkably rapid growth of saintliness in him, reminding one a little of Jonah's gourd. His answer was, "Oh, yes, that was undoubtedly the most remarkable characteristic of my dear friend." The other question I had more difficulty in putting, as it might be supposed to indicate some want in his experience, but I was anxious to ascertain whether there was any ground for the impression I had formed. I said that occasionally, especially in the latter part of his life, I thought there was observable a little dolefulness of tone, as if there had been a lack of the spirit of victory. I was much surprised at the answer, "Oh, you know, McCheyne was subject to seasons of great depression and low spirits; possibly from the lack of bodily health." Of course, it must be understood that I am not giving the very words that Dr. Bonar used, and can only repeat the impression given after some years.

But I must not forget that I am writing not about McCheyne, but about his friend and biographer. Dr. Bonar was born in May, 1810. He was licensed, if I mistake not, at the end of 1837. I think he once told me that he was converted about the age of twenty, but I cannot remember any special circumstances connected with it. For a few months he visited in a district in Edinburgh in connection with the students' Missionary Society, and was afterwards for a short time assistant to Dr. Candlish in St. George's Church. In the Divinity Hall his Professor was Dr. Chalmers, and there was a small circle of like-minded students who sat on the same benches, the names of many of whom have since been widely known. They included three Bonars, McCheyne, and Dr. Somerville. The quickening influence of Dr. Chalmers was immense, but Dr. Bonar has more than once indicated to me that the personal affection with which Dr. Chalmers inspired his students was his most outstanding remembrance of the great man. It was at this time that he, and most of his companions, adopted those views on the Second Coming of the Lord which have been one of the characteristic notes of his preaching. The only one of the band who did not adopt them was Somerville, and he continued to oppose them to the end.

Dr. Bonar told me that what led them to adopt these views was the series of lectures delivered by Edward Irving in St. Cuthbert's Church, Edinburgh, during the sitting of the General Assembly at the early hour of 7 a.m. He said that three or four of them went up to Dr. Chalmers to ask his opinion and advice. The answer which the Professor gave was to the effect that he had not been able to see this truth himself; that the young men had got more light than he had, but (he said) "Go on, gentlemen; proceed in your study of the Word; this thing will do you no manner of harm." It was nearly twenty years after this that Dr. Chalmers himself accepted the teaching concerning which he spoke to these young students that day.

Dr. Bonar early attained to great maturity of judgment, and his Book on "Leviticus" (of which I have a first edition) shows great care and scholarship. He was not, however, in these days anything of a popular preacher; at least, that was the report which I frequently used to hear—rather the reverse. It was, therefore, the more remarkable that he gave up his position in the country to undertake the very difficult work of raising up a congregation from some of the non-church-going lanes in the west of Glasgow. This is one of the most striking incidents in his life, and it has been rather forgotten, owing to the fact that gradually many of the general Glasgow public rallied round him, and that the Finnieston congregation is no longer believed to represent a church gathered from the non-churchgoing. Into this work of reclaiming for the Lord those who had fallen away, he threw himself with great enthusiasm—preaching in the street before his old church in Finnieston regularly, and visiting from door to door. Street preaching indeed he continued occasionally almost to the end.

For a long time, notwithstanding his reputation as the biographer of McCheyne, he continued to live a good deal in the shade. His views of prophecy were, in Scotland at least, those of a very small minority, and he was regarded as one of a band of men who were extreme, almost fanatical, and unsafe. He, on the other hand, accepted the position, and for a time was more or less a Protestant, in the sense of protesting against prevailing error. It was the first visit of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey which, more than anything, brought him out of this comparative retirement, and made the last years of his life the most public and by far the most fruitful of his spoken ministry. In every way he mellowed, ripened, and waxed youthful in heart. There was in him a constant play of quiet humour, sometimes almost of fun.

In public, I used to be greatly struck by his tone in prayer. It was that of the deepest reverence, of one who had "seen" and had been struck with life-long awe. But he had had no "peculiar" experiences. I remember, when we had been together at a meeting, and a good deal had been said of visions, he told me afterwards that he had never known anything of the sort. Perhaps this had some connection with the interest he had in a promise of the latter, which he said he never could understand: "Your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams!" This was the more remarkable, as one of his greatest powers was that of imagination. Somebody has said that he was as much a poet as his brother Horatius, only he always wrote his poetry in prose. Anyone who has seen a little address (I do not remember its name) which he puts into the form of a series of counsels to "The angel of the Church in Finnieston," will appreciate that remark.

He was full of questions about things in the Bible, which used to delight Mr. Moody. He once asked me how I could account for the absence of Mary and Martha from the cross and from the sepulchre. And again, what meaning I could put on the verse at the end of Job, "Ye have not spoken of Me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath." He asked some of us to explain how it was that though the Bible was full of the palm tree, yet the fruit of the tree was never mentioned. When I answered that it was because the climate of Palestine was not hot enough to make the palm tree bear fruit, he said it looked like the true answer, but that he was rather sorry, for it spoiled one of his best sermons. He once said that he had no doubt Joseph of Arimathea had been brought to Christ through Nicodemus talking to him as he left a Sanhedrim meeting; and, again, that when Paul went up to Jerusalem and saw Peter, the older apostle had taken the younger round to all the places where the Lord had been wont to go, saying, "Here He stood—and there He knelt—and there He was crucified—and there He was buried!"

Of the movement for a special teaching of holiness (of which he became latterly a great supporter) he was at first a little shy. One of his relatives had, at an early stage of the Keswick movement, become involved in newspaper controversy in some of the expressions, not always happy, and probably not always correct, which were then employed. When the Glasgow meetings were begun, about ten years ago, a friend pointed out to Dr. Bonar the great responsibility which would rest on him, either to countenance or oppose the movement. It was a difficult position. He resolved to be present, but at first took no part. It was, I think, two years before he was asked to open one of the meetings with prayer. At length, step by step, he drew closer; then became a member of committee; and then spoke for two or three years at Glasgow, and last year at Bridge of Allan. Perhaps the most striking of those addresses given by him was on "How far may a Believer go in Holiness?" which was, I think, published in tract form.

But I have already trespassed on the patience of your readers, and can only add an allusion to the last scene of all. Monday, and especially Tuesday, December 26 and 27, were dark days of frost and fog. Wednesday, the 28th, was snowy and cold, but Dr. Bonar went out to his prayer meeting, and took part in it with his colleague. During the evening he dropped a remark which led to the belief that he had felt the cold of the two previous days. Next morning he was awake and up (whether he had mistaken the time or not) a little too early. Afterwards he felt cold and went back to bed. All day he was tired and weak. Next day, Friday, he lay in bed tired, not thinking he was very ill; grieving rather that he would not be able to preach on the Lord's Day to come. In the evening he was "sleepy," wished to be allowed to sleep; did sleep—and awoke in heaven!

SUNDAY CLOSING IN NORFOLK.—A canvass recently taken in Stalham, Norfolk, with regard to the Sunday closing of public-houses resulted in a majority of 128 in favour of closing. Against closing there were but twelve votes.

MR. HARRY S. PRESCOTT,

MISSIONARY TO THE BLIND, NEW SOUTH WALES.

IF an authentic record could be made of the services that have been rendered to humanity by those deprived of their natural sight, it would prove one of the most interesting and encouraging chapters of achievement that has ever been been penned. Such names as Fawcett, Armitage, Campbell, and Moon rise at once before the mental vision, as those who, while themselves shut out from the light of day, have brought the light of comfort and happiness, and the joys of a useful life, to many of their afflicted fellow creatures. The friend whose life and work we briefly outline in this sketch is another example worthy to be placed alongside of those we have mentioned. He has done a work at the Antipodes on behalf of the poor blind of that region that deserves a wide publicity in this the land of his nativity.

HARRY SHOOBRIDGE PRESCOTT is a native of Staplehurst, Kent. He began active life in the humble but honourable rôle of a bricklayer's labourer. Having lost the use of one eye, he thought to better his prospects by emigrating. After some experiences in America, first as navvy and then as policeman, he found his way to New Zealand. There, while a member of the police force, he became totally blind, and was the inmate of a hospital for nearly a year.

Through the suggestion of a hospital visitor he learned to read from the raised characters for the blind. He might then have said with truth, like the Psalmist, "It was good for me that I was afflicted," for his reading of the Scriptures and of "Grace and Truth," in the hospital was the means of letting the light of heaven and of conscious salvation into his soul. Gaining admission to the Melbourne Institute for the Blind, he tried to qualify for an organist's place, but he discovered that his gifts did not lie in that direction. Neither had he physical health sufficient to take up successfully the trade of basket-making.

Then occurred an incident which proved to be Heaven's finger-post, pointing the way to his life's vocation. While he was reading from the Acts of the Apostles one Sunday afternoon, in the Institute, a lame blind lad stumbled against him as he groped his way along by the wall. Learning who he was, the boy asked him to read to him. The sound of the reader's voice attracted others, and thus began a regular Sunday reading class conducted by Mr. Prescott for both sexes. No proper religious teaching, it appears, had been provided at that time for the inmates of the Institute, and these Bible readings, with a daily prayer-meeting which was started, were a means of saving and guiding grace to not a few of the blind. After Mr. Prescott left the institution the work was carried on by another inmate, with the result that many have been brought out of nature's darkness into the light and liberty of the Gospel.

As we have said, Mr. Prescott had now found his vocation; and with great perseverance and abundant growing success he has pursued it to this day. An interview with a blind Englishman, who had by the help of a trained dog perambulated a great part of the Colony, instructing the blind, led our friend to enter on similar work. He proceeded to Sydney in 1877 and began operations, being encouraged by the sympathy and promised support of Dean Cowper, of that city. As he has himself expressed it, "In a strange city, going out with my stick, by inquiring and being led by God's spirit, I commenced searching out the destitute blind and helping them."

The value of his work soon began to be recognised, and a committee was formed to further it. His operations extended to other parts of the colony; steamboat and railway companies gave him free passes everywhere; and when he revisited England in 1886 he was able to say that he had travelled 60,000 miles seeking out, teaching, evangelising, and otherwise helping his blind brethren and sisters. Before leaving the colony on this home visit with his wife a farewell meeting was held, presided over by the then Governor, Lord Carrington, and he received an address from his blind charges, testifying to the character and worth of their teacher. The mission had by that time been successfully extended to South Australia and Queensland. In addition to teaching the blind to read, and supplying them with good literature, the mission embraced industrial work for those able to earn a livelihood, and a benevolent fund for the helpless and indigent. The Australian Government had so far appreciated the value of the mission as to subsidise it by giving an equal amount to that subscribed by the public.

The part taken in this good work by Mrs. Prescott has been almost equal in importance to that borne by her husband. Some years after he had entered on his tours of visitation throughout the colony, Mrs. Prescott was impressed with the need of an institution into which could be gathered such blind women as were uncared for. A Home was in existence for juvenile and adult male blind, but none for women. She secured a house, got it furnished, and placed in it a few of her sightless sisters. She gathered a ladies' committee, with whose co-operation she has since carried on and developed the work, all the effort on her part, including the secretaryship, being purely voluntary and honorary. The accommodation of an ordinary dwelling-house soon became inadequate, and Mrs. Prescott began a building fund. This appeal was so heartily responded to that in 1890 a plot of three acres in the Sydney suburb of Strathfield was bought on which to erect an Industrial Home for Blind Women. The Legislative Assembly very generously refunded the purchase-money, £1650, which went to swell the building fund. The Home was duly erected at a cost of £8595. The memorial stone was laid by Lady Jersey, wife of the Governor-General, in March, 1891, and his Excellency was also present to give the undertaking his benediction and sympathetic help. The new home is a spacious, well-designed structure, having accommodation for some fifty inmates. In addition to the general oversight of this part of the work, Mrs. Prescott raises the funds for its maintenance and acts as honorary teacher of the inmates. Thus do this Christian couple lay out their lives for the good of those who are bereft of the blessing of vision.

The new home at Strathfield forms a centre for the whole of the work. Mr. Prescott's time is fully engaged in connection with the Home Teaching Society. Over a hundred widely-scattered places are visited year by year, and nearly three hundred blind throughout the colony are the objects of the Society's care. It is interesting to note that those who are thus afflicted represented nearly seventy different callings in life. The avenues for handiwork open to the blind are, of course, restricted, but it is stated in Mr. Prescott's report that over twenty different occupations are followed by those earning wages.

The work of visitation is found to be full of very varied and pathetic interest. A number of teachers, themselves blind, are employed to visit their afflicted fellows in their own homes. They are taught to read, and supplied with books printed in the Moon or Braille type, great attention being also paid to their spiritual welfare. Various branches of industry are taught, so that they may contribute as far as possible to their own support. One remarkable case may be cited from a letter written by Mr. Prescott to a friend in England:—

K—— G——, aged thirty-five, is without exception the brightest Christian character I have ever met. She has been confined to her bed for fifteen years, is blind and paralysed, has lost the senses of touch and speech, but communicates her thoughts by means of writing and signs. She tells me that my visits do her good, but I never call upon her without feeling that her example is a lesson of fortitude and resignation that we all may profit by. When asked if she has any pain she replied, "It is not pain; it is torture." Yet she is so patient, simply waiting the summons, "Come up higher."

The letter from which this extract is taken is neatly and correctly type-written; for Mr. Prescott has learned to use the typewriter, by which he is able greatly to facilitate his work, and to keep up intercourse with the outer and distant world. He has commenced to edit a quarterly magazine for the blind, printed in the Braille type, and consisting exclusively of matter embossed by blind contributors. Its first issue contained a hundred pages. He has recently taught seven other blind persons to use the typewriter which he has found so invaluable for himself.

DEMAS.

2 Tim. iv. 10.

Room in thy heart for the blithe and the gay,
Time for the concert, the ball, and the play,
Arms for the gifts that descend with each day,
But what hast thou done with thy God?

Covering losses by making amends;
Meeting each day new companions and friends;
(Business or pleasure, they each have their ends),
Yet what hast thou wrought for thy God?

Craving possessions of silver and gold;
Eager the smile of the world to behold!
Hugging its wealth till thy heart has grown old,
Ah! what hast thou thought of thy God?

Spending long years in the struggle for fame;
Ever desiring to make thee a name!
Oh! that thou knewest how poor, empty, vain
Is the soul that forsaketh its God!

Rowland Sturt.

MR. C. H. YATMAN, an evangelist who has done good work in the States, has undertaken the charge of a new work in New York, on the lines of our own special services in theatres and music halls.

A PILGRIMAGE TO JERUSALEM.—Dr. Lunn and Mr. Woolrych Perowne have organised a Reunion Pilgrimage to Jerusalem, which promises to be of considerable interest. Archdeacon Farrar, who made a special study of the Holy Land, preparatory to writing his great work, "The Life of Christ," will deliver lectures to the pilgrims at Jerusalem and other centres. The pilgrims will visit Rome on their outward journey and will return by Athens, paying a visit to Egypt and the Pyramids in the course of the pilgrimage. They will thus cover all the most important centres of Scripture history.

Miss Willard's Welcome.

The historic walls of Exeter Hall have witnessed many an inspiring and memorable scene. The meeting of last Monday evening, we think, will be marked with a red letter in the memory even of those who are accustomed to attend such gatherings. The anxiety shown to be present on the occasion was quite phenomenal, and all reserved seat tickets were eagerly secured. This was scarcely to be wondered at, in view of the extraordinary galaxy of speaking talent that had agreed to take the platform and do honour to our illustrious guest. The large hall, of course, was hopelessly inadequate to admit all those who surged to the entrances some time before the hour of commencing. An overflow in the lower hall was extemporised, and that, too, was packed by a crowd that must have had long to wait before its patience was rewarded by the appearance of Miss Willard herself. Other speakers filled up the waiting hours.

In the great hall, Lady Somerset, who presided, began the speaking, in her smooth and silvery accents, by describing the many and varied circles in which the name of Frances Willard is loved and honoured. She has made the world wider for women, and happier for humanity. "The strong and sunny spirit" of Miss Willard's mother was referred to by her ladyship, and her influence in infusing into her daughter the enthusiasm of humanity. The crucial test of that daughter's life was the day when she relinquished a brilliant scholastic career, and went forth to do battle with the saloon, the great foe of the home. In pursuing her life work she has given up the sweet sequestered shelter of home, and has learnt that diviner motherhood that bids her take to her heart orphaned humanity. This short address of welcome given by Lady Somerset was itself a prose poem of the choicest kind.

Canon Wilberforce's speech was interrupted in its commencement by some excitement in the gallery, through the immense crowd outside, and the fainting of a lady who could not be removed. Silence being restored, the eloquent Canon proceeded to say that five minutes was a ridiculously little bit of time in which to give a welcome to the great representative of American reform. Love of the race, and the detestation of all that is detrimental to its interests, he looked on as the one binding principle that nerves the heart and hand of reformers in England and America. It is the secret of such a magnificent demonstration. Speaking of Miss Willard herself, the Canon quoted the words of the late poet Whittier, written to place under her bust in Willard Hall:—

She saw the power of banded ill,
But knew that love was stronger still;
And organised for doing good
The world's united womanhood.

An unquenchable hope, the golden key of love, and self-sacrificing activity have been the three great keynotes of her life and work. A strenuous appeal for action in laying the axe at the root of the upas-tree of drink, coupled with a reference to Mr. Gladstone, evoked tempestuous applause.

As representing the Methodist Churches of Britain, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse expressed the great indebtedness of England to America in the matter of temperance reform, and especially in the labours of Miss Willard. The churches are only just waking up to the fact of women's great power and influence in advancing this question. If women could have a voice and a vote, the liquor traffic would speedily be doomed. We want a white heat of enthusiasm just now, in order to secure the reform that we so much need in limiting the power of the drink evil.

That "daughter of the Ganges," Miss Soondera Powar, in greeting the "daughter of the Mississippi," called for justice to India in the matter of the opium trade. She was so moved in spirit as to the burdens and sorrows of her own people, that she quite forgot to refer to the guest of the evening.

A song of hope from Mme. Antoinette Sterling was a pleasing interlude. Cablegrams from leading friends in America were read.

After a very flattering introduction from the president, Mr. J. G. Woolley, in a speech composed of mingled humour and highly eloquent sentiment, told something of the work of American women "for home and God and fatherland." A great cheer awaited him when he told that no woman serves grog behind a bar in all his country, and that such a thing has been forbidden by law. Would to God (our hearts exclaim) an Englishman could say the same thing.

Letters of greeting from many representative men and women throughout Great Britain to Miss Willard were presented by Lady Somerset, who read out the long list of the writers amid a running fire of cheers.

After a song from the choir, the pathetic, pleading voice of Mrs. Ormiston Chant was heard joining in the chorus of heartfelt welcome. She craved for women the power to influence by vote the legislation that so closely affects their homes and happiness.

As a representative of "that bright and intellectual body the Congregationalists," Mr. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, echoed the remarks of Mr. Pearse as to this being essentially a woman's movement. He felt assured that it would eventually touch the co-ordinate questions of purity and peace, and the torpid heart of man would be roused and moved to fall into line.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth was unhappily unable to be present; but Mr. W. T. Stead was rapturously applauded as he stepped to the front. He described Miss Willard as "a shuttle in the roaring loom of time which is weaving into one web the English-speaking people of the world." He hoped she would spur us up on this side of the sea to do our duty. As an Englishman he was ashamed to see Miss Willard there. We have not led the way in this good work, as the mother country ought to have done. Where have we in London anything approaching to the Women's Temple in Chicago? Let us not rest till we have reared in old England (possibly on the site of the Westminster Aquarium, that Babylonian Temple of desecrated womanhood) a Woman's Temple which should be a centre of women's work throughout the land, and from which will go out waves of influence for temperance, for purity, and for justice.

A letter full of sympathetic interest from Alderman Ben Tillett was read in his unavoidable absence. The mass of the workers were, however, represented by Mrs. Hicks, who welcomed the guest of the evening because of what her movement had done and would do for toilers of her sex.

Mr. Raper, "the Nestor of the U.K. Alliance," said he had known Miss Willard since she was a child in the temperance movement. He had then predicted her future usefulness and power, and now he plumed himself on his prophetic prescience. He believed we were on the eve of great doings on behalf of temperance.

A number of illuminated addresses from various temperance associations were formally presented to Miss Willard, with some suitable words from the eloquent president. "All England greets New England's daughter," was the graceful presidential sentence with which Miss Willard was at last brought to her feet, amid clapping of hands and waving of handkerchiefs.

Miss Willard, with a fine stroke of humour, began her speech by a reference to the spirit of amity that prevailed, with the vegetarians on one side and the butchers on the other among those who had sent greetings. With firm steady voice, and in virile speech, with many a sly touch of wit, she responded to the hearty words of welcome that had been showered upon her. Some delightful early reminiscences greatly charmed the auditors. Her speech was not of a reportable nature in the way of summary, as it lightly touched on so many points. She shows herself remarkably at home on the platform, as if she can think while she speaks with the most unrestricted freedom. She said she believed in the "do everything" policy. Custom, ignorance, legislation, party feeling, and other forces are against this great reform, but each and all must be met and fought and conquered. If a committee had been appointed to build the ark, it would have been on the stocks yet. "God" and "humanity," she said in closing, are the two great words of the language.

It was now close on ten o'clock, but there were yet to come another song from Mme. Sterling and the votes of thanks before the great and thoroughly enthused assembly broke up. The platform was beautifully decorated with evergreens and flowers.

Evangelising in the Caucasus.

JOURNAL OF ISAJ STEPHANJAN, AN ARMENIAN EVANGELIST.

The next two days the Tartars were very angry with me, and would not speak to me nor sell me anything, so I was obliged to soak in water the old crusts of bread that remained of what I had brought from Baku and Wataga, to be able to eat them. So passed two days. The following day was Sunday; then I prayed earnestly that the Lord would either give me work to do in Saljan or send me away. I then went to the market. When I came to the booth of a Tartar the owner called me; I had talked with him several times before, but these last two days he had not spoken a word to me. Now he asked me if I was a Lutheran. "No," I answered. Then he began to describe the bad deeds of some Lutherans in Baku, which had given great offence. "Art thou an Armenian, a Russian, a Tartar? What art thou, then?" I answered, "I belong to the people who love Jesus." He inquired further, "What is thy mind that thou hast come the second time to Saljan?" "Ah, dear man," answered I, "it is not my mind, but the mind of Jesus, my Saviour: the mind of God's Son, who sends his servant to declare the good news to the poor people. He has sent me also to Saljan to make known that He loves you all very much, and that He died on the Cross for thy sins. Believe on his Name, and thou shalt be saved and delivered from hell and from Mahomet." "What has Mahomet done to me?" "He has given thee the mind of Satan, has allowed thee to do all manner of evil, and then told thee, if thou wash thyself and call on the name of Mahomet thou wilt be free. But God punishes every sin," etc., etc. So I spoke to him for more than an hour. Then he asked where I dwelt, and wished to visit me when it was dark. In the evening the man really came to me. He could read very well. I opened my books and, by God's help, I showed him that there is only one Name given in heaven and on earth; and he believed in this precious Name.

I told him that nobody would sell me anything. He brought me food every evening, and we read and prayed together. He thanked God that He had opened his eyes, and that he now sees that there is no salvation to be found except in Jesus, and that Mahomet is a false prophet. In the evenings he brought other persons to me to hear the Gospel. This man is a Mollah and very highly respected. He talked to the people about me, and afterwards I was able to buy all I wanted and to speak to everybody. This Mollah Djavad begged me to remain in Saljan, but when I answered that I could not do that, he begged me to send some one; only not a Lutheran, but one who is filled with the Holy Ghost. He will assemble people to hear the Word of God. The doors are open, but the labourers are few.

Now I must tell you about another man, named Ahmed, a rich goldsmith. He came to see me, and we spoke for about three hours about the Truth. I said that in Jesus only is salvation. I proved this by the Koran. I showed him the places in the Koran, and said, "Go now to the Mollah, and tell him to read and explain this." "I do not want to go to the Mollah. I see quite clearly that we are in the wrong way, and that Mahomet and Ali were unbelievers, and that Jesus is God's Son and the Saviour of the world." When I wanted to take leave of him to go back to Baku, he was very sad, and said, "My eyes have only just been opened, and I wish to go to you very often and to hear much, and you will already depart."

There is a Tartar school in Saljan. It is the custom in these schools that every scholar brings his own book to the Mollah and reads in it. They have no common school-books, and as I have given many Gospels, thirteen scholars now read from the Gospel to the Mollah. Is not this a cause of rejoicing?

I will add a little circumstance that occurred. Some Tartars had accused me to the police master. On Oct. 24 policemen came to me and took me to the police master. He asked, "Where dost thou come from?" "From Ninu." "Hast thou a passport?" I gave him my passport. "What is thy name?" I say, "Stephanjan." "What business hast thou here in Saljan?" "You can see by my passport what is my trade." "Art thou come hither to work?" "No one has as yet given me any work, and I have done nothing. If you have any work, please give it me; I will faithfully do it and be thankful." "If thou wishest to work, why dost thou speak to the people?" I gave no answer. "Why dost thou not answer?" "I know that God has given us a tongue to praise Him, and to give answer, but you said to me, 'Why dost thou speak?' so I remained silent." He laughed and said, "I do not say that thou shouldest not answer me, but why dost thou speak to the people on religion?" "One must give a proper answer to every question. I see that there is no salvation anywhere to be found but in Jesus only; there is no other name given to man." The police master interrupted me, retained my passport, and said, "Go, and speak no more to the people. I will send for thee again." "No," said I, "if anyone asks of me the way of salvation, I will answer that in Jesus alone it is to be found."

October 31.—A policeman came and searched my dwelling, and found a Russian New Testament. I went with him to the police master. He took the book and asked me: "If thou canst neither read nor speak Russian, what is the meaning of thy having this book?" I answered, "There are families of only a few persons, but they have many seats; they use only a few, but they keep the others for their friends. Now, I also have friends who can read Russian, and when they come they read. If one must have many seats in one's house, how much more should one have in one's house the everlasting Word of God!" Then he said to me, "Give me this Book, I will keep it in my house." "With great pleasure," said I. He gave me the price of it (25 copecks), and said I might go free.

TWO FRENCH DYNAMITERS.

IN connection with the dynamite explosions, and the extradition of François, accused of having blown up the Café Véry, where Ravachol was captured, Colonel BOOTH-CLIBBORN sends us the following account of the conversion of Bonair, a personal friend of Ravachol, who was introduced into the Groupe Communiste Anarchiste de St. Etienne by that noted Anarchist. After a description of his initiation, the writer continues:—

As Bonair became more more and more fervent, he was counted by the companions as among the disciples militants, and Ravachol, of whom he was now the friend and confidant, entrusted him with the sale of the Révolté; he was soon to be seen in the streets and public places pushing the paper. There were many very energetic and intelligent young men in the group.

But other dynamiters had come to Saint Etienne; they were also revolutionists; and they waged war upon the woes and wrongs of society so desperately that they were organised as an Army. "Blood and Fire" was their motto; they also had their red-hot paper, and pushed its sale in the streets. They also had their nightly meetings in a small hall whose walls were decorated with placards and flags of yellow, red, and blue. They also had a many-barrelled revolver, whose truths were not only death-dealing to evil when discharged with the power of the Holy Ghost, but life-giving also. Bonair was invited to go to the Salvation Army meetings by a young workman he was himself trying to win over to the Anarchist doctrines. "I was very much struck," he writes, "by the air of sincerity about the Salvationists, by their energy, and the fact that they also were persecuted."

He found that the officers also were on foot in consequence of the awful evils in the world, but that their idea of the cause of these evils differed from that of the Anarchists, and their remedy was exactly the opposite. Bonair had long ago thrown Catholicism overboard with disgust, and the idea that the world might be saved by the heavenly dynamite of love, and by the soul-healing power of the Holy Ghost, seemed sweet and fresh; but the Anarchist views had penetrated his whole moral nature, and it was two months before he dared face the fact that this mighty revolution must take place in his heart and life. It was no easy matter to make that public change. Step by step the Kingdom of God gained ground in his soul, and the darkness was chased by the light. The first great wrench was to believe in the existence of God once more. The Anarchists had made him an infidel, as the necessary ground work to their other doctrines.

on his knees, the convicted soul fought this first great battle. He has vividly described to me the struggle with doubts and darkness. He sobbed and writhed on the floor. God did exist; he could believe it; but what an overwhelming conviction of sin this belief brought. It was awful. How terribly he had gone astray from the God of love.

Belief in God brought belief in sin; to believe in the existence and character of God and the existence and character of sin, was also to believe in the existence of a Saviour, and this Saviour must want to be his Saviour. He felt that he must take a true position before men as well as before God, and he decided to go that evening publicly to the penitent form in the meeting. He did so, and as light and peace burst in to take possession of his soul he felt that truly he had become a son of God. God's love to him had made him a son; in return, his love to God soon made him a soldier. He at once commenced to fight in the cause of salvation, and after a short time of trial was enrolled as a soldier and put in uniform.

Only once after he had commenced regularly to attend the Army meetings had he met Ravachol. It was a meeting held by Louise Michel. Ravachol, the organiser of the assembly, was very busy, and had only time to salute Bonair with a hearty, Bon jour, compagnon. But the parallel careers were beginning to diverge and divide, the one leading henceforth upwards and onwards into light, and life, and love; the other downwards and backwards into hatred, darkness, and death.

Ravachol, carrying his theories to their logical conclusion, studied and worked to prepare his explosives, just as Bonair in prayer and Bible study and Salvation work sought to possess the powers of the world to come and learn the explosive mysteries of godliness. Four terrible explosions following in quick succession spread terror and dismay in the French capital. The name of Ravachol was on every tongue. At last came his arrest and desperate resistance. With the greatest coolness he described in court how he had placed the infernal machines, lit the short fuse, stood in the street to see the awful explosion, and even watched among the excited crowd the work of rescue. He was a fervent advocate of propaganda by fact and act.

In this, again, he was on parallel lines with Bonair and the Salvation Army, who believe that one real conversion, which, like an explosion, shakes a neighbourhood and scatters dismay among worldly relatives and comfortable sinners,

IS WORTH A MULTITUDE OF SERMONS.

Bonair, consistent with his conversion, gave up a situation where he had been obliged to tell lies, and soon was to be seen selling our Salvation paper in the same places where he had formerly colported Anarchist literature.

He commenced to pay off his debts, and I have a letter before me in which he wrote at that time how glad he was of the special opportunity afforded by such debt-paying visits, of testifying for God. One of his creditors had changed his address, but Bonair persevered in his researches till he found him. From the very first he was gifted with remarkable courage, counting upon Divine power with childlike faith. "Once He asked of me something which was a terrible trial to flesh and blood," he said. "It seemed impossible, but He gave me his strength. Now, looking at his faithfulness which gave me victories in the past, I have confidence in the future. Blessed be God for ever for his power and love to me, amen." He wrote thus when offering himself for training as an officer after a year and a-half of hard fighting as a soldier. The difficulties of the work at Saint Etienne have ever been great, and he had been tried in the fire. Thus the beginning of 1892 saw these two former Saint Etienne companions both in Paris, serving their cause with ardour, but with means as widely different as the Antipodes.

The most frightful explosion of all, that of the Rue Clichy, occurred quite close to our Central Salvation Hall, where Captain Bonair led powerful meetings, with many souls at the penitent form, and where the dynamite of love burst asunder chains of sin and sorrow, and whirled souls from death to life and from darkness to light.

CHELSTON, TORQUAY.—The Chelston Evangelistic Mission, which is doing a good work among the working class population of that neighbourhood, has been favoured with a visit from Mr. Frank Cockrem, assistant secretary of the London Open-air Mission. On Lord's Day, Jan. 1, he gave two earnest and impressive Gospel addresses. On Monday he delivered the lecture on "The Broad and Narrow Way."

The Week of Prayer.

TUESDAY'S MEETINGS.

The subject to-day was prayer for the Church universal. At Cornhill, E.C., Rev. J. G. Train, addressing a numerous assemblage, pointed out that it is not so much necessary to plead the promise of the ascending Lord, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" (Acts i. 8), as to receive the blessing which God's grace offers. The promise has been fulfilled and the Spirit shed forth. It is more honouring to God to act on the promise than merely to plead it. Now, the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of energy, and there are few things more in antagonism to Him in believers than indolence. If the demonstration of the Spirit is to be witnessed in the Church, then all the members of the Body need to be more active in response to the promptings of the Holy Ghost. To be indolent is to grieve the Spirit, because it is opposed to the display of its energy and power. Holy Scripture is the fuel which feeds the fire of the Spirit; religious books will not take the place of the Word of God.

Having pointed out that the strength of the Church lies not so much in protesting as in attesting, the speaker referred to the hope of Christ's appearing, showing what an important place it occupies in the Epistles. It is implied that unless we look for his appearing we shall not be found living soberly, righteously, and godly (Tit. ii. 12, 13); also that we may come behind in some gift if we do not wait for the coming of our Lord (1 Cor. i. 7).

The second meeting was addressed by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, who based his remarks on Luke i. 73-75. "The oath which He sware to our father Abraham, that He would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve Him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before Him, all the days of our life." Directing attention to the high, and holy, and heavenly calling of believers, he quoted Gal. iii. 16, 29, to show that Christians, being the spiritual children of Abraham, have a right to that which was covenanted to Israel. The enemies from which we are to be delivered are:—Sin, the world, the devil, and death. Evangelical Christians are in the habit, when talking of salvation and deliverance, to confine it to justification. That, however, is only the preliminary part of salvation, which goes on to holiness and glory. When our sins are washed away, we start upon a conflict which, first of all, is against sin.

Proceeding to quote Rom. vi. 6, "Our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed," the speaker repudiated perfectionism, saying that he preached a perfect Saviour, and knew nothing about a perfect sinner. The Greek verb rendered "destroyed" is katargein, and the meaning is, that the moral force of the body of sin might be destroyed. The power of sin, which lies as a moral force against us, has been rendered inoperative, and has been put away in the person of Jesus Christ. Passing on, after a remark upon the victory of Christ over the world and the devil, Mr. Webb-Peploe quoted 2 Tim. i. 10, and other Scriptures, to show that Christ has "abolished death," vanquished "the last enemy." The Christian Church goes downcast because she is afraid of her enemies. But it is the intention of God that, being delivered from our enemies, we should "serve Him without fear." If we would put the world to shame, overcome the devil, meet the tyrant sin, and have no longer fear of death before our eyes, it will be because we have no fear except the simple fear of God. This will be by the power of the Holy Ghost, whereby we shall live godly lives, in holiness towards God and righteousness towards men.

WEDNESDAY.

The West End meetings were continued during the week, but, owing probably to the severity of the weather, the attendance has been smaller than might have been expected. On Wednesday the subject appointed was:—

Nations and their Rulers.—Prayer that all earthly rulers may acknowledge their responsibility to the King of kings; that all persecutions of Christians may be stayed; that anarchy, oppression, and slavery may cease; that drunkenness, impurity, and gambling may be put away; that the opium traffic may be speedily abolished; that trade disputes may yield to truth and righteousness; that the "making haste to be rich" and the love of luxury may be arrested, and that God's Day may be nationally honoured.

Sir William Willis, who presided, briefly introduced the subject by dwelling on the value of united prayer, and the need there is at the present time for petition on behalf of the nation. Without entering on political matters, he might urge that earnest prayer should be made in view of the serious questions likely soon to arise in Parliament.

Rev. Gilbert Karney, M.A., said: These are prayer meetings, and the addresses ought therefore to be but hints or suggestions for prayer. We are asked to pray for our nation, for nations and rulers. Now our prayers on such a theme ought first of all to be intelligent. There was a time when God dealt peculiarly with one nation. But by reason of Israel's sin He turned to other nations. We are living now in "the times of the Gentiles," and the rulers of the Gentiles exercise delegated powers, and in praying for them we must bear this fact in mind.

Then, again, we should pray with humiliation. As nations we have sinned; witness the national wrongs, the persecutions of Christians and of Jews; the opium traffic, the drink trade, the sins of drunkenness, debauchery, and gambling. There is need for us Christian citizens to humble ourselves this day. Whilst this is so, let us pray with thanksgiving, for God has blessed our nation and given her great opportunities, blessing the peoples under her sway in many ways, and blessing our efforts to make known his Gospel.

Finally, let us pray with expectancy. The full answer to all our prayer will only come when He, our absent Lord, returns to reign; but meanwhile He hears and answers prayer, and as we pray for blessing on people and nation, we also pray "Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Mr. A. J. Arnold referred to persecutions in Persia, Spain, Austria, and Russia, and indicated the steps which the Evangelical Alliance had felt it right to take in these cases. He held that even yet, in answer to prayer, these efforts would result in some deliverance, particularly to the cruelly-wronged Stundists.

The first speaker at Cornhill on Wednesday was Rev. F. W. Macdonald, secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, who pointed out that inside the general direction for Christian intercession with God lies the instruction to pray for kings and all who are in authority. The welfare of communities is always determined by the character of individuals. Those who lead, who rule, heading the procession in this direction or that, are few; the multitude follow. In the order of Providence men are influenced immeasurably for good or for evil by individuals. Therefore we should pray for kings—for rulers of men, whether they extend the sceptre or use the pen; and those members of the human race upon whose action and character depends the happiness of millions here and hereafter. Let us not overlook those who write for young people and are believed in and followed by them.

Rev. F. B. Meyer followed, pointing out that the New Testament recognises the Divine authority of government. Though maintaining Christ's absolute royalty, and being persecuted on that account, the early Christians were taught to submit in temporal concerns to the governments under which they found themselves living. We to-day should discharge our duties to the powers that be—giving to Cæsar that which he may properly demand; but the faculties of most Christians will be better employed in endeavours to win men to the allegiance of Christ than in political or municipal work, or the promotion of social reforms. Those who are so occupied must be careful to maintain the walk with God, as did Wilberforce and those who co-operated with him in the anti-slavery crusade, who never allowed their spiritual life to suffer through their many secular engagements.

Mr. Meyer remarked that he was prepared to advise suitable young men who have opportunities of serving their fellows in politics or society, to do so in the fear of God—not in order to get name or fame, but with a high aim and sincerity of motive, remembering that whether they labour thus or in definite Christian work, they obey the command of Him who said: "Render unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and unto God the things that be God's."

THURSDAY.

The subject for prayer on Thursday was:—

Foreign Missions.—Praise to God: For great missionary progress within recent years. Prayer: For missionary churches and societies, Bible and tract organisations, and for all efforts for diffusing the pure Gospel in the heathen and Mohammedan world; for native churches and their pastors; for secret believers who have not yet openly confessed Christ; for missionaries—men and women—evangelistic, educational, medical—and all their helpers: for the removal of all hindrances to Christianity.

Mr. T. Morgan Harvey, who presided, briefly dwelt on the present importance of foreign missions, and the happy awakening in all the Churches on this great subject.

Rev. J. R. Wood said: The deeply interesting subject before us is one that demands praise as well as prayer; and praise may be termed the wings upon which prayer rises to heaven. We give thanks first of all for the great change wrought in the home Churches with regard to the whole subject of Foreign Missions. Wherever we go we find Christians of one mind as to the importance of missions; but we cannot help remembering that a hundred years ago many were hostile and the vast majority indifferent to the question of missions to the heathens. We cannot but be thankful for the change.

Then again a hundred years ago all doors were closed, and an open door was the exception; now the case is reversed—all doors are open to the Gospel, and a closed door is exceptional. For this we ought to give praise.

We have to give thanks also for the long roll of Christian heroes, raised up from all the Evangelical Churches, who have proved in the eyes of the sceptical that the Gospel has not lost its power, and that the martyr spirit still lives.

Moreover, we have to render praise for the many triumphs won, for the tens of thousands of precious souls saved in heathen lands, and for such victories as Madagascar and Fiji, among the Karens and Telegus, also in Tinnevelly and Travancore. These are but illustrations of what we have to give thanks for in connection with foreign missions.

But prayer is also needed, not so much for money—that will come when the heart is right—as for men and women, messengers of the Churches, chosen and thrust forth by God to witness among the heathen.

Then let us pray for the missionaries in the field, and not least for the young missionaries, feeling for the first time the awful chill of heathenism, and let us pray for the native converts, with small light, and many of them sorely tried. Lastly, let us pray, above all for a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Without Him we have no power; with Him we shall yet see great things done among the heathen.

Rev. E. A. Stuart was the first speaker at Cornhill. He expounded the words "that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will" in Col. i. 9, as having reference to the universality of the Gospel, and showed from the context, and Eph. i., that this prayer of the Apostle was a missionary prayer. Two great dangers beset the Church at Colosse—speculation and ritualism; and the antidote to these was a knowledge of God's will, to gather together all things in Christ, Gentiles being fellow-heirs with Jews, and of the same body. The church that is not a missionary church must soon become a decaying church. The means by which the Holy Ghost sanctifies a church is by making it go forward May we not all pray the prayer of the Apostle, that all our powers may be absorbed with the knowledge of the will of God? What will be the result? We shall then "walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God" (10).

At the second meeting words of encouragement were spoken by Rev. R. Handcock, and an address delivered by Rev. J. J. Fuller, of the Baptist Missionary Society. The latter showed what great blessing has attended Gospel work in Jamaica, of which he is a native. Not only were the missionaries blessed in their work, but for some time Jamaica has independently promoted mission work. Having rehearsed in brief the story of his missionary labour in the West of Africa, telling of the cruelties which abound in the dark places of the Continent, he remarked that when on one occasion he repeated the message, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son," etc., a poor woman inquired, "Is that true?" Being assured that it was, she rejoined, "Then why did not you come before?" She learned the way of life, and died in the faith after a consistent walk of forty years.

FRIDAY.

This morning the meeting in Portman Rooms was largely attended. The subject was:—

Home Missions and the Jews.—Praise: For the success increasingly vouchsafed to every branch of evangelistic work, and for blessing which has attended Missions to the Jews. Prayer: For all Christian workers, and that every personal effort to win souls for Christ may be conducted with wisdom and power. Prayer for God's Ancient People, Israel: That the veil upon their hearts may be taken away; that all persecutions of the Jews may cease; that Christians may clearly understand God's purposes concerning Israel, and let their light so shine among Jewish neighbours as to attract them to the Gospel of Christ.

After the reading of Acts iv. by the chairman, Sir Charles Aitchison, K.C.S.I., and a season of prayer,

Rev. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D., in giving the address, said: The two topics before us may seem a little apart, but the whole Kingdom of God is really in touch. There are two thoughts on my heart which bear on these two subjects, the first as concerning our work, and the second as concerning the Jews. In the chapter just read (Acts iv.) we find the apostles spoke with boldness and with great power testified. Boldness may be called one element of power. It may seem wonderful that it requires boldness to tell men that God loves them. We can understand that Noah wanted boldness to testify of coming destruction; but why should it need boldness to tell the message of love? Yet it does, and unless we are willing to speak boldly, we shall not speak with power. I am persuaded one secret of our non-success in preaching the Gospel is that we often preach in word only, and not, as Paul did, in power and in demonstration of the Spirit. We may be very orthodox and logical, and yet without the Spirit we shall avail nothing. Our Gospel, like that of Peter, must be preached "with the Holy Ghost sent down from Heaven."

Many admit this, but seem to think it impracticable for them to get this power. The fact is, we have fallen into a kind of heresy—thinking apparently that the Holy Ghost is used up, or that somehow He only works now in extenuated measure. I regard that as a heresy. It is our lack of faith and not his lack of power that is to blame. The Holy Spirit is ready and able to do all that He ever did, if we but rely confidently upon Him.

That is my first point on the need of Divine power. And now a word or two about the Jews—only eight millions, yet the most important single community on the face of the earth. I speak with sympathy, for I am a little bit of a Jew myself, as my grandmother was pure Hebrew. The Jews are undeniably the people of the past, they are largely the people of the present, and they are certainly the people of the future. They are, everybody says, a disagreeable people. I have not found it so, but if they are, let us think: how would we be if we had been cruelly treated as they have been for centuries. God said it would be so, but that does not excuse our sin. But this scattered and persecuted people are not forgotten by God. He keeps them as the apple of his eye, and He will yet have mercy upon them.

Do you remember when the disciples asked their Master, "When shall the end be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming?" that He told them, among other things, "This generation shall not pass away till all these things have been fulfilled." That has been variously interpreted, and we have read into it the words "then living," making it to signify that ere twenty or thirty years from that time these things would be fulfilled. I believe it means simply—This generation, this race, this people—that is, the Jews—shall not pass away till these things be fulfilled. The standing miracle of history is the preservation of the Jews distinct from all peoples. Every means has been tried to extirpate them, but all in vain. Neither earthly nor unearthly power is able to destroy them, and they still stand as a monument of marble to the faithfulness of God. I believe that until his great purpose with regard to the Jew be fulfilled, that glorious day shall not come. If we wish to hasten that day, we must use our best effort to bring Israel to a knowledge of the truth.

At the first meeting at Cornhill, Rev. W. R. MOWLL based some helpful remarks on 2 Cor. vi., emphasising the opening words, "We then as workers together with Him" (Christ). Having spoken of the privilege of this relation, he asked how far Christians have attained to it. How is it that, with all the preaching that goes on, there is not a higher moral tone among believers, not to say in the world? There is much fleshly power in our work, but not much spiritual power. We have been workers, doubtless; but have we been workers with Him? Therein lies the cause of spiritual weakness. We have perhaps been engaged in philanthropic effort, but not in work solely for the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

Pointing out from the context the apostolic description of such as are workers together with Christ "giving no offence," "in much patience," "by kindness," "by love unfeigned," etc., the speaker asked how far these marks distinguish us in daily life. How common it is to ask, "How near can I sail to the wind?" rather than recognising that a separated life is the cross which a believer has to carry.

Rev. Dr. GRATTAN GUINNESS was the second speaker. He pointed out the position of the Church in regard to the evangelisation of the world. Jesus Christ redeemed the world, and went back to heaven without evangelising it. He left the Church to do that. We could not redeem; only He could, and He did, at a great, great price. Before He went back, He promised the Church the Holy Spirit of power, and said, "Go, and tell the good news." So we are trustees—put in trust with the Gospel. What a tremendous responsibility rests upon the Church—to be fellow workers with the Son of God in saving the lost! There are two steps: first, God was in Christ; and then He is, through the Spirit, in the Church. Now it is, as though in Christ's stead we beseech men to be reconciled to God. In further remarks the speaker applied these thoughts to mission work at home and abroad.

SATURDAY.

The subject selected for the closing day of the week was:—

FAMILIES AND SCHOOLS.—Prayer that God's Word may be accepted as the one true basis of the education of the young, in the home, the school, and the college; that husbands and wives, parents and children, masters and servants, may, in their mutual relations, observe the law of Christ; that family worship may become more general, and that domestic life may be sweetened and hallowed by godliness; that increasing blessing may rest upon Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, and Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided at the West-end meeting, read a portion of Deut. vi., and dwelt on the importance of family religion. Piety in the home made a deep and lasting impression on the young. It was to be feared that in many cases the rush and hurry of external life interfered sadly with the hallowed sweetness of the home life. As to Sunday-schools, he rejoiced to say that the Sunday-School Union (only one out of three large Unions), reported for last year alone that 16,000 scholars had been added to the Church of Christ. Surely that was something to give thanks for. Similarly the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., had been greatly blessed in the winning of young people.

Rev. W. DARLOW SARJEANT said: I have recently been much impressed by the increasing godliness in some of our large houses of business. I know one such house, employing 300 young men and women, in which the most of them are soundly converted. Of course there is another side to it. These houses have many dangers and temptations; and we cannot but rejoice thankfully in every effort to help and to save the young people employed in them.

Passing to speak of home piety, Mr. Sarjeant referred to Deut. vi. 6-9, and urged the application of their injunction to family and household life. He believed that if Christian parents do their duty faithfully, they may expect to see their children grow up in the fear of the Lord. There is no reason why we should wait until our children grow up and then pray for their conversion; we should pray for, labour for, and expect that in their earliest years they may be led to the Saviour. The promise is unto us and to our children, and he believed that as a matter of fact the majority of Church members are the children of godly parents.

At Cornhill, on Saturday, Mr. N. R. HUGHMAN presided. After reading Psalm ci., he commented on the sixth verse: "I will walk within my house with a perfect heart." He referred to the growing tendency in these days for Christian workers—heads of households in particular—to neglect the responsibilities of home life. Is it not too often the case that children of tender years are left in charge of servants while the parents are attending meetings? In many cases the children grow up to be a source of anxiety and sorrow. Mr. Hughman spoke of the great increase in Y.M.C.A.'s. In 1883 there was a membership, including associates, of 45,955; last year the total was 83,817. In the former year there were 2528 associations and auxiliaries; in the latter 4982.

The meetings at Cornhill were attended for the most part by men, a good proportion of them young men. Meetings were held each evening for prayer or addresses on mission work. On Friday evening, as in former years, a praise meeting was held, the united evangelistic choirs taking part

BOURNEMOUTH

Meetings were held twice a day in the Shaftesbury Hall. No list of speakers was announced, and no chairman was appointed. Each meeting was entirely in charge of one person, who read the Scripture and gave the address. Probably this arrangement, combined with the severely cold weather, had something to do with the smaller attendance during the week as compared with that of previous years. But it served the purpose of making the meetings more distinctly meetings for prayer. This is a clear gain, for which all concerned may be thankful.

As an expression of the unity of Christians, the week of prayer in Bournemouth has been a lamentable failure. The Nonconformist ministers have been loyal, and have given their presence and interest in many meetings; but it is a matter for deep regret that, with the simple exception of Rev. Mr. Burrows, of St. Paul's, not a clergyman of the English Church, in active service in Bournemouth, has been on the platform. The first utterance of Major-General Hutchinson (a Churchman) at the noon meeting on Monday was an expression of deep grief and disappointment that the ministers of his own church could not make it possible to attend and show their true oneness with evangelical Christians.

There is added point to the reproof in the fact that such men as Rev. C. Bullock, so well known as a defender of evangelical truth, and Rev. Dudley Ryder, of Barton, were present and took part in the meetings. This manifest want of unity in the town is noticed, and works incalculable mischief. It would appear that an ecclesiastical system, which is being so extensively abused to Ritualising and Romanising ends, is more to some of these men than those evangelical doctrines which many Churchmen value equally with other Christians.

The conclusion to which the "Week of United Prayer" leads is that in Bournemouth Christians are not united; and that if true revival can come only from the united cry of believers, as on the Day of Pentecost, then no signs of such a revival appear as yet.

ALDERSGATE STREET.

As in former years, the daily noon meeting here was brought into harmony with the world-wide concert of prayer arranged by the Evangelical Alliance. On Monday, Jan. 2, Mr. ROBERT PATON presided. An address was given by ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR. The season, he said, led each one to consider his ways. There must be in every heart a sense of dissatisfaction at past unfaithfulness and demerit. If our past course will not bear self-examination it will ill bear the scrutiny of our Father in heaven. Even the most spiritually minded must have much to lament. The world with its methods and aims makes inroads upon our hearts and lives.

The message the speaker brought was, "He restoreth our souls." We are not called upon to restore our own souls, to repair the breaches in our own hearts. God restores; He is still omnipotent. His arms are outstretched to save the most wilful, and sinful. Again, God restores our souls when we ask Him to do it; ask Him—not slothfully, but with due self-examination and with full purpose of heart to watch and pray and henceforth to abide in Him.

During the meeting the chairman took occasion to praise God for the many saving agencies now at work, seeking the salvation of souls that, during past years, took their rise in this noon prayer-meeting.

On Tuesday Mr. M. H. HODDER presided. Rev. WM. PIERCE, of Tollington Park, enforced very earnestly what he called the commonplace remark, that God's kingdom is a spiritual kingdom. It is only little by little that we grasp this truth. His kingdom is not of this world; if it were, riches would be the great criterion. He believed, on the contrary, that all true revivals in the Church had come in times of depression and poverty. We are so apt to put confidence in fleshly means. His kingdom is advanced by the outpouring of his Holy Spirit. Hannibal's army, mighty in war, was destroyed by the luxury of Capua, its winter camp. Christ's army is in very different circumstances, but in similar danger. We are apt to say, "If I only had the money"; whereas we have all the power we need if we will only grasp it. Though as poor as Job in his poverty, with the Spirit of God we can do all things. Are we going to be wiser this year? The years are slipping by. If this year is to be better the secret lies in a nutshell: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost cometh upon you."

On Wednesday Mr. Colin Young presided. Rev. J. E. Wakerley, of Clerkenwell, was, at the last moment, prevented from addressing the meeting.

On Thursday Mr. George Williams presided, and the address was given by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston. Taking one of the passages suggested in the topic for the day, Ps. lxvi. 10-12, he said that these were wise words when taking a retrospect. The first two and a-half verses were full of trouble; the last half verse was full of blessing. One lesson we should learn from these verses is to trust God more implicitly when things are against us, as well as when for us. God sends affliction to prove us. The luxuriant vine is cut and pruned. Christ is with us. "The form of the fourth" is always like the Son of God. One effect of trial is to make us long for home. We learn to set our affections on things above. Another effect of trial is to humble us. It is a hard lesson to learn—to let people ride roughshod over us. But don't we need it sometimes? When it comes do not let us pride ourselves on our good conscience, but let it drive us, as poor, shortcoming sinners, nearer to Christ. "God's greatest blessings are often wrapped in ugly parcels." The five hard experiences in the early verses are more than compensated for by the blessing in the end, "He brought me into a wealthy place."

On Friday, Mr. R. C. Morgan presided. The address was given by Rev. George Cousins, one of the secretaries of the London Missionary Society. He said he so often pleaded for foreign missions, that he rejoiced to direct the thoughts of his hearers to those at our doors. He remarked on the marvellous ingenuity with which Christian people in these days are taking hold of every class of the people to bring them to a knowledge of Christ. Home missions have a paramount claim upon all Christians, because all can do it, and because Christ said, "beginning at Jerusalem." He urged personal examination in this relation. "What am I doing for Jesus Christ? What personal service can I render this New Year?" God rejoices to use his children, and will not depute their work to angels.

CITY YOUNG MEN.

According to custom, Mr. George Williams gave his New Year's address on Jan. 1, at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., to a well-attended meeting of young men. He took for his tent the motto for the year—"Only be thou strong and very courageous." Other friends, by whom he was supported, also spoke.

On Thursday, June 5, Mr. and Mrs. Williams received the members and associates. Major Liebenrood, who has recently conducted a very successful Gospel Mission at this Association, gave a special address, based upon the words "What think ye of Christ?" Mr. W. R. Lane, who with many other Association friends was present, added a few earnest words on the same theme. As the result many young men accepted an invitation to adjourn to a room upstairs, where they gladly availed themselves of an opportunity of conversing about the question of personal salvation.

On Sunday last a new departure in the afternoon was made by the adoption of the "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon" movement. Notwithstanding the depressing condition of the weather on the sudden breaking up of the frost, the ordinary attendance was more than doubled. Had the City young men known what a pleasant afternoon was in store for them they would have filled the hall. Mr. J. E. Borland, F.C.O., organist of Park Church, Highbury, has succeeded in gathering a most excellent orchestral band, who not only accompanied the singing with marked ability, but played some delightful voluntaries at the commencement and close of the meeting. Two solos were sung with good effect, "At Jesus' Grave," by Mr. W. Windsor, and "There is a green hill far away," by Mr. John McMillan.

The whole service was based on the thought of Jesus Christ, the friend of sinners. On this theme a brief but pointed address was given by the General Secretary. We have confidence that, notwithstanding the outwardly dull condition of the City of London on a Sunday, this meeting will prove one of the most useful and successful in connection with this old-established Association. Mr. Borland will be glad to secure a few more instrumentalists for his band.

OPENING OF WILLESDEN HALL.

The ground owned by the Evangelistic Mission, in Willesden-lane, off High-road, Kilburn, is now partially occupied by a temporary iron building, accommodating about 500 persons, erected within a month, and opened for Gospel services on the 5th inst.

Mr. R. C. Morgan presided over a public meeting in the evening. The statement of Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, as founder and director of the mission, showed that in view of the rapidly-increasing population in the district, it had been determined two or three years ago to do something towards the pressing need for evangelisation, by establishing on the purchased site a plain but substantial centre of Gospel light. But as the necessary amount for building had not yet been raised, it was well to get to work at once in a temporary structure, which, however, must give place in three years at most to the bricks and mortar, which are an absolute necessity if our growing city and its teeming suburbs are to be evangelised. Meanwhile a portion of the site was let so as to be available for the purposes of the mission at very short notice. It was hoped that the converts and workers, who would be gathered in the place, would soon be able to bear their own local expenses, so leaving the director free to go forward in planting halls for faithful testimony to God's grace in other spiritually needy neighbourhoods. Seeing that the same Gospel, pure and simple, would, by God's help, be preached here as in the halls of the mission, they might count upon God for a repetition of the blessings which had been so abundantly realised for so many years, while praying for the power of the Holy Ghost, and, at the same time, showing practical interest in the building fund.

The Chairman regarded mission work as among the most healthy forms of Christian life in our land. The photographing of ghosts might occupy the attention of the newspaper world, but the things which are increasingly exercising many Christian minds are—holiness of life, union of hearts, and anxiety for the spread of the Gospel, matters which have a very close connection spiritually, constituting the only real "line of advance" in what God counts progress. Addresses followed by Messrs. D. C. Apperly, John M'Call, A. Boake, and J. E. Taylor.

WINTER.

Beautiful, beautiful winter,
Snow-wreaths pure and white,
Hoar-frost that glistens like diamonds
Catching the rays of light;
Feathery gems of crystal,
Floating about in the air,
Wonderful strings of fairy pearls,
Flung from the branches bare.

Light-hearted, fur-robed figures,
Chatting and smiling and gay,
Hastening to reach the river,
Skating the hours away;
Talking of winter parties,
Soirées and treats to be,
Clothing to buy and presents to make,
People and sights to see.

Terrible, terrible winter;
Oh how the blinding snow,
Oh how the biting hoar-frost
Add to the hunger and woe!
Down through the streets and alleys,
Oh how the wind howls by,
And mingles ever its hollow moan,
With the desolate orphans' cry.

Shivering, half-clad figures,
Anxious and weary and sad,
Hastening onward, at last to find
There is no work to be had;
No one is coming to see them;
Nothing the morrow can bring,
But a harder struggle, a weaker frame,
And a heavier burdening.

Weary ones, sinking in sadness,
Crushed 'neath the load of care,
With neither knowledge, nor time, nor heart,
To enter the house of prayer;
O, Father, merciful Father,
Thou dost the ravens feed,
Out of thy pity, and boundless love,
Look on thy children's need.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE.

I have been asked by Miss Steer to express her deep gratitude for the gifts which have been bestowed by many kind friends at this season, and which have enabled her to have the joy of giving comfort and enjoyment to the many poor and destitute gathered under the roof of the Bridge of Hope, and the many branch homes for the little ones.

It has been my privilege to spend this Christmas at the refuge, and to hear the expression of the deep thankfulness by many poor wanderers brought in from the far country, for the contrast this Christmas has been to them compared to the past. Of many under this roof it may be said, "Ye have not passed this way heretofore;" and if by Christian love a gleam of gladness can be shed on their path, it is an encouragement to persevere in the hitherto untrodden strait and narrow way.

Under this roof it may be said that almost every kind of distress finds its representative. Even in early youth there are hearts so bowed down with sorrow that a smile on their sad faces seems hard possible. One such expressed her astonishment that she ever could have been so happy. She was a homeless orphan brought by a policeman to the ever-open door of the night shelter. On that Christmas night, when each inmate of that branch house received a new Bible and hymn-book, she could scarcely realise these were to be her very own. One among the older ones had only a few days before been saved from a watery grave.

It is well to recall an incident that happened some little time ago, which reveals some of the misery concealed in the whirlpool of London life. A young woman was received in the night shelter, and in the morning was found so suffering she was taken to the infirmary. In the course of the day a message came that she was dying. She had confessed to having taken poison before she applied to the Bridge of Hope. The report of the inquest held after her death appeared in the daily papers, and mention was made of the refuge in which she had spent her last night on earth. For days after, broken-hearted mothers applied to know if it was their missing daughter who had thus passed away. No correct answer could be given them, for it was not possible to know if she had given her true name.

Seed sown in past years is springing up, sometimes where least expected, and in these days, when the deadly curse of drink seems the most difficult to combat, it is an unspeakable joy to know of many who have been its willing slaves, now, by the grace of God, filling most responsible positions.

In many ways the power of the enemy can only be described as "coming in like a flood," but we know that the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. May the hands of willing workers be strengthened and their hearts cheered by the sympathy and help of those who cannot themselves "put their hands to the plough," but who will, for Christ's sake, help their toiling sisters.

Among the Sailors at Marseilles.

Marseilles is the Liverpool of France, being the largest shipping port in the country. English ships call in great numbers, over 20,000 British seamen visiting Marseilles annually. For their benefit a Sailors' Home and Reading Room has been in existence many years, under the guidance of the British chaplain; having been started nearly forty years ago. The home affords good accommodation for both officers and seamen, receiving all shipwrecked, distressed, and convalescent men under the British and American Consuls' charge. The home is under the management of Captain J. H. Baker, C.A., who is a Church Army officer; the matron, Mrs. Baker, is a trained hospital nurse.

The shipping, hospitals, and prisons are visited regularly by the chaplain and resident Scripture-reader; men are urged to consider God's claim and their own need of salvation; pledges of total abstinence are taken; letters are written home, and in every possible way the poor crimp-beset tempted sailor is helped to better his condition. Christmas week saw a large number of ships in port, so it was resolved to supplement the usual services and meetings with others. Christmas morning found the church crowded, and the sailors present joined heartily in singing out the old Christmas hymns, listening very attentively as the chaplain told out the grand old story. In the afternoon a service of praise was held, and in the evening a service, consisting of addresses, hymns prayers, and testimonies, lasting from six until ten. The same thing happened each evening during the week, there being crowded audiences. Services were also being held on board ship by permission (and in some cases with the assistance) of the captains in charge.

CHRISTIAN NURSING.

DR. LASERON'S well-known Deaconesses' Institution and Hospital at Tottenham, like that at Mildmay mentioned in our last issue, sends out only Christian women ready to speak for the Master, and expected so to do when circumstances permit. The value of such godly nurses in the sick chamber is increasingly felt by many, and hence institutions which seek to train ladies inspired by the desire to serve God, by pointing weary sufferers to Him who taketh away the sin of the world, ought to be cordially and well supported.

We understand that at present Dr. Laseron has seventy-two nursing sisters, and had he ten times the number they would find plenty to do, as the applications are too numerous to be complied with.

The medical and surgical work of the Hospital has proved valuable not only as a training ground for the nurses but also a boon to the poor. "God," says the director, "is giving definite blessing on the prayerful efforts of our sisters to lead souls to Himself, and many a poor wanderer has found peace in believing while lying in the hospital ward."

Twelve out-stations are carried on. "Cork Union Protestant infirmary is our oldest out-station, the sisters having laboured there for twenty-one years. We have worked in Sunderland Infirmary for nineteen years, in South Dublin Union for ten years, in King's Cliff Hospital for seven years, and in the English Hospital for Jews in Jerusalem for four years. We have two Children's Homes, one in Woodford and one in Scarborough, and six District Nursing stations. In all these places the Lord has richly blessed the work."

Apart from the hospital and out-stations, the object of the institution is to supply, as we have said, "Christian women for the performance of work of active benevolence, such as nursing sick, etc." The rules show that these sisters are not paid fixed salaries, but are provided for and have an annual allowance. No charge is made for their services, but the family or patient is expected to give as felt right.

An appeal is made for more nurses—young ladies willing to devote themselves to such work, and willing to be trained. There is also urgent need of financial aid. Address M. Laseron, M.D., Deaconesses' Institution, Tottenham, N.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

THE monthly workers' meeting on Friday took the form of a missionary farewell. Six sisters about to proceed to China in connection with the Inland Mission were severally commended to God in prayer by Dr. CORY, who presided.

Mr. ISAAC, the hon. secretary, gave a very encouraging account of the Christmas meetings, and asked for more help at the ordinary meetings held on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays. One or two ladies are also needed to go to Zanzibar.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR spoke on "The secret of fruit-bearing." The key to the whole subject, he pointed out, is contained in the first two words of John xv., "I am." Fruitfulness does not consist in what we are, or in what we feel, but in what Christ is. As the whole life of the vine is enjoyed by every branch, so there is a perfect Christ for every believer. How blessed the fact that the "Father is the husbandman"! He cares for every branch Himself, and makes no mistakes. He knows exactly what to do, and does it Himself. God orders the universe so as to bring most blessing to his people, however much things may seem against them.

Mr. FROST, of Toronto, the secretary of the American branch of the C.I.M., told the story of how God led in the matter of the formation of that branch of the work. He gave some delightful testimony of God's dealings with him and his fellow-workers.

Mr. EDWARD PEARSE, who is shortly returning to China after furlough, narrated some of his experiences of God's gracious help and deliverance during times of difficulty and need.

Some of the outgoing sisters were to have spoken, but as the hour was late a second meeting was arranged for the 12th inst. in order to afford them an opportunity of giving their testimony of the Lord's leadings. It is hoped that a good number will be present to hear them.

MR. VARLEY IN BOMBAY.

MR. HENRY VARLEY has recently held in Bombay a fortnight's mission. Morning prayer meetings and Bible readings were held in the Grant-road Methodist Episcopal Church, meetings for English speaking natives in the Framjee Comasjee Hall in the afternoons, and evening evangelistic meetings in the Y.M.C.A. Hall. Great interest was awakened, and there were very marked tokens of God's blessing. Christians were urged to a more whole-hearted consecration to God, and many unconverted were aroused, and professed to trust in Jesus as their Saviour.

By far the most interesting of the services were the meetings for English-speaking natives. The attendance was usually between 200 and 300, chiefly Parsees and Hindus, and at the closing meeting, so greatly valued had been the services, that a spontaneous vote of thanks to Mr. Varley was proposed by a native pleader in the High Court, and was warmly accorded.

During the Sundays, Mr. Varley occupied the pulpits of the various Evangelical churches, and at the close of the mission departed for a rest, returning for the Decennial Conference, December 29 to January 4.

P.S.A. MOVEMENT.

IT may appear to some premature for me to speak about the P.S.A. Movement, seeing that it has been started at Christ Church for so short a time. But from what I have seen of it I feel able to say that, in my judgment, it is capable of almost endless development in gathering the working classes back to the churches from which they have so largely ebbed. I will simply cite my own experience.

The church stands in a densely-populated district, but is so elegant and commanding in its architectural proportions, and has been so long associated with the well-to-do, church-going people, that the working men as a whole (though, of course, there have been several exceptions), have stood aloof from its services. The problem was, How to bring the church and the working people together. The first steps in this direction have been taken.

On the first Sunday in December we held our first meeting, after having given notice of it by posters and by bills distributed in the homes. We had an attendance of about 150, but the numbers have been improving, and last Sunday there must have been between 250 and 300 men in attendance. I take the chair myself; we have three solos carefully chosen under my direction, two brief addresses, reading of the Bible and prayer.

It would, of course, be quite possible that the addresses should be deficient in Gospel teaching, and the solos rather chosen for effect than to influence the hearts and lives of the hearers, and so the movement might fail of the highest results; but every movement of this sort is liable to the same objections, and there is no reason why the P.S.A. movement should not be a direct Gospel agency of the most important nature.

But the most interesting feature is the eager manner with which the working-men themselves have taken the whole matter up. They have formed themselves into four committees, one to arrange for the promulgation of total abstinence principles, one to visit absentees, one to arrange for a benefit society, and one for the management of the meetings themselves. These committees have the indirect effect of introducing the men to one another, and giving them a stake in the concern.

A string band has also sprung into existence which affords much interest. We call one another "Brothers," so that there is quite a bond of sympathy linking us together, and I have been very pleased to see many of them attend the public service in the evening.

The services do not entail so much strain on me as my Bible class at Regent's-park for young men, as I have but to give direction and tone to the meeting in the four minutes allotted to the chairman's speech. The great attraction of the meetings seems to be their brightness and variety, some fourteen different items being included in the programme of a single afternoon. Lord Kinnaird, Frank Smith, late of Salvation Army, and others have given me efficient help; and indeed the meetings do not make a severe demand upon anyone but are well described by the three words which head all our bills "Brief. Bright, Brotherly."

MESSRS. SMITH AND BELL.

THE mission begun in Lisburn the first day of the year by Messrs. Smith and Bell continued during the week—the interest, the members, and blessing evidently increasing. Mr. Merton Smith's earnest, practical, unconventional addresses have been vehicles of the Spirit's power, and night after night many have declared themselves on the Lord's side.

On Friday afternoon a meeting was held specially for Christians, addressed by Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, and Mr. Smith. Although the weather was very severe (as it has been, indeed, since the mission began), a large number were present to hear very stirring words as to the necessity and privilege of full consecration to the service of the Master.

As on the first day of the Mission, so again last Sunday four services were held, all of them largely attended, despite dreadful weather. The Lord was present moving many hearts. Great numbers of young men have been attending these services, and many of them have been savingly blessed.

Although held in Railway Street Presbyterian church and lecture hall, all the churches in Lisburn have been well represented at the meetings, and all have been receiving blessing.

It is arranged to have afternoon meetings from Tuesday till Friday of this week. Friday will be the last day of the mission, unless it is manifestly God's mind that the evangelists should postpone other engagements and remain here longer. The deepening and extending interest, as well as the abundant blessing being bestowed, would seem to indicate a continuance of the mission. This, however, must be decided nearer the end of the week.

Meanwhile, there is abounding cause for thanksgiving and joy that God has sent his servants to speak and sing so powerfully and delightfully his "sweet evangel," and many here will remember with abiding gratitude these opening days and weeks of 1893. H.

[A lengthy telegram descriptive of the Monday evening meeting reaches us as we are closing up for press; we must defer details till next week. The meeting had to be adjourned to the largest building in Lisburn, and Mr. Smith related his life story to an audience greatly moved by the thrilling recital —ED.]

PASTOR BROWN'S ANNIVERSARY.

ALTHOUGH our brother has had, since April last, the sorrow and anxiety of domestic affliction in the serious illness of his wife, the East London Tabernacle has continued to prosper, and, in spite of weekly journeying to and from the Isle of Wight, where Mrs. Brown has been lying, the pastor has stuck manfully to his work. Naturally enough he has felt the strain, and intimates that he is anxious to be freed for a season—a request which the church will doubtless at once accede to.

At the anniversary, held on Monday week, Mr. Brown spoke of twenty-six years' fellowship, and continued:—"If I had the whole of my ministry to live over again, though I might make alterations in my style of preaching, yet, in the presence of the Lord, I can say I would make no alteration whatever in my theme or in the doctrines which I have preached. The longer I live the more Calvinistic I get." The simple preaching of the Word of God was, he thought, the only thing to keep and save a congregation. As to special work, he said that during the whole year no less than £2,352 had been received from the church for home mission work, and £2,207 had been expended, leaving a balance in hand of £145. The money had bought boots, coals, potatoes, clothes, and such like, and paid for emigration, boarding-out of children, and seaside home, into which during the past year they had received 300 inmates. With regard to the spiritual condition of the church, 231 had been received into membership during the last twelvemonths. Nearly twenty years ago 240 had been received during one year, and on the average since then 200 had been the annual number. Since the formation of the church 5,384 had been received, and the present membership was 2,375.

A vigorous and sympathetic address by Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., concluded the proceedings.

MR. J. PASSMORE EDWARDS has undertaken to bear the entire expense, estimated at £1200, of laying out Woolwich Parish Churchyard as a public garden.

The Book World.

AMONGST HOP-PICKERS.

When the attention of earnest Christian men was first directed to the annual assemblage of pickers in the hop-gardens, it seemed hopeless to attempt mission work. The very "scrapings of society" (a phrase used by a picker) seemed to be there, and the pioneers had need of courage and constancy in venturing among them. Men of the right stamp were, however, found, difficulties overcome, and a hearing gained. Amongst these brave pioneers, Rev. J. J. Kendon won an honourable place, and he has done well to publish in the volume now before us—Amongst the Hop-pickers, by Rev. R. Shindler (Morgan & Scott, 3s. 6d.)—the story of his mission in Kent. The illustrations faithfully present life as seen in the hop camps and gardens; while the chapters on hops, hoppers, and strange experiences in missioning amongst the pickers must deeply interest every reader by reason of their freshness and vigour. Many telling incidents are given, with trophies of the power of the Gospel amongst the most hopeless, while kindly and brotherly reference is made to fellow-workers in other hop districts. The book reveals afresh the romance of missions, and ought to be widely circulated.

"TAYLOR THE NAVVY."

Under this terse title a sketch of the life and work of Wm. Taylor, the navvy evangelist, has been published by J. J. Rae, 127, Stockwell-street, Glasgow. (1s. 6d.) As Capt. W. E. Smith says in a brief introduction, "The many friends whom he gained by his genial manner and attractive preaching of the Gospel, will doubtless, welcome a memoir. . . . I trust it will have a wide circulation both among those who, like Taylor, are engaged in work for God, and those whom he loved so well and knew so well how to attract—the working men."

For our own part, knowing Mr. Taylor's work well, we have read the book with very great interest indeed. Much of it, referring to earlier days, was dictated by himself to his son-in-law, Mr. W. Dixon. The story of his mission work, and of the blessing attending it, is compiled from the testimony of others. The purpose of the book is "to bring before the unconverted a remarkable trophy of Divine grace," and to show how God often uses unlikely instruments in doing his work.

We welcome this memoir heartily, and feel sure it has only to be made known in order to secure, as it deserves, a large circulation.

THE ORIGIN OF RELIGION.

In The Distinctive Messages of the Old Religions (Blackwood and Sons), Rev. George Matheson, D.D., Edinburgh, conducts a series of studies worthy of his reputation as an original thinker and his power as a persuasive writer. We are unable to say more, for we believe his position to be unsound from the beginning to end. It is one thing to hold that God has gradually unfolded his will to man, but quite another to speculate regarding the (assumed) development of the religious faculty from the fetich worship of "primitive man" to Christianity in its fulness and purity. Many forms of religion are examined in these pages, and the idea of incarnation—"belief in the identity of nature between man and the object of his worship"—is declared to be the common element in them all; and it is maintained that "what distinguishes Christianity is the largeness and the fulness of that which is incarnated; and the largeness and the fulness lie in its moral standard." Hence the faiths of the past are not, to Christianity, to be "dead faiths"; for each and all there is "a seat in the Christian Pantheon, and a justification in the light of the manifold wisdom of God." This is doctrine that we have no patience to characterise. It shows us, however, the legitimate conclusion of development logic which is so seductive in our day. We are astonished that any should allow the Apostolic dictum that "the world through wisdom knew not God," and yet reason as if such knowledge were attainable by superstitious practices in conditions of degraded ignorance.

The other side of the question is presented with cogency and force in The Genesis and Growth of Religion, by Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D.D., of Toronto. (6s. Macmillan.) The volume contains the L. P. Stone Lectures for 1892, at Princeton Theological Seminary, New Jersey. The theories of Wallace, Spencer, Max Müller, and others are examined with acuteness and care, and it is shown that man has not risen from the worship of nature, or fetiches, or ancestors, to the worship of the living God; but, on the contrary, the history of religion exhibits, as a general law, a tendency to fall away in these and other directions from the purity of monotheistic faith. "Hence, the hypothesis that man began his religious life with some low form of religion, from which by a normal process of natural development monotheism has been at last evolved, is not sustained by facts." Dr. Kellogg ably maintains that man began with knowledge of God, his creator, and that animism, polytheism, pantheism, atheism, and all other forms of religion, or religious philosophy, must be regarded as various forms of degeneration from that primitive faith. The Biblical representations of the monotheism of the first men, and of the origin of all heathenism in the natural aversion of all sinful men from God, are justified on scientific grounds. This is a sound contribution to a great subject, and a useful answer to a dangerous type of modern speculation.

CASSELL'S PERIODICALS.

Cassell's Family Magazine (7d.), in addition to instalments of stories, has papers on Parliament, the United States Weather Office, and the National Gallery, all of them well illustrated. Work (6d.), an illustrated journal of practice and theory, should be held in high esteem in artisan homes, for its information is of a useful type, and very plainly worded. Chums (6d.) is calculated to wake up young people. Tales of adventure are interspersed with directions for pastimes; but we could have wished that these had stopped short of "My First Bout with the Gloves." Cottage Gardening (3d.) is a cheap and useful periodical, including just the undertakings upon which people in a small way require help as the seasons go by.

In Green Pastures is a little volume of daily readings for a year, by J. R. Miller, D.D. Many of the paragraphs are spiritual gems. (Nelson.)

At His Feet. A little book containing seven brief, simple, and helpful meditations for mothers, by Mrs. Barnett. (Messrs. D. Wyllie and Son, Aberdeen.)

Beyond the Stars; or, Heaven, its Inhabitants, Occupations, and Life, by Thomas Hamilton, D.D., LL.D., has reached its third edition. (3s. 6d. T. and T. Clark.)

The Baptist Messenger, volume for 1892, is replete with instructive matter, including sermons by the late C. H. Spurgeon, and gleanings from Dr. Maclaren's discourses. (Office: 61, Paternoster-row.)

A Primer of Church Fellowship (1s. Hodder & Stoughton) is a well-arranged manual for use in Baptist and Independent churches, from the pens of Rev. Wm. Pierce and C. Silvester Horne, M.A.

The Holy City, Jerusalem: Its Topography, Walls, and Temples. By S. Russell Forbes, Ph.D. (Chelmsford: E. Durrant & Co., 90, High-street.) A small book, but one filled with information clearly arranged, and set forth with several plans and illustrations.

Sketches from the Gospel of Mark is a thoughtful little book by C. E. Stuart. (1s. 6d. Partridge.) Mark's independence as a writer is maintained, and his graphic manner of delineation is pointed out. Students of the Scriptures will find these sketches very suggestive.

Two useful publications by W. Hunt & Co. are: Higher Criticism (3d.), some thoughts on modern theories about the Old Testament, by Bishop Ryle; and First Steps Upward (6d.), a clear statement of Evangelical doctrine, based on the Church Catechism, by Canon Garratt.

Messrs. Lang Neil & Co. have published a little school book, by Rev. Geo. Hugh Jones, entitled Higher Religious Teaching: Questions and Notes on the Gospel according to St. Luke. (1s. 6d.) It is intended as a companion to Archdeacon Farrar's "St. Luke" in the Cambridge Bible for Schools.

A Few Recollections of Robert Cooper Lee Bevan (1s. Nisbet) is a little book which will have a special interest for those who knew our departed friend. An appendix gives some of his Biblical notes. The pages are an unpretentious memoir of a life of beautiful simplicity and practical piety.

At the Holy Communion: Helps for Preparation and Reception. By H. C. G. Moule, M.A. (Seeley & Co.) The Church of England "order" is opened up by a sound spiritual counsellor, whose notes of exposition and exhortation are calculated to be helpful to many. A number of hymns are given at the end, including some choice original compositions.

The Herald of Mercy (Morgan & Scott), a halfpenny Gospel monthly, is already known and valued by hosts of Christian workers as attractive, acceptable, and pointed. The January issue contains a telling Gospel story by Lady Hope. Each page of the paper presents a complete article or narrative, and thus the number can be cut up into distinct and useful tracts.

Our Domestics and Their Mistresses. By J. Forbes Moncrieff. (1s. Dyer Brothers, Paternoster-square.) A sensible contribution to "The Servant Question," dealing with its moral, social, and religious aspects. The author admits having taken the cream off a number of books on the subject; and this he has done wisely and well. The book may be commended to all servants and their mistresses, for its perusal is calculated to profit both.

Haggai's Prophecy: A Voice to the Present Time. By David Baron. (W. G. Wheeler.) A deeply interesting and instructive Bible reading, by one who is "apt to teach." Some sections of the paper appeared in our columns a few months ago. The lessons conveyed are eminently practical, and the little book deserves a wide circulation.

Evangelical Christendom, the monthly organ of the Evangelical Alliance, opens the year with articles and items of news which cannot but have peculiar interest for earnest Christians. Among the selections gathered in the January issue is Rev. Hay Aitken's remarkable letter to the Record on United Communion Services. (6d. J. S. Phillips, 121, Fleet-street.)

The Sunday School is a new penny weekly paper edited by Rev. James Hastings, who conducts "The Expository Times" with so much success. Thoughtful teachers will find in its pages just the help they require in elucidating the International Lessons, the historical, explanatory, and expositional matter being from the pens of well-known scholars and preachers. The other features of the paper are full of promise. (Hall, 28 to 32, Hutton-street, Fleet-street, E.C.)

"So Great Salvation." By Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M.A., Aberdeen. (1s. T. and T. Clark). Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, in an introduction, well says of this little work:—"The message of a full Gospel is presented, not only clearly, but sympathetically; not only tenderly, but searchingly; and, above all, so as to bring out proportions and connections in the things which accompany salvation, as they are seen revealed in the holy Word." The book treats of man in six conditions: fallen, accused, awakened, justified, kept, sanctified; we trust it will have many readers, and bring much joy to them as well as its author.

Home Weal and Home Woe. By Mrs. Bayly, author of "Ragged Homes and How to Mend Them," and her daughter, Elizabeth Boyd Bayly. (5s. Nisbet and Co.) A fascinating book, in which Mrs. Bayly tells in her own strong and noble style how she started the first mothers' meeting; how it gradually civilised and transformed many scores of hearts and homes, and embraced both the children and elder girls in its operations; how the women themselves caught the spirit of Christian benevolence; and how, after six or seven years, and with the help of her husband, the late Captain Bayly, the movement extended to the men, with such success that in the first fifteen months several hundreds of the reckless and drunken pig-feeders of the Kensington Potteries were converted to total abstinence, and for the most part to vital Christianity. Miss Bayly then takes up the tale, and tells, with all that insight, sympathy, and skill of workmanship we expect from the author of "Jonathan Merle," how the first self-supporting and really popular publichouse-without-drink was established; how the converts were organised, and brought in new converts at the rate of fifty a month; how, at a low computation, £10,000 per annum was diverted from the drink shops of the neighbourhood, to be spent sensibly and healthily; and how nobly these converts adorned their profession. The book is much more than a noble tale of a noble work. It is both an inspiration and a guide. We have in it an almost ideal combination of deep spirituality with broad and tender humanity, a strong sense of justice, most generous sympathy, and common-sense that never fails. It is emphatically a book for the time, overflowing as it does with wise and fruitful suggestions. It should be read by Christian workers everywhere. If only some rich man would send a copy to every City Missionary and Bible woman!

Helps Heavenward; or, Fighting the Good Fight of Faith. By James Wharton. (3d. Holness.) This is a book for the help and encouragement of young believers.

Snow Flakes is the title of a booklet by our familiar contributor, "J. K." It contains a number of his thoughtful and tenderly-expressed poems. Some hearts would be specially touched by the words of our literary Irish agriculturist. Post free, three-halfpence. (John Kee, Larch-hill. Donemana, Strabane.)

Evolution a Myth is a pamphlet giving the opinions and conclusions of scientists of high degree, showing evolution to be indefensible and irrational. It has been compiled by Henry Holme. It contains scientific facts and doctrines which scientists are themselves overlooking in their advanced theorising. (3d. Crocker and Co., 3, Amen-corner, E.C.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Elliot Stock.—Twofold Life; or, Spirit Songs. By R. Alleyne Harris. The Pastor in Prayer, being a choice selection of C. H. Spurgeon's Sunday morning prayers.

AMERICAN NOTES.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

THE great religious sensation just now is the reported restoration of Dr. McGlynn to the Romish priesthood. During the five years of his excommunication no man has done more to degrade the Papal system, and especially the hierarchy, than Dr. McGlynn by his terrific denunciations of bishops and priests. His lectures have had universal circulation, nor will his future subservience to the Pope neutralise the immense good he has done in pointing out to the public eye the iniquities of Popery. The public believed him then, and many priests severed themselves from the Church; his promise of future good behaviour has belittled his manhood, even before his own people.

But a few days before the public announcement of Dr. McGlynn's reconciliation, two priests, yet in Rome, but full of complaint against her assumptions, told the writer that if he should ever yield to pressure it would be proof of mental derangement. But as the Church is elastic when threatened by dangers, overtures may have been made which Dr. McGlynn may consider a complete vindication of himself. However, his guns are spiked, and so the outspoken priest, whose words blazed around the world, revealing the evil deeds of Roman dignitaries, will henceforth perform his sacerdotal functions with silent protest.

This Romish question is with us the question of the hour. Bishops have been arrayed against bishops; even archbishops have crossed swords in the arena. The school-question is one bone of contention. Shall there be parochial schools supported by the State where Catholicism will have rule, or shall the public schools be recognised by the Church? Many schemes of a compromising nature have been presented, but none are workable. Americans are very jealous of their free Institutions, and they who slight the public schools are tabooed as disloyal to the Republic. Foreign bishops are chiefly suspected, with their bevy of zealous myrmidons, while American Catholics stand under the Stars and Stripes.

The internal heat having come to boiling and to broils, priests and bishops have submitted their quarrels to ecclesiastical arbitration. In one notable instance a Father Corrigan, American in his ideas, has gained a signal victory over his bishop, whose German proclivities and practices called out Corrigan's opposition. The old method of summoning to Rome being tedious and expensive, the Pope has finally sent over his ablegate, Mgr. Satolli, who is now the Court of Appeal.

Satolli is feared by the foreign element. His rulings thus far are clearly square with American ideas. He it is who has restored Dr. McGlynn, having come armed with Papal authority. His decisions will not be repealed. Practically the Pope is here, and will possibly remain. Thousands of priests are, therefore, relieved who often prayed for an American Pope. Instead of going to Rome with their complaints, to lose both their case and their cash, Satolli comes to them. But shrewd heads look further than parish difficultics as the cause of this extraordinary movement on the part of Leo XIII. One fact is undisputed—viz., that many priests and people are leaving the Papal Church. Father O'Connor's house of shelter, in New York, is never empty. A few days ago we met there an American priest studying Church History and the Holy Scriptures; an Italian priest who had forsaken the faith of his fathers, and a French priest whose soul is yearning for the peace which Jesus gives. These are all intelligent men, who avouch that hundreds of priests would leave their Church to-morrow if they saw before them an open door of employment.

Our people have welcomed dear Mr. Moody home—home to the nation. Please do not borrow him again. Invitations are pouring in upon him, and soon the old combination of Moody and Sankey will be again at work in their great life business of preaching and singing the Gospel. Preachers of the rationalistic school have been disgusting the Christian people with their denials of answered prayer, criticising Mr. Moody for daring to express his conviction that the Spree was saved in answer to believing intercession. Even men who occupy pulpits of Evangelical churches have joined in the cry that Mr. Moody is mediæval and superstitious, and that we live in too intelligent an age for any to believe that God interferes with winds or waves, or steam power. But why refer to it? Alas! your own Britain has also suffered from German infidelity—nay, from the infidelity of the human heart. Surely, we must take heed lest there be in any of us an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God.

A NEW MAP.—With the January number of Relief is issued a map of England and Wales, illustrative of the expenditure upon stimulants at workhouses during the year 1891, as given in the latest Government return relating to this subject.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

AT Keene, New Hampshire, many conversions are reported.

The railroad branch of the Pittsburgh Y.M.C.A has lately been remarkably blessed.

The preliminary steps have been taken for the formation of an Association at Hendon.

More than a thousand conversions are reported by the Associations in Indiana during the past year.

Rev. A. Nathan has been holding special services, with good results, amongst young men in Nebraska.

The Adelaide Association has lately been making very special efforts on behalf of the rough boys of the city.

The annual meeting of the Haverhill Association was held recently. The attendance was one hundred. The reports were the best ever given.

Arrangements are in progress at the hands of the entertaining committee for the holding of the World's Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s in London in 1894.

Numerous testimonies have been received that the recent week of prayer (for young men) was remarkably blessed in the winning of the unconverted.

Mr. L. D. Wishard's addresses in Indiana and other States on his observations amongst young men during his recent tour round the world have aroused much interest.

The West Bromwich Association reports an addition of sixty-eight young men to its roll during the past six months. An effort is now in progress to free the building from debt.

A quarterly "open" meeting, for young women as well as young men, has been established by the Weston-super-Mare Association. At the first gathering there was a crowded attendance.

At Cuba (Ill.) special meetings were continued with good results two weeks after the week of prayer. The work of the Association is very encouraging, especially along the spiritual line.

The City of London Association News in its January issue has excellent portraits of Mr. Emerson Bainbridge, president of the Sheffield Association, and of Professor Agar Beet.

Mr. Holmes, missionary secretary to Egypt and Palestine, has organised work at Port Said and Cairo. He is now at Alexandria, where assistance in the formation of a branch has been rendered to him by Admiral Grant.

Mr. Wetmore, chairman of the International Committee, New York (for twenty-one years treasurer), has been compelled by pressure of business to resign. His place has been filled by Mr. E. B. Monroe, an old and tried friend of the Y.M.C.A.

The committee of the Bristol Y.M.C.A. pleads for the replenishing of the library with a good supply of standard and modern books, so that the institution may keep pace with the well-furnished free libraries of the city. The secretary is F. J. Rayner, St. James's-square, Bristol.

Mr. Robert McCann has completed his first tour amongst the Associations of the Bombay Presidency—viz., Bombay, Poona, Lanawli, Kolapor, Igatpuri, and Nasik. The Poona Association, second only in importance to the excellent institution in Bombay, is making rapid progress, and has funds in hand towards the erection of a building.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES.

THE Factory Helpers' Union report much recent encouragement in their work among the 200,000 work girls of the metropolis.

The City Y.W.C.A., Finsbury-square, issues an attractive prospectus for the New Year. The work here has lately been very encouraging.

The London Y.W.C.A. have issued a capital penny almanac, giving the daily readings for the year, and much matter useful to members and friends. Copies may be had from the head office, 316, Regent-street.

A Y.W.C.A. branch reports:—"Several of our members are actively engaged in a 'Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour,' started in the neighbourhood—two as Bible women—while some have devoted themselves to foreign mission work, and one to nursing in an Indian infirmary."

Anyone interested in a girl wishing to emigrate should write to Miss C. Hope, 7, Ovington Gardens, S.W., who, if the candidate prove suitable, will, by the aid of the United British Women's Emigration Society, see that she travels with a protected party under a suitable matron, and obtains a situation on arriving at the colony.

Rev. F. B. Meyer gave an earnest address at the annual tea, on January 3, of the members of the Sunday Bible Class in connection with the Hove branch. It is conducted by his sister, Miss Annie Meyer. There were about 250 members with their friends present. The class has a registered membership of 300.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THIRTY-ONE members of the Glasgow Town Council are abstainers.

The Speaker advocates the sale of licences to the highest bidder!

The foremost men in nearly all the Churches in Scotland are total abstainers.

The Welsh Temperance Union have passed a resolution demanding for the people an unfettered direct veto over the issue and re-issue of all drink licences.

The people of the State of Maine, after thirty-three years' experience of prohibition, have embodied that principle in their constitution, by a majority vote of 47,000.

The Duchess of Bedford has been an abstainer for fully eleven years, having become a member of a total abstinence society in 1881, when she was Marchioness of Tavistock.

Dr. Clouston, medical superintendent of the Royal Edinburgh Asylum, lecturing before the University students, strongly advocated total abstinence for people who desire to use their brains.

The W.C.T.A. is doing, at Manchester, a good work amongst barmaids and waitresses. Miss A. Finney is visiting such constantly, and already there are fifty pledged abstainers amongst them.

The annual report of the Chief Constable for Nottingham shows that the drink traffic plays a prominent part in the crime of that town, and is responsible for many of the offences committed.

The Good Templar Order is making steady progress in India, and doing good work in the cause of temperance and moral reform among a people who appear to be fully alive to the evils of intemperance.

A Band of Hope meeting was held recently on board the Arethusa training ship, when 160 boys assembled on the main deck to listen to an address from Mr. E. Welsh. Twenty afterwards came forward to sign the pledge.

There is a great demand for tickets for the meetings in Manchester, on January 23 and 24, when Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances E. Willard will speak under the auspices of the United Kingdom Alliance in the Free Trade Hall.

Arrangements are being made for the holding of a an important National Temperance Convention in Glasgow on January 17, which is expected to be a noteworthy demonstration of the unity, progress, and power of the temperance movement in Scotland.

Many of the cases of enteric fever at St. Mary's Hospital are treated throughout the whole of the attack without the use of alcoholic stimulants. It is the rule to avoid the giving of stimulants unless they are called for by special indications.—The Hospital.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P. for the Louth Division of Lincolnshire, has consented to take charge of the Sunday Closing Bill. Mr. H. Stevenson, M.P., who is abroad on account of his health, will not return to England until some time after the meeting of Parliament.

A missionary in Terra del Fuego writes with reference to the drink traffic: "It is just killing our people out here, body and soul; they are very weak, sober; very little drink makes them a toy, if I may use the word, in the hands of their enemies, to do as they like with."

A numerous company of London temperance workers assembled lately at Ling's Temperance Hotel, on the invitation of Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., to meet Messrs. John and Ebenezer Smedley, of Belper, who are starting for India in the interests of the temperance cause.

The Good Templars' Lodge at Zurich, Switzerland, instituted a year ago by Sister Miss Charlotte A. Gray, has now taken possession of a building hitherto used as licensed premises, and transformed it into a Good Templar Hall, with a public café and dining room attached.

In spite of sharp criticism prohibition goes on its beneficent course in the United States, and in spite of political defeat here and there, it proves itself to be the greatest success of this generation wherever the people of any State are intelligent and high-minded enough to put it in force.

The Duchess of Rutland's article in The New Review on "How Intemperance has been Successfully Combated," has been reprinted with additions in a sixpenny pamphlet by Messrs. Cassell and Co. In a concise form it describes the results of the best-known temperance efforts of recent times.

There is a Temperance Slate Club at West Ham, composed of fifty-five members. They pay 4d. per week, and when sick receive 10s. per week for ten weeks, and 5s. per week for ten weeks more. The sickness has been so small this year that, after paying all claims and secretary's salary, with 2s. in hand to start with next year, the members, at the distribution just made, shared 13s. per member, which speaks well for total abstinence.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

There is a proposal to make the island of St. Kilda a retreat for inebriates.

The Evangelical Alliance programme for the week of prayer was observed in Edinburgh.

At the monthly meeting of the Glasgow F.C. Presbytery, Dr. Stalker and other speakers made feeling reference to the loss sustained in the death of Dr. Bonar.

In the F.C. serial Youth for January, Principal Brown, of Aberdeen, gives some personal memories of the "Ten Years' Conflict" that preceded the Disruption.

Miss Maggie Grant, daughter of Mr. Grant, farmer, Dunscroft, Gartly, has been appointed to an important post in the Free Church Missionary College, Calcutta,

The Free Church Presbytery of Inverness have declined to carry out the provisions of the Declaratory Act, in connection with the form of subscription required of ministers entering the church.

Rev. Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, has given £250 to the Kirk session of the East Free Church, Brechin, to help any deserving young man in the congregation who wishes to study for the ministry of the Free Church.

At a musical meeting in connection with the Carrubber's Close Mission, Edinburgh, Dr. Macgregor declared his belief that the English and Scottish peoples are growing less drunken, less immoral, less criminal, and less irreligious.

In some parts of Scotland the publicans, as a rule, followed the recommendations of the magistrates, and closed their saloons on January 2. A great deal of excessive drinking, however, was observed among young people in Dundee during the holidays.

IRISH NOTES.

The week of prayer, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance, was observed last week in Belfast, Newry, Dublin, and various other towns and cities of Ireland.

Miss Fowler, of Liverpool, has given an extensive site and a sum of £15,000 to Rev. Dr. Stephenson to establish a branch of the Children's Home at Littlemount, near Enniskillen.

A farewell missionary meeting, to bid good-bye and God-speed to the first batch of seven young men going to Mr. Moody's Chicago Schools, will be held on January 23, in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin.

Evangelistic services have been held at Rountree's Hill, Portadown, by Revs. Wm. Maguire and Jas. Alley; and at Larne, Carrickfergus, and Castlefin, by Rev. W. A. Meaton, of the Irish Evangelical Society.

Several Methodist ministers are at present laid aside through illness, including Revs. W. G. Price, of Knock; Chas. Robertson, of Bandon; Wm. Sproule, of Wexford; and Colin M'Kay, of Ballymacarrett.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins conducted Gospel services in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, on Sunday week. A watch-night service was held on the Saturday evening in Merrion Hall. The evangelists are now in the South of Ireland.

A health society, having for its objects the promotion of personal and domestic cleanliness, self-denial, temperance, and the laws of health generally, has been formed in Belfast, with Rev. Dr. Hamilton, of Queen's College, as its president.

The thirty-ninth annual report of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland, which has just been issued, shows that the Society has now twenty-five colporteurs, sixteen in Belfast, five in Dublin, and four in Derry. These have found easy access to all classes during the year, and have had much encouragement in their work.

At a meeting of the University Temperance Society, recently held in Trinity College, Dublin, Professor Barrett said one great hindrance to temperance work was that so many people held shares in distilleries and breweries. He declared that unless the temperance question was soon boldly faced, Ireland would become bankrupt.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The Missionary Prayer Union in connection with West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, which has now been in existence for twelve months, held its fourth quarterly meeting on Sunday, January 1. The amount received for the last quarter is about £14, making the total for the year about £60. At the meeting, Pastor Geo. Wainwright stated that one of the young men in the church had offered himself to be the missionary to represent the Prayer Union, and about nine persons were appointed to act with the pastor as an executive to decide upon this application. The new year commences with considerable hopefulness.

BIBLE SOCIETY NOTES.

In the Republics of Chili and Peru excellent work in the circulation of the Scriptures is done by the Valparaiso Society. The British and Foreign Bible Society, as the most effective way of exerting its influence in these countries, subsidises the Valparaiso Society by an annual grant. A recent letter gives very satisfactory accounts for the year. The saltpetre "oficinas" of the north, as well as the seaports and inland towns, have been visited, and the colporteurs have been able to do a considerable amount of work—in some instances not only in the way of selling books, but organising for the study of the Scriptures little bands of those interested in the Gospel.

The demand for Scriptures, and other Christian literature, among the people of Uganda is—as one of the secretaries of the C.M.S. says in an application to the Bible Society—"quite phenomenal," and nothing can be more full of promise. In answer to the request conveyed, a supply of some of the epistles ready for transmission up country is being sent to Zanzibar. The Ganda New Testament is now rapidly approaching completion, and the first instalment of the Old Testament, in a translation of the Book of Joshua, has been received at the Bible House.

Mr. Cairns in Scotland.

Mr. G. R. Cairns has held an eight days' mission in the Victoria-street Baptist Church, Galashiels, Selkirkshire. Owing to so many counter attractions at this season of the year, the services were not so largely attended as they would otherwise have been. But from the first night it was apparent that the Spirit was at work. A great number professed to have received the Saviour. As the result of the meetings we had seven baptisms last Sabbath, and have other ten applications for Sabbath first.

We have had quite a revival, and expect still more results from Mr. Cairns' visit.

George Thomson, Sec.

Ragged School Union.

The workers at the Camberwell Ragged School met on Monday evening for a conference and social meeting, when the various departments of effort were passed under review, and a stirring "Forward" address was delivered by Mr. Bonny, the chairman. Wednesday evening saw a large gathering of infants around a heavily-laden Christmas tree. Warm garments were given to the most ragged guests.

The Assembly Hall, Mile End, was filled with a merry party on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, when some 5000 poor children, gathered by the Ragged School Union, were entertained by a monster Christmas tree, with abundance of good things provided by the editors and readers of The Pall Mall Gazette and Budget.

Jewish New Year Teas.

On Tuesday and Wednesday last week, in the new Central Jewish Mission Hall, Whitechapel, New Year's treats were given by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews—on the first evening to 350 men and women, and on the second to 400 children. Mr. Wilkinson and his helpers took care that the Gospel was fully and clearly set forth at both gatherings. A worker says: "After tea the children delighted their teachers by intelligently answering questions put to them on what they had learnt in Scripture. One girl, aged ten, recited John iii., another Isaiah liii.; two children, aged respectively four and five, sang 'Jesus loves me, this I know.' Several hymns and a carol were heartily sung, and we felt it indeed a privilege to hear from infantile Jewish lips the praises of Jesus."

Christian Friend Society.

A New Year's treat was given on Monday week at the Temporary Chapel, Well-street, adjacent to the Sailors' Home, at which some 300 sailors, drawn from the docks and wharves, were present. A large number sat down to a hearty tea, after which a public meeting was held. Rev. G. J. Hill expressed the hope that the next New Year's Day would be spent in the larger and more comfortable building the Society was erecting, at a cost of £6000, half of which sum was in hand; he wished God would put it into the heart of some rich merchant or shipowner to enable the Society to open the new premises free of debt. Other addresses were given, and several seamen testified to the happiness they had experienced from a changed life since attending the services at the chapel and kindred places.

At the close of the festival many signed the pledge, and quite a number professed a desire and intention to lead a changed life.

Letters to the Editor.

THE BIBLE IN THE SCHOOL.

Sir,—In these days of Bible criticism and godless education, it surely is very refreshing to see such words as the following in an interesting leading article in The Standard, of Dec. 23, on the late Conference of Head Masters on Education:—

"Let the head masters take heart and go on bravely and hopefully on the old lines of Bible reading. The interpretation of the particular passage may be forgotten, but the whole spirit and drift of the story unfolded in the pages of that grandest of all Books remains throughout the life of the man his best possession and noblest inspiration."

The whole article is worth reading, but I think every true lover of his Bible will feel thankful for such words in one of our leading daily papers.

Yours faithfully,

Francis Palin.

St. Alban's-road, Willesden, N.W.

VIVISECTION.

Sir,—Will you allow me space for a short reply to "H.'s" letter on "Vivisection" in your issue of December 29? Taking his suggestions seriatim, I would answer:

1. That nobody would attend illustrated lectures on so painful a subject.

2. That great exception was taken to the diagrams posted about some years ago, owing to the bad effect they were supposed to have upon the nerves of delicate women and children.

3. That a great number of articles and letters are appearing on the subject of scientific cruelty at the present moment, but of course fresh openings for discussion of the question should be constantly sought.

4. That as even the slight protection afforded to poor animals by the Vivisection Act is nullified by the present method of its administration, M.P.'s should be pressed by their constituents to thoroughly investigate the matter with a view to reform. (Be it noted, by the way, that it is competent for any "non-medical man" to vivisect if he provides himself with the necessary licence, and subject to this condition he incurs no possible punishment.)

A list of non-vivisecting hospitals can be obtained from any anti-vivisection society.—Yours faithfully,

X.

A HOME FOR FRIENDLESS BOYS.

Mr. W. L. Engelhardt, for some years manager of the "Carter Home" for destitute boys, Hide-street, Clapham, has, within the past few months, founded another Home for a similar object at Garfield House, West Barnes Lane, New Malden, Surrey. He has begun this new work in faith, renouncing worldly prospects, and defraying, for the first year, the expenses to a large extent out of his own private means. This Home, which began with seven boys, now numbers twenty-four, which already is a large family to clothe, feed, and care for. The Hon. Secretary of this institution is Miss Smith, 17, Chelsham-road, Clapham, S.W.

It is to be hoped that the Lord's stewards will show practical sympathy with this new movement, which is constituted on industrial and unsectarian lines; the object is to reclaim to society and to the Saviour lads that otherwise might drift with the stream. We are sure Mr. Engelhardt would welcome a visit from any friends in sympathy with this form of relief and prevention work, where both body and soul are cared for; and would be grateful for any subscriptions or donations, which he himself or the Hon. Sec. would receive.

Odiham, Hampshire.

Dr. Barnes, M.A., formerly head master of the Grammar School in this town, has concluded a week of evangelistic effort. The afternoon Bible readings on Assurance of Salvation (based on John vi. 37-40) were seasons of much spiritual blessing and help to God's children; while the evening meetings were well and increasingly attended. The power of the Spirit was manifested throughout; every day some professed decision for Christ. On the concluding evening many stood up and testified that the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ was indeed the power of God to salvation. "I've been to church and taken the sacrament ever since I can remember, and yet I always knew there was something wanting, and now I thank my Heavenly Father I've got it," said an old man of 74.

Much prayer is asked for this place, and for a blessing on the work of the local colporteur; that an abundant harvest may be reaped from the sowing just concluded.

Obituary.

CANON M'NEILE.

Canon Edward Hugh McNeile, vicar of St. Paul's, Prince's-park, Liverpool, died on Sunday evening, after a few days' illness, of pneumonia, supervening on pleurisy, the result of a neglected cold. Deceased was about fifty years of age, and was son of the late Dean of Ripon, Dr. Hugh McNeile. Canon McNeile was a prominent member of the Liverpool School Board.

MR. W. I. PALMER, READING.

We sincerely regret to record the death of this well-known and universally esteemed Christian philanthropist and temperance reformer, after a brief illness. As we hope to give his portrait and a sketch of his public life in our next issue, we do not at present enter into any details. He will be sorely missed, not only in Reading, where he resided, but throughout the south of England.

MRS. H. W. SOLTAU.

Many who recall with thankfulness the late Mr. H. W. Soltau, whose labours as a teacher were so highly valued, and whose children have done and are now doing useful service in the East, in France, and at home, all such will hear with sympathy and sorrow of the death, at the age of eighty years, of his beloved widow, Lucy Tate Soltau, who passed peacefully to rest on Thursday last at Elm-road, Beckenham.

MR. W. J. PAUL, J.P., PORTADOWN.

The death of Mr. W. J. Paul, of Portadown, inflicts not only a serious loss on the Methodist church with which he was identified, but on the whole community. The deceased had been for many years a devoted class leader, an earnest Sabbath-school teacher, and a visitor of the sick, the poor, and the erring. He used to follow the drunkard to his own home, and try to encourage him by sympathy and exhortation to lead a sober, godly life. His kindness to the needy will never be known, and this class will sorely miss him. In his own home he was a model employer and father. He was most solicitous for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the young people under his roof.

REV. JOSEPH ACHESON.

This aged minister passed peacefully away on Wednesday week at the advanced age of eighty-six. Having for some years retired from active labour at Castlecaulfield, he had gone to reside at Larne, where he fell asleep. We learn that during the Revival of 1859 he entered heartily into the stirring work that was then going on, and in conjunction with the rector of the parish conducted united services, which were a great blessing to the neighbourhood. After a happy and singularly useful ministry of forty-three years, he retired from active duty. His aim was pure, his piety simple, his nature genial, his temperament placid, and his life, as the outcome of all, blameless and influential. When called to help he knew no creed, and was as popular with his Roman Catholic neighbours as with his Protestant ones. For over sixty years ardent spirits had not crossed his lips, and he not unnaturally considered himself with pride the surviving father of the temperance cause in Ireland.

Marchmont Home, Belleville.

A SUMMARY of work carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Bilborough Wallace among the children at Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ontario, has reached us. It is stated that "the Lord graciously permits us to see from time to time the fruit of our labour, and we are encouraged by receiving letters telling of boys and girls turning to the Lord, and accepting the Saviour they have so often heard of in the old home. Our family of ither folks' bairns numbered 208 this year—not quite so many as last, but still sufficient to keep heart, and head, and hands busy. Applications were never more numerous or urgent, giving us the choice of many homes, and enabling us to give each boy and girl a really good start in life, under conditions favourable to a happy and successful future."

Extracts from the Home Diary are given, showing how funds are supplied, how constant communication is kept up with the boys and girls placed out, and illustrating the varied experiences of such service for the children.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, GIBRALTAR.—On the Monday succeeding Christmas Day, a most successful gathering of soldiers and friends took place at this institute. During the evening a number of young soldiers testified to the grace of God, which they had personally experienced. Several pledges were taken at the close. The work of the institute is conducted on evangelical and undenominational lines, and has been blessed to souls. Those willing to share in this good work should address the Hon. Sec., Colonel Clark, Essendene, The Downs, Wimbledon.

Personalia.

Rev. James Spurrell, who died in July of last year, leaving £580,000, bequeathed to charitable purposes £181,500.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers has, on attaining his seventieth birthday, received hearty and loving congratulations from many who revere him for his work's sake.

Rev. R. M'Cheyne Edgar, M.A., the Moderator of the General Assembly in Ireland, has been seriously ill since his return from America, but is now able to resume his labours.

Professor Sawyer, for some years principal of Mr. Moody's Mount Hermon School, and well known to many friends in this country, has been appointed Professor of Biblical and Ethical Science in the Tongaloo (Miss.) University.

Rev. R. J. Ward writes from Aden, en voyage for India, describing life on board the s.s. Peshawur with a party of no less than eighteen missionaries. Delightful Bible readings were being led by Messrs. Ward, Wilder, Winston, and others.

Miss M. F. Cusack.—Some friends are endeavouring to raise a fund for the personal needs of this lady, who literally left all for Christ when she shook herself free of the Church of Rome. We doubt not many friends of liberty and Reformation truth will count it a privilege to join in this tribute.

Rev. John Robertson, of Gorbals Tabernacle, Glasgow, has been requested by Mr. Moody to join him this summer in the evangelistic services at the World's Fair in Chicago. Mr. Robertson has agreed to go; subject to the consent of his Presbytery, as it will entail his absence from his congregation for the four months from July to the beginning of November.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, whose sad bereavement we reported last week, will remain for a short time in England, during which he will be glad of opportunities to tell the story of God's wonderful work in Tongoa. He illustrates his lecture by means of a large number of excellent slides from original photographs, and a powerful limelight lantern. His present address is 89, Grosvenor-road, Canonbury, N.

Mr. Fairweather, who has received a unanimous call from the congregation at Regent-square Presbyterian Church, is a young man of great promise. At present he is pastor of the church at Kinfauns, in Forfarshire, and though he has been only eighteen months in the ministry, he is known in the North of Scotland as an eloquent and learned preacher. Mr. Fairweather studied at Edinburgh University, where he had a distinguished career.

Mr. W. Lethaby embarked from Liverpool on January 1 for Alexandria, where he will confer with friends as to proceeding farther. Mrs. Lethaby hopes to return to Jerusalem en route for Moab at the end of February to rejoin Miss Arnold and the other workers there. Mr. Forder is busy in earnest toil, and Miss Bowyer also is finding how great is the need of work among the women and girls. Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby desire to thank friends in this country for interest shown in the past, and crave a continued place in their prayerful remembrance.

Rev. J. Mountain (Compiler of "Hymns of Consecration and Faith"), who has been for the last four years the minister of Emmanuel Church, Tunbridge Wells (Countess of Huntingdon's), is about to relinquish his pastorate shortly. Mr. Mountain's reason for leaving his present important sphere, where he is much esteemed and beloved, is that his views on baptism have undergone a change. He now seeks to be associated in practical work with some congregation where the baptisms of believers by immersion is recognised. Mr. Mountain's address is Emmanuel Parsonage, Tunbridge Wells.

A Band of Bible Students.—Now that Dr. Andrew Bonar is gone (says The Daily Mail), there remain but few survivors of that company of eighteen fellow students who (as recorded in his memoir of M'Cheyne) met every Saturday morning in Edinburgh from 1832 onwards for several years for Biblical study. Perhaps the wonder rather is that out of so small a company there should still be four survivors. "'Tis sixty years since." Dr. Patrick Borrowman still lives in retirement at Aberdour; another of the band is Rev. Dr. Thomas Brown, author of "The Annals of the Disruption," Moderator of the Free Church in 1890; a third is Rev. W. B. Clarke, once minister of Half-Morton, in the Presbytery of Langholm, now living in Quebec; and the remaining member is Rev. Dr. William Laughton, formerly minister of St. Thomas's Church, Greenock, and Moderator of Assembly in 1881.

Mr. E. J. Kennedy, Exeter Hall.—In our note in this column last week there were some mis-statements which we very gladly correct. Mr. Kennedy informs us that the report of his interview with one of the staff of Pearson's Weekly was not submitted to him in proof as promised, and consequently the article was unseen by him until publication. He did not, as represented, describe another London association as "one of our branch establishments." With respect to our statement that "he is only secretary to the Exeter Hall Institution" we are informed that, in addition to being general secretary of the Exeter Hall Association, he is hon. sec. of the English Y.M.C.A. National Council, of which body Mr. W. H. Mills is secretary, and one of the hon. secretaries of the Metropolitan Council of Y.M.C.A.'s, conjointly with Mr. Hind Smith and Mr. Mills. Nothing was further from our wish than to do Mr. Kennedy any injustice, and we regret having been misled by the statements in Pearson's Weekly, from which we quoted.

THE LOST SHEEP.

Luke xv., 3—7.

THE ninety-and-nine in the wilderness may represent the present shepherdless condition of the Jews as a nation, they having received Him not (Jo. i. 12). He seeks to save the lost (Luke xix. 10, Rom. xi. 11). We might notice here:—

I. A SAD DISCOVERY.—"One lost." Immediately the Shepherd's heart goes after "that which is lost" (Gen. iii. 9). Such is grace. To be lost is just to be outside the fold, following our own desires, instead of the Shepherd (Jo. x. 27).

II. A LOVING PURPOSE.—"He leaves . . . and goes after." Herein is love. "He who was rich, for our sakes became poor, etc." (2 Cor. viii. 9).

III. A PATIENT SEARCH.—"Until He finds." He was weary with his journey (Jo. iv. 4), but he shall see of the travail of his soul (Isa. liii. 11).

IV. A JOYFUL FINDING.—"He layeth it on his shoulder rejoicing." No rod used. No reproach given. He rejoiceth with singing (Zeph. iii. 17).

V. A RESTFUL JOURNEY.—"On his shoulders." The place of safety, and the place of rest. How sweet to be alone with the Shepherd. "He knoweth the way" (Deut. xxxiii. 12).

VI. A HAPPY HOME.—"When he cometh home," etc. He does not leave the lost one in the wilderness, "I will never leave thee." His joy is not complete until he gets the found one into his own home (John xiv. 3).

J. SMITH.

Mr. Fay Mills at Omaha.

THIS evangelist has closed a united mission in the Exposition Hall, Omaha. At the first meeting of the series every seat in the building was filled soon after the doors were opened. One of the most important meetings as to immediate results was a meeting for pastors and Sunday-school workers, on Saturday evening. It was like a council of war just before an important battle. Plans were laid to make the Sunday-school session in all of the allied churches meetings for prayer and inquiry, giving the teachers an opportunity to invite each scholar to accept Christ as a personal Saviour. It has since appeared that pastors and teachers spent much of that night in prayer, and on the Sabbath following they saw wonderful answers to their prayers. In some classes all of the scholars who were not members of the Church signed the special cards provided for the occasion. On the same Sunday Mr. Mills addressed two large congregations of young people at Exposition Hall.

But the most striking service was a meeting for men on the evening of the same Sunday. The hall was uncomfortably full, many standing in the aisles and passages, and hundreds were unable to gain admittance. Many of those who sat or stood through a long service were not of the church-going class; but they listened to a plain Gospel with evident interest, and at the after meeting 300 cards were signed.

DOLLS FOR MISSION SCHOOLS.—A free holiday in Switzerland! The January issue of The Review of the Churches contains an offer which may well commend itself to some of our readers. One free ticket and five at half-price for the Young People's Gathering at Lucerne (which Dr. Lunn is organising in connection with the second Reunion Conference next summer) are to be awarded to those who send in the best-dressed dolls. All the dolls will be forwarded by Mrs. Lunn to the different missionary societies for their mission schools in India and China. Mrs. Lunn worked actively in these schools when in India, and she knows, as does every missionary worker, how real is the value of such a contribution. Many a Brahmin girl will prolong her education an extra twelve months for the sake of obtaining a real English doll! The Review contains all particulars, and those who are not prize-winners will have the satisfaction of doing really good work for the missionary cause. The judges will be Mrs. Lunn, Mrs. Buckland (wife of Rev. A. R. Buckland), and Mrs. W. J Dawson, of Highbury.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. G. W. Woodhouse, vicar of Albrighton, near Shifnal, Salop, has just entered on his ninety-fourth year.

It is stated that Dr. G. Wright, now on his way home from Uganda, nearly lost his life through blackwater fever.

Rev. Dr. Allan, who recently resigned the living of St. James's, Bermondsey, has accepted the Vicarage of St. Mary's, Bungay.

Rev. W. C. Ingram, vicar of St. Matthew's, Leicester, and Honorary Canon of Peterborough, has been appointed Dean of Peterborough.

The Bishop Suffragan of Nottingham, Dr. Edward Trollope, has just completed his fiftieth year as rector of Leasingham, near Sleaford.

Rev. W. H. Stone, labouring at St. James's, Hatcham, finds it necessary to erect a brick mission church, the present building being much too small.

"The Apology of Aristides" was the subject of the second lecture in Norwich Cathedral, delivered last Thursday evening by Rev. J. Armitage Robinson, B.D.

The newly-appointed vicar of St. Thomas's, Huddersfield (Rev. S. Swire), announces that arrangements have been made whereby the sittings will be free and open.

The Gold Coast Chronicle says that Canon Taylor Smith has been holding special mission services in the Court-house, James Town, Accra, which have been fully attended.

Rev. W. A. Challacombe, M.A., after four years' faithful work as curate of Christ Church, Dover, has just left for the vicarage of New Malden, to which he has been appointed by the trustees.

The prospects for the coming F.S.M. (February Simultaneous Meetings in connection with the C.M.S.) seem encouraging, the arrangements being taken up heartily in many quarters.

Prebendary Stephenson, of Lympsham, has celebrated the jubilee of his ministerial life. He has been rector of Lympsham since 1844. Few incumbencies of such duration are now chronicled.

A new organisation is being formed with the object of providing services for Church people unable any longer to attend their parish church. It is to be called the Church Protestant Aid Society.

Rev. G. Hemming, in entering on the vicarage at Hotwells, Bristol, preached a vigorously Evangelical sermon, declaring he had accepted the charge in the firm resolve, "I will go in the strength of the Lord God."

The King of Ukerewe, at whose instigation Smith and O'Neill, of the first Uganda party, lost their lives, has again asked that the English teacher at Nassa should come and help his people. From Nassa itself, where Natanieli, a native from Uganda, has been working with so much success, there is most encouraging news of progress.

The Sheffield Clerical Society has selected the following subjects for discussion at the monthly meetings during the current half-year:—(1) The Church of Christ: its Foundation and Security; (2) What Doctrines of Rome were Rejected by the Church of England at the Reformation, and for what Reasons? (3) What do Dissenters lose by Separation from the Church of England? (4) The Unity of the Church of Christ as set forth in John xvii.; (5) The Apocrypha: its Origin, Characteristics, and Teaching; (6) Our Lord's Use of the Title "Son of Man."

Rev. J. Lancaster, of Holy Trinity, Worthing, has issued an interesting report showing good progress and much blessing in the work of the Church. He remarks: "We hear a great deal said in this day of the decay of Evangelical truth, and that the Protestants are shortly to be extinct or reverently buried. The past ten years point to nothing like decay, nor can I detect the seeds of consumption in the body corporate. Protestantism will live and prosper so long as it derives its vitality from the Holy Ghost and an open Bible. We have just had a most blessed mission. Souls have been converted to God, and my ministry has been most fruitful in the salvation of souls."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. D. Stephen, of Boston, has accepted the pastorate at Hinckley.

Rev. D. Bloomfield James, of Wimbledon, has resigned his charge.

Rev. Samuel Pearson commenced his ministry at Tynemouth on Sunday week.

Rev. James Johnston, of Bolton, has accepted the pastorate of Hollins-grove Church, Darwen.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has conducted an eight days' mission at New Shildon Congregational Church.

Rev. F. F. Longman, of Calcutta, has, owing to the state of his health, been transferred by the L.M.S. to Almora.

The Hon. Cecil J. Rhodes, Premier of Cape Colony, has given £200 towards the cost of erecting a new church at Inyati, Matabeleland.

At the New Year's Communion service at Latimer Chapel, East London, twenty new members were received into the fellowship of the Church.

It is intended shortly to celebrate the jubilee of the Lancashire Independent College. The number of students now in residence is forty-three.

The Christian Band in connection with the Crescent-road Church, Liverpool, are providing Sunday morning free breakfasts for starving children.

During the pastorate of Rev. William Glover at the Heaton-road Congregational Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, thirty new members have been received into fellowship. All the institutions of the church are in a flourishing condition.

The directors of the Independent College, Taunton, are offering three scholarships of £25, £20, and £15 each, to be competed for in the present month, and thereafter in Sept. each year. Particulars can be had of the Principal, Rev. F. W. Aveling.

It is remarkable that during the past year the Congregational Union of England and Wales has lost four expresidents by death—Revs. Dr. Allon, Dr. Conder, and Dr. Thomas earlier in the year, and finally Dr. Falding, whose death we announced last week.

At Carr's-lane, Birmingham, the motto for 1893 is Heb. x. 24, 25: "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together." Dr. Dale founded his sermon upon this passage on the first Sunday morning of the year.

It is stated that Cavendish College, Cambridge, is to be converted into an undenominational training college. Homerton College, which was founded as a Congregational training college, but which has recently been converted into an undenominational establishment, will shortly be removed to Cavendish.

Rev. G. S. Barrett's motto sermon for the New Year, preached in Prince's-street Church, Norwich, was from the text, "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God." The sermon, says a correspondent, was inspiring and helpful. It was shown that the highest form of good was in being, not in having; in wealth of heart, in aspiration after the pure, the holy, the Divine—in moral and spiritual character—in sympathy with and conformity to the will of God.

Rev. J. L. Green, in a letter to the directors of the London Missionary Society, tells of a visit paid to Rev. J. Ketley, in Georgetown, Demerara, by about twenty aboriginal Indians, led by a converted Portuguese. "They had travelled over a thousand miles right away from the interior, near the Brazilian frontier, and had taken seven weeks in coming. These all sought baptism, and pleaded very hard for a missionary, guaranteeing a congregation of one thousand persons every Sunday."

Mr. Harold Wills, who went from Bristol to Travancore in connection with mission work, writes home announcing his arrival on the frontier line of Travancore, where he and his party were received with joyous demonstration by a number of natives, who had walked many miles from Trevandrum—the destination of the English missionaries—to receive them. These natives bore innumerable garlands of flowers with which, according to their custom, they decorated Mr. Wills and his comrades till they were quite burdened with floral tributes.

BAPTIST.

An iron church has been erected at Lillie-road, Fulham.

We hear of the safe arrival of Rev. and Mrs. Thomas at Delhi.

Mr. Tranter, of the Pastor's College, has accepted the pastorate at Great Driffield.

Rev. B. W. Jackson, of Queen's-road Chapel, Dalston, has accepted the pastorate at Castle-green, Bristol.

Rev. B. Moir Duncan gives in The Missionary Herald a graphic account of missionary travelling in Shensi.

Dr. and Mrs. Percy Webb (designated for Walham Station) and Mr. G. R. Pope (for Stanley Pool) left for the Congo on Saturday last.

Mr. John J. Hargreaves, senior student of Rawdon College, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the Baptist Chapel, Great George-street, Salford.

At Mare-street Chapel, Hackney, Rev. Evan Thomas on Sunday week welcomed into church fellowship twenty-six young people—some of very tender years.

The Baptist Missionary Society is forming a Centenary Prayer Union, in the hope that this New Year may be one of unusually fervent prayer, and consequently of unusual blessing.

Rev. J. Bell Johnstone has concluded a series of evangelistic services at Peterhead, N.B. Much blessing has been received by God's people, and not a few have given themselves to Christ.

At the thirtieth anniversary of the church at Maindee, Newport, Mon., cheering reports were presented from the church, the Sunday-school, band of hope, men's Bible-class, the Dorcas Society, and other organisations.

We hear of the safe arrival of Rev. R. W. and Mrs. Hay, from Dacca, East Bengal. The condition of Mr. Hay was so grave prior to his leaving India that the medical authorities ordered his immediate voyage to England.

Pastor W. C. Minifie, of Arthur-street Chapel, Camberwell, has received and accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Lansdowne Baptist Church, Bournemouth, and will commence his ministry there on Easter Sunday.

The United Methodist Church at Banwell has been purchased by the Bristol Baptist Association, and a new cause has been formed under the designation of Hope Church, the pulpit being supplied by the Bristol Itinerant Society.

Rev. J. J. Turner, of Tai Yuen Fu, Shansi, North China, in consequence of ill-health and pressing family circumstances, has been compelled to return home, and for twelve months at least will have to remain in England.

In the January number of the monthly magazine issued from Woodberry Down Chapel, N., Mr. Hay Morgan, the pastor, says he thinks it may be necessary to put a placard on the platform for the Wednesday evening meetings with the words "He won't bite," as the people persist in getting as far away from the speaker as they can.

The other Sunday evening Rev. J. E. Bennett, pastor of the "Thomas Cooper Memorial," Lincoln, preached specially to young men, the subject being, "The Young Man of to-day and the Bible." A goodly number of young men assembled to listen to the sermon. At the close Mr. Bennett invited any of the young men, who had difficulties in connection with the Bible, to state them. This invitation was promptly responded to by several, who publicly questioned the preacher on his address. The questions were clearly answered by Mr. Bennett.

METHODIST.

The P.S.A. Saturday evenings at Beverley are reported "a grand success."

The Wesleyan Middle-class Schools at Ealing have been burned to the ground.

A series of enthusiastic missionary meetings have been held in various chapels in the Gresley circuit.

The Clapton Mission has had a very busy fortnight, making special efforts among the unemployed.

A new chapel at Boscombe is to be erected at a cost of £2765, and a tender for the same has been accepted.

The Methodist Times has been enlarged from sixteen to twenty-four pages, and many improvements introduced.

A new chapel is to be erected at Hoyland Common, near Barnsley, and about £500 has already been promised towards the cost.

A new chapel with school will be erected at Bolton-on-Dearne at a cost of £1200, the present buildings being inconvenient and uncomfortable.

The Leeds Young People's African Missionary Society, which is doing good service, has just held a united public meeting with good results.

It is proposed to place in Wesley's Chapel a memorial to Mrs. Burgess, Rev. J. E. Malkin, and others who perished in the wreck of the Roumania.

The accounts published of the Christmas and New Year gatherings in connection with the West London Mission show that the highest expectations have been exceeded.

At the Evangelists' Home a welcome has been given to two young men, who join as the direct fruit of the labour of one of the evangelists. It was the privilege of Mr. Ellis to lead them to Christ during his mission in the Isle of Man. To-day they are here preparing to do a similar work.

Some years ago the late Mr. J. Clarkson Kay left a legacy of £250 towards the cost of a new chapel at Pits-o'-th'-Moor, near Bury, on condition that the work was commenced within ten years, and as the period is nearing expiration the congregation have secured a site in Pine-street, and will at once commence building.

A great demonstration in connection with the Wesleyan London Mission was held in Wesley's Chapel, City-road, on Monday week. In every part the building was crowded. The interest of the audience was maintained to the end by Revs. Dr. Stephenson, H. Price Hughes, W. D. Walters, Peter Thompson, and J. E. Wakerley.

Dr. Wenyon, of China, states that at the Missionary Hospital at Fatshan, South China, between two and three thousand patients have been under medical treatment during the past year. At Shiukwan, Dr. Macdonald has had some two thousand under his medical care. Both hospitals are self-supporting, the fees at the former amounting to 2,500 dollars. The other Wesleyan medical missions are at Hankow, Wuchang, and Teh Ngan.

The League of the Children's Friends, in connection with Dr. Stephenson's work, makes satisfactory progress. New branches have been formed in Liverpool, Birkenhead, Derby, Gainsborough, and other parts of the country. The Gordon Hall Mission is being prosecuted with vigour. At the Wesleyan Deaconess Institute, which is entirely independent of the Children's Home, both as to its funds and management, there is still a need for suitable candidates to become probationers.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new church is about to be erected in Guernsey.

Mr. William Williams, Llywesog Hall, has presented a site for a chapel at Morfa Bael.

The Presbyterian Sunday-school Union will hold its meeting this day at Nechells, Birmingham.

Rev. J. Reid Howatt has been appointed Presbyterian editor of The Review of the Churches, in succession to the late Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser.

The church at Branton appears from the report presented at its anniversary to be in a flourishing condition, and doing vigorous work.

Rev. A. Connell, of Westbourne-grove, delivered, on Sunday afternoon, the monthly Gaelic sermon in Crown-court Church, Covent Garden.

In Presbyterian circles some anxiety is being expressed as to the funds for the support of the Jewish Mission, which at present threatens a deficit.

The Regent-square congregation have resolved to call Rev. D. Fairweather, of Kinfauns. Mr. Thomas Mackay has been appointed assistant and missionary at Regent-square.

The jubilee of the Birmingham Sunday-school Union has proved very encouraging; and in connection Dr. Dykes preached a special sermon to teachers at Broad-street, Birmingham.

The special collection towards Bala Theological College has been taken up in earnest. Already close upon £10,000 has been promised, nearly £3,000 of which comes from the Welsh churches of Liverpool.

The St. John's Wood Women's Missionary Association held a meeting on Tuesday week, which was addressed by Mrs. H. Erle, of South Africa, on the work done at Johannesberg and the Natal goldfields.

From the Camden-road Church notes we learn that the past year has been marked by decided advance in the work of the Leighton-road Mission. The congregation has also opened a new mission-room in York-road.

A meeting was held last week in Glasgow at which a large and representative committee was formed, to take such steps as might be necessary for the purpose of preparing for the meeting of the Council of the Presbyterian Alliance which is to be held in Glasgow in 1896.

The treasurership committee of the Presbyterian Church in England call very special attention to the state of the Sustentation Fund, the primary object of which is to secure a suitable stipend for every minister in the Church, and, as far as possible, an equality of stipend from the fund.

The English chapel built at Tonypandy, Rhondda Valley, some five years ago, has already become too small, and the public hall has been engaged for the Sunday services. The last few Sundays even the hall, which will seat 1,000 persons, has been crowded. A movement is on foot to erect a large temporary building to meet the requirements.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A committee of four Friends is to be appointed to join other Nonconformist bodies in watching over the interests of truth, both from a social and parliamentary point of view.

The Essayist is a new monthly paper beginning with the year, and is not to deal with learning or controversial themes but in the solaces of life, of books, pictures, and quiet enjoyment.

William Smythe, of Rochester, has just set out to join a French Friend in visiting parts of the south-west of France where an opening appears for spiritual work. The law of conscription makes it extremely difficult for Friends to spread in European countries, though peace is being ably advocated at present, and the citadel of the war god is doubtless being undermined to his ultimate fall.

At the meeting for Sufferings this day week very touching reference was made to the death of several Friends, especially to the irreparable loss sustained not only by the Church but by the poor widows and orphans, and by the great temperance cause generally, by the unexpected death of Wm. Isaac Palmer, J.P., of Reading. Different parts of England are thus being bereaved. In the north, George Tatham, Alfred Pryer, and Thomas Emmott; and southward and westward Wm. I. Palmer and Saml. J. Lury.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Colombo, Ceylon, aged seventy-six, Mr. A. M. Ferguson, of the Ceylon Observer, known to many missionaries passing through on their way to other fields as a generous and sympathising host.—At Chelmsford, aged seventy-nine, Mr. John Hall, a devoted member and worker of the Congregational Church.—At Southampton, Mr. William Beer, for years one of the leaders in Christian work, specially at Carlton Baptist Chapel.—At Congleton, on 1st inst., Rev. Joseph Moore, who was appointed to go with Dr. Moffatt to Africa, but afterwards went to Tahiti.—At Chelmsford, somewhat suddenly, on 1st inst., Mr. Henry Brown, aged forty-six, a valued town missionary.—At Rochdale, aged thirty-two, Mr. H. H. Scott, superintendent of the Sunday-school at West-street, and known and loved by Christians of all denominations for his active service.—At Derby, Mr. James Meakin, for thirty years a useful preacher of the Gospel.—At Rawcliffe Bridge, Goole, Mr. John Beachell, very suddenly, while taking part in the services in the Wesleyan Chapel.—At Wellington, on 31st ult., Alderman Groom, J.P., a helper in the Lord's work.—At Birmingham, on 1st inst., Alderman Downing, a valued local preacher.—At St. John's Park, Upper Holloway, on 2nd inst., Rev. The following is translated from an official notice that has been posted from Bombay:—

At present the right of selling children's (opium) pills has been given to the Bombay opium contractors, and such pills can be bought of all the Government opium shops in Bombay.

This painfully confirms the statements and reflections of Miss Soonderbai Powar in another column.

The other day the magistrates of Wisbech inflicted a fine upon a man who was charged with having publicly used profane oaths. We can only regret that similar action is not taken in other places. It is too evident that the habit of swearing is largely on the increase; and as there is an Act of Parliament which was specially framed for the suppression of profanity, there is no reason why steps should not be taken by the authorities to repress an evil which is developing to a great extent in our midst. Perhaps, however, the more Christian method would be first personally to remonstrate with the offender.

Dr. Westcott, the Bishop of Durham, who a little while ago brought about a settlement of the Durham coal miners' strike, has since shown much personal sympathy with the workers. After having made himself acquainted with life in the mines, his chaplain having accompanied him in the inspection of the deepest workings, he has been visiting the miners in their homes, especially in districts where the surroundings are not of a satisfactory nature. These visits will be valuable on both sides, for if the toilers benefit from his practical kindness and sympathy, Dr. Westcott on his side will gain a close knowledge of the life led by myriads of those upon whose labour so much of our comfort and prosperity depends.

The question of the alien immigrant has lately been forcing itself upon the public mind, and, difficult as the subject may be, the time is rapidly approaching when its consideration as of national importance cannot any longer be delayed. Mr. J. Lowther, M.P., has notified his intention to bring the matter before Parliament with the view of bringing about prompt and decisive action on the part of the Government. We trust, however, that when the subject is dealt with it will not be forgotten that if there are economic and sanitary conditions concerned, there are equally important if not higher considerations involved which can be treated only from the standpoint of our Christianity.

Amongst the opinions expressed in "The Life of Mrs. Booth" is a sharp condemnation of what are called "Miniature Missions" carried on in "isolated mission halls," concerning which it is said that "the first deviation from the laws of common-sense consists in their separation of themselves from every organised section of Christ's host." These mission-halls appear to us to be simply on the footing of "Independent Churches," and it is at least open to question whether they would be stronger for being attached to any "organised section of Christ's host." There is no record of the Apostle Paul having formed the churches into organised sections; nor was the Apostle John directed to address his Epistles to an organised section, but to seven independent churches, which yet represented in their unity the one Church of God.

But without discussing the advantages or otherwise of "organised sections," we are bound to say in defence of independent missions, that in the East and West of London they compare favourably with the Salvation Army, as to "continuity of effort," "continuity of doctrine," or "continuity" of results. Some of the best-instructed officers in the Army have been gleaned from some of these despised "miniature missions." Some of those who from various causes have been dismissed from or have left the Army have been astonished to find so much life and continuity outside of it. Surely it is not well to depreciate others in this way. With all our affection for Mrs. Booth while living, it was scarcely necessary to reproduce in her memoirs all her antagonistic views, some of which she might have seen reason to alter had she lived a few more years.

It presses upon us increasingly that Evangelicalism and Protestantism will only overcome Romanism and Popery in proportion as they are themselves free from the errors of that system. We therefore ask, Is there any suggestion in the New Testament that an "ordained" man is essential to the valid observance of the Lord's Supper? Is it in accordance with New Testament teaching to describe any order of men as exclusively appointed "to administer the Sacraments"? Is there any ground in the New Testament for calling Baptism and the Lord's Supper Sacraments? What is a Sacrament? The answers to these questions bring us down close to the Pagan roots of Papal error. We must be free from these ourselves if we would exorcise the assumption of the priests and the subservience of the people.

The directors of the London Missionary Society invite all their friends and supporters and all well-wishers of foreign missions to observe next week, January 22nd to 29th, as a special week of prayer and self-denial. The object of this request is to further the new Forward Movement, which if successfully carried out will add 100 new missionaries to the staff by the Society's centenary in 1895. Already thirty-eight additional missionaries have entered upon their arduous labours, and the Society has good reason to believe that the remainder will follow in the time appointed. The proceeds of the self-denial week last February were nearly £10,000; this year it is hoped that considerably more will be raised, and the directors ask for the £25,000 which their new undertaking requires.

When we remember that the Salvation Army collects £40,000 by a similar week, and bear in mind the aggregate wealth of the Congregational churches and other supporters of the London Missionary Society, £25,000 does not appear an extravagant amount, and is by no means beyond the power of the Society's constituency if all will take the matter up with the prayerful earnestness that it deserves. The appeal is not for new or additional subscriptions, but for the exercise of self-denial in giving up some luxury or practising some economy for a week, and devoting the money saved to the cause of foreign missions.

We hope that all ministers and Sunday-school superintendents will give their congregations and schools the opportunity of responding to this appeal by circulating as widely as possible the Self Denial leaflets and envelopes prepared by the Society. During the last ten days half a million of these have been sent out in various directions from the Mission House, and the secretaries are prepared to supply all who may yet apply for them. Much good will result to the Society's work if in one or more of the regular services next week special reference is made in every church to the subject of foreign missions, and earnest prayer offered for their enlargement and success.

While we have those among us who say they long to see the Continental Sunday introduced as an English institution, it is well worthy of notice that the open-eyed intelligent foreigner when he visits our country sees much to admire in our reverent attitude towards the Sabbath. Dr. Karl Clemen, a German scholar, who resided for some time in London, has been enlightening his countrymen on the religious superiority of English life compared with theirs. He singles out as especially characteristic of English Christianity these two features: respect for the Bible and the ordering of the life thereby; and the strict observance of Sunday. He considers this an incalculable blessing to the English people. For him the English Sunday is an institution to be carefully conserved, and a blessing which he would gladly see introduced among his own countrymen.

Thanks are due to Rev. J. Johnston, secretary of the Christian Literature Society, for his comprehensive survey, in The Indian Female Evangelist, of the progress of Christianity in India. He shows how that in 1853 Christ was comparatively unknown. By 1890 a marvellous change had taken place:—

An educated population had grown up numbering more than thirteen millions, most of whom were more or less familiar with the name of Jesus and his life and work on earth.

How few realise that the process of "a nation being born in a day," is going on before our eyes.

An incident, the effects of which may have an important influence upon European and Eastern politics, is reported from Egypt. The young Khedive has dismissed the Premier and other Ministers who have given a steady support to the reforms advocated by the British representative. He has appointed as his new Premier Fakhri Pasha, a man of a decidedly different type, who, in the words of The Times, is "not only absolutely opposed to reform, but is devoid of the qualities of a good Oriental ruler, and is as far from commanding the respect of the natives as he is from enjoying the confidence of Englishmen."

A correspondent (Mr. Arthur C. Tessier) writes with reference to a note in our issue of Jan. 5, p. 8:—

The righteousness imputed to the believer is five times called "the righteousness of God" (Rom. i. 17; iii. 21, 22; x. 3, and 2 Cor. v. 21), and twice "His (i.e., God's) righteousness" (Rom. iii. 25, 26), but, Sir, when and where is it called "Christ's righteousness"?

For the meaning of the phrase "the righteousness of God," I cannot do better than quote the Rev. H. C. G. Moule on Rom. i. 17 (in the Cambridge Bible series); he says:—"As regards Pauline usage it is plain that Rom. iii. is the locus criticus for its leading meaning, which meaning we may expect to find here. iii. 26 appears to supply the key to this meaning. The righteousness of God is something which is reached or received through faith in Jesus Christ, and it is declared in such a way as to show Him just, yet justifying. On the whole it is most consistent with most passages to explain it of the 'righteousness imputed by God' to the believer. It is 'God's righteousness' as being provided by Him and availing with Him."

It is a righteousness which God imputes to the believer. "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness." God counts the person righteous who believes Him when he declares that He delivered up Jesus our Lord for our offences and raised Him for our justification (Rom. iv. 24, 25), but I cannot find in Scripture the prevalent teaching that "Christ's righteousness" is imputed to the believer.

Our note said that Christ's righteousness, and much more than this, is included in John's declaration, "Ye are IN HIM that is true." We "are made the righteousness of God IN HIM." Having been baptized into Christ, into his death, and raised in Him to walk in newness of life, we are vitally united to Him, and He is ours and we are his. We admit very readily that "the righteousness of God" is the Scriptural term.

REDEEM THE TIME!

REDEEM the time, for evil days
Are those thy pilgrim eye surveys;—
It is enough that, uncontrolled,
The sons of earth should live for gold;
Be thine the higher, nobler craze,
To live for God, to walk his ways,
As mindful his all-searching gaze
Each mood, each motive can behold:
Redeem the time!

Though Christ his coming long delays,
He is at hand: thy head upraise.
Where hopes are dark, and hearts are cold,
Let love be strong in service bold:
Thus meekly win thy Master's praise.
Redeem the time!

HONAN, CHINA.—Mr. J. J. Coulthard writes from Cheo-Kia-Kéo:—"The blessing us in this province of Honan. [illegible] churches were established, one at [illegible] Vision, eighty miles N.W. of this, where six have been baptised, and prospects of more from among the many interesting enquirers who are being instructed. In our city six have been added by baptism. We praise God, not only for these, but for the real advance in grace and growth of some of the Christians."

"Of One Accord."

IT was very pleasant to see the signatures of so many, holding widely different views as to the fulfilment of prophecy, subscribed to the appeal to Conveners of Conferences in our issue of the 5th inst.

They ask for a united testimony as to the coming of the Lord. Is it possible to maintain this? Yes; if the blessed hope itself be kept before the minds and hearts of the hearers. No; if competing schemes of fulfilment are dwelt upon and advocated. In this case the attempt at united testimony will only lead to separation and bitterness.

Although all the details of the birth, life, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus were foreshown in type or prophecy in the Old Testament, it would have been impossible for anyone, except by inspiration of God, to have conceived the mode and circumstances of their fulfilment, or the order in which they would take place. Is it not probable that the same is true of the prophecies of his second coming, and that all the various schemes put forth in the endeavour, in minute detail, to forecast the future, are not only useless but misleading?

Even in regard to the main outlines there is disagreement: the question whether the Lord's coming for his Church is to precede the final troubles of this age, or whether she will pass through that crisis, is still undecided, each view having its warm advocates.

It is urged on behalf of the former view that if any event is interposed between us and his coming, then we must be expecting the event and not his appearing, and cannot, therefore, be "looking for the blessed hope and the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." But is this certainly true? May not a wife in England be looking wistfully and joyfully and with all her heart's affection for the return of her husband from the Antipodes, although she may imagine, or even be convinced, that some event will precede his return? If we "are children of God through faith in Christ Jesus, we know that if He shall be manifested we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is; and He that hath this hope set ON HIM purifieth Himself even as He is pure." Our hope surely may be set on Him and the appearing of his glory, and that hope supremely influence all our inner and outer life, whether we think it may be fulfilled to-day or after some intervening and overwhelming sorrows. The crown of righteousness is laid up for all them that HAVE LOVED his appearing. These can scarcely, by a sound exegesis, be confined to such as believe that no event can lie between them and that appearing.

As a fact, Paul knew, when he wrote his second epistle to Timothy, that he should die before his Lord's appearing. Peter also knew it, for the Lord had "shewed it" to him, in the presence of six other disciples, before his ascension, and all those to whom they may have made it known, and all who read Peter's Epistle, or heard its contents, knew also that Peter would die. Yet no one supposes that Paul and Peter, and those who knew that these apostles would die a violent death before the Lord's appearing, were shut out from the crown of rightcousness laid up for all those who loved the appearing of the Righteous Judge.

The Speaker's Commentary enumerates four methods of interpreting the Apocalypse: the Preterist, the Presentist, the Futurist, and the Spiritual. All of these appear to us, if not absolutely necessary, at least natural, allowable, and capable of being held simultaneously and harmoniously.

In the early ages, under the persecutions which drove the Church into the Catacombs, they could scarcely help regarding the visions of John as receiving their fulfilment in their own experience. The persecuting Pagan Roman Emperors must each in turn have seemed to be the Antichrist, and heathen idolatry the system out of which God called his people to come. This is the view now called the Preterist.

As time rolled on, and the apostasy developed, and history repeated itself on a larger scale, it was not strange that the saints should regard the Antichrist as a succession of men, and see in the persecutions prolonged through the Middle Ages, down to the Reformation, the great tribulation, and that they should regard the Romish Babylon as the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the earth. This is substantially the Presentist, or Historical, or Protestant interpretation.

As the time of the end draws near, we can scarcely help reasoning from the analogy of history that the evidently impending crisis must be controlled by some commanding mind; and we therefore look for a personal Antichrist. All the forces which have been at work during these nearly nineteen hundred years must be intensified at the close; and, seeing the Great Babylon of worldly religion hurrying to her doom, we hear the cry, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." This is substantially the Futurist system.

The rapids of the River Erie predict the cataract of Niagara, and the cataract points back to the river; the ages of violence produced the Flood, and the Flood pointed back to those centuries of Titanic wickedness; every crisis presupposes a history, and individual or national wickedness necessitates a crisis; therefore, a Futurist interpretation presupposes an Historical, and an Historical necessitates a Futurist. But as to the detail of interpretation, let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind, and let no one judge his brother by any means.

But there is a fourth fulfilment of the Apocalypse. Because the world is in the heart of man, and every individual is a microcosm, therefore if there were only one man in the world, fallen and redeemed, the visions of the Apocalypse would be in his measure fulfilled inwardly in him. In this view Religious Self is Pope, Ungodly Self is Antichrist; and the locusts from the pit are the lusts of our hearts deceitful above all things and desperately wicked.

For ourselves, we implicitly believe such a fourfold interpretation to be substantially and necessarily true. But no two minds see all the details in the same light: nor can we force our own views on one another. No two persons see the same rainbow; no two persons gather precisely the same ideas from the same book; how impossible is it, then, that diverse finite minds should all see alike the deep and wonderful mysteries of God. But we can be pitiful, we can be courteous; and we may be lowly enough to receive the counsel of the chameleon to those who disputed about its changing colours:

> And when next you go out to view
> Think others see as well as you.

M.

ANTI-OPIUM.—On behalf of his countrymen, Mr. Raju Naidu, from Madras, addressed a meeting last week, at Plaistow, on the wrongs India suffers through the opium traffic. Mrs. Bryson, lately arrived from China, bore testimony to the havoc that opium causes in Chinese homes. The meeting unanimously passed a resolution condemning the traffic.

Revival the Church's Power.

BY REV. WM. ROSS, GLASGOW.

WHAT has revival done for the believer, for the Church, and for the world? It has given us our men of noblest Christian character, and enabled the Church to reach the highest landmark in attainment and Christian effort. As the highest mountain peaks are the upheaval of subterranean fires that have shaken the foundations of the earth, so the most notable men in the record of the Church are themselves frequently the fruit of revival. Saul of Tarsus, like a piece of moist peat hissing out its moisture on the glowing embers, was set on fire in the Pentecostal revival. Luther, Melancthon, Knox, and others were kindled into flame in the outpouring of the Spirit at the Reformation.

Some men have borne personal testimony to this. Dr. Charles P. McIlvaine says of himself:—"Whatever I possess of religion began in a revival; the most precious, steadfast, and vigorous fruits of my ministry have been the fruits of revivals." It is not too much to say that most of the men who entered the ministry of the Free Church of Scotland, and who were specially owned of God in his work before the revival of 1860, were themselves the product of the great Scottish revival, that moved over the land in successive waves for a period of forty years from 1811.

Is it not also the case with the great mass of the men who form the living ministry of America, and who were themselves the outcome of the continuous revival in the colleges at the close of the last century and the beginning of this? And what is true of the ministry is true also of the membership in Europe as well as on the American continent. From 1815 to 1840 we are told that the Spirit was poured out on from 400 to 500 churches and congregations annually on an average. During some of these years, we rejoice to learn that from 40,000 to 50,000 were added by profession in a single twelvemonth to the membership of the Christian Church. The Presbyterian Church of Wales is herself the fruit of revival in a membership that dominates the Principality. She has had an almost unceasing revival for 150 years. It is said that one man in the Principality, and he by no means a man of intellectual power, was instrumental, under God, in the revival of 1860, of adding 10,000 to the spiritual life of the Church. That great wave of blessing brought at least as many into the Church in Ireland; and those who remember the same blessed time in Scotland know that the spiritual harvest was universal over that land.

Such seasons, though they have been too often intermittent and partial, have nevertheless enabled the Church to reach her highest landmark in Christian effort. Shortly after the Disruption a site was refused for the congregation at Strontian, in the West Highlands; not an inch of land could be had whereon to build, but all under high-water mark is generally the property of the Crown. A number of Christian gentlemen in Glasgow provided an iron church, which was anchored in the bay, and there the people began to worship God according to their conscience and the dictates of his Word, coming and going from the shore in boats. In a short time a storm arose, and with it came an exceptionally high tide that lifted the iron church and carried it high above the highest mark ever known on that coast, and there they were henceforward privileged to worship. So times of refreshing have raised the individual soul and the Church of God far beyond the level of former experience, and have given their greatest power to those aggressive agencies that prove instrumental in turning the wilderness into a fruitful field.

The revival of a hundred years ago gave us all our missionary societies, our Bible societies, our tract societies, and sent the living Gospel strong in increasing power through the arid wilderness of the world. From 1784 to 1810 the Church became sensitive in an unwonted degree to the cry of the perishing heathen, and the Church on both sides of the ocean was warmed up to an aggressive movement hitherto unprecedented. Is it not notorious that every revival, whether in the congregation, or the community, or over the entire Church, is the one instrumentality to supply the missionaries that are required at home and abroad for the conversion of mankind?

Is there not something in all this which the Church of God to-day ought to lay to heart, and for which earnest, unceasing, believing prayer must be made? Is the intelligence of the cloud, small as a man's hand, hovering over the horizon, to be met in the spirit of unbelief or in the attitude of faith? Are we to make haste to turn aside to questions of debate and vain wrangling that profit little, or to hasten to the seed time and the harvest which God is undoubtedly preparing for the future of the Church and the world? In the presence of prevalent sin and rampant evil are we to be always putting the question, Why could we not cast them out? or shall we hear our Lord saying, "All things are possible to him that believeth"? Shall we not then answer: "Lord, I believe, help Thou mine unbelief"? "O Lord, revive thy work; in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy."

JEWISH MISSION TOUR.

MR. C. T. LIPSHYTZ, of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, has returned from a brief tour through France and Germany, in the course of which he visited a large number of Jewish families, and preached the Gospel as occasion offered. Nearly a week was spent in Paris, where a decided impression was made upon some who heard the evangelistic addresses. Two young men have followed the missionary to London for further instruction. Mr. Lipshytz was welcomed in quarters where, a year ago, he was treated with contempt. At Strasburg he circulated a large number of New Testaments and tracts, and was made to realise that his much-loved work was not to be pursued without obstacles. A hostile faction reported him to the police as "a French agitator." This resulted in much annoyance, for he had not only to produce his passport, but to stand a protracted examination as to his purpose and work.

Passing on to Stuttgart, he accompanied Dr. Fürst, late of the Free Church of Scotland Mission, to the house of an influential rabbi, with whom they had a long interview. To this perplexed man Mr. Lipshytz tried to be of service in explaining the Christian doctrine of justification by faith, and in showing that Christ was Son of God as well as Son of man. At Heidelberg a highly-cultured family was visited by invitation of an English clergyman who had made their acquaintance. Several friends in Darmstadt having been seen, a conference was attended, at which the cause of the Jews was pleaded before clergymen who had in some cases been identified with the anti-Semitic movement. After calling at Frankfort, Mr. Lipshytz returned home by way of Cologne, much cheered by the incidents of his tour.

The work at the mission-house, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C., proceeds satisfactorily. In addition to the meetings on Saturdays and Sundays, there are daily Bible-classes, a night-school, and mothers' meetings. There were three baptisms on Monday last week. A Sunday-school for Jewish children is well attended, as also is a class for grown-up girls. The reading-room is an important adjunct of the work.

The Line of Advance.

WE find the following significant question, with an answer, in The Deliverer, a publication of the Salvation Army:—

Are YOU in the Line of Advance?

For the importance—the comparative importance—of individuals depends much more upon whether they are on the right line of progress, than upon their intrinsic value.

There were probably men of much more commanding genius and far greater intellectual attainments in the Court of Pharaoh of the Exodus, than Caleb the son of Jephunneh, or Joshua the son of Nun, or even of Aaron, the first of the high priests; but all the pundits and the potentates of Memphis have gone down into the abyss of oblivion, while the friends and companions of the hero who led the Jews through the wilderness still count for permanent factors in the evolution of man. The reason for this was that the Exodus marked the beginning of a new departure, pregnant with immeasurable consequences to the future of the world. Hence, to have carried a spear or packed a wagon in the Israelitish hosts, was a task fraught with more world-wide consequences than the more imposing duties of commanders-in-chief or ruler of provinces in Egypt.

A shrewd mechanic who helped Stephenson to perfect "Puffing Billy" was worth more to the world's progress than the ablest engineer of his day who applied himself solely to the perfection of the old stage coach. The great question is whether you are in the line of advance, whether you have grasped the coming truth, or whether you are merely doddering on with the worn-out remnants of an exhausted system. The man who rears a stately mausoleum may be rich and mighty and noble and famous, but he is nowhere compared with the poorest nurse in his own household, for the builder of sepulchres for corpses belongs to the past, whereas the nurse of the child sits by the cradle of the future.

W. T. STEAD.

These are striking and stirring words from the herald of the New Journalism. Yet they have an old-time ring. They recall the confession of that Spirit-filled man, who was at once the last of the old line of prophets and the forerunner of "that Prophet" to whom they pointed—"He must increase, but I must decrease." They remind us of the Bridegroom's testimony to his friend: "Of them that are born of women there hath not arisen a greater prophet than John, but he that is least in the Kingdom of God is greater than he."

John could only convict of sin, and call to confession, and baptize in water unto repentance. But He whose shoe-latchet John exultingly declared himself unworthy to unloose has put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and baptizes his people in the Holy Ghost and in fire. That old covenant, "This do and thou shalt live," which had been broken by every individual born under it, or circumcised into it, had in John's day decayed and waxen old, and was ready to vanish away. And He who then stood among them introduced a new covenant ordered in all things and sure: "Believe and live." "I will put my laws in your minds and write them upon your hearts; and your sins and iniquities will I remember no more." Yes, "the great question is, whether you are in the line of advance; whether you have grasped the coming truth, or whether you are merely doddering on with the worn-out remnants of an exhausted system."

The greatest prophet born of woman is less than the least prophet in the Kingdom of God. For the preaching of the Kingdom of God marks the advent of a new age. Into that kingdom there is no entry but by a new birth. Adam is "worn out." He has been proved not to be "in the line of advance." They who cleave to him cling to "an exhausted system." But the Creator of heaven and earth and man has interposed Himself by incarnation and nativity. Offering Himself in the likeness of sinful flesh, He has, by the shedding of his blood, broken the entail of sin which descended with the blood ("for the life of all flesh is in the blood") and opened the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers. "The great question is whether you are in the line of advance, whether you have grasped the coming truth, or whether you are merely doddering on with the worn-out remnants of an exhausted system."

THE TRUTH ALREADY COME;

"The Kingdom of God." It is hidden now in the hearts of the people who are being gathered out of the nations for his name. Meanwhile the world goes on, earthly, sensuous, demonish; for Satan is its prince and god.

Earth buildeth on the earth
Palaces and towers;
Earth sayeth to the earth,
"All things are ours."
Earth walketh on the earth
Glittering with gold;
Earth goeth to the earth
Sooner than it wo'ld.

But the Bride of the Lamb by every soul she wins is making herself ready; believers in Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead—virgin souls who follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, going forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach, are hastening the coming of the day of God: wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved; and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness? But once more "the great question is, whether you are in the line of advance; whether you have grasped the coming truth; or whether you are merely doddering on with the worn-out remnants of an exhausted system." M.

THE WALDENSIAN CHURCHES.

Everywhere in the Waldensian valleys, as well as in our Italian mission churches, the week of prayer has been a success. We feel that the Spirit of God is at work. I had much pleasure, with three colleagues, in visiting three parishes from hamlet to hamlet, and we felt the presence and the power of the Holy Spirit. How many souls touched to salvation; what a joy, what a happiness in many of those mountaineers who have a very hard work in the struggle for life, but who are very rich in Christ.

I had also much pleasure in visiting the Riviera. We have there three places of worship—one at Bordighera, another at San Remo, and the other one at Genoa. At Bordighera, the boys' home is flourishing and prospering under the wise administration of six teachers, and under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Tron, who are very interested in that kind of work. The home is clean, well kept, and the children look bright and happy. We invite all our friends to cast a look at that flower of the Gospel in Italy.

At San Remo, the Rev. Petrai, with some ladies, is supporting a home for girls out of work, and flourishing schools in which the children are taught in the fear of God. The Roman Catholic priests are angry, and trying to take the children out of our influence, and sometimes they are successful, but not always. At all events, the seed is sown in those young hearts, and something will remain, notwithstanding the efforts of the enemy.

At Genoa the evangelical work generally is prospering, and I saw many and many listening with the greatest interest to the explanation of the Gospel.

The Columbian Exhibition has been a very good opportunity for making known evangelical truth.

We hope in a bright future. We prepare the ground, and sooner or later the thirsty souls will come to the great fountain always fresh and pure—to Jesus Christ, the Saviour, in whom only we have salvation. C. A. Tron.

Fatherhood and Sonhood.

Is Dr. Dale, after all, to be regarded as an opponent of the doctrine of Universal Fatherhood? Some of his published utterances gave warrant for the idea that the advocates of that doctrine could regard him as its ablest and most earnest champion. We are devoutly thankful that he has explained his position more clearly in a sermon recently published in The British Weekly. The title of the sermon is, "Who are the sons of God?" and the text, which is a reply to the question in the title, is "Ye are all sons of God, through faith in Christ Jesus" (Gal. iii. 20). The sermon is a faithful exposition and a vigorous enforcement of the statement of the text, with a no less vigorous attack upon the opposite theory.

We must quote some of his own words. After quoting the text, Dr. Dale asks:—

Is not this a narrowing of the Christian Gospel? Are not men born sons of God—all men? Do they not remain sons of God, always—in this world and the next? Can they ever be anything else, whether they are sinners or saints, believers or unbelievers? It is clear that Paul did not think so. He says plainly enough that men are sons of God "through faith"; and if this is true, men who have no faith are not, in Paul's sense, sons of God...Why "in Christ Jesus"? Are not all men sons of God by nature, whether they are in Christ Jesus or not? Paul says No; "it is only in Christ Jesus that we are sons of God."

Nothing could be more satisfactory than this. We have used similar language, as we thought, concerning Dr. Dale's own utterances. Whether we misunderstood him, or he has altered his position, we are devoutly thankful to find him now writing thus.

Dr. Dale continues:—

But are we not all "in Christ"? Were we not "created" in Christ? Is not the whole universe "held together" in Christ? Yes, Paul would answer... but, in the sense in which he uses the words "in Christ" in this place, all men are not "in Christ"; and it is only those who are, that are sons of God in the great sense in which Paul is using this glorious title.

Dr. Dale adds the testimony of other scriptures upon this subject. The words of Jesus Himself are described as "more stern and startling than the apostles ever used," when He "peremptorily rejected the claim of some of the Jews to be children of God—rejected it without qualification and without reserve."

To those who still prefer to teach that all men are the sons of God, Dr. Dale says:—

Proclaim that, if you please, but take care to tell men that this is not what Paul taught, not what John taught, not what Christ taught. Tell them that it distinctly contradicts what Christ and his apostles taught. If what you proclaim is true, do not give Christ credit for it. If it is false, do not charge Him with responsibility for it.

These being Dr. Dale's convictions, then in what sense are we to understand his frequent references to the Universal Fatherhood of God? His own words shall give the answer:—

It is true that we are God's offspring. We derive our life from Him, we have moral freedom, we have understanding, reason, conscience. All these are indications of our origin, and of our natural kinship to the Supreme. But this relationship, according to the teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles, though very wonderful, is but the condition of a relationship far more wonderful and glorious. And it is to those who realise this higher relationship, that they habitually restrict the great title "sons of God!"...To be sons of God, we must share the life of God, and the life of God is a life of righteousness, purity, compassion, holiness, love. Where these are not, the life of God is not. Where these are not, men are not in the great sense the sons of God, for those who have not the life of God cannot be his sons.

Dr. Dale adds a fact from Church history that is deeply significant:—

In the fourth and fifth centuries—probably earlier—only believers in Christ who had been received into the full communion of the Church were taught the Lord's Prayer and allowed to be present at services where it was offered. For heathen men to call God "Our Father" was, in the judgment of the Church of those days, a profanation. Even the catechumens, who were persons receiving religious instruction as a preparation for baptism, were not allowed to offer it. Not until a man was believed to be regenerate of the Holy Ghost was he permitted to regard himself as a son of God and to call God Father.

If there is a point in Dr. Dale's sermon to which we take exception, it is that in which he makes so much, we believe too much, of God's Fatherhood of all men as resulting from his creation of all. He does not appear to see that if the sonship to which faith in Christ introduces us is a more than natural sonship, the Fatherhood of God becomes to the believer more than the natural Fatherhood. The relationship resulting from creation is not the same as that resulting from the new birth; and Dr. Dale distinctly affirms that "it is by being 'born again' that we become in the great sense children of God."

No part of the sermon is more vigorous and forcible than that in which the two forms of teaching are contrasted, and the dangers of the modern teaching are exposed:—

The assumption (i.e., that all are sons of God) breaks the force of every terrible warning that came from the lips of Christ and his apostles; if they are the children of God, it is impossible that they should eternally perish. Ah, yes; but suppose that they are not the children of God—what then?... God will make his children perfectly righteous in the next world, if not in this. Ah, yes; but suppose they are not God's children?...I entreat you not to take it for granted that you can remain indifferent to that supreme effort of his mercy, and yet be redeemed...Resist that, and you pass beyond the reach of those moral and spiritual forces by which alone you can be saved. Christ is the propitiation for the sin of the world; there is no other; reject Him, and there remaineth no more any sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful expectation of judgment, and a fierceness of fire which shall devour the adversaries.

We have quoted this at length because we know how great an influence Dr. Dale wields, and how, on previous occasions, we have had to express ourselves differently concerning some of his utterances on this very subject. Alarm for the consequences of the modern theory has evidently taken hold of him. We heartily rejoice that he has spoken in such clear and forcible terms.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Come, Holy Ghost, with quickening power,
Our spirits and our lives renew;
Come gently as the summer dew,
And bless us in this evening hour.

Be Thou our Teacher and our Guide,
Impart Thy gifts, the sacred seven;
And, as we walk the way to heaven,
Rule in our will, subdue our pride.

Teach us to know that we are one
With Christ, and all his people here;
Create in us clean hearts, sincere;
To us the Father's love make known.

By Thee we "Abba, Father," cry,
We know that God will hear our prayer,
And Thou wilt each for heaven prepare;
To our adoption testify.

Give us to see, with faithful eyes,
Our treasure hid with Christ above,—
Our home of perfect peace and love,
Behind the veil, beyond the skies!

LEEDS LODGING-HOUSE MISSION.—This mission founded three years ago by three earnest young men, is now doing a good work among poor men and women driven to seek shelter in these places. The annual tea given a few days ago to about 600 persons was followed by a Gospel address, illustrated by magic-lantern views.

Joshua and the Land of Canaan.*

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,

CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD.

THE WILES OF THE DEVIL.—Joshua ix.

The whole country was in arms. Minor differences were obliterated, a truce was given to tribal wars, and those who had been deadly foes were driven by the very necessities of the case into a combination against the dreaded invader. Just as the Pharisees and Sadducees, who were hereditary foes, combined to destroy Christ, so did all the kings, whether Hittite or Amorite, Perizzite or Hivite, gather themselves together to fight with Israel and with Joshua, "with one accord." In front of that common danger all minor contentions held their peace.

Tidings of this formidable coalition found their way into the camp of Gilgal, whither leader and people had recently returned from their pilgrimage to Shechem. Probably Joshua heard the tidings without great dismay, but to the princes it was welcome news to learn almost simultaneously that there was the possibility of forming a league with those who were likely to stand by them at that solemn juncture. This league, however, was to cost them as much anxiety, if not more, as the sin of Achan.

Whenever we are threatened with unprecedented difficulty, we may expect to encounter just such a temptation as that which the Gibeonites presented to Israel.

I.—THEY DID WORK WILILY.

One day a strange spectacle presented itself at the gates of the camp. A group of strangers announced themselves, who seemed to have come from a far country. In every article of dress, as well as in the trappings of their asses, there were the signs of long journeyings. Their shoes were clouted, their garments faded, their sacks in holes, their wineskins patched, and when they turned out the remnants of their bread, the mould suggested the days that had passed since it left the oven. All the camp gathered to see them enter, and as they passed through the lines of eager spectators, from one to another the word passed, "Who are they? whence came they? Wherever they come from, they are evidently foreigners in this country." Compassion would be freely expended on them for the weary fatigue of their travel, and no one suspected for a moment that beneath the clever disguise was concealed a band of Hivites. But so it was. For the first time, within the precincts of the camp, which was holy unto the Lord, there stood a company of those inhabitants of Canaan which Israel had been expressly commissioned to destroy.

Had it not been for their disguise they would not have been permitted to come within the circle of the tents. A cry of horror would have passed from lip to lip, drowning any attempt of theirs to speak; but their story was so reasonable, their references to Jehovah so reverential, their appearance so in keeping with the account they gave of themselves, that they threw Joshua, princes, and people, completely off their guard.

It is in this way that we are tempted still, more by the wiles of Satan than by his open assaults, more by the deceitfulness of sin than by its declared war. And it is little matter for wonder that those who succeed at Jericho and Ai fall into the nets woven and laid down by the wiles of Gibeon. Better to meet Caiaphas than Judas. A black devil is less to be dreaded than a white one.

Take up the chronicles of the early Church. With no prestige, or wealth, or human learning to help her, she swept forward on her beneficent mission, during the first centuries of her existence, freeing the slave, lifting woman from her degradation, smiting down gigantic systems of idolatry and philosophy, and winning myriads of trophies for Jesus Christ. There was no reason to doubt that she would speedily accomplish the will of her Divine Founder in encompassing the world with the tidings of redemption, and proclaiming his Gospel to every creature. All through these days each step was taken at a great cost of agony and blood. The kings of the earth set themselves in array, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ. Ten awful persecutions rolled up against the Ark, threatening to engulph it in their blood-red waters. The great dragon persecuted the woman, and the serpent cast out of his mouth after her water as a river, that he might cause her to be carried away by the stream.

But the effect of all this was most salutary. There was no temptation to hypocrites to join the ranks of the faithful, and these counted not their lives dear unto themselves if only by word and life they might commend the Gospel of their Lord. Those were the days when the saints walked the earth in white, and God was not ashamed to be called their God, and men were attracted by the sheen of a celestial beauty.

Then, since the adversary could not prevail by force, he had resort to wile. Constantine was his agent, through whom an alliance was effected between the new young faith and the expiring systems of Paganism. The great fasts of the Christian faith were commemorated on the days consecrated from time immemorial to heathen festivals, and after a while in the garments and with the rites by which those festivals had been signalised. A league was formed between the Church and the world, between truth and falsehood, between the new and the old; and the religion of Jesus Christ struck hands in solemn covenant with the old shoes and clouted, the old garments, the mouldy provision of Babylonish idolatry.

From that moment a change passed over her. What she gained in prestige of worldly power, she lost in character and spiritual strength. And from that moment the course of the professing Church has been always downward; and to-day it is her weakness and shame that she has so unaccountable a liking for the old relics of a defunct Paganism.

Many a soul that has withstood the attacks of the more pronounced forms of temptation has succumbed before the treacherous arts of the flatterer. Young Christians have much to fear from those who introduce themselves as being also religious, and as enthusiastic as they, and who proceed to urge them "not to overdo it." We have all to beware of those insinuating themselves into our affections, our counsels, our homes, or our businesses, who assume an interest in religion which they do not feel, who talk glibly and falsely of the fame of God, and who offer to do all in their power to further and help our interests whilst they are plotting our ruin. There are plenty of Gibeonites about. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but prove the spirits, whether they are of God, because many false prophets are gone out into the world." "Bear with me; I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve in his craftiness, your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity and the purity that is found in Christ."

II.—THEY ASKED NOT COUNSEL OF THE LORD.

The leaders of Israel seem at first to have been a little suspicious of their visitors. "And the men of Israel said unto the Hivites, Peradventure ye dwell among us, and how shall we make a covenant with you?" But their suspicions were allayed as they listened to their story, and saw the apparent evidences of their long journey. Here surely was an opportunity of proving their sagacity. They had not been allowed as yet to show their bravery and might, but they could at least now give proof of their superior insight! This was altogether too obvious a matter to need to be referred to Phinehas with his Urim and Thummim! And so they took of their provisions, mouldy as they were, in token of their willingness to count them allies and friends; indeed, the princes of the congregation sware unto them. "But they asked not counsel at the mouth of the Lord."

What an ominous sound there is in those words! They portend disaster, and it befell. Up to this moment the initiative had always been taken by the Lord. Now for the first time it is taken by Joshua and the people. In all the previous chapters, the words run thus: And the Lord said unto Joshua; but there is no such phrase in this. Israel through her chosen leaders acted for herself, and easily fell into the trap. If only they had inquired of the Lord, the dimming light in the sacred stone would have betrayed the fatal secret and arrested the formation of the league.

Let us lay the moral to our heart. Earth's sombre tints and cross-lights are very perplexing; and it is often extremely hard to detect the truth. The foolish virgins are so much like the wise; the tares so resemble the wheat; the hireling imitates so precisely the Shepherd's voice; the devil's mimicry of an angel of light is so exact; Bye-path meadow is parted from the King's Highway by so narrow a boundary. We urgently need, as the Apostle prayed for his Philippian converts, that we may have, not only all knowledge, but all discernment, so that we may prove the things that differ (Phil. i. 10, R.V. margin).

In one place this power to discriminate is said to result from use (Heb. v. 14); whilst in the passage already quoted it is attributed to an abounding love. But following the suggestion of the narrative before us, we may say that it will follow naturally on the careful cultivation of the blessed habit of asking counsel at the mouth of the Lord.

Never trust your own judgment. When your common sense is most sure of the rightness of a certain course of action, it will be best to make assurance doubly sure by lifting up your soul into the presence of God, that it may dim with his No or glisten with his Yes. When voices within or without would hasten you to decide on the strength of your own conclusions, then be careful to refer the whole matter from the lower court of your own judgment to the supreme tribunal of God's. If there is any doubt or hesitation left after such reference, be sure that as yet the time has not come for you to understand all God's will. Under such circumstances wait. Throw the responsibility of the pause and all it may involve on God, and dare still to wait. As a traveller over the hills, when the mist has come down, elects to stand or lie where it overtakes him, rather than wander on, perhaps to the brink of a precipice; so wait. If you trust God absolutely, it is for Him to give you clear directions as to what you should do. And when the time for action arrives, He will have given you such unmistakeable indications of his will, that, though a fool, you will not be able to mistake them or err therein. "None of them that wait on Him shall be ashamed."

Life is full of difficulties. The pointed spear awaits the unwary at the bottom of the pit, the top of which is covered by a slight film of earth. The snare of the fowler, the pestilence that walketh in darkness, the net privily laid, the decoy-bird, the devil in the wily serpent form, of these we need to beware. But prayer is like the spear of Ithuriel; and before its touch evil will be compelled to show itself in its native deformity; so that we may be thrown instantly upon the watch.

Before entering into any alliance, taking a partner in life, going into a business with another, yielding assent to any proposition which involves confederation with others, be sure to ask counsel at the mouth of the Lord. He will assuredly answer by an irresistible impulse, by the voice of a friend, by a circumstance strange and unexpected, by a passage of Scripture. He will choose his own messenger, but He will send a message.

III.—"HEWERS OF WOOD AND DRAWERS OF WATER."

There are some oaths better in the breach than the observance, as would have been the case with Herod's. And if there had been certain peril that these Hivites would corrupt Israel, it had been better for them, notwithstanding the oath of the princes, to have been cut off like the rest of the Canaanites. But all danger of this peril according was carefully guarded against by their reduction to servitude. "Hewers of wood and drawers of water, for the congregation and for the altar of Jehovah." This position they retained, and in after years heavy disasters befell Israel, because Saul in his mad zeal broke the solemn league and covenant into which Joshua and the princes had entered with them (2 Sam. xxi. 2).

This is a beautiful and comforting example of the way in which God overrules our mistakes, and brings blessing out of our sins, as the chemist obtains his loveliest dyes from the refuse of gas retorts. Inadvertently, and without due consideration, some of my readers may have entered into alliance with a Gibeonite, whether in marriage, in business, or in some other sphere. Are they therefore to abandon their high privilege, and forsake their lofty ministry to the world? Must they cease to be God's portion, and the priests of men? Not necessarily. Let them turn to God in repentance and confession, and He will teach them how these very hindrances may become great means of help, so that they shall hew the wood for the burnt-offering, draw the water for the libations, and promote the prosperity and well-being of the soul. Out of the eater shall come forth meat, and out of the strong sweetness.

* [All Rights Reserved.]

"If any brother hath an unbelieving wife, and she is content to dwell with him, let him not leave her. And the woman which hath an unbelieving husband, and he is content to dwell with her, let her not leave her husband. For the unbelieving husband is sanctified in his wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified in the husband. How knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband, or how knowest thou, O husband, whether thou shalt save thy wife? But God hath called us in peace."

It is very sweet to think of the grace of God which forgives our sins, as the preliminary condition to transforming the results of those sins to blessing. Again is repeated the ancient prediction that instead of the thorn there comes up the fir-tree, and instead of the briar the myrtle-tree, and these are to the Lord for a name and an everlasting sign.

It is true that the natural consequences of our sin may have to run their course. The hand of the reclaimed drunkard will still tremble. The constitution of the prodigal will never be able to throw off the effects of the fever contracted from the swine-troughs. The Gibeonite will always, in this world at least, be tied to you. But these things shall not rule, but serve; shall not impede, but promote. They shall hew the wood and draw the water for the inner shrine of character, and for the promotion of the loftiest ends.

EAST-END FACTORY GIRLS.

A sad air is apt to come over the East-end Christian worker whenever the factory girl becomes the subject of discussion. She left the elementary school as soon as ever she passed an exemption standard, and at once changed her condition from being one under authority at home and at school to that of an irresponsible money earner, mistress of her income, and with the wild freedom of the streets at her disposal when working hours are over. That her working hours are long, and the atmosphere depressing; that she is ignorant and untrained; that the place she calls "home" is a crowded one room; that she has no friend or companion save those who have been degraded by the unsocial society she lives in—all these things tell heavily against her. Little wonder that as she grows to the maturity of youth and womanhood the reaction from her dismal surroundings leads her to exuberant boisterousness, physical excess, reckless self-assertion, and an utter contempt for modes and manners that do not belong to her sphere.

To help her seems almost impossible; she has so little in common with true womanhood, that the zone of contact is of the narrowest. But, thank God, there is a zone of contact; and there are those who are spending their lives within its narrow compass, cultivating opportunities, sowing good seed, and reaping the harvest, and slowly widening the area of touch, to the sphere of Christian womanliness. Many years ago Dr. Barnardo saw the imperative necessity of making an effort on behalf of these young women. The work was well begun, and to-day it is maintained by a staff of deaconesses at the Institute, Copperfield-road, E.

A visit to the institute would show the various class-rooms inconveniently crowded and each girl busy with some work. All the year round they come; some of them never miss one class. They are taught to cut out, to sew, and to make, and every stitch worn by some of them is made by their own hands. Reading and writing are diligently studied. Better than all, the Gospel is lovingly explained to them, and some of them have not only learned to love the teacher, but the Divine Master it is her aim to serve. These converted girls are of great helpfulness, they serve as monitors, and some of them have hied off to join the Salvation Army.

Once a year festivity is followed on a large scale, and nothing less than the hall of the Edinburgh Castle will serve. There, last week, for three successive evenings, parties of six hundred were entertained, and the prize-winners of the year received their awards under the wistful eyes of their less diligent companions. These were chosen by Dr. Barnardo, according to his ideal of ethical influence, prizes to stimulate to further effort, for they were principally of calico and cloth.

This work is an absolute necessity if Christian influence is to have any hold on the coming generation that will crowd our East-end districts, and help to make or unmake our nation.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS DEATH.

Have you ever considered why it was that Jesus died in order to save you? You believe in Him as Divine, and able therefore to do all things; why, then, could He not have saved you without giving Himself to the cruel death of the cross?

For, of course, He did give Himself. His death was not because his enemies were too strong for Him. His own words were, "I lay down my life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again" (Jno. x. 17, 18). Other men die because they must. Jesus died because He would.

But why did He choose to die? Turn to the Bible for the answer. You get it in his own words (Luke xxiv. 46); and in the words of the apostle (Gal. iii. 21). Read both passages; for in both it is asserted that his death was necessary, and that it was the only way in which He could save you.

The question still presses for an answer—Why? Do not read another line without pausing to think. What answer can you suggest?

Was it simply to show forth his love? There can be no doubt that love never found a more wonderful expression than in his death. Read Jno. xv. 13; and put it side by side with Rom. v. 6-8. The very highest point that human love can reach is far exceeded by Him who died, not for his friends, but for his enemies.

But this answer cannot satisfy you. For one to die for another, where there was no necessity for death, is no proof of love. Was it, then, to fulfil the Scripture? Certainly the Scripture had foretold it (see Psa. xxii. and Isa. liii.), and the Scripture cannot be broken (Jno. x. 35). His enemies, in putting Him to death, were only fulfilling the Word of God (Acts xiii. 27—29). But we are not yet at the true answer. The death was not made necessary because Scripture foretold it; Scripture foretold it because it was necessary.

We repeat—Why was it necessary? Let the Word of God furnish the answer. Here are two groups of texts. Find them, and ponder their meaning. First, read Isa. liii. 6 (last clause); 1 Pet. ii. 24; 2 Cor. v. 21. All these declare that sin was laid upon Jesus. The language in one of them is very strong. Pause to realise if possible what can be meant by the Sinless One being made sin.

Next read Isa. liii. 5; 1 Cor. xv. 3; 1 Pet. iii. 18. As the Sinless One, Jesus could have claimed to be free from the power of death. But when He consented to be identified with sin, He yielded Himself to suffer all that sin deserved. Only in this wondrous method could the righteousness of God display itself in punishing the sin, and in saving the sinner.

The answer to our question, then, is this:—Sin deserves death as its righteous punishment; those whom He came to save were guilty of sin, and exposed to its punishment; He so became one with them that their sin was laid upon Him, and He received what it deserved.

Illustrations of this abound in the Old Testament types. The Passover is perhaps the best known. You know the story as told in Exod. xii.? In every home the life of the firstborn was forfeited. The lamb was God's appointed substitute for his people. The death of the lamb instead of the firstborn was their only security. "When I see the blood I will pass over you" (Exod. xii. 13). Jesus Christ is our Passover (1 Cor. v. 7), who died instead of us. What we deserved He endured. The love displayed in his death becomes more wonderful still when we understand how really He took our place.

Having read this brief paper, will you now take time to think of this: "He loved me, and gave Himself for me"? Say it, not only to yourself, but go into his presence who, though He died, now lives again, and say to Him, "Lord, I thank Thee that Thou hast borne my sin, and suffered my punishment. Teach me the meaning of thy death."

THE ANTI-OPIUM WAR.

BOURNEMOUTH.

Three important and influential meetings were held last week at Bournemouth in connection with the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade. On Friday a large and representative gathering assembled at Lindisfarne by invitation of the Dowager Countess Cairns, at which Rev. Mr. Elliot presided, in the absence of his father, Canon Elliot. In the evening an enthusiastic meeting was held in Shaftesbury Hall, General Ward in the chair; and another on Saturday afternoon in the parish room of St. John's Church, Boscombe, Rev. A. S. Selwyn presiding.

The deputation from the Society were Miss Soonderbhai Powar and Dr. Pringle.

Miss Powar said: I want to see my India free from this opium curse. For in India opium is sold openly. The sale of arsenic to poison rats is guarded and restricted, but a child of eight can buy 360 grains of opium. Since I returned to England I have heard that my sister's baby has died from opium given by its Hindoo nurse. English children suffer from this poison given by native nurses. The high-caste women of India are prisoners in the zenanas. Sometimes their husbands kill them if they have even been seen by another man. But when they heard of anti-opium meetings their interest was so intense that they crowded to them without fear. They say if the English want money let them come into our houses and take all our goods, and we will work; let them take the skin off our bodies to make them shoes: but spare us the opium curse. But if they will sell opium, let them kill the wives and children of the opium smokers.

The Times has said that the drug is harmless, and that it is good for fever. Did you ever see hundreds perish from a harmless thing? In India we never use opium for fever.

The opium den is large, dark, filthy; 20, 40, 100, 200 men, and sometimes women, are there, wallowing like pigs in mire; no earthly power can rescue them; they are going to hell. When I spoke to them several smokers said, "Woe to us; the English people have brought this on us." To promote the sale they will drug tea and coffee with opium to produce the desire for it. You drink it a few times, and you want that tea or coffee, not knowing why, but in a little while you are an opium eater or smoker. These opium dens are really Government hells. You hear that there are 11,000 licences: but each licence allows for ten, twenty, or thirty shops. While millions are perishing, for your gain, God says your gold and your silver are cankered, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire.

It is not good for India. The opium smoker disgraces his family and degrades himself; and starvation, want, and misery reign. Few in India can write, yet last year we sent petitions with 54,000 signatures against this cruel and destructive trade. I come from heathen Indian women to implore Christian England to put an end to it. We want opium to be sold, as in England, only for medicine, and its sale restricted as any other poison. Last year I spoke in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and I went home and told my people, "Now you will have justice." But it is the same as ever. So I have come back again. This battle is God's, and if you Christian people all join together in prayer and work, the battle will be won, and India will be freed from this dreadful blight.

Dr. Pringle spoke after long personal experience in India. He declared that while we were putting down smugglers at home, we had been, before the wicked opium war, systematic smugglers of opium into China. Of all the awful crimes of one nation against another, none equalled this; and everyone who heard the testimony of the witness from India who had just spoken incurred a great responsibility to do all that is possible to bring this hideous traffic to an end.

A resolution strongly denouncing the traffic and demanding its total suppression was passed, and copies ordered to be sent to various statesmen and members of Parliament.

An interesting and promising feature in the anti-opium agitation is the fact that four societies have declared their united and harmonious action.

COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND.—Whenever a poor blind child enters the Normal College for the Blind, Norwood, that moment the cloak of pauperism falls from off his shoulders. He is trained to help himself, to become happy and useful, and to earn his own living.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. A. Blackwood, K.C.B.

I.

THE REVELATION OF JESUS CHRIST.

The Revelation of Jesus Christ! Given unto Him by the Father, that He might give it to his servants, to show unto them things which were shortly to come to pass.

The Apocalypse, the Revelation, the Unveiling, is then intelligible, and meant to be read and studied. It is not, as many urge, a dark place, but as Peter declares of all prophecy, "a light that shineth in a dark place" (2 Peter i. 19). There may be difficulty in deciphering the hieroglyphic language in which it is conveyed, for it was so written that only "the wise shall understand" (Daniel xii. 10); but it was to enlighten, not to confuse, the servants of God, that it was given. This is pressed upon us more than once. "The Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done" (ch. xxii. 6); and again, "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches" (ch. xxii. 16). To put it aside because it contains "some things hard to be understood," to neglect it because there have been differences among Christians in interpreting it, is to dishonour its Divine Author, to charge Him with inditing and publishing as part of the Bible that which is unnecessary, and to imply that we can do very well indeed without it. Yet this is practically what the mass of professing Christians do. With the exception of the first three chapters, the vision of glory in the seventh, and the last three, the Apocalypse may be said to be an unknown, or at least an unstudied, book. Until the last few years it was, except on one or two occasions, entirely omitted from the public reading of Scripture in the Church of England, and Christian people generally followed the example thus set them, and turned to what they chose to regard as the more "practical" parts of the Bible. "The more practical parts"! Was not this a high and dangerous line to take? Where and when did we receive power and authority to distinguish thus between this and that portion of the Word of God? Psalm xxiii., John xiv., Romans viii., were judged to be "more important" than "obscure chapters in the Revelation"! Who made any of us judges of the relative importance of different books, or chapters, or verses? And what is the criterion whereby "importance" is to be estimated? Is it the importance to God or to man that is to be decided by our finite and fallen faculties? Said one of old:—

"Every word of God is pure."

"All thy commandments are faithful."

"I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right."

Saints of earlier days—such as Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Joseph, Moses, David, Daniel, Simeon and Anna—sustained their faith and hope by the prophetic word. To weary captives in Babylon, as well as to oppressed Israel in Egypt, the promises and predictions afforded light and renewed life. But God's "servants in the churches"—except when terrible persecutions or fierce struggles with the corruptions and oppressions of anti-Christian powers drove them to the store-house of prophetic truth, that they might get light in the dark place, or weapons for the conflict—thought that it was useless to pore over the imagery and symbols of "the Revelation of Jesus Christ." Though their course lay amid rocks and quicksands and breakers and shoals, they did not think it essential, or even prudent, to study the Divinely-provided chart, or to take the soundings which it indicated as all-important. So far as they were concerned, they, like Jehudi, cut out a good many pages of God's most blessed Word, and treated them as dead letters.

Ask ninety-nine out of every hundred—yea, nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand Christian people—to give an intelligible view of the structure or scope of the book, of the meaning of its symbols, or of its leading characteristics, and what answer will be given? Though its seven seals have been opened for 1800 years, the majority will practically say, "I cannot read it, I am not learned. The book is sealed" (Is. xxix, 11, 12).

And why is this? Some will say, "It is so mysterious, so hard to understand." But it is a disclosure of mysteries, an opening of secrets, and if its meaning does not lie on the surface, but needs patient, prayerful, persistent study and search, is that a justification for neglecting to read our Saviour's last letter to us—a letter to which He has called our special attention in such solemn and earnest words?

"No," says another; "but there are so many views, and interpreters differ so widely in their expositions, that one only gets more and more confused by reading them." This may be a reason for not studying human interpretations, but surely it affords no justification for putting Divine utterances on one side. But even this excuse is greatly exaggerated. What are these differences of which so much is made? That there are, or have been, three main principles of interpretation may be quite true; as also that, among those who have advocated one of these principles—that which regards the Book as describing the history of the Church and the world during this dispensation—there are diversities of application of some of its symbols.

But, in the first place, these diversities are by no means so great as has been often represented. They are no greater than the different views of certain theological doctrines which have been held by various sections of the Christian Church from the beginning, and are more than counterbalanced by the remarkable agreement of interpretation in many of the main predictions—an agreement which has been increasingly exhibited as days have advanced.

And, in the next place, such diversities of view are exactly what might have been reasonably expected. If in the case of the cuneiform writings, and of the hieroglyphs of antiquity, learned men have adopted and urged opposing theories, is it to be wondered at that in attempting to decipher the mysterious symbols of a book, designedly so constructed as to be absolutely unintelligible to the world, Christian students should adopt very varying hypotheses? Was anything else likely?

But, do these or other excuses afford any justification for putting aside as unworthy of notice that book of the Holy Scriptures upon the study and retention of which our Saviour has pronounced such a blessing? Surely we are to blame if such has been our conduct. Surely, also, must we have suffered serious loss.

For what are the contents of the Apocalypse?

"THINGS WHICH MUST SHORTLY COME TO PASS."

It is a disclosure of all that was to happen, both in the future immediately succeeding the time when it was given, and in the succeeding centuries that should elapse between the first and second Advents. Does not such a disclosure demand attention; should not such a revelation awaken interest? If the men of the world could get a certain knowledge of what would happen in the next few hours, in commerce, in politics, in sport, would they not spend time, money, labour, in the effort to acquire it?

"The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Apostles have exhorted us to be "mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets and of the commandment of us the Apostles of the Lord and Saviour," and have told us that it is by "knowing these things before" that we shall be guarded from "being led away with the error of the wicked," and be preserved in steadfastness: and yet we neglect "the more sure word of prophecy," "the light in a dark place."

But not only primarily is the book of the Revelation an unveiling of "things which must shortly come to pass." It is secondarily, though in a most important degree, an apocalypse or discovery of JESUS CHRIST Himself, in the glories of his person, and in the gracious offices which He has undertaken in relation to his beloved people.

Herein does He reveal Himself as SAVIOUR, and that by his vicarious and atoning death. His pre-eminent title throughout the book is that of THE LAMB. He is

"THE LAMB IN THE MIDST OF THE THRONE."

"THE LAMB SLAIN FROM THE FOUNDATION OF THE WORLD."

"THE LAMB STANDING ON THE MOUNT ZION."

"THE LAMB, THE TEMPLE, and THE LIGHT" OF GLORY.

Here, more frequently, more markedly, than in any other book of Scripture, is the propitiatory death, the precious blood, the all-prevailing value of that wondrous sacrifice set forth. No less than twenty-eight times is He spoken of as THE LAMB. Oh, how needful, how profitable, thus to consider Him; in a day when, beyond all others, the atoning death of Christ is denied or explained away, and that by professing Christians. In loudest and clearest tones does the Apocalypse cry, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world!"

Herein does He reveal Himself as PRIEST. He is the First-begotten from the dead. For it was in resurrection that He was "made an High Priest" by "Him that said unto Him, 'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee'" (cf. Acts xiii. 33, and Heb. v. 5). Mark Him as, clad in sacerdotal robe, He walks amid the seven golden lamps, his eyes as a flame of fire, searching all things—his mouth, whence proceedeth the sharp sword, reproving, warning, commending, blaming—his hand sustaining the angels of the churches, or laid in deepest tenderness on the one whom the sight of his ineffable glory has withered and humbled to the dust.

Herein does He reveal Himself as THE PROPHET. For He is "the Faithful and True Witness," "the Amen," "the Prophet like unto Moses." That is, not only the One who declares the things which are to come to pass, but the One who testifies concerning the works and ways of the churches, and who makes known the mind of God with perfect knowledge thereof.

Consider that faithful testimony as He delivers it to the seven churches by his servant John. All is brought to light, the diligent labour, the patient zeal, the jealousy for the truth, the decline of the first love, the tribulation and courage here, the admission of false doctrine there, the creeping in of worldliness, the slumbering, half-alive condition of some, the holy walk of others, the firm grasp of his word of patience, the lukewarmness and self-sufficiency—every phase of Christian life is passed under review, to each is given the word of approval or of blame by Him who "searcheth the reins and hearts," the infallible Director of the consciences of men.

And if the wounds of this Friend are faithful, how gracious is his counsel as the true Prophet, how lovingly importunate his urgent pleading for admission to the heart, how spirit-stirring and stimulating his glorious promises to him that overcometh. Of Him it is written, "Him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever He shall say unto you."

Herein, once more, is He revealed as THE KING. He is "the Prince of the kings of the earth." He is "in the midst of the throne." "On his head were many crowns." "And He hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS." "And He shall reign for ever and ever."

The Apocalypse is the book of the Throne. It is the prophetic description of the victories of the once slain but now risen Lamb, on behalf of his people; of his companionship with them in their tribulations; of the great triumph, after centuries of conflict, of Him who, having "tasted death for every man," is now crowned with glory and honour—"the blessed and only Potentate." "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." "All kings shall fall down before Him; all nations shall call Him blessed." "And the whole earth shall be filled with his glory."

He is soon to be revealed in all his glorious majesty. Shall we not attempt to discern the signs of the times which He has revealed as heralding his return; and as we note the successive accomplishments of those things which were to precede his coming, lift up our heads with joyful hope because our "redemption draweth nigh"?

"Behold, He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him; and they also which pierced Him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him. Even so, Amen."

"THY KINGDOM COME!"

BETHESDA MISSION, DALSTON.—The fourth anniversary of this mission was celebrated on Jan. 3 at the hall, London Fields. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. Richard Friday. Revs. B. W. Jackson, W. Miall, and Evan Thomas, Mr. Stallard, and Mr. G. F. Trewerton addressed the meeting, which was well attended. The report showed that during the year 1892, three hundred and forty-five meetings had been held in the hall, eighty-eight open-air meetings in the neighbourhood, and one hundred and ninety-seven meetings conducted, or taken part in elsewhere. About a hundred persons had professed conversion during the year in the various meetings, and scores of Christians had testified to great blessing received.

MOTHERLESS.

The rill on the mountain side makes such a gentle sound that you have to listen to hear it. It trickles over the tiny stones till presently, as you watch it, the streamlet gathers itself together, and wanders down till it broadens out into a stream, and still goes on increasing till it loses itself in the river.

I was standing by the side of such a river this afternoon, and was led all the way back to its source. But it was not a river of water, but a river of love and kindness which rose in the lanes and alleys of St. Giles' and runs fair and fresh near the Downs at Eastbourne.

It commenced in a Sunday-school class in Mr. George Hatton's Mission in St. Giles', conducted by Miss Lee. She loved these boys and girls and wanted to do all she could for them. When the children stayed away from her she used to go and visit them, and thus came to know many of their homes. So the children discovered that their teacher cared for them, and nothing would tempt them to stay away from her class, and it grew till Miss Lee had to take a large room all to herself. She soon gathered some two hundred children, and taught them several times a week.

Sometimes these boys and girls came so cold and hungry that Miss Lee gave them breakfast before she commenced the Scripture lesson. When the children were ill, she visited them in their poor homes. You would hardly call them homes at all, for many of them lived in underground cellars which were very cold and the only light which reached them came through the grating of the pavement above; and the beds in many cases were only made of straw heaped together in the corner of the room.

Some of these homes had a yet sadder story. The children had no mother. It was lonely for them, was it not? Their fathers were out most of the day, and there was no one to befriend them and help them in their little cares, no one to make and mend their clothes and get them their dinner.

Miss Lee could not see this distress without deciding to lessen it, and I will tell you what she did. She hired a few rooms in St. Giles', but soon they grew too small for her, and she took a little house; but so many came that she decided to take a larger house in Plaistow, and here she welcomed the motherless children. The numbers increased so rapidly that Miss Lee felt she must admit only girls, because the boys, she thought, were stronger and could battle their way through the world with more chance of success. They were a happy household with such a kind foster-mother.

About eight years ago Miss Lee came to Eastbourne, and this afternoon we went to see her and her large family of girls. I wish you had been there too. The children were all busy doing their lessons; some were learning to read and write, others were doing their sums, and one or two were mending their clothes. They have a Scripture lesson every morning, and a text is chosen out of their daily portion and written on a slate in the schoolroom. The text for to-day was, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

I think I ought to tell you about the smallest girl in the home. She is such a fair little maid, with soft brown hair and rosy cheeks. Her name is Florence, and she is four years old. Two years ago a deaconess was threading her way through the busy East-end of London. A working-man came up to her and begged her to go and see a family who were in great distress. There were five little hungry children all alone. Their mother had died quite recently, and her sister had come to London to befriend these little motherless ones. The winds were very cold then and the aunt got a bad chill. She became very ill, and in a few days died. When the deaconess heard this story she went at once to the house. The five little children were crying for food, and the poor aunt lay in her coffin among them.

The father was out. He was a young man, stunned and bewildered by all the trouble which had come to him, and he did not know what to do for his motherless children.

The deaconess knew Miss Lee, and she begged her to take in one of the children; this was how Florence Grey came to the Eastbourne Home.

Just before we went away Miss Lee asked us if we would like to hear the children sing. When we gathered in the schoolroom the children sang a hymn which you will find in "Golden Bells," called "Nothing to Pay." Here is one of the verses—

> Nothing to pay, yes, nothing to pay.
> Jesus has cleared all the debt away;
> Blotted it out with his bleeding hand;
> Free and forgiven and loved you stand.

And when these motherless children were singing these words together, I thought of the many boys and girls who have loving mothers to care for them, and happy homes to live in, and who, best of all and beyond everything else, know that the Lord Jesus Christ loves and cares for them, and has forgiven them all their sins. You would surely like to help Miss Lee in giving a home to these poor children, would you not? She wants to tell them of a love which is greater than their mothers', a love which can never, never die, the everlasting love of the Lord Jesus.

It costs a great deal of money to pay for the Home. The rent and taxes, the food and clothing and many other things cost a good deal, and Miss Lee sometimes wonders where she will get the money. She had a matron once to help her, and a little cottage to which she could send the children when they were ill; but she has had to give up both of these because she was unable to pay for them.

So Miss Lee has to work herself now. Once she had to do all the cooking for the children, and she did not know how to do it, and she just did what you and I do who know the Lord Jesus. She went to Him and told Him all her difficulties and He helped her, as He always does.

When you come to Eastbourne next you must go and see Miss Lee and her happy household, for it will be a pleasure to her, as well as to you. Her address is Home for Motherless, Destitute, and Orphan Girls, Hurst-road, Eastbourne. S. E. S.

JEWISH CHILDREN IN BOMBAY.

In the city of Bombay there are large numbers of the Hebrew race. Among them are those known as Beni-Israel, more or less a mixed race. These speak the Marathi language. Besides this community and the European Jews there are a good many Arabic-speaking Jews from Baghdad, and Malayalim-speaking Jews from Cochin, both of which classes use Hindustani in Bombay,

There are mission schools for the Beni-Israel, but nothing was done for the others until I opened a girls' school, early in 1891, in the street which is the centre of the district they frequent. The poor children had before no real education, as a rule, only being taught to read Hebrew and English, with very little understanding of either. Not one child on entering my school could read or write anything she understood, or knew anything of the contents of the Old Testament. Needlework, too, was untaught in their own schools, where there are no women teachers.

This small school is but a little light; from the difficulties to be encountered one could not look for a large attendance, but most of the scholars are very regular and diligent, as well as affectionate and tractable, and we believe that the Holy Spirit will give us a rich harvest from the seed of the Word sown in their hearts.

I carry on this school independently, not only of any society, but also of Government aid. We cannot give the requisite number of hours to secular instruction to secure a grant in aid, for the Bible is our chief text-book, and it is read in Hindustani, Hebrew, and English. We can gratefully say, however, that "hitherto hath the Lord helped us." My husband has a day and Sunday-school for poor Hindu boys, besides his special work among his own people, the Parsees; and I have some zenanas, and work among the Eurasian poor, many of whom live in a sad state of poverty and spiritual darkness, as bad as that of the heathen.

I much needed a fellow-worker, as there are more openings than I can enter, and the Lord has at length sent me a suitable one, but not as yet the means for her support. Perhaps this may meet the eye of some one who is hindered from personally going into the foreign missionfield, but who would like a substitute there. If so I should feel grateful for aid towards the support of this helper, who is a young English widow, and an experienced worker.

PUIR WEE BAIRNIES.

Day by day they come to us, sent by that Loving One, who, when He dwelt on earth, nestled them to his bosom. As we behold their touching need, starvation written all too plainly to require one pleading word, how gladly we receive them in his name! They come not from the gutters, but from widows and widowers, who have neither food nor fire for their little flocks.

"This God is the God we adore, our faithful unchangeable Friend," who has honoured us to add another piteous family (the 67th) to the 5700 children now doing well in Canada. Our sister, Mrs. Birt, has rescued 3500 from wretched surroundings in Liverpool, and is now busy with another hundred.

As it is increasingly difficult to help the drunkards, shall we not be doubly in earnest to save their children? Nothing does this so effectually as new surroundings, away from the withering, demoralising influences of drink.

About a dozen of our well-to-do young fellows have come this winter on a visit to see their folks in Old England. One week of it, and they, without an exception, were so disgusted with the custom of "standing treat," that most of them have already hurried back to Canada, having a return ticket ready. They had learned a calmer, sweeter way of life.

Our way is to drown the miserable past, quickly dry the tears, and press daily onward, with full expectation that all will form a redeemed family in the glory, to praise together our God who permits you and me, dear reader, to feed and clothe one more, these desperately cold days. Who will seek to add another jewel to the diadem of Jesus? This will tend to deepen spiritual life, even if it should involve self-denial. His own bright smile will reward each one of you, who have clothed the little ones, fed the hungry, and cheered many a despairing family through the "little while" until we see our glorious King.

Since Christmas we have had the joy of giving to about two thousand of our poor people, young and old, a bright, happy evening, and have distributed several thousand gifts—warm garments, and many useful things sent by our kind friends. The widows' day (January 2) was a very happy one. They had their usual hot dinner, suitable gifts of clothing, packets of tea from one friend, and a piece of cheese sent from Canada for the purpose.

The 700 Sunday-school children took up three evenings, and each party of them seemed happier than the previous one. But among the most responsive of our crowds were the "infants," numbering about two hundred. These little people were wide awake for all the enjoyment, and their delight over the beautiful pictures shown by the magic lantern, and their grateful smiles over the dolls, and toys, etc., were ample reward for any toil involved by the preparation and thought necessary.

SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—The Southwark and Camberwell Anti-Sunday Travelling Society held a meeting on Thursday evening in St. Winifred's Mission Hall, Rotherhithe, when addresses were given by Messrs. H. F. Morris, B. Warren, B. Reeves, and others.

JEWS IN SMYRNA.—Rev. James Murray has been helping many refugee Jews, who arrive in a pitiful condition. He has already had over £160 sent from Scotland, and has been able to do a good deal, but much remains to be done until the hard season passes away. Rev. Mr. Macnaughton is helping in the same work at Magnesia, where at least thirty families have been in utter destitution.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 22.—2 SAMUEL XI.

THERE are times when God's kings hear from afar the sound of war, and go forth to battle. If then we linger in luxury and ease at home we expose ourselves to great temptation. Well may we put our eyes into the keeping of the Lord! How often does temptation enter through them! However great our attainments in the Divine life, we are never beyond the peril of falling into sin which will blacken our record, and bring sorrow on all our days. The sweet Psalmist of Israel was exposed to even fiercer temptations than others, as the captain of a host is always most exposed to attack. The more intimate you are with God the more virulent will be the devil's hate, and the more strenuous his attempt to throw you down from your excellency. Watch as well as pray.

When we have committed a sin, we are more anxious to conceal it before men than to confess it before God. The thirty-second Psalm tells us that David kept silence to God about his sin, for probably a twelvemonth; but so soon as it was committed he sought to obliterate its traces from the eyes of his fellows. He was prepared to sacrifice Uriah to the hiding of the fatal secret. In God's sight he was guilty, not only of adultery, but of murder. What a contrast between the sturdy bravery of Uriah and the duplicity of the king! Oh that we who profess so much may never fall beneath the standard of character maintained by men of the world! David's subterfuge succeeded with man. God loved him too well to let it pass.

MONDAY, JANUARY 23.—2 SAMUEL XII.

Months passed by of bitter soul agony to the king. His bones waxed old beneath the heavy hand of God. That his sin was hidden from man could not appease the gnawing of conscience. He must be made to confess. The poison must be pressed from the ulcer, and God brought matters to a head by the mission of Nathan.

We are apter at judging others than ourselves. Let us sometimes look at ourselves as we should other people, and judge ourselves by the standard we should apply to them. Often in life God brings some incident of fiction or literal life before us, concerning which we have no difficulty in passing a judgment; and when we have given the verdict, his Spirit flashes upon us the words, "Thou art the man." So He makes manifest the counsels of our hearts. He chastens us that we may not be condemned of the world. If we were less dear to God, He would be less careful in the use of the two-edged sword.

Sin may be forgiven, but its results linger in hearts and lives and households, though out of them God will bring a Solomon.

Those who mourn the loss of little children will understand something of the anguish that rent David's heart. But let them be comforted by the certainty that the lambs are with the Good Shepherd, and that parents will recognise and be recognised in the world where we know even as we are known.

Wonderfully does the chapter end! Confession (Psa. li.) had brought forgiveness, and this victory.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 24.—2 SAMUEL XIII.

The sins of the parents pass into their children, and as we see them repeated in those that wear our likeness we learn their venom and see the blackness of their darkness. For this, if for no other reason, we should exercise self-restraint, and live with girded loins, lest the evil of our hearts be reproduced in others.

Awful as these chapters of the Bible are, they are necessary. That would be no true picture of the heart of man which omitted records like this. Are not the germs of these sins in us all? It is by the grace of God that they have been prevented bearing fruit. How may we not thank God if He has restrained us! One act of passionate indulgence may devastate the life, as the irruption of a volcano does a fertile valley.

Let us not turn from temptation simply, but let us ask that, through the grace of Christ, we may climb through temptation to strength on that side of our nature where we have been assailed.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25.—2 SAMUEL XIV.

Joab had probably his own ends to serve in seeking the return of Absalom, which he endeavoured to attain by the use of this woman. She ran a parallel between God's treatment of the banished, and man's, and urged David to devise means for the return of his outcast son (vv. 13, 14). But she made this profound mistake. The means which God devises involve on the one hand the vindication of his holy law, and, on the other, the confession of sin. But in the case of the return of Absalom, there was neither the one nor the other. He came back simply to gratify his father's weak indulgence, and this led to the disasters that ensued. Some men think that God can welcome his Absalom back, just because He wills and loves. If He did, there would be a revolt in the universe, like that headed by Absalom in the kingdom of David. The means that God devised must include the Incarnation and Crucifixion, Regeneration and Confession.

Beauty of body is very often a snare, and is consistent with outrageous deformity of soul, like a flower-sprinkled grave hiding corruption. But true beauty of moral character tranfigures the body. Too often are we content to exist without seeing the King's face. It is a fatal loss, and we should be prepared to make similar efforts to those of Absalom to stand in the inner circle.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26.—2 SAMUEL XV.

When evil has not been extirpated to the very heart, it is apt to crop up again as it did with Absalom. Oh my soul, be willing to bear the most searching scrutiny by thy God, lest the Absalom of thy pride or uncleanness head a revolt in the inner kingdom. Sin always begins by stealing away the heart.

David was conscious of ill-desert, hence his resolve to flee. How different his bearing now to that of the day when Goliath fell beneath him. And yet there was a beautiful spirit of resignation welling up amid the salt waves of his bitter sorrow. When we are passing through dark hours we cannot do better than repeat his words, "Behold, here am I, let Him do to me as seemeth good unto Him." What thoughtfulness of Ittai! What pathos to Zadok! What humility as he climbed Olivet! What trust still in God to turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness! It is a lovely picture of the attitude of the resigned spirit.

Noble words were those uttered by Ittai, whose name associates him with David's stay in Philistia. For a stranger and an exile was he. But let us address our King in these days of his humiliation as he did David, "In what place my lord the king shall be, whether for death, or for life, there also shall thy servant be" (Jno. xii. 26; 1 Thess. v. 10).

FRIDAY, JANUARY 27.—2 SAMUEL XVI.

There may have been some truth in Ziba's statement, but we should put beside it 2 Sam. xix. 24. We should be very careful to maintain the love which believes all things. How sweet to feel that however men think of us, our King knows our hearts. He knows the worst of us, and the best.

When men curse us, and speak despitefully against us, let us look through them to the permission of God's will. "The Lord hath said unto him, 'curse David!' Let him curse, for the Lord hath bidden him." Do not try to avenge yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath. Vengeance is with God; He will recompense, and requite good for evil to those that are oppressed.

In the midst of the weariest hill of difficulty, our God provides refreshment, so that weary souls may get to themselves new courage to persevere. No difficulty without its arbour of ease! No wound without its palliative! No desert without its water-spring!

By wisdom shall no man prevail. God takes the wise in their own craftiness. Beware of that counsel which falls in with the dictates of your own lowest self. He who counsels you to do what is morally wrong, can never safely guide you in matters of prudence. God, who does not upbraid us, however weak we are, and repeated our requests, gives wisdom when we ask. When we have asked, let us reckon that we have received it, and act.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28.—2 SAMUEL XVII.

No doubt Ahitophel's counsel was the wiser, but Absalom and his followers were blinded by passion and sin, were unable to discriminate, and so fell easily into the net laid by Hushai. The delay was of the utmost value to David. When we are following the counsels of our own heart God is against us, and our wisdom is turned to foolishness.

Messages are constantly coming to us to haste, to take refuge from pursuit, but how indifferent we are in our obedience; voices speak, but we hear not; indications come from the world of the unseen, but we forbear to take warning. Unlike David, we make no response, and are overtaken by disaster. "Arise ye and pass quickly over the water." Leave behind the river of death, and get you to the hills, from whence cometh your help.

Then upon the further side of Jordan God again provided for David and his hosts through the kindness of Machir and his friends. But nothing could compensate him for the loss of the house of the Lord. The harts in the forest glades of Bashan furnished a meet emblem of his heart's yearning for the house of God. The very distance lent sweetness to the ordinances of the Lord's house, which now seemed to be lost for ever; but in the midst of all there were the unwavering hope and certainty that days of praise were coming; confident expectation of going again to the altar of God, and of singing his praise on the harp as aforetime. Ps. xlii. and xliii. indicate the emotions that filled the exile's heart in this the bitterest episode of his life, most bitter because its darkness was attributable to his own sin.

THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD, Zech. iv. 1—10.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 6.

THIS vision was given on the same night as that of our previous lesson (i. 7), and was designed for the encouragement of Zerubbabel. His difficulties were many and great: the workers were few in number and full of fears; the Samaritans were using every means against them; they were not sure of the favour of the Persian King; and some of their own people looked disdainfully upon the new building—no wonder if he was discouraged. This vision teaches him and all other servants of God that no one succeeds because he is strong and his difficulties are few, and none need fail because he is consciously weak and face to face with insuperable difficulties. The Spirit of God is the only essential for success in any work for God.

THE VISION (1—3). Note its details: the seven branched candlestick or lampstand; the bowl upon the top of it; the seven pipes connecting the bowl with each lamp, denoting fulness of communication; and the two olive trees supplying the oil (12). Recall Exod. xxv. 31—37. The vision represents the people of God (Rev. i. 20), and teaches many things. Gold represents their preciousness; light, their object. Christ is the light of the world (Jno. viii. 12), but He gives light by means of his Church (Matt. v. 14.) Seven—their completeness, yet their diversity in unity. The bowl, the Lord Jesus Himself, from whom the Church derives everything. The perfect communication of his fulness to each church and to each individual is represented by the seven pipes from the bowl to each lamp. The oil is the Holy Spirit, which is ours only as we are perfectly united to Him, and which is the only true need of his people. The two olive trees are an important feature in the vision (see 11—14). They indicate that the oil is supplied not from a vessel that may soon be exhausted, but from living trees, so that the supply is continuous. The two anointed ones (14) are Joshua and Zerubbabel, in whom the priesthood and the royalty were represented. Anointing was used in connection with both offices. They are not the trees, but the two branches (12). In the trees Christ Himself appears as Priest and King. "It is precisely in proportion as Christians practically use Christ as their King and Priest that they receive his Spirit."

Nothing could have been more suited to its purpose than this vision. It turned attention from the building to the people and showed how precious they were to God, and how closely united to Him. It directed the expectation, not to Zerubbabel and Joshua, but to the true King and Priest of his people.

THE APPLICATION (6—10). "Might is the strength of many combined; power, that of one man" (see 2 Chro. xiv. 11). Neither Zerubbabel nor any other Christian worker to-day has any might except "through God" (1 Cor. iii. 6; 2 Cor. x. 4). Our difficulty often is, not in assenting to the truth that all is by God's Spirit, but in consenting to give up every other confidence. O great mountain (7).—The difficulty is not less in itself, but it is met now in the power of the Spirit of God (Isa. xl. 4; Matt. xxi. 21). Every worker knows that the smallest obstacle becomes a mountain when the Spirit of God is not with us, and the mightiest difficulty vanishes before Him. Headstone.—"It was customary for the chief magistrate to lay the foundation, and also the crowning top stone." The shoutings recognise that as grace commenced, so it completes the building and must continually preserve it. Christ is both foundation stone and top stone (Heb. xii. 2). Day of small things (10). The new building, the people employed in the work, and perhaps even Zerubbabel himself, were all regarded with a measure of contempt. Faith should learn to look above these things. In her calculations God is not left out. The seven eyes of God (R.V.) watched the work with interest, though it was despised by the people. What power can defeat a work which He undertakes? (Compare 2 Chro. xvi. 9; Prov. xv. 3.)

THE CHRISTIAN EXCAVATORS' UNION was started about eighteen years ago, when a few Christian men banded themselves together to work and live for the Lord Jesus. Since then the Union has steadily increased; and new members are found on many of our large public works, and their testimony has been useful to many.

HAVRE.—Since my return the Lord has given us great blessing, especially in the Perrey district, where two halls were opened last summer. A number of young men have been coming to the meetings. About twenty of them come on Saturday evenings to read and study the Bible. The young women, hearing we had begun a class for the men, have asked for a young women's Bible class.

Mildmay Bereaved.

A shadow has fallen upon Mildmay, so long the centre of a bright and happy life. But the covenant promise has not been forgotten:—"When I bring a cloud over the earth the bow shall be seen in the cloud."

Mrs. Pennefather, the revered head of this great institution, and more than mother to thousands, passed away at three o'clock on Thursday morning, Jan. 12. We cannot speak at this time of the loss; it is too keenly felt; but the beauty and fragrance of her life will linger with us. Of that precious gift death cannot despoil us, nor can time rob us of her blessed influence.

Her last illness was brief, and was attended with great suffering; but through it all shone out the wondrous grace of God. Those who ministered to her in her last hours were privileged beyond the common lot in that they were witnesses of her marvellous self-control, and her absolute victory over suffering. During all those restless nights and days she never uttered a word of complaint, and was as unconscious of self as she was thoughtful for others.

After the first severe attack she rallied, and it was a great comfort to those who were with her to hear her last words. Her mind was clear and her judgment sound. She expressed a wish to hear something about the "glorious things of God." When told of the meetings of the Week of Prayer her face brightened and she seemed to rejoice most of all that it was universal; she dwelt upon this fact with peculiar delight.

The Universal Church! This is the faith on which Mildmay was founded. It shone out bright and clear in her last hours. "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." "All who have the living sap are the real branches of the true vine." "There are many members, but they form not many bodies but one." It seemed to pain her that people failed to grasp this great truth, and to manifest the unity of God's people before the world.

Lastly, she spoke of our Lord's return. This theme seemed to inspire her with joy. She said, "It is a pity there are so many opinions about it. It can be summed up in this, 'He that shall come will come and will not tarry.'" She repeated this twice. She spoke of the letter on this subject, signed, among many others, by Dr. Andrew Bonar, who before the letter was published was taken home. Her friend repeated two lines of a favourite hymn:

"Head of the Church triumphant,
We joyfully adore Thee."

She said, "Yes, yes, that's it," with a look and tone of exultation.

For a few days hope revived in many hearts, but the Master was calling and she was eager to go. She said to one of her family, "I think it is the Lord's will that my work is done." At times she thought herself talking with friends as she was accustomed to do so often; then she would speak in her old way, saying what was often on her lips in her days of health. Once she said, "We need an open door and a shut door. Good night, dear, separation will not be so dreadful."

Again, speaking comfort to one who was in trouble, she said, "We must not forget all the great things God is doing for us, and will do, though it is very hard sometimes to know what way He is leading us. God bless you, dear friend, and give you much of his presence. May He keep you under the shadow of his wings; yes, yes, his own safe place." So through many hours she was giving comfort to those who she imagined were by her side.

Once she broke out into this short prayer, "Have pity, have pity, O Lord, upon the souls of those who do not know Thee, and who do not love Thee." A friend present said, "I thought she would say, 'Have pity on me'; but not a word for self." This was the keynote of her life—all for others, nothing for self.

Her loss is not alone for Mildmay; it is a national loss. No one can ever give a proper estimate of what she has done in the quietest way. The wheels of blessed influence that have been set in motion by the power of her life and example can never be known on earth. It has been as noiseless as the dew. "But there is a silence louder than thunder."

One of her suggestions for the guidance of those in authority was, "When you are doubtful about anything, ask yourself 'Will this bear multiplication?' If so, it will do." There are few people of whom we could say that the life as a whole could pass this test. But if such as she could be infinitely increased it would hasten the coming of our Lord.

H. J. C.

Nearly twenty years have passed away since devout men carried the beloved William Pennefather to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. Of the large group of mourners that stood beside his grave in the churchyard of Ridge, near Barnet, in April, 1873, "the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep." And now the Lord has called away from the scene of her earthly labours that noble and gifted woman, Catherine Pennefather; who had the double honour of being her husband's wise counsellor and helper while he lived, and his patient and loving successor in many Christian enterprises left incomplete at his death.

On Monday morning St. Jude's church was filled by a company of mourners for our beloved and departed friend. Then a long line of carriages followed the coffin, covered with wreaths and surmounted by a floral crown, to the same country churchyard where her beloved and gracious husband awaits, now with her, the coming of their Lord.

When we review the progress of the Mildmay institutions during the last twenty years, we find that they have grown and prospered, and become enlarged to an extent that their beloved founder could scarcely have expected or foreseen. With wise counsel and a strong faith in God, Mrs. Pennefather and a noble band of Christian workers, drawn to her side by strong affection and sympathy, have not only maintained the valuable institutions which William Pennefather left as his monument, but have multiplied them fourfold. With holy courage and zeal, they have added house to house, and school to school, for various branches of home and foreign missionary work. They have built two hospitals, now in fu operation; and time would fail to enumerate the various minor branches of the ever-extending labours of the Mildmay deaconesses, nurses, and missionary workers at home and abroad.

None would have been more ready than Mrs. Pennefather herself to attribute the success of these labours, under God's blessing, to the holy men and women gathered in residence at Mildmay, or associated with it by ties of prayer and mutual intercourse. But all who know the inner life of Mildmay, can testify that the beloved Catherine Pennefather, though seldom seen, and still more rarely heard in any public gathering of God's people, was the animating spirit, whose influence pervaded that busy scene of Christian labour, and whose eye and voice seemed to reach every one, down to the most remote and humble worker.

A mother in Israel has been taken from among us, and the Church on earth is poorer by the removal of our beloved friend. Let us have faith in God that, having taken to Himself, and laid up among his treasures, one so precious to us, He will not fail to supply his Church and to enrich Mildmay with many consecrated and powerful women whose service shall make up that which is now lacking. In this confident assurance we will not give way to any sorrowful thought as we deposit in the grave by the side of dear William Pennefather the precious dust of one whom in life he loved and honoured. How greatly he loved and honoured her, even at this distance of time our memory brings back to us, as we recall happy days of quiet intercourse spent in their home or on their visiting our own domestic circle. No, we will not grieve or murmur that death no longer divides these blessed ones, who were lovely and pleasant in their lives. They were alike eminent in their labours for God, and we rejoice to know that both now rest from their labours. "The sleep of a labouring man is sweet" (Eccl. v. 12). So sweetly now sleeps in Jesus our beloved Catherine Pennefather, "until the day break and the shadows flee away." Does not the Spirit of God put into our mouths, as a fitting epitaph, his own inspired words, "A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised; give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praise her in the gates"? (Prov. xxxi. 30, 31.)

H. C. N.

In an early issue we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the life work of our departed friend.

IN MEMORIAM.

He was all love, his labours manifold;
Great heart of fire—he lured all to his side;
While she, reserved and calm, and stately-souled,
Yet set abroach the life-streams far and wide.
Earth's meanest task heaven's touch had dignified;
The Christ's great name was over all writ bold;
Bright bands of maidens round her ceaseless plied
Through day and night for love-sake toils untold.

Her life was one long study of distress;
Sin and despair her fair soul mirrored well,
Yet kept its bloom, lost nought of loveliness;
Long that lone love-life stemmed the tide of hell.
The chastening veil that waning sight now cast
Was but the Master's shadow come at last!

REV. J. McNEILL IN SCOTLAND.

The greatest gatherings of people ever known in Motherwell have been seen this week in connection with the mission conducted by Rev. John McNeill and Mr. Burke. It lasted from Sabbath, 8th, to Friday, the 13th. On Sabbath morning Mr. McNeill preached in the parish church, which was filled. In the evening the Town Hall was crowded, first with an audience of women, and then with one of men. Each succeeding evening the mission was continued in the same place. The building has sitting accommodation for about 1200; it was crowded from the first, and evening by evening the number increased till multitudes had to turn away, unable to find admission. On Friday evening the floor of the hall was nearly emptied of seats, and packed to the back with standing men; in this way room was made for over 2000. Afternoon meetings were held for four days in churches, which also came to be crowded to their utmost capacity.

The attendance, especially at the afternoon meetings, was drawn from a large district of country round Hamilton, Bellshill; Wishaw, Uddingston, Blantyre, Strathaven, Lanark, and even Biggar, being all represented; while all classes of the resident population, composed of steel and iron-workers, miners, railway-men, waggon-builders, and engineers have been thoroughly reached. It gladdens one's heart to realise that the power which attracted such crowds was nothing but the simple Gospel of Christ, powerfully and faithfully preached by Mr. McNeill, persuasively and touchingly sung by Mr. Burke.

From the first there were tokens of blessing. Anxious inquirers were dealt with every evening, and many passed out of darkness into the glad light of the Gospel. But all the workers engaged are persuaded that there is still much of the fruit of these services to be gathered, and they hope to reap it in the continuation of the mission of Messrs. Ferguson and Bissett, evangelists. Indeed, preparation for their work had been made when the visit of Mr. McNeill and Mr. Burke was somewhat unexpectedly announced, and it is no doubt to this state of preparedness that much of the success of their meetings is to be traced. Another contributory cause is unquestionably the spirit of brotherly union which has characterised the whole effort. Denominationalism has been entirely unknown in this united mission, and the ministers and Christians of all churches in the town have prayed and laboured together, seeking only the triumph of Christ in the salvation of men.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

SAN REMO.

Meetings have been held at Nice, Mentone, Cannes, and San Remo. Revs. Lord Forester, Dr. Morgan, Dr. Murray Mitchell, A. P. Cox, W. Brookes, and several French and German pastors took part. The meetings have been exceedingly well attended.

M.

CANNES.

The week of prayer has been observed in Cannes better than ever before. All denominations were represented. English and French participated. Much prayer was the order of the day. Short and few were the addresses. A revival seems impending in Cannes. After many years of earnest persevering labours by the various evangelists, the reaping time is coming. As a result of the week of prayer a series of evening meetings has been commenced, in which special prayer is to be offered for a continuous spirit of union among the various workers.

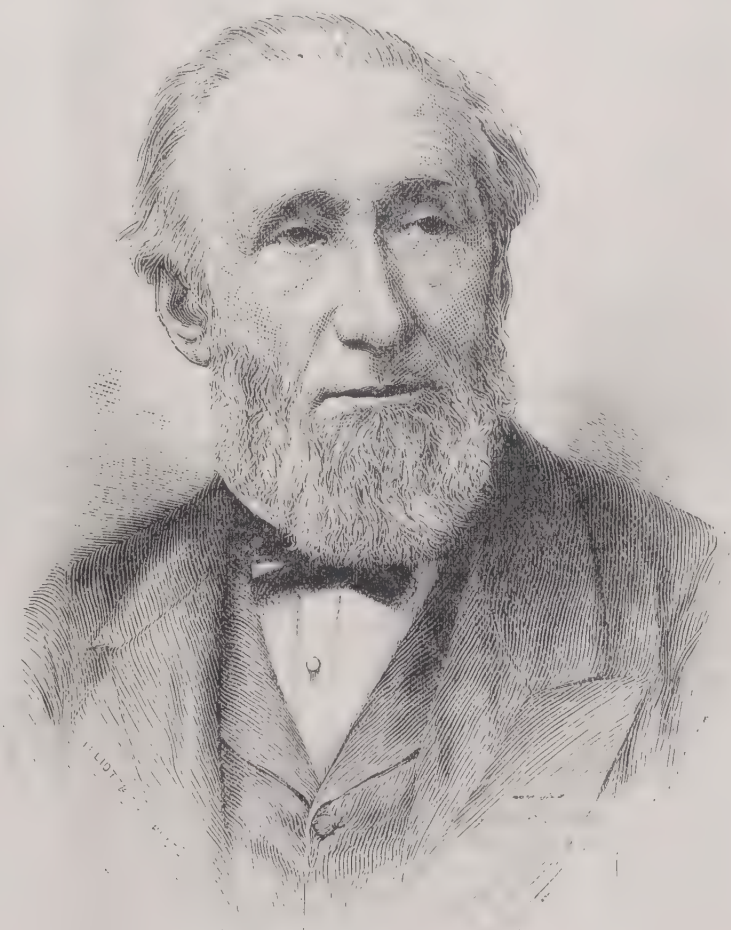
B.

THE LATE WILLIAM ISAAC PALMER, J.P.,

"EVERYBODY'S FRIEND."

"THE white flower of a blameless life" may often be claimed for those who die young. But sixty-nine years of warfare among difficulties of all kinds, while still keeping purity of heart and life unsoiled, is the greatest proof a man can give of a strong soul stayed upon God. WILLIAM ISAAC PALMER lived such a life to its very close. Its opening page first saw the light at the Old Manor House, Elberton, Gloucestershire, and the last leaf of his life was turned down on Wednesday, January 4, 1893. His parents, of good old yeoman family, were members of the Society of Friends, and he followed in their footsteps.

At the death of Mr. Thomas Huntley he joined his brothers as a partner in the well-known firm of Huntley and Palmer, after preparatory training in the firm, and also in a business house at Liverpool. He lived in Reading, and his widowed mother with him, until she died twelve years ago. He loved and venerated her as few men have loved a mother, and she was always anxious for his highest welfare. On one occasion, when a presentation was made to him from one of the numerous societies in which he was interested, she said, "I hope William will not grow uplifted with all this praise." At another time she remarked, "My sons are getting so rich, I am afraid lest they should grow too fond of money."



But he did not grow uplifted, though public and social honours were repeatedly offered him. His soul was too lowly to rest content in earthly honours, which he consistently put from him while he continually rose to heights of self-abnegation and self-sacrifice for the good of others. Nor did he grow too fond of money. That, too, was held in trust to be spent on others, though the commercial instinct was developed in him in a remarkable degree, causing him to plan and organise as only princes among merchants have the ability to do. Among lesser men it is often found that the money-making faculty is given—and nothing else—but William Palmer was wonderfully versatile and many-sided.

Always an energetic citizen, he worked indefatigably for town and county, but left municipal honours to others. He refused a seat in Parliament, though no one had a doubt about his return. The only civic honour which he accepted was that of Justice of the Peace, and this was done because he felt he would have a stronger influence and greater opportunities of good towards the culprits brought before him. The townspeople found in him a generous supporter of all public enterprises, and towards the erection of the new town hall alone he contributed over £20,000. Of the Schools of Science and Art at Reading he was the moving spirit.

In music he took great delight, and when ability was shown among those who had no means of procuring education, it was no unusual thing for him to give them an Academy course. He firmly believed in the power of bright cheerful music as an aid in raising people sunk in degradation, to a better life. For himself he often remarked that some of his most restful hours of rare recreation were passed in listening to the beautiful singing of a niece and friend who often stayed with him. He inaugurated Popular Saturday Evenings for the People in Reading, and presided over them for seventeen years. Professor André's choir was liberally financed and encouraged by him, as was also the introduction of small instruments, such as the guitar, mandoline, dulcimer, violin, &c., for he was convinced they would largely influence and refine the home life of the people.

Unknown authors and rising littérateurs found in him an ever-ready friend. More than one editorial chair is occupied to-day by men whom he took by the hand at a critical moment, and diverted from a course of "Fleet-street Fever." His influence in o case alone brought forth twelvefold fruit, for the journalist who signed the pledge at his instigation induced twelve others to join him. Mr. Palmer was chairman of the Reading Free Library and Museum Committee, and was the first President of the Reading University Extension College, inaugurated last year by the Dean of Christ Church, Oxford.

Horticulture was also a very favourite pursuit. He was Chairman of the Reading and District Gardeners' Association, and a member of the Royal Agricultural Society. His flowers often gained prizes at various shows, and so did the beasts which he bred on his model farm, at Grazeley Court, a house of historic interest, being formerly the home of Miss Mitford, the authoress. He had great sympathy for those suffering from agricultural depression, and was strongly of opinion that the cultivation of dairy farms would increase trade throughout the land, by causing the millions of money which are annually sent abroad, for eggs and butter, to enrich the pockets of our own people.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

One of the pioneers of temperance reform, he discovered in youth how much harder it was to live a life of total abstinence then than it is now. Becoming the possessor of Miss Mitford's cottage at Three Mile Cross —"Our Village"—midway between Grazeley Court and his town house in Reading, he turned it into "The Mitford" Coffee House, and in connection with it built a hall, where on Saturdays and Sundays as many as 300 people from the surrounding neighbourhood assemble for temperance entertainments, meetings, Gospel services, etc. This practical interest was shown in the welfare of the villagers by the sinking, at considerable cost, of a well to provide pure water, as their only supply was from a dipping pool. This was typical of what he did in numerous villages and upon his estates in Berks and other counties. The District Mission of the Reading Temperance Society was a special agency for the promotion of work in about fifty villages around Reading, in which over 200 meetings were held at "full moon" in the autumn and winter seasons.

Not only in the villages, but in the town itself, was William Palmer the life and soul of temperance work. He joined the committee of the Reading Temperance Society, and was one of the founders of the Temperance and General Philanthropic Society in 1852. Ten years later he was the means of building West-street Hall, and in 1871 became president, when the society was reorganised. In 1877 he started the Help Myself Society, a personal effort which has achieved remarkable success, having grown to a membership of over a thousand men. The Reading Lads' Association was also a development of temperance work in which he took an intense interest, enabling its conductors, by his support and advice, to afford healthful moral and physical exercise to no less than 600 lads. His concern for the young was specially shown to the orphan children of Wargrave District Schools, where he was, until two years ago, Chairman of the Board of Management.

Not only in Reading but in the great metropolis did Mr. Palmer seek to forward the temperance cause. In 1878, when William Noble introduced the Blue Ribbon movement to Great Britain, Mr. Palmer was the means of the successful launching of a mission which has left its mark upon the progress of the greatest reform movement of modern times. Hoxton Hall was secured, and has been largely maintained through his munificence. For fifteen years twenty-five meetings and classes have been held weekly, appealing to men and women through the agency of sectional societies. At the last annual meeting of one of its numerous branches (the Girls' Guild of Good Life), held on his birthday, Mr. Palmer was presented with a cabinet, containing specimens of work done in their daily occupation by factory girls, of whom there are over 900 in membership.

It was in 1878, too, that William Palmer assisted the late Lloyd Harris in starting a branch of the Help Myself Society at Southwark, at the Church from which the Pilgrim Fathers started on their voyage in the Mayflower, to seek freedom to worship God. This society has increased and multiplied, until there are now 900 men in full membership. It is significant that Mr. Palmer's last public appearance in London was at their quarterly tea on the last Wednesday of 1892, when he announced his resignation of the Presidency, handing over the symbol of office to his successor.

Among many other centres of active work in the metropolis he was interested in the Lambeth Baths meetings, Tolmer-square Institute, and the West London Mission. He was constantly opening bazaars, and in many ways showing practical help and loving sympathy wherever real work was being done, but he had a great abhorrence of the kind of work which is principally shown on paper or proclaimed from platforms, and he loathed "cant," whatever shape or form it took. So great was his breadth of interest in all parts of England, among all sects and parties, that private donations constantly found their way to outlying towns and hamlets, even when he could not help by personal presence which he did if any way possible. Of him may well be said:

"He had an industry in doing good,
Keen as the peasant's toiling for his food."

And not only parts of England, but the nation at large shared in his far-reaching sympathies. One of the organisations nearest his heart was the National Temperance League, of whose committee he was chairman. Heartily agreeing with the League in its efforts to influence the upper and middle classes by literature and other educational means, he saw how such teaching had sent its ever-widening circles into remote spheres, and felt that now the time had come when it could yet further extend its usefulness in making more special efforts to reach the masses. For such purposes he believed in men and women who had been under the temptation of the drink spell, and nobly overcome, going to their suffering brothers and sisters, and telling them how they had been strengthened to gain the victory. He selected those of striking individuality, and placed them at the disposal of the League for work in mission enterprises.

He was a vice-president of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, the Western Temperance League, and the National Temperance Choral Union, and showed a keen regard for the United Kingdom Railway Temperance Union. Those who really knew him can say, "He was renowned for a munificence more than princely, one of those tall men in whom the desire to relieve distress assumes the form of a master passion."

His delicate tact was never brought into greater play than in dealing with weak and irresolute drunkards, for his strong magnetic power imparted itself to them, causing them to feel an added strength to overcome in the present, and greater hope for the future. He invariably looked for the best in people, and by the subtle force by which a person knows, without spoken words, whether the best or worst in their character is being sought, he drew them to try and live up to the idea he had formed of them. His marked gentleness of manner to those in trouble caused some to feel they could deceive him, and he sometimes allowed them to do so, because he hoped, with time, they would rise to higher things. But an occasional glance from his shrewd penetrating eyes flashed like a revelation through them—he was not a keen business man and Justice of the Peace for nothing.

Widows, orphans, and other solitary people whom he helped with comforting words, and in many cases a yearly income, will find the world cold and desolate now he has left it.

He was essentially a leader of men, with clear incisive insight as to the best ways of managing. When a course was decided upon, no time was lost in carrying it out, every obstacle was swept away that lay in the path of a thing it was wise and right to accomplish. His coming to the front was always thrust upon him, he believed in esteeming others more highly than himself, and in working behind the scenes to allay the friction which crops up, even in philanthropic work, thus teaching the spirit of forgiveness which works in love.

He was, in brief, an example of life lived on New Testament principles, which many say "are impossible to follow in business life in the nineteenth century." His strongest force was his fervent prayerfulness. One who lived with him and loved him said, "When he retired to his room at night he often prayed so earnestly that the prayer rose above the whispered invocation to the subdued murmur which showed he was wrestling with God for some soul, and quite unconscious that he could be heard by others." This was the secret of his success. He knew that God could and would interfere on our behalf. During the last two days of his life he was in constant communion with God, and though he suffered intense pain he never complained.

He went as he had always wished to go, in the midst of his work, with no long period of inactivity. His life was happy with noble thoughts, quick impulses for good, strong sympathies with his kind, a full life bound on every side by success, because he abhorred failure, had immense perseverance, and never became hopeless; if one means failed another would be tried until earth's laurels crowned his efforts. Now God's laurels crown his brow.

The scene at Reading, on the occasion of his funeral, on January 9, was unparalleled in the history of the town. Every shop was closed, including even the public-houses; while all public buildings showed signs of mourning. Notwithstanding a dreary downpour of rain, some thousands of persons thronged the streets, representing not merely the town and district, but the numerous metropolitan and national agencies with which Mr. Palmer was associated. The procession of some fifty carriages containing his family and friends, the business staff and deputations from public bodies, was preceded by the employés at the factory. It wended its way to the Friends' Meeting House in Church-street, where after a singularly touching service, taken part in by a number of representative men, the mortal remains of William Palmer were laid to rest under a covering of the lovely flowers he loved so well. It was a striking feature of the atmosphere of spiritual oneness that pervaded his life that simultaneously with the service at the Meeting House Canon Barker conducted one in St. Laurence's Church, attended by the corporation and other municipal bodies, while the Free Churches of the town united in the afternoon, and the temperance friends in the evening, to pay their tributes of affection and respect to him, who, by the grace of God, without distinction of creed, party, or position, was "Everybody's Friend."

CARDIFF SAILORS' REST.

The friends of this work will be interested to hear that 1892 has been a very encouraging year; there has been an increased attendance at the various meetings, and manifest spiritual results. Two missionaries (English and Scandinavian) are now employed to visit the ships and boarding houses. A branch of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew" has also lately been established; the members are a great help to the workers in soul-winning. Open-air work was carried on in the summer months.

During the week following Christmas Day, two teas were given, one to the English and the other to Scandinavian sailors, at which about 300 were present. Literature to put in the bags, for use on board ship, is urgently needed, and will be gratefully received by Miss Tilly, Hon. Supt., Sailors' Rest, 180, Bute-road, Cardiff.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—There was a large gathering of friends in the Pastors' College, Newington, on Tuesday last week, when the Lansdowne-place Ragged School held its fortieth anniversary. Dr. Pierson said he had rarely heard a more touching story of a work for God carried on with such simplicity, fervour, and economy. Mr. Fisher, the superintendent, pleaded for an extension of the premises at a cost of £500; further addresses were delivered by Mr. Geo. Nokes, Mr. John Kirk, and others.

FAREWELL TO MISSIONARIES.—The adjourned meeting to bid God-speed to several Scandinavian and English missionaries bound for China was held at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, E., on Thursday last. Dr. Cory again presided. The several missionaries having been individually commended to God, six ladies who were present gave their testimony briefly. Two of them (one in Norwegian and the other in Swedish) added a few words of earnest appeal to their sailor countrymen, a large number of whom were present, and crowded around them at the close of the meeting, each glad to get a shake of the hand.

Islington Clerical Meeting.

THIS annual gathering of Evangelical clergy, held on Tuesday week in the Wilson Memorial Hall, Islington, proved this year peculiarly spiritual in tone and practical in suggestion. Rev. W. H. Barlow, M.A., vicar of Islington and convener of the meeting, presided.

Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, in the course of an address on "The need of more abundant gifts of the Holy Spirit for the work of the Christian ministry," said: An unspiritual pastorate means not only so many unspiritual individuals, but a frost at the heart of the community. And a pastorate fully spiritual means not only so many devoted Christian men, but a quickening of all the pulses from a heart supernaturally animated and glowing.

This is wonderfully implied in Eph. iv. 8—11. You must often have noticed the grand paradox there, in which the ministry is regarded as nothing less than the gift of Pentecost. "He ascended up on high, and gave gifts to men." And what are the gifts? Not (in this passage) tongues and miracles, or even the fire of love; but apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastor-teachers; in short, the Christian ministry. Scripture makes it amply certain, we hold, that this does not mean that the pastoral leaders were to be sacerdotal mediators, loaded as it were with a spiritual deposit which they were to "liberate" to the laity, and which was only to be got through them. Yet the passage assures us that, in a practical sense, in the Lord's purpose, the apostolic ministry was to be immeasurably important to the spiritual life of the Church. As were the "messengers, watchmen, and stewards," so on the whole would be the community. As they realised their Pentecostal ideal, so on the whole would it be realised in others, where they spoke the word and lived the life.

My brethren in the Lord and in his ministry, so it is still, upon the whole. Where is the English pastor who is at all realising the Pentecostal idea of the pastorate who does not sooner or later, under God, generate a Pentecostal life and work around him? Where is the pastor who has never realised it, or who has ceased to realise it, who does not more or less check and blight around him the life of God in the community, or more commonly, perhaps, prevent (as far as man can) its entrance, yea, the very knowledge that it exists at all?

All this we know. And we meet here to press it home upon one another's hearts. For us the Christian ministry is no abstraction. It is ourselves. It is we who must be to our churches either gifts of God—or something most sorrowfully different. It is we who cannot but be conductors either of power or of paralysis, of faith or unbelief, of love or selfishness, of life or death. To us the Eternal Master writes his seven epistles, which yet are for our churches too. To us He is exalted to give his glorious fulness, that He may give it also to them. So we meet to look one another in the face, and by our very presence together to ask each of each, "Hast thou thus received, art thou thus receiving, O my brother, the Holy Ghost?"

Prebendary EARDLEY-WILMOT followed in a telling address, in which he aimed, he said, at clenching and enforcing the truth so forcibly stated by Mr. Moule.

Revs. F. J. CHAVASSE and F. W. TRACY read suggestive papers on definite religious teaching in universities and schools.

The next subject was "Evangelistic and Pastoral Work among the Masses," dealt with by Canon FAVELL and Rev. A. J. ROBINSON. The former said:—Our proposition asserts "the need of more direct and systematic evangelistic work," and none can gainsay it. The need arises from the spiritual condition of man; described by the pen of Inspiration "as dead in trespasses and sins," "asleep" amid all the realities of life, "far off" from God and hope and holiness; portrayed by the Saviour of the world as "sheep without a shepherd." The need is intensified by the centralisation of population in ever-growing numbers in our large towns. The last census told us that of the twenty-nine millions of population in England and Wales nearly twenty-one millions reside in our towns.....During a ministry of twenty-five years, it has been my lot to work for six years in Birmingham, and for ten years among an artisan population at St. George's, Sheffield. My experience and my conviction is that while, alas! there is widespread indifference and unconcern about religion, practical Agnosticism and Materialism, as life is engrossed with the cares—what shall we eat? what shall we drink? wherewithal shall we be clothed?—there is no active hostility either to Christianity in the abstract or to Christian ministers in the concrete. I do not mean to say individual exceptions to this rule may not be found, but I am speaking generally. In place of active hostility, sympathy, appreciation, encouragement, is extended to any clergyman who with a warm heart, a ready sympathy, and an earnest spirit goes amongst his people to promote their temporal and spiritual well-being. Bishop Walsham How tells of a clergyman in the East-end of London who arranged for an open-air service in a low court in his district. On his arrival he found the court full, and on the front forms some eight or nine of the roughest men in the neighbourhood. He thought they must have come on purpose to disturb his service. Having secretly asked wisdom from above, he gave out his hymn and conducted his service. When it was ended he shook hands with the men, and said to the roughest of them, "I did not expect to see you here." The answer was, "I heard you were coming, so I said to my pals, 'Parson's coming, it's a queer court, let us go and see there's fair play; he's been kind to our kids.'"

A useful discussion ensued on home mission work, followed by a paper on "The Church and the Press," by the Archdeacon of London and Rev. A. R. Buckland, who dwelt on the power of literature, and maintained that more use ought to be made of the Press in the work of the Church.

On a Cannibal Island.

IN his forthcoming narrative of mission work on Tongoa, New Hebrides,* Rev. Oscar Michelsen says:

Our little party sailed north, a distance of thirty miles, from Nguna to Tongoa during the night, and suddenly we found ourselves under lee of the island. The natives, with their merry o-ah! o-ah! o-ah! were bounding down on the dark strand, and natural beauty made the sight lovely beyond imagination. . . .

The previous day, racked with fever, I thought of little else but dying—an event which I believed to be very near. The Lord had now inspired me with faith and hope for future usefulness. I thought no more of dying; but was fully determined to go forward in the strength of the Lord to do his work.

Some native Christians from other Islands accompanied Messrs. Robertson and Macdonald, missionaries labouring in other islands of the group, and myself. We landed on the west side of the island, on which there were but two villages, one large and the other very small. No other part was so fit for a mission station. Immediately on landing I asked for Malakaleo, the chief of the larger village, named Lumbukuti. He soon presented himself, and did not favourably impress me. A stout, gross-looking man, his eyes bore testimony to his strong animal instincts. A load of white beads, several pounds in weight, hung round his neck; a small whale's tooth served as a nose jewel; a fathom of Turkey twill secured a broad belt of bark to his waist. With various other ornaments, these indicated that the chief aspired to hold a place among the dandies of the island.

Round one of Malakaleo's eyes a black ring had been painted, and round the other a yellow one; a plume of cocks' feathers stood in his lime-besmeared hair, and in one hand he carried a short rifle. These were exhibited as proofs that the chief was

A MIGHTY MAN OF WAR.

Finally, a large number of pigs' tusks, borne round the wrist of his favourite wife, served to announce that he was a social power, for each of these was taken from pigs presented to him by chiefs desirous of doing him honour.

This then, was the man I had to deal with. He smiled graciously when he came down to meet me, and asked at once what I had in the carpet-bag in my hand. "Come up under the trees," I said, "and I will show you." His eyes glistened as I took out a small hatchet and gave him. Then I produced a clearing-knife, i.e., a butcher's knife with a fourteen-inch blade—a useful tool with which to reduce the bush for plantation purposes. I also presented him with a fathom of Turkey twill, and other things highly esteemed by the natives of these islands. He was getting quite demonstrative, and seemed nigh to embracing me.

I then asked if there were any other chiefs present; for I not only wanted to prepare the heart of this all-important personage, but was desirous of doing my best to remove all evil influence. Quite a number of men presented themselves as chiefs. In my own mind I felt—what later experience has proved to be the fact—that these were nearly all "got up for the occasion." However, I had intended to give away all I had in the bag; so if some real chiefs neglected to defend their prerogative for the sake of helping some of their friends, they did so at their own expense. When the bag was empty, I thought the time for action had come. I turned to Malakaleo, and said, "I would like to live here altogether. Could you not sell me a place at your village, where I could put up my station?" I thought that he would surely like to have such a friend living beside him. The man's countenance fell. He said, hesitatingly,

"WE ARE AFRAID OF YOU."

Nothing that I could say was of any avail to move this stern savage. Underneath the rough exterior there was a conscience. He was an ambitious man, who delighted to see his people victorious over their enemies, even if he now and then lost a few of his own men. He also loved to be shown honour at heathen feasts, which he knew I would discourage.

Malakaleo was a vicious cannibal, who, soon after I settled on the island, made use of the expression, "I hunger for human flesh!" To prevent cannibalism, I sent him a tin of preserved meat. He was a "sacred" chief, who pretended to have power to do many wonderful things. It was perhaps a matter of doubt with him if these powers would bear the light of day. It need hardly be added that he was a thorough sensualist. How would all this agree with Christianity and its representative now standing before him? "Axes, knives, calicoes, beads, etc., were all very good; but—I cannot have this man beside me, and follow my old course." These were his reasonings. Hence his laconic reply, "We are afraid of you."

Should I draw back? If I had the "I am with you" as my strength, surely it would not do to allow such a miserable worldling to stop me! The Lord often bids his people to go forward, but at the same time requires them to stoop. There was yet that other chief, of the small village Panita, on the same side of the island. I therefore turned to him. Maritariliu's answer was, "I require some time to think over it."

After more than an hour he returned. Doubtless he had consulted other chiefs. "Yes, he could sell me a piece of ground for a mission station." We all proceeded up to his place. A native kindly allowed me to lay my elbow on his shoulder, as, with a stick in my right hand, I walked up to the village. When we arrived there he demanded payment for his services! I felt it would be making a very bad beginning to give him anything; so I told him that I had come there as their friend, and if he wanted to be paid for a little kindness like that, it was quite clear that he did not wish me to be there; nor did he mean all the words he had spoken to me by the way! He did not press the matter further.

The chief of Panita pointed to a ridge as being the spot he would sell. After examination, the land, covering five or six acres, was bought and well paid for in various kinds of barter—value about £7 or £8. ...

Clearing was at once commenced. I noticed that the Tongoans, who were quite willing to help, were particularly careful not to touch the precise part where I wished to build the house. They left that to the who had come with us to help to build.† The fact of the matter was, it was a "sacred place," an old graveyard terribly "infested with ghosts"! It would be a splendid thing to have a missionary there—a man over whom they believed the spirits had no power! His living there would indeed drive away the ghosts, and make the place like the neutral ground around. So the natives reasoned.

My two missionary friends, assisted by sailors from the mission ship, and "the foreign natives," had the roof on the house in nine days from the time we arrived at the island. The walls were far from "light proof," and there might be divided opinions as to whether the house really was habitable. Being unable to do anything myself, I had to be thankful that the house was as it was.

† The Efatese helpers I paid for their work. The Erromangans said they had done it for the Lord, and would have no payment from me!

A LETTER TO A FRIEND.

My Dear Brother,—It seems to me that our position differs from yours in that we think we need the atoning blood not only for what we do, but on account of what we are.

It was the inherent sinfulness of the man that caused the contact with the bone of a man, or a grave, to render him unclean (Num. xix.). He was one of the nation which had turned back from Kadesh-barnea, and though he may not have been one of the generation whose carcases were falling in the wilderness during those forty years, he was one of the race, and there was an affinity between him and the sinner whose bone he trod upon. The ashes of the red heifer, which were mingled with the water of separation, and sprinkled upon him, were the ashes of a sin-offering, for the heifer was slain and burned without the camp as the sin-offering was. The clean person, who sprinkled the unclean, was himself made unclean for the same reason of affinity which made the man unclean by touching a bone. He that is spiritual, in restoring one overtaken in a fault, and considering himself, lest he also be tempted, becomes conscious of his own affinity to the one whom he has restored, and, in proportion as he is spiritual, feels that he has suffered by the contact with the fault, and that he needs the atoning blood of the sin-offering. Yet the need is not such as to require a sin-offering to be slain, still less a trespass-offering; it is met by the ashes laid up and applied in the water of separation. The New Testament counterpart of this seems to be found in 1 Jno. i. 7, 8.

You mentioned the case of the leper. This disease was itself a very vivid type of inward sin, and was in Israel a proof of sin, if not in the individual yet in the people. For none of those diseases would have been allowed to afflict them had they walked obediently with God.

If John vi. 50—58, be compared with Matt. xxvii. 26—28, it will be seen that the blood is shed, for the remission of sins; therefore, it is the blood of atonement.

The sin-offering was for sins of ignorance, yet the person offending was guilty, and needed an atonement, then his sin which he had sinned was forgiven him (Lev. iv. 22—35; v. 17).

It has been beautifully said of the stars:

Soft they shine
Thro' that pure shrine,
As beneath the veil of thy flesh divine
Beams forth the light
That were else too bright
For the feebleness of a sinner's sight.

If that be so, how could any of us walk in the light as of the Great White Throne, its search-light making manifest our manifold infirmities, if it were not that the blood of Jesus, His Son, is continually cleansing what the light is continually making manifest?

You spoke, I think, of the blood sprinkled upon the mercy-seat as not being atoning blood. Typically, the sin of Israel entered and defiled the Tabernacle even to the most holy place. Actually, our sin defiles the heavenly things themselves, of which the vessels in the Tabernacle were the copies, so that while the Tabernacle was purged by the blood of bulls and goats, the heavenly realities require better sacrifices than these (Heb. ix. 18—28). It was not the sin of Gentiles, but of Israel, "a people near unto Him," that penetrated the Tabernacle. It is the sin of his redeemed people, who draw near to the throne of grace, that causes the need of purging the heavenly things themselves. Is it not a startling and humiliating truth that our sin defiles the very heavens? and is it not surpassingly blessed that the only blood which could cleanse them has been shed, and that Jesus the Son of God, our Great High Priest, has gone into heaven itself by virtue of that his own blood, now and always to appear in the presence of God for us? Let us bow our heads and worship.

Ever yours in his great love, R. C. M.

RIO DE JANEIRO.—The report of the Mission to Seamen in this Brazilian port shows that since the lamented death of Mr. Wesson, the work is being actively carried on by Mr. Williams. It is stated that "Just now our great crying need is for more commodious quarters, and we are making an appeal for money to furnish them. The reading room we have to use for worship, and the place is literally packed—which is neither comfortable nor healthy in this climate." The Hon. Sec. is Lt.-Col. Hobbs, 7, Warwick-square Carlisle,

TRADING IN THE SOUTH SEAS.

Sir,—I have been in America for some time pleading the cause of foreign missions, and specially of our New Hebrides Mission; and as Sir John Thurston, the Governor of Fiji, suggested, commissioned by the Federated Assembly of the Presbyterian Churches of Australasia to plead with America on high moral grounds in the interests of humanity to unite with Britain in prohibiting by traders, as trade with the islanders, the use of firearms, ammunition, dynamite, intoxicating drinks, and opium, on the New Hebrides and Western Pacific Islands. These destructive agencies cause much suffering and loss of life among the savages, and have occupied a chief part in the atrocities of the shocking Kanaka labour traffic, as it demoralises and sweeps away the population of each island.

We had been informed that if America would join in this prohibition, France and Germany would also unite in it, and the smaller Powers would be sure to follow in the action of the four Great Powers.

Hitherto America had refused to unite in this with Britain, which stood alone in prohibiting all her traders from using as trade with the natives intoxicating drinks, firearms, etc., while, regardless of the consequences, traders of all other nations there forced them upon the islanders, and placed the British traders at a great disadvantage, for the chief wants of the heathen are firearms and brandy.

Now we praise God that America has not only agreed to the principle in her triple protectorate with Germany and Britain over Samoa, but her highest authorities have kindly signified their willingness to extend their prohibition as trade of those destructive agencies, with Britain, etc., to the New Hebrides and Western Pacific Islands, and the Government is now waiting for the British reply, with the terms of the national prohibition, to, if possible, agree to it. I earnestly hope Britain will soon supply them, to get, as quickly as possible, the vice, misery, and loss of life caused by intoxicants and firearms stopped on our islands.

It will also stop a principal cause of crime and murders in the Kanaka labour traffic, or slavery, which has been so rapidly depopulating our South Sea Islands to supply cheap labour to Queensland and other sugar plantations and work. The money profits of this traffic, as carried on by British and other traders, is leading even avowed slavers to enter into it (see Philadelphia papers of December 21 and 24), and if British and French subjects are by law allowed to carry it on, why not the subjects of all nations? A short time ago a returned labourer from Queensland, along with his wife and other four, were landed on the opposite side of the island from his own land and people, in violation of the law, and as the vessel was leaving the savages shot him dead, confiscated his box and his wife, and feasted on his body. On Malo a chief's wife and child were kidnapped, and forced to be returned, etc.; yet this is the traffic in which Sir Samuel Griffiths, Queensland statesmen, planters, and even ministers of the Gospel, assured the world that all its evils in the past are now swept away and unknown in it; but now, as all along its line, it is steeped in human suffering, bloodshed, and murders. I wonder how long Britain will be blinded as to its real character by its advocates and employers, and tolerate it in her colonies and by her own degraded subjects.

Be it proclaimed to the great honour of America that in her last official reply to Britain, asking her to unite in this national prohibition of intoxicants, firearms, etc., America's excellent Chief Secretary Foster says: "By direction of the President, I am happy to be able to express his assent to its general scope, provided American citizens be handed over to their own Government when arrested for offences against the declaration. He does not approve of the suggestion of the second paragraph, to except from the prohibition of the declaration sales of liquors, and arms, etc., made under special licence of one of the contracting Powers. Such a provision would destroy uniformity of action, and he fears might lead to abuses which would substantially defeat the object of the declaration." Surely all can see that if such licensed houses cause such poverty, vice, and crime in our leading cities, in defiance of laws and police, they would be a thousand times worse where society has no such safeguards, and few crimes can be punished.

I have been pleading the cause in churches and at public meetings for the last four months, and had pleasant interviews with the good President, the Chief Secretary, and many Senators and Congressmen, and with many ministers of the Gospel and leading men, and if Britain does not now delay, but acts promptly, I believe America is prepared generously to enter this national prohibition, which may our God complete soon, to save from destruction our poor downtrodden, oppressed islanders!

Yours faithfully,

John G. Paton.

THE WYNAAD, SOUTH INDIA.

Coonoor is our pleasant headquarters for the winter. I have come out with Miss Wallinger to help her for a few months in her C.E.Z.S. work, and on Nov. 13 we set out for a fortnight's evangelistic tour in the Wynaad. It is the undulating country on the lower plateau, between Ootacamund and the Indian Ocean on the west; coffee, tea, and cinchona (quinine) plantations lie all around. Till about six years ago its name was scarcely known to English missionary societies. Now schools are opened, and more are asked for; there are native teachers and preachers, and many of the people are turning their faces towards the light.

The C.M.S. catechist accompanied us from place to place, and explained the Scripture pictures of the magic lantern. We constantly use it. At one time we have about sixty people on the verandah of the empty store, where we are camping for the night. The catechist had been round this village to invite the people, but the Roman Catholic priest of a neighbouring town had got wind of it, and warned them not to come. At the appointed hour only six or seven were present. Then and there we asked God to defeat the plan, and the catechist went down again to collect an audience. Amongst others two leading Hindus appear, bringing a few of the Hill men, who came again the next night with many more, and the head man asks for a school to be started in their village.

Now we hang the sheet on the verandah of a little shop, and put the lantern in the inner room. Many passers-by stay for two or three pictures, while a considerable number listen to the end to the earnest words of the catechist. Now the exhibition is in a schoolroom, and I am told between 100 and 200 are present, and at the end I am asked to say a few word in English, as many understand it. After that the native agents strike up the chorus, "Come to Jesus, just now." A quiet morning is assigned to me in one place, and I prepare to enjoy it on the verandah of the Travellers' Bungalow. But visitors keep coming to buy books. Canarese, Malayalim Tamil, and English are asked for, and the prices paid.

A flying visit only, to the school of fourteen Todas, was paid on our downward journey, but on our way back we stopped again. A small party of those most interested, including Miss Ling, C.E.Z.S. the Tamil pastor from Ootacamund, and ourselves had agreed to meet there for the dedication of the school for a prayer room, and the baptism of a Wynaad girl, the subject of four years' prayers and hopes. She remained behind while the other Christians had the Lord's Supper, but the twenty-one Todas went away. They had listened more eagerly while Miss Ling talked to them in their own unwritten language.

Another bright spot is the Chinese huts. The wife of the Wynaad catechist has gathered some scholars, whom she teaches at odd times; many have already begun to go to work. We had a Bible talk with the little company of people, who, like all our Tamil friends, presented us with wreaths and limes, and threw petals of flowers over us, while they sang their lyric of welcome. Our latest idea is to create a little fund to provide the catechist with a stock of books to sell, and with the proceeds to support the Wynaad children, who are placed either in the C.E.Z.S. boarding schools, Ootacamund, or in the C.M.S. schools, Trichur, where Malayalim is the language.

There is a cluster of several other Toda huts or "munds" near Government Shoulder, needing a school and someone to live there as a Christian teacher. For either of these objects we should be thankful to receive donations, which should be sent to my father, Mr. E. F. Gedge, Red Hill, Surrey. C. Katie E. Gedge.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND STEBBINS.

ON Sunday week Major Whittle, who was accompanied by Miss Whittle and Mr. Stebbins, began a series of meetings at Naas, co. Kildare. The Town Hall, which had been engaged, was at the last moment refused, consequently the meetings were held in the adjoining Presbyterian church, the only other available place in the town.

The first meeting was held at 3 p.m., when the church was filled, many of the leading families in the neighbourhood being largely represented. All the succeeding meetings were well attended, the church being crowded; especially on Thursday and Friday, when every available space was occupied. Two meetings were held each day, one at 3 p.m. and the other at 8. The last of the series was held on Friday night, and was a very solemn meeting.

At the close, Major Whittle asked all who had accepted Christ to stand up, when a large number of both young and old responded. Many were under deep emotion, and no one could doubt but God's spirit was at work.

The ministers of the different churches were present, and took part in the meetings. It has been a marvellous time in Naas, nothing like it having occurred before. It being the first occasion in which a united effort was made, all classes and all Churches were represented, and the blessing has been confined to none.

Major Whittle is peculiarly adapted to such work in the South of Ireland. He is sympathetic and earnest, and delivers the message so plainly and simply that all can understand. Mr. Stebbins was always present, and besides leading the singing, sang solos and took part in duets with Miss Whittle. Apart from his singing, which was very attractive, and much appreciated, his kindly manner quite won the hearts of the people.

Miss Whittle worked exceedingly hard. Her power as a singer is well known, and to a people so fond of music as those in the South, it was delightful. Besides taking part in the singing, she conducted meetings for women, which were greatly blessed, and many have, through her winsome presentation of Jesus Christ, accepted Him as their Saviour and are determined to be out-and-out for Him. Many prayers were offered to God for this mission, and for its success. To Him be all the glory.

Naas WILLIAM ELLIOTT.

MESSRS. SMITH AND BELL.

The mission in Lisburn continued last week with increasing numbers and blessing. On Monday night Mr. Smith told the story of his life. This had been announced on the Sunday, and long before the hour of opening it became apparent that the lecture-hall could not hold the crowds that were coming. So the church was opened, and although there were upwards of a thousand in it great numbers had to go away. It was a thrilling story, both in its exhibition of human sin and the riches of God's grace.

On Tuesday night the meeting was held in the lecture-hall, when over 800 were packed together, and many outside. The remaining meetings of the week were held in the church, which was filled night after night.

Large numbers remained as inquirers each night. It was proposed that the men's after-meeting might be held in the schoolroom behind the church, and the women remain in the church. This succeeded well. While very many women, young and old, have been blessed, it has been specially gratifying to see the numbers of fine young men who have taken Christ as Lord and Saviour.

On Sunday last, four meetings were again held. The early one for Christians at 8 a.m. was more largely attended than before, and it was a time of refreshing from God's presence.

Mr. Smith preached to a large congregation at the midday service. In the afternoon the lecture-hall was crammed with young and old, and in the evening at eight o'clock, such was the rush of people to the church that an overflow meeting was held in the Lecture Hall, addressed by Rev. R. W. Hamilton. Mr. Bell sang at both the evening meetings. He has been greatly blessed both by his singing, and by his meetings with the children on several nights an hour before the other meeting.

All during last week there was an afternoon meeting, well attended and most delightful and helpful to Christians.

The Ballymena friends, with whom Messrs. Smith and Bell were to have been on Sunday last, the 15th, kindly postponed their mission till the 22nd, at the request of Lisburn friends. So we have entered on another week, and with every evidence that the hand of God is upon us, laying hold of many hearts, and claiming them for Himself. H.

A LIVELY WATCH-NIGHT SERVICE.

I HAVE wandered all over the British Isles in evangelistic work, preaching in churches many, and in halls not a few—often, too, taking a turn in the street with friends I have found to hand. But, for a bit of lively work, commend me to the Old Tolbooth, Glasgow. It has been my privilege for some years to conduct its "watch-night" service, and I suppose it is on such occasions that one sees "the mission" in its most interesting aspect, and learns best to appreciate the noble work carried on by the two merchant brothers, A. P. and C. D. Anderson, of the Glasgow Polytechnic.

This year we began about eight in the evening, with Mr. Payne (Messrs. Anderson's missionary) in command. A sharp, shrewd man is "Brother Payne," and one who is as able to discern a genuine case among those with whom he is brought into contact as to spot an impostor. The first item on the programme was tea; how the Tolbooth people manage to tea the numbers that crowd up those worn stairs into the hall, with so little confusion, is as much a mystery to me to-day as it was some six or seven years ago. During tea I had to perform my old part of a cornet player, accompanying the gentleman who presided at the organ. Then came the time for the addresses. My heart somewhat failed me as I walked from "College" Station to the Tolbooth, for I solemnly vow the very air was tainted with the stench of whisky. Numbers in the street were already drunk, and as some had broken their "Old Year bottles" by falling, or other misadventure, it seemed to be whisky, whisky, everywhere; and I knew that we should have some, and perhaps many, of those I met at our after-gatherings.

Before opening God's Word, however, we had several swinging choruses, the choirmaster throwing in a very pretty solo, after which I approached my audience with God's question, "How shall I give Thee up?"

Of course, I expected the friend who is always anxious to know everything about Cain's wife, or some other like profitable question, there; nor was I disappointed. He was quieted. Then the drunken woman started off. She had to go down the steps. A knowing-looking gentleman who had taken a seat a few feet from the platform so far forgot himself as to tell a Liverpool City Missionary, who followed me, that he was a liar. The greatest of forbearance is always shown by the Tolbooth workers, and it is only when the disturber is preventing others from hearing the Gospel that there is a compulsory movement towards the door. So this fellow was quieted, but we were not rid of him yet, for he suddenly fell down in a fit, and began kicking so vigorously among those around him, that he had to be hoisted half shoulder high, and introduced to the fresh air outside the hall. Some young men and women who had got a corner of the hall to themselves received a gentle reminder that it would pay them to cease disturbing the meeting, and they acted on the hint.

As a protest on their Divine Master's behalf, the Messrs. Anderson always go down, together with their fellow-helpers, among the street revellers, between the hours of eleven and twelve, and this custom was observed as in other years. Forming a large circle of workers, "Brother Payne" took his stand in the centre and began to sing some wild, weird thing that Charles Inglis was said to have brought home from the Southern States of America. But wasn't it a success? Hundreds of people took up the refrain, "Then we'll sing the New Song," and sang it with the greatest of gusto.

Some might have objected to the use of such means for sowing the seed of life in such unpromising ground, but as I watched the faces of some of the singers in the glare of the gaslight I was made to feel that the very idea of a blessed home beyond this wretched world could be used of God as a means for bringing some poor wanderer back to Himself. Of course, we had a large percentage of the drunken with us. One well-dressed fellow made me wish, in a moment of weakness, that force might be used as a remedy in dealing with nuisances; and at last it was, for two policeman came quietly on the scene, and when they left us again I realised that our troubler had disappeared between them. Another who made himself disagreeable was checked by a fellow rough, the latter afterwards going off with Mr. Aleck Anderson and breaking his whisky bottle over a sink.

Returning to the hall, we let the old year merge into the new while engaging in silent prayer. Then followed addresses, choruses, and prayers, the whole of the proceedings coming to a close with the Tolbooth custom of quoting seasonable texts. The solemnity of this practice was very much deepened when the eldest son of Dr. Sinclair Paterson, whose sainted mother had been a sister of the Messrs. Anderson, came forward and gave us the last text that had ever come through her lips, "Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may have the right to come to the tree of life, and may enter in by the gates into the city."

To the credit of Glasgow be it said that, as I had noticed on other occasions, I did not see a single drunken person through the whole of the Lord's Day following. Judging from its seen results, Sunday closing seems to pay in Scotland.

FLOWER GIRLS IN WINTER.

THE work among London flower-girls and street-sellers is always most trying in the winter months. This season it appears to be more than usually arduous or difficult, partly on account of Christmas having proved a sadly disappointing time as regards the coming in of funds. The distress among the flower-sellers and the women street-traders generally is reported to be very great; and, as want begets sickness, the nurse and the other visitors find plenty to do in different parts of London. Many of the girls are Irish, and are oftentimes found to be interesting characters. Having taken to flowers they will keep to the traffic in all seasons, invariably undergoing great privations in winter, in severe weather suffering even to the verge of despair.

Mr. Groom is wont to say that the constituency he seeks to benefit shows greater depths of poverty than any other class. The scenes witnessed in their poor rooms at such a time as this are often very saddening; but these are the people who endure in seclusion without any attempt at parading their hardships before the public. Many who suffer most keenly are mere children—little gir's who oftentimes have to be taken entirely away from their surroundings in order to save them from early death or life-long ruin. The nurse or visitor is always a Gospel messenger as well as a ministering angel as regards temporal things; and some of the best rewards of the service are found when these poorest of the poor are amenable to religious influence. Many are, indeed, abroad in the streets pursuing their trying work who would not be what they are to-day if it were not for this mission. Humanly speaking, there are large numbers who owe all they are, as well as all they possess, to those who have befriended them.

In as great a degree as possible a spirit of self-help is fostered among them. A goodly number, who are members of the Flower Girls' Guild, are also banded together in the bonds of Christian union, the girls enjoying the privilege of meeting regularly at the stations in different parts of London with which they are connected. As it has grown, the work has shown a tendency to become more and more comprehensive, and new agencies have been added as occasion has required.

In regard to the number of famished Board school scholars he helps through the winter by giving them cocoa breakfasts and stew dinners, Mr. Groom may be said to take the lead. We are not aware that such a centre of hospitality exists anywhere else in the town. He is pre-eminently the friend of the children on the one hand, and the evangelist of the flower girls on the other; while the full congregations on Sunday evenings at the Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell-road, tell of earnest Gospel work for the masses. Being almost without funds, and in some perplexity as to how he shall proceed, Mr. Groom naturally makes the matter a subject for prayer, and he then makes a strong appeal to the Lord's stewards to show sympathy for an exceedingly poor and deserving class, by helping him out of his difficulty.

London's Young Men.

This great city is the theatre of many an earnest experiment, and the seat of many a deep and seemingly insoluble problem. Few of these can exceed in importance the mission of the Y.M.C.A., which seeks to reach and save its young men. There has been much criticism of the Y.M.C.A., of late, from different quarters. How much of it is justified we do not care to enquire. Criticism is cheap enough at any time, and those who do least are likely enough to find most fault. What human institution is there, not excepting any of the organised forms of church endeavour, that is not abundantly open to criticism?

It is much more to the purpose to note that the burden of London's young men is pressing heavily on the hearts of some who are labouring in this field, and who are fervently longing for light on the pathway to larger and more successful efforts for the salvation of their brother young men. In the hope and expectation of getting some help of this sort, the Secretaries of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. called a conference last week; speaking by the card, it was desired to submit some proposals "for the organisation of a new form of definite aggressive work amongst the young men of London." The responses to the invitation, we regret to say, were comparatively few. Yet the theme was worthy enough and vast enough to have attracted a multitude of those whose spirits are attuned to the tender compassion of the Master, who wept over another city when He beheld its sins and foresaw its impending sorrows.

The little company at Aldersgate-street was presided over by Mr. Robert Paton. The main business of the evening was to hear a paper read by Mr. J. H. Putterill on the subject of conference. He had marshalled his facts in a lucid and impressive way. He told us, first of all, that the estimated number of young men in London between the ages of sixteen and thirty-five is over 800,000. To help the mind to grasp the magnitude of such a figure, he said that, placing them four abreast and marching them past a given point, one rank per second, nearly fifty-six hours would elapse before all had gone by. As to the spiritual condition of this great army of young immortals, Mr. Putterill stated that the most comprehensive estimate would not include more than 100,000 as church or chapel attenders; while the Y.M.C.A. and other agencies might possibly influence an equal number. We were still face to face with the appalling presumption that 600,000 young men, in London alone, are outside the pale of all direct religious effort. Add to this negative aspect of the question, the positive presence of many subtle allurements and temptations, and the way is opened for a heartrending vision of "wrecked lives and lost souls."

Mr. Putterill, in the next section of his paper, admitted that neither the ordinary church arrangements nor the ordinary Y.M.C.A. programme had succeeded, and probably would never succeed, in attracting this careless, pleasure-loving mass. If they were in physical peril many hands would be stretched out to succour them; as to spiritual perils, it was not easy to awaken enthusiasm among editors, orators, or societies. Moreover, church officials have their hands full, and elderly Christian men of business are preoccupied with the claims of the fireside and the shop. If anybody is to step into the breach, and lead the attack on this lapsed mass of misdirected youth, it must be done by the Christian young men. For this very end the Y.M.C.A. was called into existence nearly fifty years ago.

Suggestions as to what form the new crusade might properly take, filled up the second half of the paper. These may be briefly condensed. A special service force should be organised, to consist of Christian young men of experience who will allot a specified portion of their time to the work. The band should be led by a qualified director. As to methods of work, there might be street skirmishing in the neighbourhood of popular places of amusement; meetings in theatres, music-halls, etc., at fitting times; pleasant Sunday afternoons; work among artisans by lantern services, lectures, etc.; special efforts for special classes of young men such as policemen, postmen, busmen, and so forth.

Of course money will be needed if this effort is undertaken; but Mr. Putterill had faith enough to believe that help of that kind would not be lacking if the Christian public can be convinced that the work is real.

We have given only the structural bones of the scheme, which was submitted tentatively, and not at all as a cut-and-dried programme. Conference followed on the reading of the paper, but it did not yield much in the way of practical helpfulness. Some urged that the proposed services should be bright and lively, and not killed by long prayers; others said that Christ crucified alone must be the theme; but all that may in the meantime be taken for granted. It was thought by one speaker that the movement should be kept within the present boundaries of the Y.M.C.A.; others were of opinion that persistent personal effort in City houses, on the tops of trams and omnibuses, in trains, etc., was preferable to any organised scheme; but it was pointed out that the new crusade need not supplant or hinder any existing form of work. One friend thought the first step was to find the God-inspired and God-equipped man to take the direction and the lead.

Three mountain peaks of thought emerged from the evening's business. (1) More than half a million of young men in London are without God, and without hope in the world. (2) The Saviour's direction, "beginning at Jerusalem," is still on his statute-book for London Christians, especially the young men among them. (3) If the thing is to be done it ought to be done quickly, thoroughly, and with a will. We invite helpful suggestions. Probably many methods may have to be tried—"if by any means we may save some." Those who are in sympathy; who desire to become partners in this service, and are willing to take the lowest post—or the highest if God so orders it—should put themselves into communication with the Secretaries, Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The secretary of the Walthamstow Society reports that they have as many members as the room will hold, and will have to refuse additions for a time in consequence. A tea was recently given to which sixty were invited. Much thankfulness is expressed for the good work done during the past fifteen months.

The Gideon Society at Bristol has carried out an eight days' mission with much success. A lady missioner has conducted the services, and the members of the society have given personal invitations to all in the neighbourhood. A blessing has been experienced not only by those who attended, but also by those who carried out the arrangements.

Rev. J. B. Morgan, 2, Exton-park, Chester, suggests that a small party should be got together in this country for the Montreal Convention in July next. Those who decide to do so could go thence to the World's Fair at Chicago. Possibly, special terms might be arranged. Any who think of joining the party should communicate with Rev. J. B. Morgan in the first instance.

The society in connection with the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, held its first anniversary on Tuesday last week, when a very encouraging report was given of the year's work. The society started with fourteen active members, while now the number is forty-five. Out of nine who have joined during the year as associates, five have since become active members, having made profession of giving their hearts to the Saviour, and of their desire to serve and follow Him. The attendance at the meetings has been well sustained, and the members, besides taking part in the weekly meetings, have set to work in various ways, some collecting missionary pennies, and others distributing tracts inviting non-churchgoers to the Gospel services, and in doing other useful work on the various committees. Altogether the society has much to thank God for, and has commenced its second year full of hope that it may develop and increase in spiritual life and good works, and amidst much prayer for the guidance and power of the Holy Spirit.

Decennial Conference, Bombay.

Miss Reade, of the South Arcot Mission, India, who attended this conference, writes on Dec. 31:—'More than 500 missionaries are met together. We meet in the Wilson College, a beautiful building. There have been four sessions so far, each and all most deeply interesting. To me it is intensely so, as in my little sphere I seem to have been called to solve every mission problem to the best of my ability, and in the solution I have independently come to, it is encouraging to find I have the support of many whose opinions are of weight."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council of 1896 will meet in Glasgow.

The centenary of Trinity U.P. Church, Glasgow, was held last week.

Rev. J. Wright, minister-emeritus of the East Free Church, Alloa, has died at the ripe age of 83.

The scheme for clothing destitute children in Edinburgh is finding plenty of scope in this trying weather.

Rev. Geo. Jackson, of the Wesleyan Mission, Edinburgh, fell in the street last week, and fractured his right leg.

The death is announced of Mr. W. Dingwall, a native of Aberdeen, who has been engaged in mission work at Rio Tinto, Spain.

Rev. M. P. Noble, Congregational pastor, Macduff, has gone to Kilsyth. Under his oversight the Macduff congregation prospered greatly.

Rev. F. B. Meyer preached in Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, last Sunday, and addressed the Students' meeting in Oddfellows' Hall.

The Home for Destitute Children at Saltcoats has done good work during the year on behalf of Glasgow's poor; but it needs more generous support.

At a meeting in Edinburgh of the Italian Evangelisation Society, a hopeful report was presented, especially as to the schools and colleges in Florence.

A great temperance demonstration was held in Edinburgh last week, when the popular call for legislative reform was emphasised. The opposition of the secular press was deplored.

Mr. W. Quarrier's annual treat to the street children of Glasgow was largely attended. A resolution was passed, calling on the Provost and magistrates to take steps to protect young street traders.

IRISH NOTES.

An interesting missionary conference has been held in Rev. Wm. Wylie's Schoolroom, Newry.

A united communion service has been held in Trinity Presbyterian Church, Cork. Presbyterians, Methodists, and Congregationalists took part in the proceedings.

The Belfast Town Mission is making gratifying progress. During the past month the agents paid 1500 visits, and got fifteen families to join churches. Evangelistic services were also held.

A new parish hall, in memory of Captain Dunbar, has been built at the expense of deceased's sister, Mrs. Dunbar-Buller, at Carrowdore. It is to be used for Sunday-school and religious purposes.

The Belfast branch of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has established a shelter for desolate children. During the past month the inspectors investigated fifty-four cases in which 459 children were concerned.

Much regret is felt at the sudden and serious illness of Rev. Jas. Donnelly, of Portadown, the Secretary of the Irish Methodist Conference. After preaching a most earnest sermon on Sunday week he was seized with a fainting fit during the observance of the Lord's Supper.

Albert Bridge Congregational Church, Belfast, of which Rev. James Cregan is the pastor, is in a flourishing state. Ten years ago, when Mr. Cregan came to the Church, it had only forty members. In two years its membership had increased to about 300, and the church was enlarged. Now it is found necessary to enlarge it further, so as to seat 1800 persons.

THE POWER OF GOD'S WORD.

The Bible in-worketh: (1) To transform, Jas. i. 18; (2) to enlighten, Ps. cxix. 105; (3) to cleanse, John xv. 3; (4) to sanctify, John xvii. 17; (5) to keep, Ps. xvii. 4; (6) to comfort, Rom. xv. 4; (7) to strengthen, Acts xx. 32; (8) to equip for work, 2 Tim. iii. 17.

"The hour draws near, howe'er delayed and late,
When at the Eternal Gate
We leave the words and works we call our own,
And lift void hands alone
For love to fill. Our nakedness of soul
Brings to that Gate no toll:
Giftless we come to Him who all things gives,
And live because He lives."

THE "SHALL NOTS" OF JOHN'S GOSPEL.

The believer shall not come into condemnation, John v. 24; shall not walk in darkness, John viii. 12; shall never hunger, John vi. 35; shall never thirst, John iv. 14; shall not be plucked out of Christ's hand, John x. 28; shall not perish, John iii. 15; shall never die, John xi. 26.

CHICAGO NOTES.

THERE is something very beautiful about the steady gain of Christianity in a great and throbbing city. Three new churches were dedicated the other day, and several others are nearly completed and ready for use.

At Englewood, in the southern part of the city, the Y.M.C.A. have decided to build a new structure to cost 125,000 dols. It will be erected on the old lot, which is in the very heart of a dense population. The building is much needed. The old frame edifice will be moved to the rear of the lot and still used until the new one is done. The branch located at this place is very flourishing, and has a splendid band of workers.

Chicago has a great Jewish colony, and it is increasing very rapidly. Why these thousands are flocking here is a mystery. They seem to be industrious, will work for a pittance, live in the most degraded manner, and have no friends outside of their own circles. It is a problem what to do for them. One mission has been opened, and it is struggling for existence. A few Christian men are trying to reach them, but they are so blinded and bigoted that it seems a barren field.

Not so in the French missions, for a goodly number are coming to Christ. Two services are held on Sundays for the deaf mutes, and they are well attended. Philip G. Gillett, president of the State Asylum, opened the first mission two years ago, and the success has been marvellous.

There will be a splendid advance made by the Young Men's Christian Association this coming year. Already the fine thirteen-story structure is rising in La Salle-street, and with the valuable lot will be worth more than a million dollars. It is to be ready for use by June, 1893, and will be a splendid place of resort for the Christian people. There is wonderful zeal among these associations, and special efforts are being made to reach the masses as never before. It is believed that Bro. Moody's coming home for awhile will again awaken even more interest in soul-saving efforts.

There are many encouraging revivals now in progress, and the Christian public is very active.

JOHN O. FOSTER.

Deaf and Dumb in Dublin.

THE work of the Dublin Association for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Deaf and Dumb goes on steadily and well. In a little paper just issued, "A Day among the Deaf and Dumb," a Christian lady tells how thankful those who can neither speak nor hear are that someone should bring into their silent homes the tidings of salvation. The evangelistic services, conducted in the finger speech, are valued and blessed; the reading-room has been greatly appreciated; many have been aided in finding suitable employment, while the sick have been visited, helped, and cheered. The missionary and secretary is Mr. M. F. G. Hewson, 21 Room, Metropolitan Hall, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin.

Valencia, Ireland.

MRS. DELAP, Valencia Island, co. Kerry, writes:—"I have succeeded, after two years, in collecting £400, and have built a very much-needed Fishermen's Reading-room and Recreation Hall on Valencia Island, where there was no public room of any kind available and no shelter save the public-houses. This fine building has exhausted my funds. The mackerel fisheries come in March and I most urgently need £100 to complete my work—seats, tables, lamps, book-presses, and, above all, most requisite sanitary arrangements. Without these extras the hall will be useless as a resting-place and shelter for these numerous men, who toil for our comfort and luxuries. Books and pamphlets will be most welcome gifts for the library."

HELP FOR CHRISTIAN JEWS.—Rev. J. B. Barraclough is founding a Training Home and Employment Agency for Hebrew Christians, especially for well-educated young men from the Continent or the East, desirous of qualifying for and obtaining employment as foreign correspondents, &c., in business houses. Suitable men will be prepared for entering training institutions for missionaries; and a temporary home will be given and employment sought, as far as possible, for all comers, being Christian Jews or Jewesses. The primary object will be to deepen and strengthen the spiritual life of each and all. Mr. Barraclough purposes engaging a Christian ex-schoolmaster and his wife to take charge of the Home. He is anxious to raise from £100 to £150 at once wherewith to furnish, and will need at least £500 a year for its support. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Barraclough, at 11, King Edward-road, Hackney, N.E.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

NEW Associations have lately been formed at Polo and Blue Island (Ill.), and Robesonia (Pa.).

The annual convocation of the North Ceylon Union of Y.M.C.A.'s will be held early in January.

The Y.M.C.A. work amongst the winter wood and lumber men in Minnesota is going on vigorously this season.

The Colombo Associations are planning to hold a Convention of all Associations in Ceylon, in February or March.

Mr. F. H. Wood, B.A., recently appointed Secretary of the Madras Association, has held a series of meetings in Colombo.

The Devonport Y.M.C.A. is pushing vigorously forward, notwithstanding its heavy loss through the death of Mr. W. D. Pink.

Mr. Robinson Souttar, president of the Oxford Y.M.C.A., has been holding special and fruitful services for young men in South Carolina.

The West Hartlepool Association issues a strong programme for the half-year, giving great prominence to Evangelistic and Bible class work.

Mr. C. S. Crain, secretary of Milton (Pa.), has gone to Cuba (N.Y.), while Mr. E. C. Van Ness, secretary at Port Huron (Mich.), has accepted a similar post at Blue Island (Ill.).

The vice-president of the Athens Y.M.C.A., Mr. Isidore M. Schapira (formerly of the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A.), writes that this association has fifteen members, who are doing their utmost to bring the Gospel before their fellows.

The secretary of the Central branch, Philadelphia, has issued a letter proposing that members of the Y.M.C.A. should show their disapproval of the Sunday opening of the World's Fair at Chicago by declining to visit the exhibition.

At a district Y.M.C.A. convention held in Waterloo (Ia.), a paper on "Social Purity" was read. The discussion of the topic aroused great interest, and resulted in a request being sent to the pastors of the city asking them to preach special sermons on the subject.

The committee of the Kingston Association has secured the services of Mr. Percy W. Polson as resident secretary of the new institute which has been built by Mr. William McComas, J.P. Bible classes have been started, which are well attended. The members now number 430.

At the thirteenth annual State convention of the Nebraska Y.M.C.A., lately held at Hastings, a little over two hundred delegates assembled from the thirty-four associations in the State. The papers displayed the one absorbing desire of the convention to be "to save the young men."

In Omaha, Nebraska, last year the membership has grown from 433 to 820. The attendance at the building has doubled, now being over half a thousand per day; 528 persons took some active part in carrying forward the work during the year. The Bible classes have quadrupled in attendance.

A very fine building, thirteen stories high, is being erected by the Y.M.C.A., Madison, New York. The building will contain two audience rooms, one capable of seating 250 persons and the other 1,000. It will also have a swimming tank, gymnasium, and rooms of various kinds for the use of the association.

On Wednesday evening, the 11th inst., Mr. and Mrs. George Williams gave a New Year's reception to the members and friends of the Stafford Rooms Association. A large company gathered. Short addresses were given by the chairman, Mr. J. H. Lydall, Mr. W. H. Mills, and the secretary, Mr. Basil Hewer.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES.

THE new institute and boarding-house acquired by Guildford Association has been opened by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird.

The St. John's Wood Association suffered some loss, last week, through a gas explosion, and, unhappily, two young women were injured.

At the Y.W.C.A., Newcastle-on-Tyne, a time of blessing was vouchsafed at the New Year's meeting for consecration. Many members dedicated themselves afresh to the Lord.

The Windsor and Eton Y.W.C.A. state that during the last twelve months the work has greatly developed, and the association is a growing power of usefulness among young women of all classes in Windsor and Eton. The number of members, which had risen in 1890 from 49 to 103, has since increased by 66.

"We can all do more than we have done,
And not be a whit the worse:
It never was loving that emptied the heart,
Nor giving that emptied the purse."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE Band of Hope Chronicle begins the New Year in an enlarged form, with a tinted wrapper, and with various other improvements.

A fund is being raised to erect a memorial over the grave of the late Mr. Samuel Sims, whose valuable temperance work endeared him to many. Communications should be made to Mr. F. Sherlock, 30, New Bridge-street, E.C.

The United Kingdom Alliance appeal this year for upwards of £20,000 in view of the near approach of practical legislation, and the need for special effort. The address of the Metropolitan Department is 15, Great George-street, S.W.

The fifty-third report of the Fitzroy Teetotal Association shows continued good work. Inquiry has been made concerning the first 200 members of the Band of Hope, and it is found that 25 per cent are, after forty years, still keeping the pledge.

"How Intemperance has been Successfully Combated" is the title of a pamphlet by the Duchess of Rutland, just issued by Cassell and Company Limited (price 6d.), being a reprint, with additions of an article which appeared in the New Review.

Disclosures of a somewhat novel kind were made at the last meeting of the Guardians of the City of London Union. It was asserted that beer had been supplied to the paupers by means of fishing rods employed for that purpose by sympathising friends outside.

A veteran total abstainer, Dr. Severin Wielobycki, whose career abounds in striking, romantic, and deeply interesting incidents, has just completed his hundredth year, and is still in the enjoyment of remarkable health and energy. His centenary was celebrated on Tuesday, Jan. 10, in the rooms of the Medical Society of London.

In the tropical climate of India certain regiments, consisting of 5,610 soldiers, were placed under observation. They were divided into three classes, free drinkers, moderate drinkers, and teetotallers. The mortality of the former was forty-four per thousand, moderate drinkers twenty-three per thousand, and teetotallers eleven per thousand.

Neither Rev. Thomas Evans nor the Bombay Guardian will be mistaken for enemies of missionaries, yet the one writes and the other inserts a serious statement as to "whisky drinking in missionary circles in Madras." No unseemly excess is even hinted at, still we should hope that the self-indulgence is confined to a very limited circle indeed.

Miss Jessie A. Ackerman, of the W.W.C.T.U., writes that Northam, in West Australia, is the stronghold of the cause in the Colony. Some time ago a suburban town was laid out, and in each deed was a clause stating that the land should never pass into the hands of any save total abstainers. The result is, in this place the working classes are well-to-do, and a more prosperous community could not be found.

A correspondent of the Midland Free Press, writing on the subject of Christmas beer, says:—"There are no gladdening properties in it. Even from the strongest beer the gladdening feeling is quasi only—the joy is not real. I have spent nearly fifty Christmases without beer or drinks more strongly primed with the poisonous alcohol, and all this long time I have looked in vain for their gladdening effects upon others."

At the monthly meeting of Liverpool Town Council last week, Mr. Archibald Williamson moved that it was desirable that the number of public-houses and beer-houses owned by the Corporation should be reduced, that steps should be taken to get possession of such property, and not relet for the same purpose. He excluded, however, bonâ fide hotels or refreshment rooms, or houses leased for seventy-five years. The motion was adopted.

A law has recently been passed by the Legislature of the State of New York, establishing an institution for female inebriates. The law permits of the admission of women addicted to the inordinate use of alcohol, opium, morphine, or any other intoxicant, by voluntary commitment for three months. But they may also be committed for a year by a judge of a court of record upon the certificates of two physicians, with the privilege of the term of commitment for another year, if deemed necessary for a completion of the cure.

Mr. F. H. Dawe, speaking last week at Epping to young men, said: "Young men, act up to your convictions at all costs. Let me tell you of two young men I knew in the City. Both professed to be converted to God, but both were in the cursed liquor traffic, with good prospects of worldly advancement; both had strong convictions that they were wrong in continuing in their situations. Which should it be, God or the world? One chose to suffer loss rather than grieve the Holy Spirit, and washed his hands of the whole affair. To-day he is a happy, prosperous business man, and a successful evangelist and pastor. The other suppressed his convictions, and his business became his own snare. To-day he is a poor, unhappy drunkard."

The Book World.

BOOKS OF CONSOLATION.

Poetic insight is never put to better use than when it sets in verbal framework the faith and hope that enable the Christian to pierce the veil which hides the rest and glory given to our beloved dead. Mourners, like the poor, are always with us. For the hunger of their hearts Dr. Robertson Nicoll has provided a right royal dish in his collection of Songs of Rest, now gathered, with additions, into one pretty volume. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) He has culled from many popular writers, and also from those less known; but every page projects its ray of light on the shadowed side of human life, and reveals the silver lining that proverbially brightens the darkest earthly cloud.

Another book in the same vein is Gems on the Brow of Night (Shaw & Co.) The compiler has in this case also shown ample catholicity in the selection, but all the extracts, whether prose or poetry, are well fitted to carry comfort to the sorrowing and the sad.

Rock Light is a new monthly paper for sailors (1d. Shaw & Co.). It is conducted on undenominational lines, contains clear Gospel appeals and helpful teaching, and gives a prominent place to temperance principles.

Rev. David Macrae, of Dundee, has long been known in the North as a born writer and reader of stories homely and pathetic. In Little Tiz and other tales (1s. Morison Brothers) we have good specimens of both kinds.

Unclaimed Privileges, by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, is a little volume of studies, ten in number, on the fulness of Gospel blessing. The way to rest of soul is pointed out in Mr. Hopkins's well-known lucid style. (1s. Marshall Brothers.)

The Sword and Trowel makes in the January number a good start for the New Year with a Mentone meditation by the late editor, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, and papers by Mr. Thomas Spurgeon and Dr. Pierson. With the number is also presented a fine photo-print portrait of the late Pastor. (Passmore & Alabaster. 3d.)

The annual volume of Wee Willie Winkie, the children's magazine edited by Lady Aberdeen and her youthful daughter, makes a capital collection of genuine tit-bits for the boys and girls. A great deal of it is the production of very juvenile pens, and therefore all the more likely to interest its special clientèle. (Partridge.)

Sermon Pictures for Busy Preachers. By Rev. T. D. Hyde, B.A. (4s. 6d. R. D. Dickinson.) Here are fifty full-drawn sketches of sermons, by one who has previously made useful contributions to homiletic literature. The volume is the first of a series, and the discourses are described as for "fasts, festivals, saints' days, and special occasions."

The National Temperance League's Annual (The League Depôt, 33, Paternoster-row, 1s.), forms a capital and useful handbook for temperance speakers and workers, summarising, as it does, all manner of facts and movements bearing on the cause. Portraits are given of Mr. S. Sims and Misses Robinson and Weston, also papers by well-known writers.

Farewell Words.—Under this title an account has been issued of meetings held in connection with the departure of Rev. Walter Searle for the Cape. The addresses are such as to rouse missionary interest, and in this way we feel sure their issue in separate form will do good service. (Cape General Mission, 2, Berkeley-terrace, Wimbledon. Price 3d.)

The Pastor in Prayer: Being a choice selection of C. H. Spurgeon's Sunday-morning prayers. (Elliot Stock.) Here are verbatim reports of twenty-six of those wonderful prayers which Mr. Spurgeon was wont to address to the throne of grace. The volume will prove a precious memento to many. In every case the text is given of the sermon which followed the prayer.

Well-springs of Life. By Rev. Frederick Whitfield, M.A. (Nisbet.) A series of twenty-eight expository papers by the well-known and highly-esteemed vicar of St. Mary's, Hastings. Some of the hidden treasures of the Word of God are disclosed, and the volume may not only be heartily commended as a circle of devotional teaching, but also as a fund of suggestion for pulpit preparation.

Memoranda Sacra. By J. Rendel Harris. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Fifteen short meditations on lofty themes—constituting the first volume of "The Devotional Library." The thought is not profound, but it is full of freshness and rich suggestion, and indicates a high water mark of spiritual experience. The antique binding and uncut edges seem in keeping with the well-seasoned quality of the contents.

How to Read Jeremiah, by Rev. Buchanan Blake, B.D. (4s. T. & T. Clark.) This third volume of a useful series contains the text of Jeremiah's prophecies arranged chronologically in their historical setting, accompanied by lucid explanations, a glossary, etc. Not all expositors would agree with just every position taken up in this arrangement; but the work has been carefully done, and if used with discrimination will prove of service to students.

Bible Class Expositions: St. Luke. By Alexander Maclaren, D.D. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Another step in the progress of a valuable series. Dividing the third Gospel into convenient sections, the expositor opens up its meaning with freshness and force. Facts and doctrines are surveyed as well as examined; and the entire work is instructive in substance and spiritual in tone. To many the book will supply all the purposes of a practical commentary.

That clever Scotch humorist and anecdotist, "Nicholas Dickson," has written a very pawky and entertaining little book—The Auld Scotch Minister. (1s. Morison Brothers, Buchanan-street, Glasgow.) It forms a fitting companion to "The Elder at the Plate." The vagaries of ministers and would-be ministers, especially in the bygone generation, provided a fruitful field for anecdote of a harmlessly humorous sort, and Mr. Dickson has shown laudable industry in this collection.

Notable Sayings of the Great Teacher, is another volume of Biblical studies by Henry Thorne. Besides the chapters which furnish the title to the book, there are Bible readings on the Acts of the Apostles, on portions of Scripture specially instructive to young men, and on some aspects of the character and teaching of the Apostle Paul—fifty-two in all. The pages afford evidence of wide reading, as well as intimate knowledge of Scripture and ability to exhibit its lessons for life and godliness. (2s. 6d. Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.)

The Universal Bible Dictionary. By Rev. John Macpherson, M.A. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton). This is a very useful manual, having the advantage of being based upon the latest authorities. Students who possess older dictionaries on a larger scale will welcome this as an addition to their library, while those whose books are necessarily limited in number will find Mr. Macpherson's compilation as useful as it is compendious and lucid. While in some instances the newer ideas are still open to question, the bulk of the book is, we believe, thoroughly good and trustworthy.

The Opium Traffic.—Hardly a week passes without more light being thrown upon the opium iniquity. Two fresh pamphlets, issued by Dyer Brothers, Paternoster-square, are: An Indian Woman's Impeachment of the Opium Crime of the British Government (1d.), a plea for justice for her country people, by Soonderbai H. Powar, of Bombay: and Errors and Falsehoods of Opium Apologists (1d.), light on a criminal attempt to deceive the British public upon a great wrong being done to India and China, by Alfred S. Dyer. An appendix to the latter pamphlet contains important statements by Rev. Dr. C. S. Valentine, of Agra, and Dr. J. R. Wallace, of Calcutta.

The Divine Art of Preaching, by Dr. A. T. Pierson (2s.), is a series of thirteen lectures delivered at the Pastor's College. Practical and pointed, they are characterised by much vigour. Dr. Pierson has something to say about the proper matter of Gospel preaching, as well as the desirable manner. His other recent book, Papers for Thinking People (1s.), will also have attractions for theological students. A paper entitled "Two Great Laws of the Sermon" is given with one on the ethics of the dance, and others on the Word of God, Christian giving, etc. The Bible: God's Rock of Ages (2d.), is an able lecture delivered recently by Dr. Pierson in the Metropolitan Tabernacle. (Passmore & Alabaster.)

A truly delightful volume is that published by Messrs. R. & R. Clark, Edinburgh, containing a brief sketch of the life of the late Lady Grisell Baillie, written by her relative the Countess of Ashburnham, with a selection of her ladyship's addresses to mothers' meetings. If it be still comparatively true that not many noble after the flesh are called to heights of Christian attainment, it is equally true that there are some grand exceptions; and Lady Grisell Baillie certainly was one of the grandest in modern times. By God's grace she adorned the doctrine of Jesus Christ in a special degree, and her name must carry with it a wondrous fragrance for many a day in the part of Scotland where she lived. The addresses are models of simplicity and spirituality.

Personalia.

Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, left last week for a tour in Egypt on account of his health.

Miss James, of Wimbledon, has accepted the post of directress of the British Syrian Mission, Beyrout.

Rev. A. Clifford, well known in Calcutta for his work among the poor, was on Saturday consecrated Bishop of Lucknow.

Mr. Joseph Hannington is, we understand, up the Nile in a dahabeeyah, doing Gospel work, and is purposing to go through the Holy Land again for the sixth time.

Rev. Dr. Morison, Moderator-elect of the English Synod, contemplates visiting the Holy Land, intending to be back before the meeting of Synod at the end of April.

Dr. Parrott, medical missionary, with his wife, left for China on Wednesday. At the noon prayer meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday, he was earnestly commended to God.

Principal T. C. Edwards, who has been in a somewhat serious condition, is now believed to be recovering. When strength permits he proposes going to the south of France to recruit.

Bishop Smythies.—The Guardian states that the bishop, who was unable to attend a farewell service last week, is suffering from a bronchial attack. His departure for Africa is postponed indefinitely.

Rev. F. G. Gange, who has been minister at Old Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, for the last twenty-three years, has accepted an invitation to succeed Rev. F. B. Meyer as minister of Regent's Park Chapel.

Sir S. A. Blackwood, K.C.B., who has been somewhat unwell, owing, it is believed, to his returning too soon to duties after his illness some months ago, is now at Bournemouth, hoping soon to leave for the south of France, in order to recruit his health.

Rev. Dr. James Spurgeon is seriously ill at his residence, West Croydon. At the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday evening, a letter was read from his wife to the congregation, in which she expressed the hope that she might be divinely supported at the present period. Special prayer was made on his behalf.

Mr. Benjamin Clarke, Editor of The Sunday School Chronicle, and Secretary of the Homes for Little Boys, Farningham and Swanley, lies very ill, suffering from a severe attack of influenza. As it will be some weeks before he can possibly leave his home, all his present engagements are to be considered cancelled.

Rev. Dr. Angus has addressed a farewell letter to the old students of Regent's Park College in anticipation of his early retirement from the principalship, which he has filled for many years. Since his appointment 400 students have been trained for home or foreign work, and a sum of £60,000 has been raised for various purposes connected with the college.

Pasteur Ch. Merle-d'Aubigne has left La Louvière and settled in Liége, in succession to M. Gagnebin. He thus finds himself at the head of a large congregation, and in a most important sphere of mission work. Liége has 150,000 inhabitants, and only one other resident pastor. Communications to Mr. Merle-d'Aubigné should be addressed 267, rue St. Gilles, Liége, Belgium.

Rabbi Lichtenstein.—Since he seceded from Judaism, this brave defender of Christ has been called upon to endure keen persecution. His wife, moreover, has been very ill, and other circumstances have been peculiarly untoward. In a recent letter to a correspondent, the Rabbi says, with resignation: "Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Dublin Visiting Medical Mission.

This unsectarian agency, which was only inaugurated last spring, closed the year as an institution in vigorous operation. The dispensary is open to all comers on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings, and on Tuesday evenings to men only. It is doing a great work amongst the poor of a wide area of the city. When not engaged in the dispensary, Dr. Long visits patients in their homes. He is assisted by a trained nurse, five lady dispensers, and several lady helpers. Many friends not connected with the mission speak to the patients at the dispensary.

To carry on the work at least £400 or £500 is required; and, in addition to this, the committee want immediately £200 to buy out a middle landlord, and thus effect a saving in rent of £23 a year. Many have been the expressions of gratitude on the part of the patients for the sympathy and kindness, as well as for the medical aid, received; and in several cases lives have been completely changed.

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mrs. E. J. Figgis, jun., 6, Simmons Courtvillas. Donnybrook Dublin.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Oscar Owers has closed a ten days' mission at Robertsbridge, and the precious seed sown will doubtless bring forth much fruit.

Mr. W. Chester Turner, of the Evangelists' Home, Birmingham, has completed a ten weeks' mission in Herefordshire. It has been blessed by God to the salvation of some and the deepening of the spiritual life in the hearts of others.

Mr. B. F. Weaver, who has done good work at the Imperial Hall, Hanley, has been evangelising in the Albert Hall, Nottingham, and Mealsgate, Carlisle. His brother Frank accompanies him as singer of the Gospel. Their address is Fallibroome, Macclesfield.

Lurgan.—Messrs. Loney and Robinson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have closed an eight weeks' mission here, which is believed to be "the most fruitful mission held in the town since 1859." The whole place appears to have been stirred greatly.

Bible Christian Connexion.—During a mission at Garndiffaith, in the Blaenavon circuit, conducted by Mr. Jabez Mules, over seventy persons have professed conversion. Some who have lived in the neighbourhood for more than forty years, say they have never witnessed a richer baptism of grace and power.

Upper Tooting.—Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a blessed mission here. The afternoon Bible-readings were very helpful, and the Gospel preaching was with great power. A considerable number of men, women, and children expressed publicly their resolve, God helping them, to trust Christ. "To God be the glory." C.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a seven days' mission at Tottenham, which has been exceedingly fruitful; not only were the services largely attended, but the spiritual interest deepened every night. At the closing service an opportunity for public testimony was given, when many rose to witness a good confession for Christ.

The Lowestoft Fishermen have concluded a fourteen days' mission at Princes Hall, Buckhurst Hill, which God has greatly used for blessing both to the unsaved and believers. Each afternoon a meeting has been held for Christians, and many useful topics have been considered with great profit and blessing. For nearly eighteen years the work at this hall has been fruitful in blessing to the neighbourhood. G. H. LORD.

Blackheath Hill. — An unsectarian mission is carried on by Miss Whitfield at the "Very Welcome," Blackheath-hill. There is a small hall which is used for evangelistic services, mothers' meetings, etc. The object of the mission is to reach the souls of those who do not go elsewhere to hear the Gospel preached. A good many persons have been converted through attending the meetings. The neighbourhood is a thickly populated one, and there is much poverty and sickness, the winter being a hard one for the poor.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker are experiencing much blessing in their present mission at Ruabon. The congregations have increased each evening, many last Sunday night being unable to get into the hall. A band of earnest, hearty workers are happily and unitedly labouring with the evangelists, and much success is attending their united efforts. Large numbers remain to the after meetings, and in a quiet, thoughtful manner many during the past week have come over to the Lord's side. The week afternoon meetings and Bible readings have been seasons of rich blessing.

POLICE-COURT MISSION.

A WELL-ATTENDED meeting of the Rochester Diocesan Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society was held last week at the Royal Victoria Hall, Waterloo-road, to promote the efficiency of the Police-court Mission in London, south of the Thames, by adding a seventh missionary to the staff. Rev. G. A. Ormsby stated that the population in this part of the metropolitan area numbered one and a-half millions, and the work performed by the mission was that of prevention, rescue, and restoration. A vigorous temperance address was delivered by Archdeacon Farrar, who incidentally declared that the working classes held the solution of the social problem in their own hands by giving up drink. He concluded by reminding his audience that four of the present Cabinet Ministers had taken the chair at the United Kingdom Alliance meetings, and they would not be supported by the temperance party unless the Government satisfied their legitimate aspirations.

Lady Frederick Cavendish also spoke, directing attention to the temptations placed in the way of the students attending the Morley Memorial College by the rebuilding of a small public-house in the neighbourhood on a large scale, the renewal of the licence of which establishment, she said, would be opposed.

Obituary.

REV. E. E. BLISS, D.D.

Dr. Edwin Elisha Bliss, for nearly fifty years a missionary in Turkey, is dead. He was born in Putney, Vt., 1817, and graduated from Amherst College, 1837. After a full course at Andover Theological Seminary, he married Isabella H. Porter, of Portland, Me., and sailed for his chosen field of service. His first sphere was at Trebizond from 1843 to 1852, and then at Marsovan, in Armenia, for four years more. He went to Constantinople in 1856, and remained there ever since. In 1869 Amherst gave him the degree of D.D. He was the author of the "Bible Handbook" in Armenian. Since 1865 he had edited the Messenger, published at Constantinople, in both the Armenian and Turkish languages. A widow and four children mourn his loss.

REV. ROBERT HEWITT.

Much regret is felt among a wide circle of friends in Ireland at the death of the Rev. Robert Hewitt, Methodist minister, who has passed away at Springfield, Ontario. The deceased, who was in his 84th year, laboured with great zeal and marked success in such centres as Wicklow, Clones, Strabane, and Westport. For five years he acted as Conference evangelist, and during that period travelled about 20,000 miles, while nearly 3,000 persons professed conversion as the result of his labours. For two years he filled with marked ability the position of chairman of the Sligo district, and in Canada, where he resided for the last few years, he was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him. He was an able preacher, a faithful pastor, and a true friend.

MR. EDWARD WHITWELL, KENDAL.

With regret we have to record the decease of this well-known and much esteemed Christian brother, which took place at Kendal last Thursday, after a brief illness. Some time since he had a paralytic seizure, but it was hoped that the effects of it had passed away. Mr. Whitwell was a man of very earnest character, and was seldom seen in public places without a packet of tracts, which he was industriously distributing. He took special interest in the movement on behalf of the Sunday closing of drink shops, and frequently rallied for united prayer and effort those interested in the promotion of temperance. He was at an early period of his life a member of the Society of Friends, but he joined the Congregational body. His body was interred on Monday last.

MR. THOMAS BOYD, COLERAINE.

The new year was but young when this faithful follower of the Lord passed away peacefully from the service below to that above. Mr. Boyd was a native of Coleraine, where he was pre-eminently known as a man of God; the lustre of his devoted life was seen by all with whom he associated. For more than half a century he was a successful Sabbath-school teacher, and many were the tokens he received that the good seed sown by him, with much prayer, took root and brought forth fruit. Mr. Boyd took a prominent part in the Revival of 1859, and mainly through his instrumentality an anniversary service has been held every year since. His funeral was attended by members of all denominations. An impressive service was held in the First Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Boyd was a ruling elder.

MR. WILLIAM LEATHAM BARCLAY.

We regret, says The Friend, to record the death of William L. Barclay, who passed away quite suddenly at 1.30 p.m. on the 6th inst., at his residence, The Briars, Reigate. Although the event was to some extent expected, it was a sad surprise at the last. W. L. Barclay was the second son of Joseph Gurney Barclay, of Leyton, Essex, and was forty-seven years of age. He was treasurer of the Friends' Home Mission Committee, and was a useful member of the committee of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association. He was deeply interested in the work of the Missionary Helpers' Union, of which his wife, Ellen Barclay, was the founder, and is still the active secretary. Many of our missionaries who have received a warm welcome and hospitality at their house will feel that they have lost a personal friend.

REV. J. P. WILSON, COOKSTOWN.

We announced last week the death of Mr. Wilson, who had been Presbyterian minister at Cookstown (Ireland) for forty years. We are informed that he proved himself an able and devoted minister of the Gospel, earnest in spirit, indefatigable in work, watching over the flock with the love and fidelity of a faithful shepherd, and scrupulously attentive to the details of pastoral work. Said Dr. Wilson, in the course of his funeral sermon: "He was specially desirous to see the young brought under the power of the Gospel, and gave himself much to prayer for the success of his work. I understand that during his illness he was often praying for you, and specially for those whom he considered careless of their spiritual interests. He was faithful, conscientious, earnest, and laborious as a pastor in the Lord."

MRS. HEAL, WAVERTREE, LIVERPOOL.

The railway men of Liverpool and district are sorrowing over the removal by death, on January 10, after a very brief illness, of Mrs. Heal, who has been their true and devoted friend, and one of the most earnest and energetic workers connected with the Railway Mission. For many years Mrs. Heal had been a class leader in connection with the Wesleyan body. Some years since she became interested in the railway men employed at the station near her home, and held a weekly Bible-class for them, which was very successful, and through which many of the men were led to give their hearts to the Saviour. About two and a-half years ago she undertook to superintend all the work connected with the Liverpool Branch of the Railway Mission, and, along with others, worked with so much zeal that there are now twelve branches of the Mission in that city, at which over twenty meetings are held every week.

MISS MARY TUMMON.

This lady, who has carried on Christian work among fallen women in Aldershot for the past ten years, was transferred to the Church Triumphant on Monday night last, at the age of seventy-three. About fifty years ago she did excellent service in connection with the Queen-street Independent Chapel, Sheffield, working in the lowest quarters, and among the very poorest of that town. She also had a mothers' meeting, mustering several hundred members, and was the means of doing for them untold good. After a time, failing health compelled her to relax somewhat her self-denying labours.

Meantime, Rev. J. P. Gledstone, who had been her pastor at Sheffield, removed to Streatham Hill, London, and began carrying on rescue work in his neighbourhood. Strongly feeling at this time the need in Aldershot for a similar work, he induced Miss Tummon to come to Aldershot, the result being that she settled there in 1883, and carried on, till within a single week of her departure, a most successful mission, rescuing and raising hundreds of women and girls from a life which was worse than death—of sin, and sorrow, and shame. J. A.

REV. CANON BROUGHTON.

After a long and painful illness this clergyman entered into rest on January 6, at his residence in Bedford, at the age of seventy-four. For exactly half a century he had been one of the most beloved and honoured incumbents in the diocese of Peterborough. For nearly thirty years he had been vicar of Wellingborough, where his name is still a "household word" with all classes for whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report, although it is now two-and-twenty years since he left that town.

His greatest delight, next to the preaching of the Gospel, was in the nurture and admonition of the young, and the Sunday schools in his three successive parishes of Wellingborough, Polesbrook, and St. Mary's, Leicester, were models of what Sunday schools should be. His sweetness of nature and genial brightness of manner, combined with his deep hold of Christian truth, obtained for the proclamation of the "old, old story" from his lips a ready and attentive hearing. His preaching was with power. He combined the unusual gifts of great strength of character with great and most winning gentleness in a remarkable degree. His friends among all classes were very many.

MR. W. MANTLE SEAMAN.

The services at Down Lodge Hall on Sunday last had special reference to the sadly sudden death of Mr. W. M. Seaman, which occurred at his residence, Tower House, West Hill, Wandsworth, on Wednesday, January 11. Mr. Seaman, who for many years was closely allied with the work of Westminster Chapel, under the late Rev. Samuel Martin, was one of the original committee nominated by Mr. Moody at the close of his Wandsworth Mission in 1883, for the carrying on of permanent evangelistic work in the district. He eventually became one of the trustees of the hall afterwards erected for that purpose by Dr. Watney, and until quite recently had acted also as treasurer and secretary; these offices were only relinquished on account of his indisposition.

At the afternoon service, Mr. David M'Laren referred with much feeling and emotion to the valued services of his friend and co-trustee in connection with the Lord's work carried on at the hall. At the evening service Mr. Augustus Churchill also made reference to Mr. Seaman's death in fitting terms. Mr. Alfred J. Mayers sang as a solo, "The Christian's Good Night," the whole congregation standing as a tribute of their respect for their departed friend.

The unobtrusive, simple-hearted character of Mr. Seaman was very marked. Kindness and true-hearted generosity such as his will not only be missed by the Down Lodge Hall Mission, but by many kindred institutions, such as the Royal Hospital for Incurables and the British, and Foreign Bible Society, in the active work and truest interests of which it was his delight to labour.

Letters to the Editor.

"BEHOLD, THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH."

Dear Sir,—Heartily concurring "in the value of a united testimony," advocated by so many eminent servants of our Lord Jesus Christ in the appeal as presented in page 9 of your last number, deeply important and imperative as such testimony is, I would desire to invite all who love our Lord in sincerity to give the heart fully to carry out this glorious object. We are none of us ignorant of the teachings of our Lord in John xvii. The instruction there given is dwelt upon with continued pleasure and approval as often as we read it, but are we prepared to carry out its precepts as there given?

Ever since the days of the Apostles estrangement has existed among the disciples. Has this been eradicated, or does it still exert its baneful influence? The injunction that we should love one another as Christ loves us seems to have been for ages so obliterated as if it had never been written! Every individual is thoroughly persuaded that his ecclesiastical position is the only one justifiable; that even the teaching of the Holy Spirit in the Word cannot be allowed to interfere in opposition. We are and have been until now governed, beguiled by tradition, by sentiment, by associations, by what is right in our own eyes—the very sin against which the God of Israel carefully warned his people.

And even in these last days, when the prospect of the return of our Lord has awakened many minds, is there not a beginning of doubt whether matters are quite right as to division—a disquiet in thoughtful minds, accompanied with a leaning towards one another, evinced by the conventions now frequent, unknown formerly; a fraternal feeling pleasing to ourselves, and how much more pleasant to our God!

But the old leaven, inadmissible on the altar, either of festival or of malice and wickedness, is not yet burnt out of us. Still it struggles for the mastery. We approve of the better course, yet follow the worse, to our own detriment and to the dishonour of our ever gracious Master. Long has He borne with our waywardness, but we must not hope for his approval if we continue to make light of earnest affectionate appeals that we should love one another as He has loved and still loves even us.

Much as He values the devoted energy of his servants in proclaiming the riches of his grace to their fellow sinners, it cannot be satisfactory to violate one command by giving attention to another.

Robert Nelson.

January 8.

Dear Sir,—I am rejoiced to see in The Christian the recommendation to the conveners of Christian conferences that they should take up the subject of the return of our Lord. I may say that without knowing any such suggestion was to be made, I have been arranging such a conference to be held in Sunderland, April 17-21. I am proposing to the brethren invited that they should deal with the characters in which Christ will be revealed when He comes for and with his saints, as it seems to me that the key that unlocks the details of his advent is to be found in the title in which He is presented in any given passage of Scripture as indicating the tone, time, and temper of his manifestation. The details of our conference will be somewhat as follows:—

CHRIST'S COMING AS

The Fulfiller of his word to "come again."

The Bright and Morning Star as the hope of his beloved.

The Living One to raise those who have fallen asleep that they may partake in the resurrection from among the dead.

The Gatherer of his people to Himself.

The Saviour to complete the redemption of his people.

The Bridegroom to receive his espoused Bride.

Lord to test the work of his servants and to reward them.

The Messiah to convict Judah of sin and to save them.

The Man of War to overthrow the enemies of Israel.

The Destroyer of the antichrist.

The Son of Man to judge the nations.

The Stone to break in pieces Gentile power.

The Deliverer to the groaning creation.

The Priest-King to reign over Israel.

Judge to punish the wicked dead.

I am sure readers of The Christian will pray that the Lord's blessing may rest upon the above conference.—Yours, very sincerely,

F. E. Marsh.

Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland.

The convener of the Hope Hall Convention, Liverpool, also writes, expressing thankfulness that the subject of the Lord's Coming should be brought before those responsible for Christian conferences. Having referred to the ignorance of the Word which lies at the root of forgetfulness of the promise of his coming, the writer adds:—

"I believe if the conveners of the various conferences give a prominent place to the teaching of the Second Coming that blessing will follow, as we read of in Mal. iii. 10. Brethren, let us look this matter in the face; let us remember that there is a crown of righteousness to all who love his appearing and to those who are true elders and fulfil 1 Peter v. 1-4, a "Crown of Glory." Do we not want to hear his "well done"? though who of us would dare to say we can ever deserve it? Still, these things are in Scripture, and the wise will give heed to them. If we really desire Christians to live godly in Christ Jesus, teach that He may come at any moment; if we desire to see thousands going out to the mission field, show how He may come, and so this opportunity may be lost; and last—but not least, and should be first—show how He cannot come until the very last Jew as well as Gentile is gathered in, and how sadly the Lord's brethren according to the flesh have been neglected by the Christian of the past as well as the great majority of the present day; show how, if they had been faithful in this one thing, that to-day we might have had thousands of Jewish missionaries all over the world, and his coming hastened, yea, He might have come long ere this if those who had been trusted with the true riches had proved faithful."

DR. BONAR AND ROBERT McCHEYNE.

Dear Sir,—In the reminiscences of Dr. Andrew Bonar, published in The Christian of last week, your correspondent speaks of a conversation he had with the subject of his memoir on the life and character of Robert McCheyne. I am forcibly reminded by it of a never-to-be-forgotten Sunday I had the privilege of spending with Dr. Bonar at Glasgow in the autumn of 1877. I remember asking him how he accounted for the early fruitfulness and remarkable spiritual growth of his friend; and he replied, "Ah! you see, the Lord knew he had but a short time, and gave special grace that the best use might be made of it."

We may well hope that the calling home of Dr. Andrew Bonar may cause many to read that helpful record of a wonderful life, in which there was exhibited such true humbleness of spirit, combined with great depth of spirituality and earnestness in seeking souls.—Yours faithfully,

E. Holroyde.

MOROCCO.

Dear Sir,—A paragraph in your pages of the 3rd November last, entitled "Encouragement in Morocco," has just caught my attention, after two months' absence from Tangier in the interior and among the Atlas chain of mountains to the south.

Whilst agreeing in the main with the spirit and tenour of your informant's letter, I feel constrained, in order that the Christian public at home may know the true facts of the case, to write you what I have seen and found during my journey. Among other important towns situated in the mountains, I have visited Dinmat, two long days' mule-travelling to the south-east of Morocco city, in company with Mr. Geddes, one of the brethren of the South Morocco Mission. From thence we struck off from the main road, hugging the line of mountainous country to Bil Muddin, and crossed the river El Akhdar, with the intention of piercing through into the district known as Ait Atab. From here we were obliged to retire, the Kaid or Governor of the district having received strict orders from the Sultan to stop any European attempting to penetrate into the lawless country beyond him.

Whilst not finding sufficient evidence in these places visited to declare openly that there are Christians there, yet I have found men undoubtedly acquainted with the Holy Gospel, being diligent readers of the same, and who may be termed "inquirers"—the word "convert," as we understand it in England, seems to me too strong a term to use; but that the Holy Ghost has begun the work of regeneration in the hearts and lives of some of these people is abundantly evident to me—and we may confidently look forward to the coming years in which an abundant harvest of souls shall be gathered into the fold of Christ from among these out-of-the-way mountain regions of Morocco; that is, if we do not hinder God's work whilst in embryo, by our impatience to see springing up Church communities before the Grace of God has struck root firmly.

Full particulars of my journey may be obtained from Mr. Glenny, our Hon. Secretary, 21, Linton-road, Barking, E., who has my diary in full.

Yours faithfully,

J. Edwards.

IMPROVIDENT MARRIAGES.

Sir,—A remark appeared in your paper recently to this effect:—"In our poor law a man must tumble into the gutter before he can be picked up. In Germany they try to prevent a man tumbling into the gutter. It is a question whether this is not cheaper in the end; it is certainly more humane."

What special poor law arrangement this refers to I do not know, but it would certainly be a very happy thing if by any means men and women could be prevented from taking one step, which is in many cases the first step to the gutter. I allude to early and wholly improvident marriages, to which, at present, no check whatever is given.

I live in a small healthy parish, in the centre of a hop district. Deep poverty (except from drink) is really unknown. There is remunerative employment for women and children at certain seasons of the year. The parish, having been well organised for years, has its benefit, coal, clothing, and other clubs ready to help those who help themselves; and friends are willing to aid cases of sickness or accident, and respectable aged ones who are past work, irrespective of sect or denomination.

Everyone knows that clerical incomes are one-third less than they were a very few years ago. Incomes derived from land are probably more diminished still, while rates, taxes, and calls for charitable aid from all quarters are certainly on the increase; consequently no landowner or farmer can possibly afford to employ more labour than their land requires, and they must discourage the building of cottages for more labourers than their land will support. Yet families go on increasing—averaging at least five or six children in each. The greater part of these children must necessarily seek subsistence elsewhere; but no thought of the future enters the minds of most young people of the present day. Early marriages are unchecked. The year before last, in this small parish three marriages took place, all the parties being under age, and one wife not sixteen. Many are in no benefit club. What can they do in sickness? Many marry without any settled place or regular work in prospect; and many without a stick of furniture except what is hired, thus exercising less foresight than even the birds of the air, who always provide a well-lined house for their little ones.

Now is it not clear that such improvident couples have wilfully taken the first step to the gutter? Is it quite certain that some of the many men who harangue the unemployed on the fancied duty of Government to provide work for as many children as anybody chooses to bring into the world may not have added to the misery which they assert others ought to relieve by having made some improvident marriages themselves?

How can more provident conduct be insisted on? Parents are helpless; education, such as it now is, has not tended to gain more respect for the Fifth Commandment, nor, I fear, for any of the Commandments. I have been intimately acquainted with parochial matters in the country for more than half a century, and I feel not a doubt that these early and improvident marriages are a long step towards the creation of the gutter population. I could point out several others, but I hope cleverer writers than myself will take up the subject.

I can testify by personal knowledge to the patience, endurance, unselfishness, and neighbourly kindness of many of the dwellers in cottage homes. It is the wilful conduct of the young to which I seek to draw attention in this letter. I see with the deepest anxiety how their heedless improvidence must operate to the increase of the misery of the single-roomed dwellers in the pestiferous air of the crowded alleys of our great towns, these being the places to which the population whom the land cannot support must resort, to seek for shelter and for work.

Four things are needed to make a provident marriage: (1) Both man and wife to be in a benefit club (in case of sickness); (2) To have money enough between them to furnish the home with some comfort; (3) To have a sufficiently certain prospect of settled employment; (4) For both to be of full age, that is, not to marry earlier than the age at which those medical men who have well considered the subject deem essential both for the health of the parents themselves, and which may give a reasonable hope of securing a healthy constitution to their children.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of Pastor R. SAILLENS, of Paris.

 There are still some subscriptions for 1893 outstanding. These being payable in advance, we must request our friends to give their attention to this matter at once, in order to secure the due despatch of future copies. Full particulars will be found in the special announcement above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard must be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Mr. Eugene Stock, secretary of the C.M.S. writes to us from Bombay, under date of Jan. 6:—"I am just starting on a rapid tour through North India. I return to Colombo in March, and sail thence on the 16th in the Britannia for England. The Lord has been gracious to us indeed, and blessed our work beyond our highest expectations."

By the death of Mr. William Isaac Palmer the National Temperance League has lost its most liberal supporter. Some of his good intentions towards the League are unfulfilled because of the extreme suddenness of his death. As the work in which their deceased friend and fellow-labourer took so deep an interest cannot be continued on the same scale without additional help, the committee of the League are appealing for increased contributions to enable them to carry on and extend its operations.

The first volume of "The Story of the China Inland Mission," by M. Geraldine Guinness, makes us long for the second in which the inspiring record will be completed. In a brief introduction the founder, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, says of the mission:—

Its history now covering more than a quarter of a century; its stations now scattered over an almost continental area; its missionary workers now numbering five hundred and fifty, together with over two hundred native helpers, supply an ample illustration of the feasibility and safety of relying upon God's power and resources for the carrying out of his purposes.

Supplied with maps and many portraits and other illustrations, the volume will prove to many a real means of grace; for its pages not only describe devoted labour for God, but show how implicit faith has been signally honoured by interpositions of Providence. (3s. 6d. Morgan and Scott.)

We have received the following statement with respect to the work for soldiers in which Miss Daniell takes such an active part:—

The Chatham Soldiers' Home was enlarged and repaired in 1886-87. Great difficulty was experienced in getting in the final account from the builder, who has only this last year sent it in. The balance owing for the enlarging and repairs of the Home and other repairs since, with architect's expenses, amounts to over £1100. It would have been comparatively easy to collect the money at the time. But in 1888 there came the announcement of a legacy, and it was hoped there would be no difficulty about it. This legacy has never been paid owing to the greater part of the premises being on mortgage, and so not available for charitable legacies. We have done all we could about it, but legacies left by the same lady to other institutions have not been obtainable.

Accidents and storms, whether by land or sea, seldom fail to reveal some of the finest qualities lying latent in unknown heroes. This winter has been full of pathetic and moving incidents. Perhaps the silent uncomplaining patience of the humble poor as they go about the painful work by which they earn their daily bread is as touching as anything to be seen. The hardships of sailors, sailing our stormy northern seas, have been terrible, but the men take them as an inevitable part of their lot. Night watchmen must so far have had sharp times; one of them, aged sixty-six, night watchman of a colliery, was found dead at his post. "The quiet patience with which these people work the year through," said a Wiltshire gentleman, "is a wonder to see." We only want to open our eyes to see a great many wonderful things which are close at hand.

The sight of some men doing their work in inclement weather is enough to make one shiver. Much needless pain, we are confident, is inflicted on many. It may not be possible to protect our omnibus drivers beyond covering him with as many wraps as possible; but on the cable-trams the drivers might surely be sheltered from the weather. Why should not the "bogie" on which they ride be protected by glass in the front and at the sides? It is done on railway engines, and yet we well remember the time when they had nothing but a sheet of iron with two glass panes in front for driver and stoker to look through; then the iron was carried higher and bent over their head; next it was carried right above them as a roof; and now they travel in some comfort. Men are not worse workmen for being cared for; only masters do not always duly consider their needs.

The Working Men's Trade Council in Dublin and the Corporation of that city have passed resolutions calling upon the Government to introduce a measure to deal with the growing evil of bogus clubs. The existing laws have no bearing upon these places, which in too many cases are simply drink shops. It was stated at the Corporation meeting that in one street alone no fewer than twenty of these places had been opened, the result being "degrading and pestiferous." Perhaps the hands of the movers in this effort to influence the authorities would be strengthened if other cities and towns followed their example.

In our correspondence columns will be found a letter on the question of "Fatherhood and Sonship," referring to some former notes on the same topic. We said, in the notes referred to, that "some of the deepest truths of the Gospel become clear and simple when we regard them as the reversal of what took place at the Fall." Of course, we did not mean that the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God was only the reversal of the Fall; or that things which are parallel to each other are in all respects similar and equal. When the Lord Jesus said, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves," He placed men, and doves, and serpents on parallel lines, so far as his exhortation and illustration went; but He did not imply that they were alike in nature. Things may be similar, yet not equal. A sovereign and a shilling are similar, but they are not of equal value.

In saying that Satan imparts his nature to those who believe and obey him, and that God imparts his nature to those who believe and obey Him, we do not forget that Satan is a creature finite, fallen, depraved, unclean, and that God is the Holy and Almighty Creator. In saying that by belief in and obedience to Satan a man becomes a partaker of the satanic nature, and that by belief in and obedience to God he becomes a partaker of the Divine nature, we do not imply any of the dreadful things which our friend attributes to us.

On the other hand, we think that he unduly minimises the word of the Lord Jesus, if we are right in understanding him to mean that it is by metaphor, or oriental imagery, that Jesus spoke of these Jews in John viii. as children of the devil. We believe that morally and spiritually, not by "metaphor or Oriental imagery," but in actual fact, they were, and all like them are, children of the evil one. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Stier says on John viii. 44: "Ye are of your father the devil," etc.:—

And now is plainly uttered the final word of thunder, penetrating their hearts, whether it found hearing or not, with its flash of conviction, disclosing the secret principles of their sin:—"Your unlikeness to Abraham shows that ye are not his true children; your want of susceptibility to the word of the Son of God, whom you fight against, shows that ye cannot possibly be the children of the same God; your likeness to him who was a liar and a murderer from the beginning, the spirit of contradiction and hatred, the false antigod—demonstrates your actual origination from him. This is the other father whom I meant."

Alford says:—

It is quite impossible to suppose an accommodation to Jewish views, or a metaphorical form of speech, in so solemn and direct an assertion as this.

Says Dr. David Brown:—

What a verse is this. It holds up the devil, first as the murderer of the human race; but as this is meant here in the more profound sense of spiritual death, it holds him up, next, as the parent of this fallen human family, communicating to his offspring his own evil passions, and universal obliquity, and stimulating these into active exercise. But as there is "a Stronger than he," who comes upon him and overcomes him (Luke xi. 21 22), it is only such as "love the darkness," who are addressed as children of the devil.

This latter remark is an important one in this discussion, and one which we entirely endorse.

In the third paper of a series on "Christian Perfection" in The British Weekly, Rev. John Macpherson, author of a commentary on Ephesians, speaks of the teaching which excludes "mistakes" and "involuntary transgressions" from the category of "sins," while it admits that those "mistakes" are so remarkably like "sins" that "they need the atoning blood." Mr. Macpherson truly says that "it is utter nonsense to speak about applying the atoning blood to anything that is not sin. . . . Transgressions of all sorts, if there be different sorts, are sins, and only as such are they in need of 'the atoning blood.'" Nothing is gained except obscurity and self-deception by toning down the conception and definition of sin and of holiness to meet an imperfect experience.

"When Bishop Berkeley said there was no matter, I think it was no matter what he said." That opinion of Lord Byron very well expresses the judgment of most people, whether Christians or otherwise, concerning a poem which is for the moment the occasion of a sensational newspaper correspondence. No one can take it seriously when a creature deliberately and ostentatiously seats himself on a mock throne of judgment, and presumes to arraign before his puny bar the Creator and Ruler of the Universe, and the Man who is his Fellow, of whom He has said, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn, until He shall come whose right it is, and I will give it Him." The discussion of this blatant poem by the popular preacher at St. James's Hall, not only once, but for several succeeding weeks, gives it, as we think, an importance of which it is entirely unworthy.

There has been much discussion on the subject of "Evening Communions," consequent upon a declaration by the Archbishop of York that he would "do all in his power to discourage" them. "Presbyter Academicus," who writes to The Times from Oxford, after pointing out that a High Church correspondent "carries back the practice of fasting communion to the time of St. Basil (A.D. 380)," makes the following remarkable contribution to the subject:—

But whence was a custom, apparently so alien to the circumstances of the original institution, imported into the Christian Church?

Probably, like so many other novelties of ritual and doctrine introduced into the Catholic Church in the third, fourth, and fifth centuries, from a Pagan source. The initiated in the Greek mysteries at Eleusis, before they were allowed to drink of the mystic κυκεὼν and eat of the sacred cakes, were required to fast for a day (See Hatch's Hibbert Lectures for 1888, p. 298).

It was not till the conquered Paganism had begun to take such dire revenge by imposing much of its own philosophy and its own ritual on the victorious Church, that the necessity of fasting communion was taught by the Fathers.

Were it not for the difficulty in these days of delicate organisations and diminishing endurance, of combining this practice, probably Pagan in its origin, with a late celebration of the Eucharist, it is plain, from the correspondence in your columns, that we should hear of no objection to evening communions.

The lengthy correspondence is inevitably leading up to the vital question we suggested in our last—How much of our thinking and acting, under the name of religion, is of Pagan, and how much of Christian origin?

Under the suggestive title, "Work for the Churches in 1893," The New York Independent devotes many pages of its first issue for the year, to a Symposium in which some of the foremost Christian workers of America deal with present problems in Home Evangelisation. As we read the various articles, we observe that many of the questions which press most strenuously on workers in our own great cities are arising in similar form in the populous centres of the new world.

Dr. E. Judson, who opens the Symposium, deplores the fact that in the suburban drift, so characteristic of American as well as of English cities, the poor are left behind to cluster in dense masses. The larger churches follow their members, and, unless special means be adopted in the forsaken districts, "the appliances of the Gospel become feeble." He pleads, not for great institutions, but small churches or "missions," "little groups of Christian men and women distributed throughout the city." He aptly remarks that "a succession of street lamps is better for illuminating a city than a flaring search light."

Other workers, such as Messrs. Jacob H. Riis, A. S. Hatch, Ballington Booth, H. H. Porter, and R. C. Bedford, Revs. J. O. S. Huntington, H. A. Schauffler, D.D., H. Wilson, and S. L. Baldwin, D.D., deal with various phases of the question, with most of which we are familiar enough. Amongst these are "The Tenement House Problem," "The Submerged," "The Negroes," "Fallen Women," and "The Criminal Classes." Special classes, presenting peculiar difficulties, are also considered. Mr. Comstock writes incisively on "The Vicious Class," and, as might be expected, insists upon the necessity for suppression (of the inducements and temptations) as well as on evangelisation. "We must," he exclaims, "stop the seed-sowing." To quote a couple of sentences:—

The laws of suppression and repression must be enforced, apace with the preaching of the Word of Life, and the restoring, converting and healing influences of mission and social reforms. The sewer pipes that are belching forth poisonous gases into the community, especially through the "gin-mill," "dive," disorderly house, devil's printing-press, etc., must be closed; otherwise religion and morals will be infected, diseased, corrupted, debased and overthrown.

Amongst other papers dealing with special classes is one by Rev. J. L. Scudder, on "The Gambling Fraternity." The following remark as to professional gamblers sounds strangely: "You might as well try to convert a shark." The grace of God has proved its power even in such cases, but many earnest evangelists and ministers have similarly testified to their own sad experience of the hardening effect upon the heart of the vice of gambling. Work among "Socialists and Anarchists" is described in a short paper by Rev. Josiah Strong, who gives one pointed saying: "Working men do not object to Christianity, but to Churchianity."

One very interesting paper merits special notice, inasmuch as it deals with a class too often overlooked—viz., "The Neglected Rich." The writer, Dr. C. L. Thompson, fully admits the claims of the poor, but urges that, "snared by the deceitfulness of riches," and hedged in by many conventional barriers, large numbers of the wealthy are not only unconverted, but are practically unreached by the Gospel. Yet, he rightly maintains, it is our business to reach rich as well as poor, and the good tidings are needed by the one as well by the other. The paper concludes in these words:—

If asked how to reach prosperous people, now outside of religious influences, I would say:—

1. Make our principles and our practice correspond by making our church appointments as free and generous as our truths. No class churches. The best religious services open to all on equal conditions.

2. Spiritual life in the churches. The rich are in need of one thing which the Church can give—a higher life. The soul's hunger is deeper than human conditions and as universal as humanity.

3. A holy courage, especially among prosperous Christians. Religion is their comfort far more than all their possessions—what is their need is the need of their prosperous neighbours. Let them be consistent in their lives, and they may then have any amount of courage in approaching their neighbours with the Gospel.

We rejoice that our transatlantic contemtemporary has thus boldly faced one of the most urgent questions of the times, "How is the Gospel to be made known to and pressed upon all classes of the people?" We trust these papers will arrest attention and arouse concern. This great work will never be done aright until it is recognised as a responsibility resting on each believer, according to his or her opportunity and gifts. So long as it is largely left to pastors, ministers, and missionaries, as their official duty, it will, to a great extent, remain undone. For these it is too vast. When "the disciples are scattered everywhere preaching the word," when every Christian becomes a witness, then there is hope the work will be overtaken in some adequate measure.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

A LARGELY-ATTENDED meeting of clergymen took place on Monday at Sion College, in reference to the special meetings which are about to be held in connection with the Church Missionary Society, on the claims of the heathen and Mohammedan world on the Church of Christ. The Bishop of London, who presided, said in the course of his address: We know that the Lord had commanded the Church to go forth and teach all nations. One thing which hindered Christians as a body from recognising their obligations in the matter was the idea that the command was only given to the apostles and the ministers of the Gospel and to those whom the Lord selected from his people to do work of this kind. They must stir up men's minds to see that the duty of preaching the Gospel was a duty incumbent upon the whole Church of Christ, that it was not the minister only who was called upon to preach the Gospel, but it was the whole body of Christian believers. Everybody in his own measure, by his money, by his prayers, by his advocacy, and by the general tenour of his life, was bound to show that he was not only a member of Christ's Church, but that he recognised why Christ's Church had been created, and recognised his own share in the aims for which the Church existed. Was there any aim for which the Church could exist which could rank higher than preaching the Gospel of Christ?

At a large gathering held in the evening at the Church Missionary House, in connection with the Lay Workers' Union, Mr. James Monro, late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, but recently engaged in mission work in India, called attention to a truth which had, he said, been much lost sight of—namely, that the missionary call was not to a select few amongst the clergy, but was to the whole Church, to the laity as well as to the clergy. One result of this exclusion of the laity was that the number of missionaries had been very much limited. It had also created the impression in the minds of the natives of India that laymen had nothing to do with religious teaching. He thought that the Church Missionary Society would have to follow up its scheme of associated lay evangelists by one of associated female evangelists.

CORONERS' INQUESTS.—We have from time to time called attention to the objectionable practice of holding coroners' inquests in public-houses, and we are glad to see that public opinion is gradually veering in this direction. In several instances where the election of a new coroner has been under consideration, an instruction has been given to avoid as far as possible the holding of inquests on licensed premises.—Medical Press.

WOMEN'S ANTI-OPIUM URGENCY COMMITTEE.—Prayer meetings have been arranged to be held at Exeter Hall on Monday, Feb. 20, and four following days. The meetings will begin at one o'clock, and last for one hour. The traffic will be considered as it affects China, India, and Burmah, and the responsibility of British Christians for its continuance will be recognised in confession and prayer. Further particulars may be obtained from Rachel B. Braithwaite, 312, Camden-road, N.

Revival: Habitual, Unceasing.

By REV. WM. ROSS, GLASGOW.

THE Old Testament promises concerning the Holy Spirit and his working clearly indicate that the gifts and calling of God were without repentance. It may be said with truth that the indications furnished by the Old Testament are of the intermittent working of the Spirit, rather than the habitual and constant manifestation of his presence and power; and yet that is but a superficial view to take. If we regard the antediluvian world, the expression used regarding the Divine forbearance is, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." This surely seems to indicate even in that dark and sinful time the constant operation of the Holy Ghost. Stephen, connecting the history of the Old Testament Church with that of the New, and speaking of the privileged people, says of them, "Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so also do ye."

If we were to describe the sin of the Old Testament Church, and, for that matter, the cardinal failure of the New, we could find no words more suitable than these: "They limited the Holy One." If we inquire for the crowning sin of the Jewish Church, of the New Testament Church, of the Reformation Church; if we ask for the prevalent condition during their times of greatest declension and formalism and deadness, is it not to be found in this, that they had not sufficient spiritual life and power to become missionary and aggressive?

Are there not now, as there were of old, three classes of men within our borders? The first rely solely upon natural means, and expect in due time to reap what they call the natural results of an exhibition of truth and the evolution of events. A second class go a step further. They believe in the presence and power of the Holy Ghost as the great Quickener, and as applying the redemption purchased by Christ to believers; but Pentecost was the noontide of their day of grace and the shades of evening and the night of darkness and despair are fast settling around them, while they themselves are making heroic struggles to keep alight the torches of truth and testimony.

There is a third class to whom Pentecost was but the dawning of the resurrection morning on a feeble church and a lost world. They look upon that time but as the earnest of the Spirit—a gift beforehand, a pledge of coming fulness and a harvest of the first fruits of the Spirit. They cannot believe that a church nearly 1900 years old should have a less realisation of the testimony of the Spirit than the church of the first century. They believe that there are greater, brighter, more glorious times before the Church of God than ever has been experienced in the past. They know that the words of the promise, "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh," and "all flesh shall see the salvation of God," have a meaning in them which is worthy of Him who has promised, and which is adapted to accomplish the great end of his mediatorial reign and his engagement to "fill all things."

May we not truly say that the Church has not claimed the promise of God nor risen to the height of her glorious privilege? Let her return in deep humility of heart to Him whom she has forsaken; let her "repent and do the first works," and seasons more glorious than Pentecost will speedily return to her. We must believe this. "All things are possible to him that believeth." Of the Son of God it is said: "He could do no mighty works there because of their unbelief"; and the same is true of the Spirit. He will not take possession of believers beyond their capacity of receiving Him.

Do we not "grieve the Holy Spirit of God by which we are sealed," by our unbelief and our lack of preparation for the manifestation of his quickening, saving, and sanctifying power? Let us compare the proportion of time and thought and activity which we give to the securing of his presence and powerful working, to that which we bestow upon secular inducements to attend the House of God; or upon our efforts to beautify and render pleasing the service of the sanctuary; or even to understand and expound the Word, or to provide the means of maintaining the truth and extending his kingdom. After we have computed that sum, let us ask the question, "Has the Holy Ghost the place in my soul and in our Church, which the Lord Jesus, the risen King, would desire his Spirit to have?" The answer, if honestly worked out, will bring us to our knees, and to a condition of mind and heart which will better fit us for henceforward, being, like Barnabas, "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost"; and our preaching, like that of Paul, which was "not in word only, but in the power of the Holy Ghost."

Have there not been men whose ministry has been a lifetime of revival—men like Dr. McDonald of Ferintosh, to whom was granted an unfailing revival for at least thirty-five years? Finney was a blazing torch for a like period; and there are many others whose names will occur to all who are familiar with this life and literature. All this goes to indicate that this blessing need not be partial, intermittent, and occasional, but rather that we should look for times when the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun and the light of the sun as the light of seven days.

We can only set to our personal testimony that amidst sin, demerit, and failure the Lord has been pleased not to hide his face nor withhold his Spirit for a period of at least thirteen years, and that for nine years—3300 nights—we have not seen one night without having the privilege of having some sinner to point to the Saviour. "It is the Lord's doing, and marvellous in our eyes." "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory." His word to us to-day would seem to be that addressed to his disciples of old, "Ask, and it shall be given you." "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" Then shall be fulfilled his word, "And I the Lord will be your God, and I will make with you a covenant of peace, and will make you and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause evil to cease out of the land, and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing, and they shall know that I the Lord their God am with them, and that they are my people, saith the Lord God."

CLIFTON STREET MISSION.—The question how old chapels long neglected and empty can be filled has been successfully answered at Clifton-street, Wandsworth-road, where for years past a mission band has laboured to bring in men and women from the working population by means of open-air services all the year round, house-to-house and public-house visitation, services in the lodging-houses, children's services, and other practical agencies. These gratifying facts were abundantly proved in a review (covering a period of several years) made at a meeting on Monday week in the Clifton-street Chapel, at the close of a successful ten days' mission conducted by Mr. Wm. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, whose earnest addresses have not only been acceptable to the workers but been made a blessing to many.

"A MOTHER IN ISRAEL."

IN a letter to The Scotsman on Jan. 18, Mrs. Bright M'Laren, of Newington House, Edinburgh, writes as follows:—"Allow me a little space to make affectionate mention of one whom I may justly call 'a mother in Israel,' who was laid to rest yesterday in Newington Cemetery ground. There are of noble women not a few in our city who live not for themselves, but for others; amongst these was Catherine Ann M'Laren, who passed from amongst us on the 13th inst. She was the sister of Mr. David M'Laren, who some years ago removed to London, making Edinburgh much the poorer by his absence. It has been said that every woman is at heart a mother. Such, indeed, was Miss M'Laren, of Morningside Place. Few countenances could show the brightness of the inner life more than hers did. She gave one the impression that her heart was large enough to take in all who needed to be succoured, cheered, and cared for; and it is with regard to an incident connected with her and the Dean Bank Institution for Destitute Children, for which she was the indefatigable hon. secretary, that I have ventured to ask for a little space in your columns.

"I shall never forget the first time I visited that school, and saw the influence Miss M'Laren's bright, loving nature had upon those poor girls. All looked bright and happy in her presence, as though a loving mother had come to visit them—all, except one girl, bigger than the rest. She sat apart; a heavy cloud seemed to rest upon her; nor did she raise her eyes to look with a girl's curiosity upon a stranger in the room. On asking the cause of this exception to the general happiness, Miss M'Laren said: 'Oh, it is the sad story of the want of wisdom in that law which condemns a boy or girl to a month's imprisonment before being sent to a reformatory school. It was for a trifling offence the girl was sent to prison. She cannot rise above it; she feels marked amongst the others, and never will join with them in anything. We show her every sympathy, and hope love may yet counteract the harm that has been done to her by that unwise law.'

"A good while afterwards my kind friend said to me, 'You will be glad to hear about that poor girl in our institution we all felt so much for. We thought it best at last to remove her to Canada, under good care. She had somehow got to know what her board, etc., with us had cost, and one day, to our surprise, we received a most grateful letter from her, refunding the whole sum.

"Truly 'love is the fulfilling of the law' of Christ, whilst despair and further wrongdoing are often the result of some of our own laws. It requires the full human being to make just and humane laws; this means the united intelligence of men and women.

"A severe accident confined this devoted friend of all who needed help and sympathy for nearly twelve months to her home. Great as this privation was, she bore all that it involved with Christian cheerfulness. Accustomed as she was to keep up a correspondence with the old girls who had been trained in the institution for which she had done so much, she had sent them all their Christmas cards and letters, and just before the close of her useful life she was cheered by a letter from one of the girls who had occasioned her anxiety, telling her of a change of heart and a desire for a better life.

"Sixteen of the girls from Dean Bank stood around the grave along with the sorrowing relatives, and sang a hymn which was associated with their departed friend, and the tears which could not be repressed as the remains of her they so much loved were lowered into their last resting-place told what she had been to them during her life. I have written this so that, whilst dead, she may yet speak."

THE PUNJAUB, INDIA.—Mr. C. J. Dease, Superintendent of Post Offices, Peshawur, Punjaub, India, writes to thank those friends who have sent him parcels and tracts. He is in a position to distribute such literature among six European regiments, three or more batteries, and one cavalry regiment, railway employés, etc., etc., and also finds the sick in hospital are eager to accept all he can give them. The parcels he has received as yet have not been enough to satisfy the Peshawur Hospital alone.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

"NO DAY LIKE THAT."—Joshua x. 14.

"There was no day like that." It stood alone in the history of the conquest, and of Joshua.

I.—THERE HAD BEEN NONE LIKE IT IN THE NUMBER AND STRENGTH OF THE CONFEDERACY WHICH WAS GATHERED AGAINST ISRAEL.

The highlanders, and lowlanders, and the maritime tribes combined their forces to oppose and crush the invaders, who now, by the defection of Gibeon, possessed a pathway into the heart of the country. Israel had previously dealt with separate cities, Jericho, Ai, Gibeon; but now six of the seven nations of Canaan joined together at the summons of the King of Jerusalem, who was allied with the Kings of Hebron, Jarmuth, Lachish, and Eglon.

The traitor city of Gibeon was the object of the attack of the combined forces, partly because its defection had aroused the fiercest animosity of its former allies, and partly that by its occupation they might be able to interpose one further barrier to the invasion of the Israelites. This was more especially the purpose of Adonizedek, whose name, "lord of righteousness," recalls the ancient glory of Melchisedec, the friend of Abram. The royal city of Gibeon lay only six miles to the north of Jerusalem.

All suddenly, the men of Gibeon found themselves surrounded by a vast host of infuriated warriors, who, not daring to measure themselves against Joshua, because of the awe which his exploits had inspired, were all the more eager to wreak their vengeance upon those who had dared to make a league with him. Relying upon Joshua's fidelity to the covenant so recently formed, a message was sent in breathless haste summoning him to their help. "Slack not thy hand from thy servants, come up to us quickly, and save us, and help us, for all the kings of the Amorites are gathered together against us."

II.—THERE WAS NONE LIKE IT IN JOSHUA'S LIFE FOR HEROIC FAITH.

There had been great days in his life before, the day of the Passover when he marched in the van of his tribe; the day of the flight with Amalek when, beneath the uplifted hands of Moses, he drove the tribes of the desert before him; the day when first he had stood with his master amid the burning splendour of the vision of God; the day when he had returned with Caleb from espying the land, and had heard himself singled out to survive his nation and to enter the land of promise. There had been also some wonderful days lately, when he crossed the Jordan, saw the Angel, and beheld the walls of Jericho fall flat, but there had never been a day in his life quite like this.

It was a day of Vigour. As soon as he received the message, he saw the importance of at once vindicating the trust reposed in him. Ere the sun went down, orders had passed through the camp that the men of war should be ready for a midnight march, and at dead of night he climbed the pass from Gilgal to Gibeon—fifteen difficult miles—and came upon the sleeping host suddenly before they had had time to prepare themselves for fight. Inertness and indolence ill become those who are entrusted with great concerns. The stirring of God's Spirit in man makes the pulse throb quickly, purposes form themselves in the will; and all the nature is braced, and knit, to subserve the heroic soul.

It was a day of Fellowship. Soon after the first message had come, with surely a certain amount of startling surprise, God had spoken to him and said, "Fear them not, for I have delivered them into thy hands; there shall not a man of them stand before thee." And so we may expect it to be always. Sometimes the assurance comes first to prepare us for what is at hand. But if not then it will reach us simultaneously with the alarm, reassuring us, and giving us quiet confidence in the midst of evil tidings, as the bird rocks in its nest over the rush of the waterfall, serene, though the branch beneath it sways in the storm. It was in the strength of that promise that he spake to God, as man had never spoken before, and under the pressure of stirring circumstances.

There must have been hard fighting all the morning. It was dawn when the battle began, and it would have been towards afternoon when the kings gave the signal for retreat, and the Canaanites, unable longer to sustain the successive onsets of Israel, charging to the battle cry of "Jehovah, mighty in battle," broke into flight like a flock of panic-stricken sheep. Ten miles they fled, climbing a precipitous ascent to the high ridge of Beth-horon the Upper. From that point the road drops, broken and rugged, seven hundred feet in two miles. The rock is cut into steps. Down this breakneck steep the fugitives fled, to reach, if only they might, their fastnesses and citadels, which lay in the valley below, and longing for night to put a pause upon the anguish of the pursuit. It was at this point that the storm, of which we will speak presently, burst on them with irresistible fury, as if the whole artillery of heaven had suddenly opened fire, and when Joshua reached the head of the ravine, before him the descent was blocked with the masses of the routed armies; beneath him the valley was thick with cloud, which was venting its contents on his foes; whilst upwards to him there surged the mingled voice of the cry of the vanquished, the shout of the pursuer, and the chorus of the hailstones. Behind him, over the hills of Gibeon the sun was westering. It wanted but an hour or two, and its sudden disappearance would bring on the rapid Eastern twilight, whilst the moon's pale face appearing over the purple waters of the Great Sea was waiting to lead on the night.

It was under these circumstances that Joshua dared to ask an unprecedented gift of God, that the day might be prolonged, "Why should not the sun, which is thy creature, but worshipped too long in this land in thy stead, now subserve thy purpose in the destruction of these who have given it what was thy due? and why should not yonder moon, which has so often looked down upon the licentious orgies of the Amorite, now see their impurity washed out by blood? They are thine, Jehovah; they will perform thy bidding; hearken to my voice and let them stay."

There are high days in human lives when thought and purpose, which had been quietly gathering strength, like waters swelling against a barrier, suddenly leap from their leash, and vent themselves in acts, or words, or prayers, such as stand out from the ordinary routine of existence, like the Cathedral of Cologne from the mean houses that gather around its base. We are not, then, drunk with wine, but we are flushed, as to our spirits, with the exhilaration and sense of power which the Spirit of God alone can give, or, to put it in another form, we catch fire. There is too little experience of this capacity of rising into the loftiest experience of that Spirit life which is within the reach of us all, through living fellowship with God; but whenever we realise and use it, it is as when the feeble, smouldering wick is plunged into oxygen gas, or as when a flower, that had struggled against the frost, is placed in the tropical atmosphere of the hot-house. In such hours we realise what Jesus meant when He said, "Whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou taken up and cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that what he saith cometh to pass; he shall have it."

It was a day of triumphant onlook. Discomfited, weary, vanquished, the kings sheltered in the care of Makkedah; but Joshua did not stay to despatch them; he was too eager to finish what he had commenced and to prevent the Canaanites entering their cities. So he took measures for keeping them imprisoned in the cave till his return. Presently, flushed with victory, and with (as Josephus tells us) the loss of hardly a single life, he came again. The kings were summoned from their hiding-place, and as they crouched abjectly at the feet of their conquerors, Joshua called for all the men of Israel, and said unto the chiefs of the men of war, "Come near, put your feet upon the necks of these kings." And whilst they stood, in that attitude of unquestioned victory, there broke on the exalted spirit-kindled imagination of the warrior-chieftain, the sure prevision of the ultimate issue of the conflict in which they were engaged. He already saw the day when every knee should bow before Jehovah's might, when every king should be prostrate before Israel's arm, and when the whole land should be subdued. So all through the years that followed, he would come back again and again in thought to that moment when he stood on a peak of the mountain of vision and said, "Fear not, nor be dismayed, be strong and of a good courage, for thus shall Jehovah do to all your enemies against whom ye fight."

III.—THERE HAD BEEN NONE LIKE IT IN THE EXTRAORDINARY CO-OPERATION OF JEHOVAH.

The storm that broke in that late afternoon over the rugged descent to Beth-horon was no common one. Oriental hailstones are of great size; it is said that sometimes masses of ice will fall of a pound or more in weight; and these would naturally kill any on whom they fell. But the remarkable thing in this case was that the storm broke in a moment when its fury could be spent on the Amorites without inflicting injury upon Israel. "It came to pass as they fled from before Israel, when they were in the going down of Beth-horon, that the Lord cast down great stones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died; they were more that died with the hailstones than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword.'

But the stupendous miracle of the day consisted in the arrest of daylight. It is obvious that vv. 12-15 are a quotation from the poetical book of Jasher. This is clear, because ver. 15 is duplicate with ver. 43, and the style is altogether different from the majestic roll of the historian's prose. But there is no reason to believe, with some, that these verses give us only a metaphorical account of the fight, and of the thoroughness of the victory, as though the poet would say that in that one day Israel did the work of two. Beneath the veil of poetry, so gravely interpolated by the historian, there must be a reference to a marvellous and miraculous episode.

We place no limit to the divine power. He who made all things is the monarch of all. It is indeed easier for Him to impose his will on nature, man, or human wills. The miracle of the Resurrection is so stupendous in the raising of our human nature, incorporate with the divine, to take its place in the heart and forces of the spirit-world, that we need not hesitate to accept any well-accredited marvel. And if it were needful, we should not scruple to believe that God could make the clock of the universe stop, if it were necessary that it should do so.

But it is not necessary to believe this. No doubt here as elsewhere Scripture uses the language of ordinary human life. By some process, the laws of which are at present unknown to us, but of which we get glimpses in refraction in the after-glow of sunset, in the fantastic appearances familiar to travellers in high latitudes and amongst the loftiest mountains, God was able to prolong the daylight until Israel had made an end of slaying their foes, with a very great slaughter, so that only a decimated remnant entered into the fenced cities. The how is not material to our present purpose. It is enough to express our belief in the fact itself. Somehow, the duration of that day's light was lengthened out until the people had avenged themselves of their enemies; and there was no day like that before it or after it, that the Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man; for the Lord fought for Israel.

There is no need to follow the steps of the conquerors as they passed from city to city. Some of them, like Lachish, seem to have made an obstinate resistance; others, like Hebron, must have been regarded with intense interest, because of their connection with the lives and wanderings of the patriarchs; others again, like Debir, the city of books and learning. All were treated with the same unsparing severity. The kings were slain, their bodies gibbeted till the evening, and all the souls smitten so that none were left remaining, an utter destruction of all and every one by the edge of the sword.

We must remember that the Israelites were the executioners of Divine justice, commissioned to give effect to the sentence which the foul impurities of Canaan called for. There is a judgment-seat for nations as well as for individuals. Within the limits of the ages as they pass, and on the surface of this earth, that throne is erected and that judgment is proceeding. We get some glimpse of this in the hand that wrote the doom of Belshazzar's kingdom on the walls of the palace which beheld a scene of wanton revelry lit by the light of the Temple's sacred lamps. And the almighty Judge sees to it that his sentences are carried out. He has many agents—the Persian legions to execute his sentence on Babylon, the Vandals on Rome, the Russian Cossacks on Napoleon, as the Israelites on the Amorites, whose iniquity was now full, and threatened to infect the world.

IV.—SUCH DAYS COME STILL TO MEN.

There are days in our lives so extraordinary for the combination of difficult circumstances, human opposition, and Satanic combination, that they stand out in unique terror from the rest of our lives. Looking back on them, we may almost adopt the language of the sacred historian, "there was no day like that before it or after it."

But these days do not come, if we are living in fellowship with God, intent on doing his will, without there coming also his sweet "Fear them not, for I have delivered them into thine hands." Our only anxiety should be that nothing should divert us from his path, or intercept the communication of his grace. Like a wise commander we must keep open the passage back to our base of operations, which is God. Careful about that, we need have no anxious care beside. The greatness of our difficulties is permitted to elicit the greatness of his grace. We may even be glad to enter the storm that we may make fresh discoveries of the all-sufficiency of Jesus, who is never so near as in these days of special trial. He covers our heads in the day of battle. He is our shield and exceeding great reward. Though an host should encamp against us we will not fear; though war should rise against us, in this we will be confident.

Moreover, these days may always be full of the realised presence of God. All through the conflict, Joshua's heart was in perpetual fellowship with the mighty Captain of the Lord's host, who rode beside Him all the day. The blessed colloquy between the two was unbroken, as between a Wellington and a Blucher, a Napoleon and a Marshal Ney. So amid all our conflicts, our hearts and minds should thither ascend and there dwell where Christ is seated, drawing from Him grace upon grace, as we need, like the diver on the ocean-floor who inhales the fresh breeze of the upper air. At these times it is very necessary not merely to ask God to help us, because the word help may mean that there is a great deal of reliance on self, and whatever there is of ourselves is almost certain to give way in the strain of battle. Achilles was mortally wounded in the heel, the one place which did not share in the plunge given him by his goddess mother into the immortal stream. The Divine part of our deliverance will be nullified by the alloy of our own energy, strength, or resolution. Let us substitute for the word help the word keep. Let us put the whole matter into the hands of God, asking Him to go before us, to fight for us, to deliver us, as He did for his people on this eventful day. "The Lord discomfited them before Israel."

In all such days we may have light which cannot be accounted for on any natural hypothesis. Our sun shall not go down, neither shall our moon withdraw itself, because the Lord shall be to us an everlasting light. Or in words spoken long after, which surely contain an allusion to this marvellous day of Gibeon, "It shall be one day which is known unto the Lord, not day and not night, but it shall come to pass that at evening time there shall be light." (Zech. xiv. 6.)

Only let us seek the grace of the Holy Spirit that we may be kept in such an attitude of soul that we may miss nothing of God's gracious and timely help. Trusting it; reckoning on it; appropriating it. Abiding in Him that we may ask with the certainty that God is hearkening unto the voice of man, and that He is fighting for us.

C.I.G.M.—Having received many communications from friends of the Kurku and Central Indian Hill Mission concerning the paragraphs in THE CHRISTIAN of the last few weeks, showing that there has been misunderstanding in reference to the position of the Ceylon and Indian General Mission, the secretaries of the C.I.G.M. desire to state that 10, Drayton Park remains as before the headquarters of the Kurku and Central Indian Hill Mission, and that the two societies are quite distinct.—G. ERNEST JACKSON, H. C. M. PATERSON, 10, Drayton Park N.

THE ANNUAL PRAYER MEETING for Ireland was held at the offices of the Irish Church Missions on January 16. General Haig, who presided, spoke of the remarkable openings for the extension of evangelistic work among Roman Catholics in Ireland; of the great success which had attended open-air preaching and the sale of the Scriptures; and stated that the pressing need of the Society at the present is for young men suitable for the itinerant mission. The clerical secretary having given one or two items of recent news, illustrative of the spirit of inquiry now found among the peasantry in Ireland, and their readiness to listen to Gospel teaching, prayer was offered by many of those present.

THE DISCIPLINE OF FAILURE.

(Concluded.)

THE failure with regard to the second of the two lads who had deserted my class on the ground that his father objected to his son hearing one thing from me in the morning and the opposite from his afternoon teacher, may seem an extreme and rare case; but that it occurs to some degree in many a Sunday-school I fully believe. Here had we—joint teachers of one class—been working for presumably the same end, and yet all the while forgetting one great factor of success We had laboured heedless of the "partnership" between us, not as "yoke fellows"; we had both, I suppose, impressed on the children the need for common as well as for private prayer, and yet we ourselves had forgotten the clause, "If two of you shall agree upon earth," and its accompanying promise.

Speaking generally, is it not true that joint teachers of a class recognise but faintly their responsibility to each other, so that they may work as one, each striving by his especial gift to supplement the other? The lessons would go home with a double force, and there would be a spiritual power none could gainsay, if united supplications, united watchings over the class individually, and an accord on matters of faith and doctrine, were the rule among teachers. In our case the power was lost, because through want of union the one teacher had unconsciously sought to pull down what the other had tried to rear up, and so both efforts ended where they began.

The next two entries in the diary occur a few pages further on, and are separated from each other by a significant blank of six months. The first, over which is scrawled a large "F," reads thus:—"Have given up all parish work as quite below my powers, and a waste of energy. God, I feel, must intend my life to be used for Him in some grand effort of self-sacrifice, It is hopeless to teach a set of clownish Sunday-school lads; and as to a district, it is full of gossips and humdrum old women, who talk of nothing but their ailments. Mean to train as a Deaconess (preferably for Africa, as giving more scope)."

Second entry, six months later:—"Absolute refusal on part of home people (who are unsympathetic) with regard to the Deaconess scheme. Shall wait till I can find some suitable work to do."

Reading the words now, as they stand out black and white on the page before me, I can laugh at the fit of childish petulance that prompted them. Nevertheless, they are the records of one of the very bitter disappointments that come into young lives, and of which grown men and women, with their mature reasonableness, know so little. Verily Victor Hugo was right when he placed beyond the sufferings of men those of women, and, beyond all, those of children.

Oh, the pain and smart of those entries! Even as one reads them years after, a lingering sense of disappointment makes itself felt. And yet out of them grew slowly—very slowly, it is true—the recognition that it is good "in whatsoever estate therewith to be content," and that in religious work, as in any other work, we have no right to pick and choose our path. It is a very favourite way this of trying to work for both God and ourselves at the same time. We delude ourselves into the belief that by some heroic act of charity to others, by some apparently great self-sacrifice on our part, we have killed the self-will within; we talk glibly of self-sacrifice, but its deeper meaning, the sacer facio, the making holy of self, has never dawned upon us.

After all, they are the dull commonplaces of home life, the unromantic "drudgeries" of ordinary parish work that afford the sublimest of moral training. They form the severest disciplines, but that which will bear the roughest strain in the long run. To pay no regard to circumstances, those Divine finger-posts which give every man some inkling of his road, and to wearily chafe against them as hindrances to usefulness—how often by so doing we give the lie to our religion! It is not an uncommon thing to see a gifted energetic Christian worker trifling away much of his influence by his continual struggle to edge out of the sphere in which he finds himself, because to him his talents appear wasted.

Take a man, forced in the face of his inclinations to be the centre of some tiny rural population where intellectually he can meet no fellow as equal, and where he considers himself as thrown away. Place him elsewhere, and he will tell you of the great things possible to him—wide influence, marvellous results; here he is a failure. This spirit of self-will is for ever cropping up and marring our religious work; not always in the same shape, but with the same root idea. It may not appear in the sudden desire to wrench one's life forcibly out of an unacceptable environment regardless of a Divine summons, but how often it lurks in merely a refusal to take up an unattractive duty that presents itself.

An hour or two in a crèche hard by, the management of some school library, the amusement of a few Band of Hope children, or an evening in the slums among some unruly factory girls, all of them occupations admitting of little scope, meaning a certain drudgery—these, and the like, we have often shrunk from as unworthy of our powers. These, things are, as one writer quaintly and beautifully puts it, the washing of our Lord's feet rather than the anointing of his head. In my own case I had forgotten that it was everything to have one's place in the Divine plan, and of absolutely no importance as to the particular niche in that plan that had been assigned to the individual worker. I had forgotten that the sons of Merari, with their humbler services in the Tabernacle, were just as much part of the Divine economy as the more prominent sons of Kohath and Gershom. And I had forgotten, more blessed truth than any, that not infrequently the vision is granted to those chained down by overmastering circumstances, when it is veiled or even denied in the rush and whirl of popularity.

To the beloved disciples forced from active service to the world into the solitudes of Patmos comes the Apocalypse; to St. Peter, shut away in prison from his crowds of listeners, or in the trivialities of life, waiting for his mid-day meal, come spiritual light and teaching; and to the two simple-hearted Christian disciples taking an ordinary country walk late on a certain afternoon, comes the Lord Himself.

AN INTERESTING SPOT IN PARIS.

I WANT to draw the attention of your readers to a truly interesting spot in Paris, where for more than sixty years Christ has been uplifted. The place is hallowed to the memory of many rescued from the power of the evil one. Follow me from the Place de la République on the grand boulevards, through the Faubourg du Temple, up the Rue Fontaine-au-Roi to the end of that street, and you will find yourself in the Rue St. Maur, nearly opposite No. 136. There, at the back of a large courtyard, is a building, divided into two by a vestibule. On one side is a large school-room, on the other a chapel.

The concierge and her family are converts of the Mission. She will show you the place where, since 1830, amidst much opposition, the Gospel has been preached, leading many to trust in Christ as their Saviour. It was here that M. Edmond de Pressensé made his first step in his pastoral career.

Since 1850 the work has been carried on by the Société Evangélique de France, 76, Rue d'Assas, in the most thorough and conscientious way. They have popular meetings to reach any who may be induced to enter the hall. There are catechetic lectures to meet the wants of those whose interest has been awakened. These lectures are always followed by prayer-meetings, where much good is done.

The neighbourhood is not a populous quarter of Paris: the rents are too high; but this interesting work is carried on amongst small tradesmen and clerks. Pastor Cresseil is the agent in charge. Last Christmas two new members were admitted. One was a Catholic lady, a freethinker, who after attending the meetings for two years was led to give her heart to God. The other, a young man, was also a very interesting case. He strove to stand firm amidst the persecution of all his friends. Another woman was saved from utter wretchedness and despair by the visit of the pastor. She found Christ in one of the prayer meetings, and was restored to health. Now she proves her thankfulness for blessings received by an offering of 10 francs, saved penny by penny from her scant earnings.

Is it not true that such and similar facts render the place most interesting to God's children, and make it to shine with a glory not found even amongst the masterpieces of art in the museums of this modern Babylon?

II.

THE BLESSED STUDY.

"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand."—Rev. i. 3.

Surely the god of this world, who hath "blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the Gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them," has mightily obscured the vision also of them which believe, when, in spite of so distinct a blessing promised to the reader, hearer, and keeper of the words of this prophecy, the Revelation of Jesus Christ has been almost an unread and unstudied book to the vast majority of Christians, and that, too, for centuries—the very period when its teachings were so urgently needed.

"The things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children"; but the Church of Christ, the Bride of the Lamb, has put the letter in which her Bridegroom tells her of the events that shall precede, accompany, and follow his return, quietly on a shelf, and said that it was not particularly necessary or useful.

Some of the reasons for this strange conduct have been glanced at, but is there not another? Has not the hand of the great enemy been at work? The Apocalypse reveals his plans and his procedure; it exposes "the depths of Satan," the operations of his servants, and his irremediable defeat and destruction. Well may he seek to prevent its being read. It exhibits the glory of Christ, in his person and offices, and specially as the Crucified One, the Lamb, who died "that through death He might bring to nought him that had the power of death, that is the devil." Is it not likely that "that wicked one" would do all in his power to obscure that glory?

The diligent study of the book would have put the Church upon her guard, would have revealed the snares laid for her feet, and have quickened her faith and hope and zeal. Was there not enough in all this to set the arch-deceiver at work to deter the servants of the Lord from reading and hearing the words of this prophecy? Well, too well, alas! has he succeeded. "While men slept" he has diligently worked out his plans. The guide-book being discarded, the pilgrims have lost their way, and fallen an easy prey to the strong delusions of their subtle enemy.

Yet still it remains written, "Blessed is he that readeth—they that hear—they that keep." It is not too late for us, whose lot is cast in these last days, to win the prize thus held out. And with that object before us we will ask:

What is the peculiar blessing promised to the readers, hearers, and keepers of the things written in the Apocalypse? How and why are they blessed?

I. Such are blessed because, from the study of the book, and the discernment of the fulfilment of its predictions, they obtain an irrefragable evidence of the Deity of its Author. And it is well in these days of abounding scepticism, agnosticism, materialism, or whatever other form unbelief may take, to notice the overwhelming proof of the existence and omniscience of Jehovah that is offered by the fulfilment of prophecy.

The frequency with which He appeals to this evidence is very remarkable:—

> "Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods." "Let them show us what shall happen, that we may know the latter end of them—declare us things for to come."
> "I am the Lord, new things do I declare, before they spring forth I tell you of them."
>
> "Who can declare this, and show us former things." "Let them bring forth their witnesses that they may be justified, and say, It is truth."
>
> "Who, as I, shall declare, and set in order, the things that are coming?" "Have not I told thee for that time, and have declared it? Ye are even my witnesses. Is there a God beside Me? There is no God. I know not any."
> "Who hath declared this from ancient time? Have not I, the Lord? There is no God else beside Me."
> "I am God, and there is none like Me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all My pleasure."
> "I have declared the former things from the beginning; and they went forth out of My mouth, and I showed them; I did them suddenly and they came to pass." "I am the First, I also am the Last."

Such are some of the instances of the way in which the living God condescended to reason with his people of old, and to urge his claim to be recognised as the Eternal, the Omniscient, the glorious Jehovah, on the ground that none but He had foretold the future, and that with no other predictions had that future, as it came to pass, accurately corresponded.

And in a precisely similar manner does the Lord Jesus employ the same argument.

"Now I tell you before it come to pass (his betrayal by Judas), that when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am He."

"And now I have told you before it come to pass (his departure and the advent of the Holy Ghost), that when it is come to pass, ye might believe."

"These things have I told you (the coming persecutions), that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them."

If, then, God has been pleased to afford his servants such "infallible proofs" of his eternal power and Deity, surely they will be blessed who rightly avail themselves of them. To the candid mind that can rightly appreciate the value and bearing of evidence, the exact correspondence of the facts of history—many of them most improbable—with the prophecies that foretold them many centuries before, cannot fail to carry a conviction that nothing can ever shake. The miracles and resurrection of Christ, the prophecies of Scripture, and the spiritual experience of the renewed soul, form indeed "a threefold cord," which "is not quickly," nay, can never be "broken." And of such prophecies the Revelation of Jesus Christ is the most marvellous. Accompanying, moreover, the assurance which the fulfilment of prophecy affords of the existence, power, and foreknowledge of the Most High, is the incontrovertible evidence which is thereby furnished of the inspiration of the Scriptures. In days like these, when this truth is assailed from every side, the argument is of incalculable value. The case for Divine inspiration might indeed, well rest on that alone; and the conviction thereof in the believer's mind is thereby wonderfully intensified. Its reader, hearer, and keeper will certainly be blessed in this way.

II. Such are blessed, because in the Apocalypse they are furnished with a Divinely constructed chart of the Church's passage through the world.

That passage was to be very long and very perilous. Long indeed. Two millenniums have nearly run out since it commenced. Dark, fearfully dark, ages have passed, and all along the centuries of weary waiting—of sustained testimony—and often of terrible suffering, the cry has risen to heaven from the pilgrims on earth, "How long, O Lord, holy and true?" And we know how, when these sufferings were the fiercest, the saints of God turned in their extremity to the landmarks set up for their enlightenment and encouragement, and were cheered as they discerned the place in the journey which they had reached, and gathered the special warnings and promises there laid up for them.

And perilous indeed. Every artifice of hell—open enmity or professed friendship—every snare that could be devised by the world that lay "in the wicked one," would be employed to lure the travellers to the city that God had prepared for them, on to the hidden rocks that crowded the channel, or the quicksands where so many had made shipwreck. No unaided human intelligence could possibly discern these perils. But the Master's eye distinguished them afar off. The Master's hand drew the chart, marked the soundings, and buoyed the channel. His loving forethought erected the lighthouse at every dangerous point; and He Himself promised to vouchsafe the needed light when He said, concerning the "other Comforter," "He will guide you—He will show you things to come."

If to be forewarned is to be forearmed, surely the servants of Christ were here provided with armour of proof against the wiles of the devil; here were they furnished with so accurate a description of every kind of danger that could possibly overtake them, that only carelessness or self-confidence could deprive them of the safeguards so graciously provided. And they who availed themselves thereof received the promised blessing. Mistakes of interpretation may indeed have been made, errors in calculating longitude or latitude may have been committed; but while they who presumptuously consulted not the chart were beguiled into every error, the watchful believer who was constantly taking heed to "the more sure word of prophecy," "as unto a light that shineth in a dark place," was thereby preserved from the strong delusions of the wicked one, and the deceivableness of unrighteousness. And in these days also will the reader, hearer, and keeper be likewise blessed.

III. Lastly, such are blessed, because they are lifted above their own little surroundings into the great sphere of the ways of God.

And this is indeed a great blessing. We are prone to imagine, or to live as if we imagined, that we individually are the centre round which all revolves, as men once thought that the earth was the centre of the solar system, if not of the whole universe. Our own trials, duties, burdens, cares, sufferings, and responsibilities, fill the range of our vision, and we forget how immeasurably small are all our concerns when compared with the vast plans, and purposes, and proceedings, of the great and glorious God. The stately march of his providence, the mysterious balancings of the clouds, the wonderful works of "Him that is perfect in knowledge," his dealings with the nations and with the churches, his ordering of the angelic hosts, his control over diabolical activities, are unconsidered, while we are absorbed with the comparative trifles of our own immediate circles. We act as if our place in the battlefield were the only one of particular importance, and forget the greatness of the age-long conflict between heaven and hell, the immensity of the issues of the wondrous drama of time—of which redemption is the centre and the key.

And so we belittle ourselves—we lose touch of the great realities of eternity—we get out of sympathy with the purposes of our Father which is in heaven—we become self-centred, and fail to attain that expansion of heart and mind which a contemplation and understanding of the ways of God—so far as they are revealed to us—are meant to produce.

It is, therefore, an unspeakable blessing to be led away from the Christian selfishness, if we may so call it, which leads every man to "look on his own things," and to forget the wider circle of those things which "angels desire to look into."

If the poet's words be true, as I believe they are—

> For I doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs,
> And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns, not less true must it be that the spiritual intelligence and harmony of fellowship of the believer with his God are extended and increased, as he mounts to the very standpoint of the Most High, and thence views the wondrous developments of his glorious purposes.

Nor assuredly will our circumstances, our conflicts, our cares, be less objects of interest to Him, who appoints all things, even the smallest, for us, when He sees us entering with childlike love and admiration into his own works and ways. We shall not lose the blessing of his tender care and deepest sympathy, while we shall gain the great and additional blessing here promised to the hearer, the reader, the keeper of "the words of this prophecy." God grant that we may thus obtain it.

COSTERS' HALL, HOXTON, the headquarters of the Golden Lane Costers' Mission, presented a festive appearance on Wednesday evening, January 18, when 600 children were entertained at a Robin dinner. The feast consisted of meat pies, plum pudding, oranges, and milk. An entertainment followed. These Robin dinners, originated fifteen years ago by Rev. Charles Bullock, have now become almost a national institution.

POSTMEN AND TELEGRAPHISTS.—The fourth annual meeting of the West Post-office Institute, at 25, Chapel-street, Edgware-road, was held on Tuesday, Jan. 17, Rev. G. S. Karney presiding. The work of the institute consists of Bible-classes for sorters and postmen, conducted by Miss M. D. Atthill; classes for telegraph messengers, conducted by Miss E. Karney; a tract band; evening school for telegraph messengers; gymnasium; cricket club, etc. A Post-office Home is also provided by a lady friend at no expense to the institute.

Bound or Free?

By Rev. J. P. Gledstone.

I.—PETER WHEN YOUNG.

"Verily, verily, I say unto thee, when thou wast young thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest; but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not." So our Lord described the early days of the Apostle Peter and the coming day of his death. The contrast between them is very striking. The days of his youth, when the Apostle walked whither he would, seemed to be the days of his liberty; and his old age, when men did with him as they would, seemed to be the days of his bondage. But the reverse was the truth; he began in bondage and ended in freedom. It is the same with most men; in a modified sense, with all. The borders of liberty are enlarged as submission and captivity to the Saviour are increased; when the man of action learns to become the man of quiet suffering, and the man of self-will to become the man of self-surrender. The larger the room for self, the smaller is the real room for the soul to move in, whereas the more room we leave for our Lord and Saviour, the ampler is the room He makes for us; for He opens the door into his own infinitude.

The young man, Peter the fisherman, was free yet bound; the old man, the martyr, was bound yet free. Neither men nor things are what they seem to be; appearances have to be looked through, not looked at. If there be such a thing as freedom, surely it is to go where you will, to do as you like, to think as you please, to strike down opponents, to boast that you have no weakness, and will never betray a friend. There is something very fine to the bounding life of youth, to the untried soul panting for effort and distinction, to think that nothing is impossible to it. How it scorns the prudence, the carefulness, and the timidity of age! How profoundly ignorant it is, as yet, of the limitations by which it is sternly and securely shut in! A boy, a youth, will go anywhere, and do anything, caring nothing for weather, for exposure, for exertion. It never comes into his mind that he may tire, or sicken, or fail, or die. He gives out of his resources as prodigally as if he had an exhaustless storehouse to draw upon. Admirable and glorious does all this appear in his own eyes and in the eyes of others who are as ignorant and self-sufficient as himself, who, as yet, measure all things by a material and temporal standard. Their physical nature is in the ascendant; the young men are "rejoicing in their strength."

On the hillsides of Galilee, and on the waters of its deep and perilous lake, Peter, as a young man, had spent days and nights in the delightsome exertion of his powers. He had sailed, or rowed, or climbed the hills, or wandered from village to village on the coast just as he would. He was a country athlete, as most young country fellows are. Though fish had to be caught, and some attention paid to weather, yet his life had been fettered by few restrictions, and certainly by none of those highly unnatural bonds which fret and chafe the souls of so many young men who are chained by our modern civilisation. "Thou walkedst whither thou wouldest." He had liberty, and he took it. It was a life of animal enjoyment; not sensual, but sensuous; not degraded and degrading, but spent in the passing hour and on the passing object.

Should we be justified in saying that intellectually the apostle, when he was a young man, walked whither he would? Hardly, perhaps. For he does not appear to have had a restless, inquisitive, irrepressible mind, searching into all manner of mysteries. Very likely his mind was free from the cramping pedantries and petty conceits of the teachers of his day. One of the blessings of ignorance is that the mind, retaining something of its original simplicity and openness to conviction, does not get warped by the false notions and intellectual self-sufficiency of the rabbis. Doubtless the young fisherman was an honest, but not bigoted, Jew; entertained a fair share of the mistakes of his countrymen; and was nothing above the average man of his day and his nation. That he maintained, as men in his station commonly do, candour and readiness to hear, both of them excellent conditions for the reception of God and his truth, is proved by the ardour with which he became one of the earliest disciples of our Lord.

How true it is of youth generally, that where there is some intellectual strength there is also intellectual impatience, intellectual self-assertion, even intellectual irreverence. They would walk any whither! They can see no reason why any province of knowledge should be shut off from their inquiries and researches. The universe ought to contain no mysteries. Sometimes they can see no reason why their little theories should not be accepted as an explanation of all phenomena. They are sure they are right, whoever else may be wrong.

The right of man to think for himself, even upon the profoundest and most sacred questions (and the more sacred the questions the more is he bound to think), is in danger of being abused, and made a right to attack and to destroy without sufficient thought. Too little, not too much, thought is the fault as a rule. Where liberty is taken it is generally by men who have not gone far enough in their researches and reasonings. They have gone far enough to get into difficulty, but not far enough to get out of it.

But it is not intellectual freedom for a man to mistake the waywardness of his own nature for fair inquiry and rational conclusions. If he does not recognise facts, and take them all into consideration, he is in bondage to fancies of his own devising, and is not an intelligent believer in such views as have grown up in his mind by the action upon it of truth and fact. Intellectual and moral freedom is too often regarded as a breaking off from accepted doctrine or from old ecclesiastical communions, whereas such freedom is only a sure evidence of bondage to crude forms of thought. Not the hint of an objection is here implied against proper inquiry, inquiry by right methods and in a right spirit; nor against growth of thought in matters religious. It is only pointed out that the assertion of our own powers, especially in the days of our youth, against our Saviour, is not real but sham liberty.

One cannot treat of such a subject as that of unreal liberty without remembering how Peter had asserted and maintained his freedom and power in things moral and religious. His was essentially a nature which was impatient of restraint, and loved to have its own way. "Thou walkedst whither thou wouldest." What meaning is seen to be in those words when we remember the bold command of Peter to Jesus not to think of dying at Jerusalem, as if he had said in words, as he did say in substance, "I, Peter, do not wish it, and will not have it." Things were to be as he would. His solemn, and no doubt sincere, asseveration that though all should deny Christ he never would, is another example of the putting forward of his own free will. Had he not made up his mind, or rather, had he not jumped to his conclusion? Had he not said he would be the one faithful apostle, and who should question his sincerity and sufficiency? Without asking leave of his Master, he smote off the ear of Malchus; why should he not? Was he not justifying his boasted attachment to his Lord? Why should he not do as he would? Was this a time for a disciple and friend to hold back and hesitate?

Up to this point we know how unabated and undoubting was his confidence in himself; beyond—how different!

His was simply the natural self-confidence of every man; some have more, some less: the spirit of self, which thinks it can do anything, and do it without God. It is the spirit of independence and unbelief. It was the cause of man's first sin, and has been and is the fruitful source of all sin. Until it is supplanted by the spirit of love and faith, it will continue to cause falls and disasters; and he who is unwilling to cast it out by giving heed to the Spirit of Christ within, will have to learn by humiliating experience that our liberty to go where we will and to do what we like is only bondage. His attempts to be what he cannot be of himself will surely bring shame and defeat upon him. His resources will be exhausted, his heart broken, and his spirit tamed. The discipline of life is always the experience through which we force ourselves. Self-knowledge grows as self opens to our own view under the light of daily trial and the teaching of the Spirit of God. He who will not learn wisdom by the quiet, gentle teaching of the Holy Ghost, has to learn it by the shocks and disappointments and falls of his daily life. "Fools, because of their transgression, and because of their iniquities, are afflicted. Their soul abhorreth all manner of meat; and they draw near unto the gates of death. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and He saveth them out of their distresses. He sends his Word, and heals them, and delivers them from their destructions."

One cannot but wish that young men would be willing to take the right way without first of all having to eat of the fruit of their own way; that they would accept a real freedom instead of wasting themselves in vain efforts, supposed to be free and manly, but destitute of the inspiration of love and the spirit of sonship. The conflict which ensues in their will is tremendous, their inner contentions furious, the Babel of voices calling to them wild and distracting. And yet the motion of this young world is not all useless even from a Christian standpoint. There is education in it. The young are finding out that it is not the best thing in the world to do as they like, that it is better to be subject in all things to Christ.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS INCARNATION.

Not long ago you joined in the celebration of the birth of Jesus, and very properly it was an occasion of great rejoicing. You were reminded that, among other names, He was also called Emmanuel, God with us; but have you ever sought to realise what such words mean? Try to do so now.

Repeat to your own heart a message like this:—He who died for me and thus bore the penalty of my sin was truly God. He did not begin to exist when He was born in Bethlehem. In the plainest possible language He declared that He was with the Father from the foundation of the world (Jno. vi. 62; xvii. 5). Though He assumed such a lowly form, He was worthy to receive the worship of angels (Luke ii. 13, 14; Heb. i. 6). Yet He was also truly Man. He grew up from childhood to manhood, passing through every kind of human experience, sin alone excepted. Think of this; for such facts as these do not take hold of us unless we give them time.

Can you not at once see how this meets your need? If He were God alone you might fear to approach Him; if He were man alone you might hesitate to trust Him. It was man who had sinned, therefore it was by man that the penalty of sin must be borne. For this reason God became man in order to save us. Do you remember the dream of Jacob (Gen. xxviii.)? Jesus is the antitype of that wondrous ladder—the foot of it rests on earth, comes down to your level, and the top of it reaches into heaven. God and man are connected in Jesus. He is the Daysman whom Job desired, and who can lay his hand upon both God and man (Job ix. 33).

Concerning the incarnation let us remember three things:—(1) It alone does not save us. The incarnation, without the death and the resurrection, would leave us still dead in sin. The New Testament never speaks of men as saved because God became man, but always because He who was God and man died for our sins and rose again (Jno. xii. 24; 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4). The body that was prepared for Him was in order to his one perfect offering (see Heb. x. 5, 10), by which judgment passed upon sin.

(2) Next, remember that Jesus is a manifestation of God. Look up a few texts in proof of this: here are some (Jno. i. 18; xiv. 9; Heb. i. 3). He reveals God not in some, but in all the parts of his life. Not only when He performed miracles, but also when He sighed, and wept, and groaned (Jno. xi. 35, 38). Jesus reveals not only God's power, but his tenderness, his sympathy, his love. How different God is from what we have imagined! Satan slandered God at the first by representing Him as hard (Gen. iii. 3), and he still makes us think unkindly of Him. To know God, truly study the life and character of Jesus. God speaks to us in human tones, and expresses Himself in human feelings in his Son. Does not such a revelation deepen our adoration of Him, and quicken our affection to Him? Worship and love Him who is "God manifest in the flesh."

(3) Remember also that Jesus is still a man. Though He is on the throne, He retains his manhood. Have you at all understood that a man is now in heaven as your High Priest? When He hears of your temptations, He knows what they mean, for He "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Heb. iv. 15). You can never be in circumstances of difficulty which He cannot understand. Make full use of Him. Count as confidently upon his sympathy as a child counts upon the sympathy of a mother, and remember that in Him human tenderness is combined with Divine power.

For the Young.

CHILDREN'S FÊTE IN PARIS.

On Monday evening, January 2, I started from the Arc de Triomphe for a distant and not very inviting part of Paris to attend the Children's Fête at the Salle McAll, in the Faubourg Saint Antoine. It was a bitterly cold night, and it took a long hour by 'bus and train to reach my destination. Arrived there, nothing could have been less fête-like than the dark unlit entrance and still darker passage which led to the Salle, and I began to fear I had mistaken the place when I noticed a faint ray of light in the distance. On reaching it I pushed open a door, and suddenly found myself in a bright and crowded hall. A very resplendent object right opposite and at the extreme end lured me still onwards, and I was fortunate enough to secure a seat close to it whence I could survey the whole scene.

And a truly pretty and pleasing one it was; not that a McAll hall is exactly in itself a "thing of beauty," although this particular one had, for the occasion, been adorned by festoons of evergreens. Besides which, was not that majestic Christmas tree, whose top touched the ceiling, and which glowed and sparkled towards every corner, enough in itself to attract? But what made it most beautiful in my eyes was the bright young humanity that filled the benches. There were 300 boys and girls present, the boys on one side, the girls on the other, and a more orderly, better-behaved set of children could not have been found anywhere. There was also a goodly company of young men and maidens, moniteurs and monitrices, trained by Mr. Greig, and now his active helpers. It is a sight very much appreciated by the parents and friends who look on. Soon there was not even standing room left, which, I fancy, must have been the reason of the outer darkness, lest the general public should have tried to enter.

The magician of the fête was Mr. Greig, and one wave of his wand produced instant and perfect silence when the proceedings began, and continued with a spirit that left nothing to be desired. There were recitations by the girls and by the boys separately, given so distinctly, in complete unison and with a sort of rhythm that was both pleasant and impressive. There were hymns, accompanied by Mrs. Greig on the harmonium, and by two of the young men on violins; but specially beautiful was the part-singing by those young men and maidens, which was done with much taste. Indeed, it would have been worth going if only to hear the recitations and singing.

One or two pasteurs spoke to the children, notably M. Edouard Sautter, who has the gift of making his stories live and move before them, the while he is instilling some useful lesson to be long remembered by them.

All this time the tree has been delighting the assembly by its steady glow, but a Christmas tree is expected to do something more than glow, it must produce gifts somehow, and now we have reached what was perhaps to the children the most interesting part of the evening—the distribution of the presents, which seemed a labour of love to Mrs. Greig, who was called upon to perform it. The long tableful soon disappeared under her hand, but I shall only mention two or three special ones. A young girl got one for rendering great help to Mr. Greig in the Thursday School, when his regular helpers are engaged in their weekday occupations. Another was rewarded for not missing an attendance, while the third was very touching, it was for "their own orphan." It appears that these children, themselves very poor, subscribe their pence to support an orphan (whether connected with themselves I did not learn) at the Deaconesses Orphanage. That awoke many thoughts.

I came away much delighted by all I saw, and even more by all I foresaw. What possibilities lie among those children, and what a moral force is preparing in the McAll schools for the salvation and elevation of France. Will not English children think of the condition of French children, their nearest neighbours. And will they not plan and form circles amongst themselves, and do what they can to help this work. If any apply to the secretary of the McAll English Auxiliary, 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross, for my address, and write to me (or a post card, if you like), I shall be most happy to show how to begin.

A. L. O. F.

THREE THINGS ALL SHOULD DO.

A little boy who had been very regular in his attendance at the Sabbath school, and had for some time given evidence by his life of real conversion to God, was laid aside by sickness. Generally, before going to the class, his teacher visited him, and on one occasion, before leaving, asked, "Have you any message you would like me to take to the class?" The little fellow replied, "Yes, teacher; will you please tell them how anxious I am they should do three things?" On the teacher inquiring what they were, he replied, "First, come to Jesus; next, love Jesus; then, follow Jesus."

No doubt some, and we hope very many, of the young people who read this page have already

COME TO JESUS

—taught by the Holy Spirit of God that though young in years they had sinned, and as sinners were lost, condemned, and liable to eternal death. But God did not leave them in that condition. They were also taught by the same Holy Spirit that "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners" (1 Tim. i. 15); that on the Cross of Calvary He died to make an atonement for sin; and now "Whosoever believeth on Him hath eternal life," is saved. Reading, hearing, believing this, they, by faith, came to Jesus, and, though before weary and worn and sad,

Each found in Him a resting-place,
And He has made them glad.

Are you one of the number? Stop here a moment and think. If not, will you not come to Him at once? You little know the happiness you are losing, or the terrible risks you run, by staying away. There can be no pardon, no peace, no rest, no joy or pleasure even, that is worth possessing without coming to Christ. Then you will be sure to

LOVE JESUS.

After a service for children one Sunday afternoon, a little girl with a bright, beaming face was asked, "Do you love Jesus?" Without a moment's hesitation, she replied, "Oh, yes! I love Him very much." "Why do you love Him?" inquired the friend." Because, she replied, "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." Perhaps all of you could not speak out boldly and clear as that little girl did, but having come to Jesus, it is your privilege and should be your delight to tell others of Him.

FOLLOW JESUS.

To follow Jesus is to obey Him, to imitate Him. Are you doing this? "My sheep," said Christ, "hear my voice, and I know them and they follow Me" (John x. 27).

An aged minister used to say, "Christ's sheep are double-marked—in their ears and in their feet, for they hear his voice and they follow Him." Are you known by these marks? You should be so known. Having come to Jesus, loving Jesus, seek help from God that you may day by day follow Jesus, not afar off, but keeping close to Him. Then as you grow in stature you will grow in grace, grow in the knowledge of Christ, and grow more and more like Christ. So shall you have a life of unspeakable blessedness and happiness here, and hereafter dwell with Christ for ever.

CHILDREN'S CHURCH, BROMLEY PARK.

A Young People's Mission was conducted by Mr. T. Lewes Sayer (of the Children's Special Service Mission) from January 8th to 17th inclusive. This mission was a time of blessing, which many young people in this place will look back upon with thankfulness to God. About 150 received memorial cards. Mr. Sayer engaged the attention of the young people in a remarkable manner from the commencement, and maintained it throughout.

Altogether, the mission has been a matter for real praise, and much fruit that will remain is confidently expected as the outcome of it.

A TENT MISSION IN ALGERIA.

Short accounts of a new work—a tent mission among the French colonists in North Africa—have already been published in your columns. We have just returned from our second missionary tour. This time we went into the province of Constantine, where we spent six weeks in useful and busy work. We should have remained longer but for the rain and the cold, which prevented our putting up the tent. Even in the largest places there is no hall for meetings; the tent is, therefore, quite necessary.

It is oval, and can seat one hundred and fifty people, and looks quite attractive. It creates a great sensation amongst the people, and occasions the most amusing conversations. "It is a balloon," says one. "No," replies another, "it is a tent for acrobats or boxers." We are surrounded by French, Italians, Germans, and Arabs, to whom we speak each in their own tongue. Mrs. Boul, Mr. Pope, and I speak together in English. "They speak all languages," remark the people with astonishment. Their esteem for us is evidently rising. Meanwhile the tent is put up. The curiosity of the people increases. "What is that for?" they ask. "For evangelistic meetings," we say. "I never saw such a church before," says a Maltese, laughing.

"Do you belong to the Salvation Army?" "No," we say. But the people are so little accustomed to see religious demonstrations outside of the Church, that they do not believe us, and go through the town saying that the Salvation Army has come. I explain to the people that what we do we do independently, with no other aim than to speak plainly, familiarly, and clearly of the Gospel, by means of which only a man can be saved from sin and its condemnation.

"Is it so?" they ask. "Nobody has sent you, nobody pays you?" "No." "But who pays your expenses? You must have some advantage in doing this." "None at all; we do it because we love you, and we pay our expenses ourselves." "Very well," says one, putting a small sum into Mr. Pope's hand, "this is to help on such a good work."

We often began the meeting before the hour announced. Sailors, fishermen, workpeople of all sorts, journalists, professors, officers, and lawyers came, and sometimes expressed their sympathy with us. Some advised us to hire a hall and to preach for some weeks, so giving the opportunity for those who wished to adhere to our faith; others thought it would be well to charge an entrance to the tent, so as to keep out the rougher elements. In the afternoons we had private talks with Jews and Arabs, and many scriptures were sold and tracts distributed.

We cannot say what the result of the work may be, but the Word has been preached, not without blessing. Of course the work is not always easy. Difficulties we had anticipated were not so great as we had feared; others were more so. In one place we had some trouble in obtaining permission to put up our tent; in another place we were allowed to put it up in the public gardens. Here, everybody tries to enter, although the tent is already crowded; there, for fear of being seen, few care to enter—there are scarcely fifty people inside, whereas two hundred are standing outside. Some say that we preach a new religion, others that what we preach is preached in their churches. We have often to deal with sceptics, materialists, and freethinkers, as well as to seek to pour balm into the broken hearts.

It is not easy for those in England to realise the spiritual dearth of our colonists. There are missionaries for Jews, Arabs, Kabyles, Italians, Spaniards, but none for the French. I want four helpers for our next campaign, men of courage and heart, of independent means and good workers, speaking French. Is there anyone among the readers of The Christian who will come to our help, were it but for a few weeks? I trust my appeal will not be in vain. I shall be glad to give further details to any who will write to me.

HOME MISSIONS.—The late Prof. Austin Phelps used to say that if he were anxious for the conversion of China he would begin with praying for home missions in America. For similar reasons one concerned about our great cities will naturally find his heart being stirred within him over the character and moral conditions of the villages and country places.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 29.—2 SAMUEL XVIII.

"WORTH ten thousand of us." This is what we may say to the Lord Jesus Christ, and because of his infinite worth we may rest, blessedly sure of our acceptance with God. And in the tenderness with which David yearned over his erring child we catch a glimpse of God's pitiful love towards us when we go astray. We may have been thoughtless and rebellious, have defied his authority, and refused to give him his rightful place and honour, and yet even though that be the case, He gives charge concerning us, and arranges that we should be spared as far as possible from the working out of the disastrous consequences of our misdeeds. Even Divine love cannot and may not prevent all the natural consequences, though when we repent and turn to Him, He graciously transforms the curse into blessings, and derives glory to Himself, and blessing to men from what had seemed to be unmitigated evil.

Those who are called to high office in the kingdom of God are often summoned to subordinate themselves to their work, their love and affection to the interests which are committed to them, and not to love man less but God more.

MONDAY, JANUARY 30.—2 SAMUEL XIX.

How much it cost David to spare his rebellious son! And in the light of his grief we may understand something of the cost to God, when "He spared not his own Son, but gave Him up for us all." And we may also hear the sob of his heart as He grieves over our sins. The father of the Prodigal Son must have filled his house with words like these, as the empty chambers told of the boy that was lost. Man rather grieves for his personal loss, God grieves for the havoc which is being wrought by our sins on us and others. There are times when our public service demands that we should conceal anguish which is eating out our hearts, as David did when acting upon Joab's advice he sat in the gate. There is no grief like that which we suffer alone, and the very signs of which we must needs repress, and in David's case, there was the constant thought of that one passionate sin which had been the seed of so terrible a harvest.

How seldom the people of God speak about bringing back the King! How slow men are in hastening His return! Ah, when shall the hearts of all be bowed as the heart of one for the return of King Jesus! Then shall all his enemies be ashamed; the Shimeis, the Zibas, and Abishais will be silenced; the Mephibosheths will be understood, and their wrongs righted; the Barzillais shall shine forth as the sun, and shall go in with their children to his palace. Oh! happy day for which the worlds are waiting when the Lord shall come to his own, and resume the kingdom too long wrested from Him by the usurper.

TUESDAY JANUARY 31.—2 SAMUEL XX.

Beware of jealousy. Joab's proud spirit could not brook the thought that Amasa should divide with him the military command. And as he had slain Abner, so now his new rival. And he did it under covert of friendship. We turn from these stories of barbarous cruelty to consider the evil of our own hearts, for we know that but for the grace of God they would have yielded crops of equal crime.

Let us claim that entire deliverance which is offered to us in Jesus. It is not enough to ask Him to help us to overcome, for the phrase indicates that we should do something, and our part is sure to fail. But let us ask that He should meet the temptation and deal with it for us, that his Holy Spirit should be the antiseptic to our corruption, and that He should so pour his holy love into our hearts that jealousy and hatred may find no foothold.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1.—2 SAMUEL XXI.

"He will ever be mindful of his covenant." The Gibeonites had been spared in spite of their deceit to Joshua, because the princes had sworn to them, God could not, therefore, be silent when Saul broke the covenant. The requital demanded by the Gibeonites was terrible, but in keeping with the manners of the time. But out of all those scenes of blood and cruelty shines out the love of motherhood, which has been, and is, and shall be. Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, kept watch through day and night when the weather in Palestine is comparatively broken, but she knew no hardship, her love counted not the cost, and her love became contagious, and awoke up in David a desire to treat with similar honour the remains of Saul and Jonathan. Fire spreads itself without impoverishment, and love ignites and stirs love in others. Before now a voice raised in prayerful and passionate attachment to Jesus has made volcanic fire leap out where it had seemed extinct. Do not stint a child of God the alabaster boxes, for though they drive a Judas to desperation, they will lead a Peter or a David to take up the long-forgotten duty.

Monstrous sin stalked the earth in the persons of these giants. They beset the old age of David, as they had the youth. For though we may not be assailed by identical temptations as at first, there never will be a time when the progeny of sin will not molest us, if not passion, then jealousy, or pride, or avarice.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2.—2 SAMUEL XXII.

Nine my's in two verses. It is thus that the heart sings to God in the day when it is delivered. And in R.V. the words even mine accentuate the glad sense of possession. Ah! the many-sidedness of Christ! The soul can only pile one expression on another, and feel them all inadequate. In this sublime psalm, there is, first, an enumeration of the depths into which the child of God may sink, and from out of which prayer may rise. There is no distress so deep, no floods so high, but that our cry may enter into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth.

Don't be afraid of the storm, the dark clouds are his stepping-stone (11), nor of the thick darkness, it is the curtain of his pavilion; nor of the thundering, for it is his voice; nor of the stormy wind, it is the blast of his breath. He will be your stay, He will deliver, He will reward according to the righteousness of Him in whom you stand.

Be perfect, that is, whole-hearted towards Him; and He will be whole-hearted in his love and care. His way is perfect (31), and He will guide your way in perfectness (33 R.V.). What cannot we do when we are right with God? He is a lamp, He gives power to run and leap, He is a shield, and a rock. And He is all this so gently that we are insensibly led forward to greatness, a talent to be used for his own use. And from our hiding-place in Him we look fearlessly out upon our enemies, accepting his great deliverance, exalting his holy name, and resting in his loving kindness.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3.—2 SAMUEL XXIII.

Let us place our lips at God's disposal that He may speak by them, and that his words may be on our tongues. How sweet and pleasant then will be our speech. Jesus breaks on the soul like morning light, so gently that sometimes we hardly know that He has come to us, but those first days of manifest love are like a cloudless dawn, when the myriad dew-besprinkled spires of grass reflect the glad morning beams. After rain comes clear shining, and, by the union of the two agencies, the very desert is covered with a delicate veil of green. So sorrow and sunshine are needed in every heart.

When our heart is breaking with domestic or public anxiety, and like Jesus we have nowhere to lay our head, it is delightful to look away to the covenant ordered in all things and sure. Our hope based upon the everlasting covenant cannot be disappointed, and though sometimes it seems as if the development of God's purpose is stationary, "He makes it not to grow," yet his purposes are ripening; beneath the scaffolding, the building is rising; in the bud, the blossom and fruit are getting ready. Ungodly men always gather around the lot of the righteous, but Jesus with the hand that was pierced shall thrust them away.

David's longing for the water of Bethlehem is like the yearning of the grown man for home, and of the backslider for his early peace, but thank God, in the latter case, to wish is to have, for our Mighty Man has broken through the Philistines, and has won for us the wells of everlasting life.

Ought we not to refuse to touch wine or strong drink which has cost, and is costing, the lives of such myriads? God forbid that we should do this, lest we drink the blood of men.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4—2 SAMUEL XXIV.

It was a gross mistake to number the people, apart from the direct instructions of God. In the Chronicles it is attributed to the suggestion of Satan. What God permits is often stated as equivalent to what He appoints. Pride loves to enumerate its resources, and to boast of them. We have nothing that we have not received. The numbers that we love and influence are only a sacred trust, of which we must give an account. Any other thought than this is abhorrent to God and injurious to ourselves.

God puts away our iniquity, but as we have seen elsewhere, so here, we must bear the natural penalties of wrong doing. Though here, as elsewhere, we find that the issue of this is, in the case of the penitent soul, overruled for the glory of God. Out of this pestilence, there came the altar and the threshing floor of Araunah, which led to the purchase of the land on which the Temple afterwards stood, so may God make our mistakes and failures the site of his temple.

Let us not fear to fall into the hands of God, for his mercies are great. He will not suffer us to be tempted beyond that we are able. He will bid his angels sheath their swords, saying, "It is enough, now stay thine hand." At the threshing-floor He will cease threshing.

There is a beautiful touch of self-abnegation on the part of David, in which he was prepared to sacrifice himself if his people might be spared. A spark from the heart of the Lover and Redeemer of our souls.

FEBRUARY 5.

DEDICATING THE TEMPLE, Ezra vi. 14—22.

GOLDEN TEXT, Psa. cxxii. 2.

THE foundations of the temple were laid in the year B.C. 536 (iii. 8, 10), soon after the first company of exiles from Babylon had reached Jerusalem. The work was then stopped for over fifteen years. The stirring messages of Haggai and Zechariah (v. 1; vi. 14) did much to lead the people to resume the work. The judgments of God in consequence of the neglect of this work (Hag. i. 3—11) gave power to their messages.

While these two prophesied, new difficulties threatened. Tatnai, governor of Syria, one of the twenty provinces into which the Persian Empire was divided (v. 3), interfered with the work, but without success. The statement (v. 5), "the eye of their God was upon them," explains the significance and value of Zech. iv. 10. The appeal of Tatnai to Darius had exactly the opposite effect to that which he desired (vi. 1—12). The decree of Cyrus (i. 1) was confirmed, and the Governor himself was ordered to give all help needed to hasten the completion of the work (see Prov. xxi. 1).

In B.C. 520 the work was resumed. Besides Cyrus, who gave the decree, and Darius, who confirmed it, mention is made of Artaxerxes, though his help was not given until about sixty years later (chap. vii.). As the record was made by Ezra, it is natural that the king who so helped him should be included with those who had aided the work at the first. How true it is that God has servants everywhere, and can accomplish his purposes by whomsoever He will.

The house was completed B.C. 515, in the month Adar (15), corresponding to our February and March, and about four years after the work was recommenced. The old men who had wept when the foundations were laid were probably now dead, and all who beheld the new temple shared in the rejoicing. If in some respects the building was inferior to that of Solomon; if the Shekinah was absent from the Most Holy Place, and the ark and the tables of testimony were gone, yet the promise that this house should have greater glory than the former (Hag. ii. 9) warranted the most exuberant joy. The old men had looked back with regret; all who remained looked forward with hope.

THE DEDICATION (16-18).—Their joy found expression in two ways:—(1) In their dedication offerings (17). These were vastly inferior to those offered at the dedication of Solomon's temple (1 Kings viii. 62, 63). But the people were fewer in number. They gave according to their ability, and their offering was just as acceptable to God (2 Cor. viii. 12). The joy of the Lord expresses itself in devoted gifts to Him (Acts xx. 35). Selfishness is as far as possible from Christian joy. The people brought a sin offering as well. Though nearly all the returned exiles belonged to Judah and Benjamin, yet their sin offering was for the whole of Israel. The best we can offer to God is defective and sinful, and can only be acceptable through Him who is our sin offering.

(2) The proper ordering of the service of the temple (18). This was after the example of David (1 Chro. xxiv), and according to the command of Moses (Numb. iii. 6-10). The safest way of expressing gratitude for what God has done is by setting ourselves to do his commandments.

THE PASSOVER (19—22). This was observed at the proper season (Exod. xii. 6), and about six weeks after the dedication of the temple. 20. Compare 2 Chron. xxix. 34, xxx. 15. Priests and Levites were proper persons to lead in this service, but they must needs be clean. The ceremonial cleansing was a type of that purity which is required in all who would worship God. 21. Some appeared to be proselytes, who gave evidence of their fitness to eat of this feast by their separation from the filthiness of idolatrous worship. He that would draw near to God must come apart from sin. 22. The joy of the people was not only in the fact that the temple was completed, but also in the manner in which God had influenced the hearts of Cyrus and Darius to render them help. Our service is for the same God. Continuance in any work for Him is sure of success (Gal. vi. 9).

Lessons. God had made them joyful (14). The dedication offering (16) and the Passover Feast expressed the people's grateful joy. A missionary from North Africa lately declared that the natives so watched Christians that an angry or irritable word, an unhappy expression, might undo the work of years. Is not "the joy of the Lord our strength" for home work too?

We are the temples of God (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19). No building, however costly, is so truly the house of God as are the bodies of his people. Dedication does not make them his, but only recognises the fact that they are his. He fills and sanctifies and uses those who yield to Him (Jno. xiv. 23).

Christ and Christianity.

An absorbing theme of public discussion through the Press during the last fortnight has been that carried on in The Daily Chronicle under the somewhat startling caption, "Is Christianity played out?" The debate arose from a review of Mr. Robert Buchanan's new Christmas poem, "The Wandering Jew." The Chronicle termed it "a very queer carol." The author wrote defending his production in the trenchant language of which he is a master. Others replied adversely or favourably; and so the wordy warfare has proceeded, mostly through the medium of leader type.

It is difficult to conceive what sort of spirit may have prompted Mr. Buchanan to write and publish his poem. It certainly cannot be said to make for the defence either of Christ or Christianity. But if it had been inspired by the very arch foe of heaven he could not have more completely over-reached himself. The discussion has evoked rejoinders that are weighty and crushing; and it may be asserted with truth that nothing of the poem is left which can claim the respect or the mental adhesion of any serious representative of the Christian faith. The theme and its discussion formed a text for a good many sermons in London pulpits last Sunday. Among others who took up the gauntlet was Rev. H. Price Hughes, in his afternoon conference in St. James's Hall. An audience was attracted which filled the area and the first gallery, and many of the preacher's most pointed utterances were warmly received.

The hymns chosen were those descriptive of the triumphs of Christ's kingdom, past and to come. Two stanzas ran thus:—

> But soon the Victor rose,
> Triumphant o'er his foes;
> And led the vanquished host in chains.
> He threw their empire down,
> His foes compelled to own
> O'er all the great Messiah reigns.
> Hail, Saviour, Prince of Peace,
> Thy kingdom shall increase
> Till all the world thy glory see;
> And righteousness abound,
> As the great deep profound,
> And fill the earth with purity.

In his prayer Mr. Hughes made confession of the many shortcomings of Christians: "Forgive us, Lord, for our laziness, our cowardice, our selfishness, our irritability...Multiply the number of Christ-like Christians in this great city...Save us from all kinds of selfishness, family, business, social and ecclesiastical"; and so on. The lesson read was Rev. i. 9—19, wherein the inspired apostle presents a very different picture of our blessed Lord and Redeemer and King from that of the failing and phantom Christ conjured up by the nineteenth-century poet.

The text of the lecture was Mark ix. 19, "Oh, faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? How long shall I suffer you? Bring him unto Me." The preacher gave a brief but comprehensive digest of the contents of the poem, in which there is first an attack on Christ for exciting in men false hopes, and also on God for permitting endless pain. Without attempting to decide whether the poet is here expressing his own views, it will do all devout and orthodox Christians good to read this arraignment of historical and ecclesiastical Christianity. It is well that we should know how we are regarded by outsiders. When we think of the way in which many honest and noble searchers after truth in bygone times have been treated by so-called Christians, we are not surprised that those who look only at one side of the matter should hate historical Christianity, and should be tempted to link with that a hatred of Christ Himself. Let us beware of imitating the folly and wickedness of our predecessors. It can hardly yet be said that we can thank God we are not as our fathers were. There is a great deal in the British Empire to-day that would be a disgrace to Christianity if it were done in the name of Christianity. On this point Mr. Hughes made indignant reference to the opposition made in recent times to the abolition of the State regulation of vice; to the systematic provision still made in the Indian army in this respect; to the continued maintenance of the cursed opium traffic, and to the permitted enormities of the liquor traffic. If these things were Christianity, then we should all say: "Down with Christianity." It is unhappily true that the name of Jesus Christ has been identified with all kinds of devilry; but Jesus Christ is no more responsible for them than is Robert Buchanan. When did Christ wrong any man, or speak a single word that could justify any of the infamous deeds that have been perpetrated by his professed followers? This terrible poem does not even touch the claims of true Christianity; for the only claim of Christianity is Christ Himself. The Church does not constitute Christianity. Christ does not ask any man to believe in a church. He says: Come to Me; obey Me; follow Me. Moreover, the apostate deeds at which the poem is aimed were foreseen by Christ and his apostle Paul, who predicted that deceivers should arise, walking after their own lusts.

Granting all that can be said against much of our historical "Christianity," it must be pointed out that Mr. Buchanan in this poem grossly exaggerates the extent of that failure. He devotes seventy pages to the recital of the dark side of the picture, and only six to the other. Not a single witness since the time of Paul is adduced on behalf of Christ. Never was there a more unjust or more contemptible trial than that which the poem sets forth. Besides, the poet has altogether misrepresented the nature of the social systems that Christianity came to destroy and to supplant. These systems are described as being something very beautiful and desirable; whereas it is indisputable fact that social life in Greece and Italy when Christ came was dark, foul, diseased, and miserable beyond description. Tacitus says it was so bad he could not enter into details. Some idea of it may be gathered from Archdeacon Farrar's books, "Seekers after God," and "Darkness and Dawn," or, best of all, from Paul's letters to the Romans.

Once more, Mr. Buchanan has ridiculously underestimated what Christ has done for the human race. Looking at this cursorily under the three heads of "men," "women," and "children," Mr. Hughes showed how man as man owes everything to Christ. Before his day rank and caste ruled society, and the poor man was the slave of the rich. Slavery has been done away with in all civilised lands, entirely through the operation of the truth and teaching of Christ. In its last hiding place, dark Africa, its death knell was sounded by David Livingstone, the Christian missionary. What atheist or mere secularist has ever gone out to Africa to give his life for the redemption of his fellow-man?

Still more true is it that woman as woman owes all to Christ. Where the power of his teaching has not been felt woman has been the chattel of man, liable to be cast off or sold into bondage at his caprice. As to children, infanticide was everywhere practised when Christ came. Even in Plato's famous Republic there was special provision made for summarily getting rid of superfluous offspring. The influence of Christ has in these later days produced Mr. Waugh's Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, with its strong hand put forth to protect and save the helpless little ones. Owe nothing to Christ! Why, we owe all to Him—so much that we can never know how much. Even Mr. Buchanan's poem could not have been written till Christ came, and unless the writer had to some extent looked into the face of Christ and seen there the infinite pity and victorious love of God.

Mr. Price-Hughes will continue the consideration of this theme for several succeeding weeks, at St. James's Hall, on Sunday afternoons.

I was for many years a follower of the late Mr. Charles Bradlaugh and Mr. H. M. Hyndman, the leader of the Social Democratic Federation. Rather more than two years ago I was walking in Hyde Park in a very unhappy state of mind—in fact, that very night I intended to destroy my life. I had been asking myself, "Is life worth living?" While walking in the park I heard a voice say loudly, "Is life worth living? No; life apart from Jesus Christ is not worth living." I looked about and discovered a gentleman preaching—Mr. Josiah Nix, of the West London Mission, the superintendent of which is the Rev. Hugh Price-Hughes. In the great crowd that Sunday afternoon I noticed many ladies dressed like hospital nurses. Their presence reminded me of the months that I spent many years ago in children's hospitals as an indoor patient and what they taught me there. The preacher's remarks and the presence of "The Sisters of the People" made me think Mr. Josiah Nix was talking about the power of Jesus Christ to save. I followed the mission band to their hall at Wardour-street, and that very Sunday night I got converted. No, Christianity is not played out.

REV. J. McNEILL IN SCOTLAND.

Mr. McNeill has been quite "at home" in Coatbridge throughout the past week. Some years ago he laboured as a student-missionary in Glenboig, two miles distant from Coatbridge, where he was well known and much loved. He used to preach in the Free Churches in this town while he was stationed in Glenboig. Many of the people here knew him, and many old acquaintances in Glenboig embraced the opportunity of renewing their friendship with him.

The meetings began with a morning service on Sabbath. It was truly gratifying to find six or seven hundred people gathered at such an early hour as half-past nine o'clock. Mr. McNeill opened with an appeal for help in this great work. Few will forget the lifelike picture of "Mattie," who used to visit Mr. McNeill's father's house in times of difficulty "just to help." The appeal went home. Many must have felt ashamed of their false attitudes in Christian work, instead of the simple but useful character of a "help."

In the afternoon a large meeting of women was held, and the Lord was present "to heal." But the meeting in the evening for men only in the cold, draughty theatre of the town crowned the day's work. It was crammed in every corner. In a discourse on the Passover Mr. McNeill succeeded in making the Gospel message plain. Many stepped into the light that night. The scene was most impressive—vast multitudes of horny-handed toilers, men who make either great sinners or great saints, listening with keen attention to a discourse which contained the essence of the Gospel. We bless God for the sight and the issue of that notable gathering.

Throughout the week the meetings in the evening were held in the most central church in the town, Dunbeth U.P. Church. It can seat fully a thousand. The week-night meetings began with a full church on Monday evening. The subdued stillness allowed every point in the address free course. Tuesday night witnessed a large increase of people—passages filled, pulpit stairs occupied, and lobbies crowded out. This was repeated every night. The discourses caught the ear and won the hearts of all. The glistening eye and bright countenance were the visible responses to the word of the preacher. The after-meetings revealed the presence of the Spirit. Men, women, youths, and maidens signified by standing up or holding up their hand their desire to be prayed for. In that atmosphere of prayer not a few found an entrance, an open door into the kingdom.

The afternoon meetings in Free Middle Church were very large for such a community, but they did not meet the expectation at all. The meetings were acknowledged to be times of much refreshing.

Mr. J. H. Burke is Mr. McNeill's right hand. He conducted the choir with great efficiency, he sang with skill and fervour, and best of all with great power. He makes an admirable co-worker.

Hundreds knew Mr. McNeill before from scraps of newspaper reports. And what a caricature they make of him! He is crucified daily in their columns. This visit gave the people a chance of readjusting their opinion of him. Strangers were suprised at the good sense, the kindliness, and the godliness of the man. All the ministers—with the usual exception or two—supported him. We pity the exceptions. One sermon from this man of God would have swept away some cobwebs—if they had given it the chance.

RAILWAY MEN IN INDIA.

A large gathering took place in the hall of the Battersea Park Railway Mission on Sunday week, to bid God speed to Mr. Adams, who is about to join the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society's staff at Poona.

Mr. Adams, a young man in his twenty-second year, gave an address marked with great spirituality and a deep sense of his responsibilities. Very sincere were the prayers that he might be owned of God amongst railway men in India, as he has been in the past at Battersea.

Mrs. Wrigley, who has been closely identified with this mission from its commencement, gave an intensely earnest appeal to young men. Major Windham gave an account of his conversion through a young soldier whilst out on service in India during the Mutiny.

S. A. N.

PASTOR JOHN WILSON,

BAPTIST MINISTER, WOOLWICH.

IN Woolwich and its neighbourhood the name of Rev. John Wilson is held in high honour. The congregation of which he is pastor is a place of moral and spiritual power, and its influence is exerted over a wide area.

Mr. Wilson's earliest days were spent in rural Scotland. His father had a small farm near Forfar. There John was born in 1854; and to the parish church and parish school of Craichie his feet were early directed. As indicative of the stern character of the religious teaching of that day, it was John, then a lad of sixteen, who first brought to his home the glorious news that assurance of personal salvation is a joyful reality. In a wonderful way this truth had come to his knowledge.

At this period his family lived in Dunfermline, where even then the son was a leader among his fellows. The habits of his companions were by no means straitlaced, nor was total abstinence the popular subject that it now is. One day it dawned on John that not only could he freely partake of intoxicating liquor, but that it had an attraction for him which once it did not possess. He instantly resolved to cease playing with the agent of evil. To leave his environment seemed the easiest way out of the difficulty. He had visited Alloa, thirteen miles distant, on business, and there he had made the acquaintance of a man of most attractive personality—David Brown. To him he would go. With a short good-bye to his mother he set off.

(From Photograph by Mr. E. T. Faulkner, Woolwich.)

David Brown heard the lad's story, and gave him a hearty welcome. "You did well to come to me," he said: "I will find you work, but the body is not all; you have a soul to be saved as well as bread to win." Alloa was rich in good men, zealous for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom, and as the lad saw the fine work they were doing he was strangely attracted to it. "They," said he to himself, "are living true lives such as I should like to follow. I must be a Christian."

Mr. Brown kept his hold on the lad by making him his companion, and one evening, after four hours' searching the Scripture together, the heavenly light dawned upon his soul. He gave himself to God.

Young Wilson joined the congregation of Rev. George Elder (now of Greenwich), and he soon found himself at the work he so greatly admired. Friends were willing to smooth his way to college, but he took the initiative himself, by applying to Mr. Spurgeon for admission to the Pastors' College. Not receiving a reply he came to London, sought a personal interview with the great preacher, and the matter was settled at once.

Two years later, Mr. Wilson came to Woolwich to take charge of a small chapel. Shortly after, the congregation worshipping at Parson's Hill, close by, resigned their building into the hands of the London Baptist Association. The membership of Mr. Wilson's congregation having grown from ninety to two hundred, the vacant building was applied for, and it was transferred to them with its debt of nearly £1000. It was soon found to be too strait for them, and galleries were added at considerable cost. Thus Mr. Wilson and his people laid their foundations, strong in the faith of the converting power of God.

They were in the midst of a large working-class population. What could be done to bring them within earshot of the Gospel of Christ? Mr. Wilson's experience coincided with the lessons he learned from a study of Mr. Moody's methods. He placed the highest importance on personal dealing. He made it a rule never to close a Sunday-evening service without an after meeting. To-day he cannot tax his memory with an occasion when the Gospel appeal was fruitless. Always somebody stayed, always seeking souls were saved—such is Mr. Wilson's testimony.

To reach the men of Woolwich he tried a variety of tactics. He instituted a series of Sunday-afternoon lectures—for which apologetics, Christian biography, missionary movements, and social problems supplied him with abundant material. Men who never entered a church door flocked to hear the fresh Scottish preacher talking on subjects in which they were interested. He was rewarded beyond his expectations.

Many of his audience followed him from the lecture-room to the church; and among his best workers to-day are to be numbered those to whom the Sunday afternoon lecture proved the first attraction.

It is no slight responsibility to keep a church of a thousand members employed in Christian work. In the summer, open-air preaching is prosecuted. The Woolwich Common is taken possession of on Sunday afternoons; nearly every night Wilson's bands occupy certain street corners, and on Sundays three open-air services are held. Gospel temperance work receives much attention. Every Monday evening it is vigorously prosecuted in a meeting bright and joyous in its methods, with most encouraging results. Many, hopeless of their own staying powers, have been reclaimed by faith in the Lord Jesus. "Few know," Mr. Wilson says, "what is the value of a converted drunkard to the Church, when his old companions learn that one has left their ranks: it is to them a ray of hope, and they gladly come to listen to his testimony. Pledges by the thousand have been taken at these meetings."

Mr. Wilson is in very friendly relations with all his neighbours. He makes it known that as a servant of Christ every man has a right to claim his help. His study has very often the appearance of a labour bureau. He has written thousands of letters to help men to employment, and he finds that as soon as help of a higher nature is needed, his friendly counsel is often asked for.

Interested in the question of elementary education, he is a member of the Greenwich division of the London School Board, and for ten years he sat as a member of the Woolwich Board of Guardians.

The mission work that he and his congregation are carrying on at New Beckton is of a most useful character. Once the place was a swamp, but by the embankment of the Thames it was made into comparatively dry land, and extensive gasworks were built upon it. What with gas-workers, dockers, and coalies, it soon became a populous place. A member of Mr. Wilson's congregation going there to live, he reported that the place was a veritable wilderness so far as spiritual effort was concerned. He was promised whatever help he required. A Sunday-school was immediately opened in a field, soon a shed was found as a shelter, and very shortly an iron chapel was erected, at a cost of nearly £600.

Every Sunday a band of about fifty Christian workers cross over from Woolwich to visit, to teach, and to carry on the work of a busy Gospel mission. Mr. F. Penny, a worker in the arsenal, is superintendent, and his reports are most encouraging. At one meeting three men made profession of their faith, who had been respectively a bookmaker, a birdcatcher, and a publican. He says they are bright, cheerful Christians, working splendidly.

A disused chapel in Joseph-street, Woolwich, being for sale. it was taken possession of, and is now a busy centre for Gospel services and Sunday-school work. It is under the care of another arsenal worker, Mr. J. Elliott. In all, nearly nine hundred children attend the three Sunday-schools, with seventy teachers on the roll.

Young converts are amongst the best workers in the Parsons-hill congregation. One of their number, Mr. H. Gustav Haupt, after studying at Dr. G. Guinness's institute, went out to Balololand, on the Upper Congo, where a group of missionaries from Harley House have settled among a friendly people. His Woolwich friends supply Mr. Haupt's personal needs in his distant home. Another of Mr. Wilson's young men, Mr. Wotton, after studying in Mr. Spurgeon's College, is a minister of the Gospel in the United States.

Seeing the membership numbers one thousand, the church building is much too strait for the congregation. Two years ago the drill hall, the largest place available in Woolwich, was taken for Sunday afternoon and evening services. The management now proposes to erect a suitable building, a tabernacle, to hold from 1800 to 2000, with Sunday-school and class-rooms, at a probable cost of £12,000. The success which has attended Mr. Wilson's ministry, the great need there is for such accommodation, and the importance of Woolwich as a centre of military and industrial effort, fully justify the proposal. In the prime of his manhood, as the leader of an attached people, as the exponent of the glorious Gospel, we look to him, under God, as a means of much blessing to the people of Woolwich and the Church of Christ.

"DO YOU KNOW?"

Do you know when the summer day dawns fair
The freshness that breathes in the morning air;
The bright-eyed flowers on the dewy green,
The songs of the birds in the hazel screen;
The mist in the glen, like the wreathing snow,
And the croon of the river that runs below;
And youth and health with their joyous thrill,
In this beautiful world that is beautiful still?

Do you know in this world, however fair,
There are spores of death in the balmiest air?
There are snakes that crawl in the grassy green,
There are lions that couch in the leafy screen;
There are tear-dimmed eyes and the hair of snow,
And the moan of the River of Death below;
And age and pain with the blood running chill,
In this ruined world that is ruined still?

Do you know that Christ has redeemed the earth,
And creation waits for its second birth?
Have your sins been washed in the cleansing blood?
Does your spirit live in the life of God?
Is your hand clasped tight in your Father's hand,
To lead you safe to the Sinless Land?
Then fear no fate, for to you is given,
To conquer on earth and to reign in Heaven.

"The Lads of London."

Seventeen years ago an article appeared with the above title in The Christian. It referred to the special temptations of our working lads in their leisure hours after the day's toil; from the streets, the public-house, the music-hall, and the low theatre. In many instances they have left Sunday-school, do not attend church nor chapel, and are as practically outside Christian influences as the heathen in Africa. The next problem was how to reach them in order to save them. A practical answer was given, recommending the establishment of institutes where they might spend their evenings, and which should provide healthy recreation, with the means of mental, moral, and spiritual improvement.

That article was like a seed in good soil. Readers of The Christian responded with sympathy and money. One lady, residing at Cannes, wrote most kindly, and sent £50 to start the proposed Working Lads' Institute. Rev. W. Tyler also responded, joined the committee, and assisted with his sympathy, counsel, and contributions until his lamented death.

This was a new work, and was looked upon as an experiment, but it soon passed that stage, for so many lads came, and so much good was effected that larger premises became a necessity. In the meantime the idea was adopted by friends in other parts of London and in the provincial towns, and at the present time there are probably twenty such institutes in active work. God be praised!

A freehold site was secured in the best part of Whitechapel, and large and commodious premises erected in 1885. The institute provides a good reading-room and library, class-rooms, gymnasium, and swimming-bath; also dormitories and bedrooms and a lecture-hall. Oh! the blessed work that has been done here only eternity will reveal. Since this work was started, over 5000 lads have been benefited. Most of them have passed away from our view, but the good effected remains. Some are Sunday-school teachers, others evangelists, and yet others engaged in temperance work. Humanly speaking, but for the institute many of these might have been amongst the drunkards and the immoral, or perhaps have perished in their sins.

I wish some of the readers of The Christian who believe in preventive and practical Christianity, and in saving the young, would pay us a visit. They would see lads from fourteen to twenty years of age, some getting their bodies strengthened in the gymnasium, others improving their minds by reading or attending the classes for writing, arithmetic, drawing, shorthand, etc. Magic lantern, lectures, and entertainments and concerts are provided, and to these the poor children of the neighbourhood are frequently allowed free admission. There are sometimes 600 present, and it is a joy to see their pleasure. Surely it is a blessed thing to bring one hour's brightness and music into these dull, sad young lives.

Lately an Employment Department has been added to the many agencies carried on, so that lads who are out of work may gain a living until another situation is found, and thus be saved from having to enter the army or the workhouse, or possibly from ruin. The institute has another special feature, it is a happy Christian home.

There are thirty beds all occupied, and more are wanted. What a boon is thus afforded to a lad coming up from the country, or to an orphan, to reside here, instead of living in some wretched lodging-house!

These varied efforts are all very useful and beneficent, but there are others which have to do directly with the souls committed to our care. Weekly Bible classes and mission services, a mission band and a praying band. On Sunday evening a children's service, and a service for young men. Lately, God has been with us of a truth, and the Holy Spirit has worked mightily in these young hearts. There have been conversions of the old-fashioned sort, followed by changed lives, and earnest prayer and effort that companions might be saved. Indeed, there is scarcely a service held without someone being converted.

And now comes a strange, sad fact. With all this blessing to encourage, and which seems to cry "Go forward," the work is hindered and its continuance threatened for want of the means to carry it on. There are but few regular subscribers, and since the appeals for the colossal Polytechnics, the amount from donations has been inadequate. The position is now desperate, for, unless help comes, and very speedily, we shall be compelled to stop the work altogether.

I have laboured for seventeen years in this work, and have, with members of my family, given over a thousand pounds to it, but so convinced am I of the good it is doing that had I the means I would gladly bear the entire cost. It is indeed a great grief to me that I cannot give more than I have done, nor do more than I am doing. Perhaps some readers may like to help and share with me the service and the blessing. As well as funds, we need friends to give time and service—say, one hour once a week.

Great economy is exercised in management, and the institute is made as far as possible self-supporting. All the lads who attend pay a small subscription monthly, and in addition support their athletic clubs, and last year their contributions amounted to over £200. A great saving is also effected by the large amount of voluntary service given by friends, whereby the funds are saved to the extent of £300 per annum. But the rates and taxes on the premises are heavy, and the expenses of cleaning, lighting, warming, and repairs, etc., must be met. Humanly speaking, £1000 would now save the institute!

The Working Lads' Institute is a lighthouse in a sea of sin and misery, where young lives are constantly being wrecked. Ought the light to be quenched for want of oil? It is a Christian port in the midst of a stronghold of Satan. Enemies would rejoice if it were given up, but I think every true Christian would be grieved. However, this fort is now held by only a handful of devoted soldiers of Jesus Christ, and unless God sends us speedy relief we can hold it no longer. This is no ordinary appeal. During the whole of the seventeen years circumstances have never been so extreme. I have never written in the same way before, and trust I may never have to again. We have laid the matter before the Lord and prayed most earnestly, and we now think it right to make known to his people the present position of his work amongst his little ones in East London.

The response to the first article plainly indicated that I ought to commence the work. A similar generous response would indicate that it should be continued, and would enable it to be done.

Founder and Hon. Secretary of the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel.

AN IMPORTANT WORD.

Dear Sir,—I wish to bring to your notice, and it would be well to give it a place in your columns, an important word, καταργεω, "bring to nought," eight times used, all to the glory of Christ.

1 Cor. i. 28.—That He may "bring to nought" the things that are. ii. 6.—The wisdom of this age who are "coming to nought." xv. 26.—The last enemy brought to nought, death.

2 Cor. iii. 7.—The glory of the law is "brought to nought." 14.—The law is "brought to nought in Christ."

Rom. vi. 6.—That the body of sin might be "brought to nought."

1 Cor. xv. 24.—When He shall have "brought to nought" all rule, and authority, and power.

Heb. ii. 14. That through death He might "bring to nought" him that held the power of death—that is, the Devil.

2 Thes. ii. 8. Then shall the wicked one be brought to nought by the manifestation of His coming.

They unfold a sevenfold glory of His work for us, and in us. God's use of the word is what all teachers should study to teach.

Yours faithfully, G. J. Windham.

The Bombay Conference.

BY HENRY VARLEY.

THE Decennial Conference now in session in Bombay has drawn together from the various parts of this great continent about 700 workers in the great harvest-fields of India. The assemblies are held in the noble hall which forms part of the Wilson College buildings found at Chowpatti, and directly facing the sea.

The Conference commenced its eight days' session on Thursday, December 29th. The early morning prayer meeting at 7.30 was largely attended, giving a welcome augury that the minds and hearts of the brethren assembled were directed to the Great Head of the missionary band, our Lord Jesus Christ. It is well that it should be so, for in this vast country not only does there exist an enormous area for service, but great diversity of mind amongst the hundreds of assembled missionaries. There is not a single Protestant Missionary Society in India that is not represented in this remarkable Ecclesia. Though the great majority evidently are Europeans and Americans, a good proportion of the delegates are native pastors and teachers, who represent the fruits of the labour of former years. It was a heart-stirring sight to see the goodly hall crowded to its utmost capacity with India's worthies at the 10 o'clock meeting on the opening day.

The burden of from twenty to forty years of service was reflected in the bronzed and gray appearance of many of the men of God assembled there, but upon the bright and cheery countenances of the great company is written endurance and peace, yea, courage also, and the spoils of this holy war.

No time was lost in getting to the business of the Conference. Dr. MACKICHAN, President of the Wilson College, in a brief but telling address welcomed the assembled ministers, missionaries, and delegates to the friendship, Christian love, and hospitality of Bombay, and then the subject for the day, "Work among the depressed classes and the masses," was entered upon and discussed with earnestness and enthusiasm. The papers which had been written and printed were taken as read, and then discussion upon them, including friendly and well-sustained criticism, was deeply interesting. Amongst such a mass of testimony it is not possible in a brief report to give more than one or two proofs of the facts borne witness to by so many, viz.: that the idolatries and false religious systems of India are being successfully undermined; that many confidences of past ages no longer exist, and that hoary Dagons are falling before the power of the ark of God.

Mr. W. H. CAMPBELL, of Cuddapah, Madras, told of the Mahalers, pariahs amongst the non-caste, lowest classes of Hindus. He stated that the confidence of great numbers in idolatry is gone, that hundreds are passing over to the teaching and preaching of the Gospel of God, that large numbers confess their faith in Christ, that their lives and habits are radically changed, that they are receiving Christianity not by tens, but by hundreds, that many of the leading men already are won over; and he believed that the community were upon the verge of embracing the Gospel of Christ.

GOSPEL TRIUMPHS AT DARJEELING.

Mr. W. S. SUTHERLAND gave a deeply interesting account of the work at Darjeeling. For four weary years there was no fruit. Cast upon the Lord in fervent prayer with faith concerning the reception of special power for service from the Holy Spirit, there came in due time the answer, and then the following interesting case of genuine conversion occurred. A young and intelligent man was awakened, and became anxious about his soul. This was soon made known to his friends at home. They persecuted, threatened, and opposed him. Finding that he would not be turned aside from his purpose, they cast him out. He was baptized at midnight. When this was known the hatred of his family seemed to know no bounds. His own brother threw his food after him, calling him "a Christian dog." The love and strengthening might of Christ prevailed, and the new-born child of God boldly declared "how great things the Lord had done for him." Forthwith he also preached Jesus the Christ. The Lord blessed his testimony, and in others' hearts the good work of God began.

Any number of adversaries came against him, and threatened to kill him if he preached Christ to the people. Nobly did the Lord stand with him. He replied, "You may kill me, but the Lord will raise up seven men of God in my place." Well may it be written, "Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them, because greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world." "The work went on," said Mr. Sutherland, "and now 400 have confessed the Lord." Our Presbyterian brother's testimony was most refreshing and joyous. How he exalted the personal Saviour! Here is the secret of missionary success! Some of the testimonies given in the printed papers are wonderful, and we record the tidings with great joy. Here is one of the American Methodist Episcopal Church Missions in Northern India. In 1859 we had two native preachers and five communicants, four Christian boys and eight girls in our schools and no baptisms reported. At the end of 1891 statistics showed 261 native preachers, 381 exhorters, with 736 Christian teachers, male and female; 10,261 Christian young people, and 5000 children of inquirers in our schools. Members received into the Church, 9487, with 16,913 probationers, 1164 Sunday-schools, 45,531 scholars, a Christian community of 36,055; so that the numbers now exceed 50,000.

Here, apparently, is cause for great joy! This is a remarkable extract, and certainly it indicates the loosening of the confidence of the people so far as idolatry is concerned. Much prayer is asked that there may be a real and deep turning from sin to the Lord. One of the great evils in India to-day is the practical absence of any definite view in regard to the nature and intrinsic evil of sin. "India for Christ" appears to be the excelsior device wrought on the Conference banner. The hymns, prayers, papers, and speeches all alike yield testimony to faith in God, and a real revival and extension of missionary zeal and enterprise. So far as I have seen, I am impressed with the great missionary company. It would be difficult to believe that either luxury of circumstance or indifference to missionary effort in any sense attaches to the great bulk of those assembled at this Decennial Conference, and I, cannot but think that some of the criticisms which have been made in reference to missionary work and workers in this land are unjust, and the more so because they represent the unwisdom of hasty testimony. We require to know the difficulties of this great work and live amongst it before we are competent to pass judgment.

Bombay, January 7.

With the multiplicity of the meetings at the Conference and my own work amongst the educated natives, I have not found time to send you by this mail a further account of the missionary gathering which has just closed. This I will do next week.

There has been neither the spiritual power, nor the intelligent and thoughtful discussion on education as a missionary agency, which so large and representative an assembly demanded. It was unfortunate that the cities of Calcutta and Madras were so far away from Bombay. To this fact mainly is to be attributed the practical ascendency of the Bombay section of the committee.

In consequence of the many criticisms which have appeared during the past few years in regard to the melancholy fact that scarcely any of the students in the Christian colleges have been brought to Christ, certain men who occupy prominent positions in those institutions have become greatly annoyed. Instead of deploring the facts and making the Conference an occasion for heartfelt confession to the Lord that so little result had been seen, these gentlemen set themselves the task of vindicating the Colleges as educational institutions at the instance and occasion of the Conference just closed.

Now, there was no objection to this, provided room was given for fair and honest discussion. That, however, was denied to the Conference through the action of the Bombay section of the committee. It soon became apparent that great fear existed lest anything should be said which might indicate that the voice of the assembled Conference, heard in England and elsewhere, should endorse the criticisms which have appeared. To such lengths did this determination go that a resolution was actually passed that no subject on which the Conference was not unanimous should have place as a resolution of the Decennial Conference itself.

Not only, therefore, was the educational question handicapped in such a way as to render the debate valueless as expressing the views of the Conference in regard to education as a missionary agency, but this extraordinary procedure also shut out any mention on the part of the committee of the vitally important questions of the debasing opium traffic, the Government regulations in regard to vice, and the terrible fact that India is being inundated with a flood of intoxicants from England, and that liquor licences are by the Government being increased on every hand. Great dissatisfaction has been expressed because the Conference has been put in a false position. The Conference committee has consented to stand with the Government in regard to these great social wrongs, and by silence consented to ignore those questions which are doing more to degrade India than all English civilisation and missionary effort put together has done for her advancement. I will send you during the quiet of the coming week, which I expect to spend in Poona, working amongst the educated natives, an article upon the Conference as a whole. There was much in which we all unfeignedly rejoice.

CONFERENCE AT BRISTOL.

THE eighteenth annual conference of believers, held at the Gospel Hall, St. Nicholas-road, Bristol, on Jan. 17 and 18, proved a season of blessing to the many who were present. The first of the six meetings was a solemn heart-searching time of humiliation and confession before God. In the second meeting the subject for consideration was "Christian Parents' Responsibility in Relation to their Families, Reviewed in Connection with Recreations and Entertainments." Many helpful and practical addresses were given, accompanied by wise counsel and timely warnings. The subject for the evening was, "The Christian's Responsibility in Relation to the Signs of the Times."

Wednesday morning opened with the subject of "Christian Stewardship and Service in Relation to the Judgment-seat of Christ." In the afternoon reports of the Lord's work at home and abroad were given. Messrs. Hutton and Gulston spoke of patient, plodding sowing and reaping in China; Mr. Ed. Hurditch told of a new branch of the Evangelistic Mission opened in Brighton; Mr. William Nobbs related his recent happy experiences in village work; and Mr. Samuel Diprose gave an interesting account of aggressive work in South Wales under the superintendence of Mr. T. M. Wintle.

Several hundred partook of tea together at five o'clock, which was followed by a meeting addressed by eight speakers, each being greatly helped of God in these closing addresses, which were listened to by an overflowing congregation. Many expressed themselves as they left that "the good wine was kept till last." JAS. A. VICARY.

THE ACCEPTABLE SACRIFICE.

DR. A. J. GORDON, of Boston, writes in his paper, The Watchword:—

I am tired of using the pulpit corkscrew to draw out of Christians the offerings and prayers and service, which to be of real value ought to be spontaneous. I shall continue to pray and persuade and plead, but I shall not come begging you to do your duty. "My people shall be willing in the day of my power," saith the Lord. I can testify to this as one of the most real experiences of my life. I have been in assemblies when the Spirit has been sought, and when the power has come down mightily on the people. And then, to witness the giving and the praying and testimony; you do not have to draw the charge from a well-primed gun. Let a spark fall on it and it goes off of itself. Oh, for Christians charged with the Spirit; then the world would be amazed at the Church, instead of cavilling at its workers as it often does now.

Israel is a heifer that slideth back, says the prophet. One explanation of this text is this; that when the sacrificial offering is brought forward to be slain, it holds back, settling on the haunches so that it has to be pushed and forced before it can be brought to the altar. Think you that this is the kind of sacrifice that God wants of us, my brethren? Nay, "My people shall be a free-will offering in the day of my power." "I beseech you therefore by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, that you may prove what is that good, and acceptable and perfect will of God." A sacrifice which is only an expression of your reluctance, a symbol of your grudging unwillingness, God does not care for. If the love of Christ is not sufficient to move us, God won't thank us to invent some instrument of compulsion.

Cheapness or Efficiency?

THE PECUNIARY NEEDS OF MISSIONARIES.

Sir,—In an issue of The Christian which has only just reached me, I see it stated in an editorial paragraph that "a missionary is able to live in many places on £60 a year, or even less." I have often heard it stated that in China a missionary can live on £50 a year. Both statements are perfectly true, as true as is the statement that a minister in England is able to live in many places on £50 or £60 a year. There are ministers in England who do live on that sum, and there are missionaries in China who do the same. Those who can do it, and have done it, in England, might do it in China; those who can do it in China, would have little, if any, more difficulty in doing it in England. What it means in England, people in England know; what it means in China, they require to be told.

Two years ago the question of cheap missions was occupying a great deal of attention in England. It is occupying some attention there still, but a great deal more in the Scandinavian Churches and in some of the churches in America. As The Christian has a world-wide circulation, I shall be very glad if you can publish the following letter, originally—in substance—a private communication to a Scandinavian friend, who thought it worth while to translate it into Swedish that the views it contained might be made known amongst his friends. I have reason to know that these views are shared by many missionaries who have consecrated all they have of money, strength, or other talents to the Master's service amongst the heathen, and with whom no considerations of self-interest weigh for a moment in the opinions they hold on the question of the pecuniary needs of missionaries.

May I say, at the outset, that I have lived for many years in China, and have, from the first day of my arrival until this day, believed strongly in the duty of carrying on the Lord's work here, as in every other part of the world, England not excluded, as economically as possible. The more economically Christ's servants can live, whether they support others, or whether they are supported by others to do his work, the more funds will there be available for the carrying on of the work. But economy is of two kinds—one more striking and impressive, and the other less so; and the more showy economy is not always either the wisest or the most economical, however excellent the people may be who practise or who recommend it, or however unquestionable may be the sincerity of their motives in doing so.

I knew some years ago a young missionary who, anxious to save the Society all he could, used regularly to return half his salary. He did not spend on himself even all the money he accepted. He lived in a small Chinese house, and on very inexpensive fare, and was generally frugal. By degrees, largely owing to the conditions under which he thought it right to live, his health gave way, and without having any serious illness he became weak, depressed, nervous, and unfit for work, until at length, after a comparatively short term of service, he went home, where it took him nearly two years to recruit. He had, indeed, cost the Society he belonged to £200 or £300 less than other missionaries who had been out the same time; but, without unduly depreciating his work, it must be confessed he had done less than they had in the time, and for the two years he was in England others who had gone out with him were still working in China! A larger sum of money spent on vigorous, energetic work is often a far better and cheaper investment than a smaller sum spent on feebler performances, and I have mentioned the above case, firstly, because an illustration of this sort, drawn from the region of one's own observation, is worth more than a good deal of abstract reasoning as to the probable effects of a certain way of living on many persons; and, secondly, because the missionary to whom I refer felt afterwards that he had made a mistake, and on his return to China thought it right, in the interests of his work, to live more generously.

But let me now call attention to some considerations which have made not a few of the more experienced missionaries in China distrust altogether the cry for cheap missions.

1. It is a matter of the highest importance to remember that the missionary, whether male or female, goes abroad for the sole object of doing missionary work. The missionary work proper is to be the business of life, and in a populous land like China a competent missionary will find his duties require all the time and strength that he can give to them. A wise old friend of mine, one of the most experienced missionaries in the East, was once consulted by a young man who had just come out from home full of the idea of cheap missions, and about methods of work. My friend saw what the young man was thinking, and said, "Before I give you any advice in regard to these questions, there is one point I should like to be clear about; do you want me to tell you how you can live in China at the lowest money cost, or do you want me to tell you how you can work most efficiently as a missionary? I can advise you with regard to either of these objects, but the advice I should give in the one case would be very different from that which I should give you in the other." I think the answer helped to make the young man think.

Now it is certain that missionaries and their wives, if they are to work effectively, must, in the first place, learn the language properly, and must, in the second place, have their time free for missionary work. Missionaries who are underpaid cannot afford to employ good teachers of the language, or to buy the books which are necessary for learning the language. Is it wise, for the sake of saving a few shillings a week, to compel a missionary either to have no teacher at all, or only a third-rate teacher, or only an insufficient amount of daily instruction? One missionary who has learned the language well, is worth ten missionaries who cannot speak properly, and it is cheaper to pay one missionary who can work £150 a year, than to pay two men who cannot work £100 a year between them. I know that people talk about "picking up" Chinese. Here and there exceptional people may "pick it up," but my experience leads me to think that in the vast majority of cases Chinese that is "picked up" independently of good instruction, and careful, thorough study, might as well be left unpicked up, for hardly anybody understands it except the speaker.

Once more, missionaries who are underpaid cannot employ servants and workmen to save their own valuable time. A Chinese cook can be got for twenty shillings a month, a washerwoman for ten shillings, a workman such as a bricklayer, a carpenter, or a tailor, for sixpence a day. Is it wise, is it economical, to pay a missionary so little that his wife must herself cook, wash, and do household work, and that when carpenter's work has to be done in the house, the missionary himself must waste his precious time in doing it? Such a method of living and working may be wise in Central Africa, it is, in my opinion, the height of folly in a country like China. One missionary lady with her time free for missionary work is worth at least half-a-dozen who have to spend the best hours of the day in cooking, washing, lighting fires, making clothes, and doing other things that a good servant would do very much better on wages that do not amount to one-tenth part of a missionary's salary.

2. The labourer is worthy of his hire. Some missionaries have at home aged or invalid parents who are poor, or younger brothers and sisters who need to be educated. Is it generous, is it kind, to pay Christ's servants in the mission field such a miserable pittance that they cannot even send home half-a-crown a week to their parents when it is necessary? Then children have to be educated. Is it right to pay missionaries so badly that unless somebody else will educate their children for them these children must grow up almost uneducated? Again, missionaries are liable to meet with losses. Twice within ten years I have been robbed of twenty dollars (£3) at a time If my Society had only just been paying me enough to live upon, what should I have done when thus robbed of say nearly a month's income? Either I must have begged of other missionaries, perhaps no better off than myself, or I must have borrowed, and then actually have had to eat and drink less than I needed for several months in order to pay back the debt!

3. Missionaries like to obey the Scriptural rule of giving up their money to the Lord's work. Some of the most generous givers I have ever known have been missionaries. The mission to which I belong owns to-day property worth hundreds of pounds, which has been purchased out of the salaries of its missionaries, for the extension of their work, in some cases as the result of great self-denial. I say nothing of gifts from the same quarters for the relief of distress, and for the support of native fellow-helpers, but these two have been most generous. Is it treating missionaries rightly to pay them so little that they can give nothing away? Or do our beloved brethren in England who support us think that we are not to be trusted to give anything away, but that we shall be sure to be as luxurious and self-indulgent as we can?

4. Everyone living in England, or anywhere else, knows quite well that amongst good and earnest workers all people cannot live in the same way. One man can live on very little; he has a strong stomach and can eat coarse food; he wants no books; he is not tempted to give presents, and he and his wife being in good health he needs to spend nothing on medicine. Another man, who is not one whit less faithful or earnest, cannot live so cheaply. He cannot eat coarse food, he is fond of reading and likes sometimes to buy a book, he is generous by nature and likes occasionally to give little presents to those he loves, he has a sick wife and has to get medicine for her. Is it right to expect both these men to live on the sum of money that is just sufficient for the first? Would it not be better to pay both enough to supply the—after all—very modest needs of the second, and trust to the first worker using the money that he does not need in a way worthy of a Christian?

But I forbear to say all that might be said on this subject. I have long felt it to be a very responsible thing for people who have lived in China to speak in glowing terms to young and ardent souls at home about the ease with which they can live on some paltry sum abroad, and on the joy which any attendant self-denial connected therewith brings. For some earnest, devoted people it may be easy to live on the sum named, but for many more, equally earnest and equally devoted, it is not only not easy, it is not possible.

Further, while all self-denial of which the enlightened Christian judgment approves is easy to endure for Christ's sake, and brings its meed of joy to those who undergo it, it is altogether different with self-denial which the judgment comes deliberately to disapprove of. It is possible for a thoroughly godly man or woman to come out here on the strength of representations made at home with £50 a year, and to find that the facts do not correspond to the description given of them, and to learn too late that they have undertaken to carry a burden which, not the necessities of the work but only an ill-advised method of working has entailed upon them. It is not with feelings of joy, but of pain and disappointment, that such a burden has to be borne, or at least whatever of joy attends the service is joy due to the fixed determination of the worker to take even this unexpected and bitter disappointment as being also in some sense a new cross to be borne for Christ.

My own belief is that, while it is very well for people who have a larger sum of money to abandon part of it when they have tried the mission work for themselves, and know they can do with less, it is neither right to offer, nor wise to accept, a very small sum, when people are concerned who know nothing except what they have been told of the necessary expenses of life in the East, and who have nothing to fall back on but this minimum salary, even though they should find in actual experience that it is utterly inadequate for their needs. Let the givers to our societies only send abroad tried workers, people who can be thoroughly trusted, and then let them thoroughly trust them, and deal generously with them, and they will find the trust is not misplaced, and their money is not wasted.—I am, Sir, &c.,

Arnold Foster.

Hankow, Nov, 29, 1892.

MR. T. V. REES, who, while in the Army, has done good service in Gospel and temperance work, is now home from India, his time with the colours having expired. He hopes to find some employment in which he can work for the Lord. Letters from various chaplains speak in the warmest terms of Mr. Rees' work and influence among the soldiers. His address at present is 180, Victoria-terrace, Woodbridge-road, Ipswich.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Miss Rose Johnson, of the North Africa Mission, gave an address at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, on Monday night, January 15. Her story was full of interest, and made a deep impression upon every heart. On the Sunday following, the executive of the Missionary Prayer Union met, and accepted for missionary work one of the young men in connection with the church, who has offered himself for work in North Africa. It is proposed that he should go out in connection with the North Africa Mission, and be supported by the contributions of the Prayer Union.

The Irish Revival.

MISSES SMITH AND BAX.

EVANGELISTIC services, lasting a fortnight, conducted by these lady evangelists, in the Methodist Chapel, Newton Butler, co. Fermanagh, have just been brought to a very successful conclusion. The attendance, good from the first, increased as the meetings went on, notwithstanding very unfavourable weather for part of the time. The power of the Lord was felt in every meeting; seekers after salvation were brought to Him; backsliders were restored; a large number professed conversion or restoration. At the concluding meeting on Monday, January 16, many testified to blessing received. About fifty signed the pledge and put on the blue ribbon.

SAML. CLARKE.

MAJOR WHITTLE AT KINGSTOWN.

This well-known town on the Irish coast is at present the scene of a mission conducted by Major Whittle, who is accompanied by Miss Whittle and Mr. George C. Stebbins. After some preliminary meetings upon Sunday and Monday, the 15th and 16th inst., in the Presbyterian and Congregational churches, the mission proper began upon Tuesday, January 17, in the Town Hall. All the religious bodies in Kingstown have been in full co-operation with the work, with the exception of the Episcopalian clergy, who are already engaged in preparing for a mission, which is to open simultaneously in their respective churches on Feb. 4.

Two meetings have been held daily, and the attendances have been large. At the afternoon meeting, Major Whittle has given Bible readings chiefly on the work of the Holy Spirit. An inquiry meeting has been held every night; numbers have stood up to be prayed for at the conclusion of the general meeting, and have been afterwards dealt with in the inquiry meeting.

The singing of Mr. Stebbins and Miss Whittle deserves more than a passing word of commendation.

On Saturday afternoon, a children's meeting was held, and the Town Hall was filled. The address was illustrated in the following way. Ten glass ornaments were set before the preacher to represent the ten commandments; and after a story was told of the little American boy who had commenced doing wrong by playing marbles on his way to Sunday school with an evil companion whom he met, Major Whittle asked the children to name the different commandments the boy had broken, and one after another of the glass ornaments was smashed to impress the lesson upon the children's hearts and memories. At the conclusion there were two inquiry meetings held, one for boys and the other for girls, and we believe with good results.

MESSRS. SMITH AND BELL.

LISBURN.

The mission which began in Railway-street Presbyterian Church, Lisburn, on January 1, came to a close last Thursday night. There was an overflow meeting in the Lecture Hall on Sunday night, and each subsequent night the church was filled in every part.

Although the hour of meeting was eight o'clock, shortly after seven on Thursday evening it became apparent that the church could not hold the crowds that were coming; the Lecture Hall was therefore opened, and almost filled with people.

Mr. Merton Smith conducted the meeting in the church, and Rev. R. W. Hamilton that in the Lecture Hall. Each of these brethren, however, addressed both meetings, and Rev. H. W. Florance also spoke in the Lecture Hall. Mr. Ritchie Bell sang the Gospel both in the church and hall.

Mr. Smith believes in the importance of getting the young converts to sign the total abstinence pledge, and he had previously announced that he would ask them to do so this last night. The crowds were so great that it was difficult to get pledges taken, and the meeting ran on so late that it was believed many went away who would have liked to sign. However, about four hundred pledges were taken. From his own experience, and from observation, Mr. Smith has a keen sense of the evils of drink, and almost every night presented some telling picture of its awful effects, or some piercing denunciation of the iniquity of the traffic.

Multitudes tarried in the church till a late hour on Thursday night, some to sign the pledge, some to be spoken to on the great question between God and their souls, and many to see the last of the dear brethren who have been so honoured of God as a means of blessing to their souls.

BALLYMENA.

The evangelists arrived here from Lisburn on Saturday to commence a mission under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Prayer-meetings had been held each evening since it became known definitely that they were coming, and both were present at the Saturday-night meeting. Mr. Smith took charge of this meeting and gave a short address, and by his kindly, winning manner and earnest words soon was at home amongst us.

On Sabbath Mr. Smith addressed Christians at 8 a.m. A large number attended, and a time of real blessing was experienced. At a meeting of young people in the afternoon the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. was scarcely able to contain the crowd. At six the evangelist occupied the pulpit of First Presbyterian Church.

An evangelistic address was advertised to be given in Y.M.C.A. Hall at 8 p.m., but owing to the large crowd the meeting was transferred to the First Presbyterian Church, which has been placed at the disposal of the Y.M.C.A. during the mission. The word was spoken with earnestness and power at each meeting, and the first day has been fruitful in professed conversions. Mr. Bell sang at each of the services, except that at six o'clock. He also addressed the Sabbath-school of the First Presbyterian Church at 10 a.m., and took the services in the Methodist Chapel.

A FAREWELL IN DUBLIN.

IT will be remembered that before leaving Dublin Mr. Moody made a special offer to receive into his Chicago Bible Institute twenty-five young men from Ireland, who were prepared to undergo a period of training for Christian work, and who might be adjudged as qualified for the vocation.

When in the providence of God, Mr. Moody was brought back to Queenstown, on board the Spree, in December last, and believing as he did that he had been saved from the jaws of death, he felt it incumbent upon him to acknowledge God's hand in delivering him from the perils of the deep, by securing more labourers to go forth into the harvest-field. Accordingly the Evangelist wrote to Mr. Wm Fry, urging him to announce as widely as possible his desire to increase the number of men and women in training at his schools to a thousand. Since Mr. Moody's intimation, Mr. Fry has been receiving offers from willing candidates, and all these have been carefully examined as to their qualifications, with the result that nine were decisively accepted.

To bid farewell to these a great meeting was convened last Monday evening at the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin. No more fitting place could have been selected, seeing it forms part of the Christian Union Buildings, erected as an outcome of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's former visit to the city. The body of the large hall was filled with men and the capacious galleries with women; yet it was found necessary to open the side "adjuncts" to admit the enthusiastic throng.

Mr. DAVID DRUMMOND, a long-tried friend of Gospel work in Dublin, was in the chair. The opening hymn was "Speed thy servants, Saviour, speed them," and as Rev. Canon MARRABLE led the assemblage in prayer, many hearts responded to the petition that many more Irish young men might be brought into training at Chicago to carry the Gospel to the ends of the earth; or, perchance, to return to their native land to declare the message of God's love. Perhaps the most pleasing feature of the proceedings was the glad recognition by each speaker of God's leading in the past, and the reiterated sense of dependence on Him for all future service. "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it," was in effect the utterance of all who took part. Work done upon such a basis is sure to succeed.

Each of the nine selected candidates was allowed five minutes in which to give some words of experience or exhortation. A tenth had been enrolled, but a letter was read from his mother expressing her inability, weak in health as she was, to part from him at this time. She begged the prayers of the meeting that the way might be opened if possible for him to labour nearer home. The following are the names of those going out; they represent, it will be noticed, no less than seven Irish counties:—Henry S. Bolton and Robert Cantwell, Dublin; Daniel Doyle, Wicklow; James Hyde, Kilkenny; John S. Hadden and John C. Wightman, Armagh; Thomas Patterson, Maynooth, Kildare; John Thompson, Down; and W. Youell, Leitrim.

Varied and interesting were the testimonies given as to how they were brought to their present position, but one and all testified to the saving power of God, who had called them out of darkness into his marvellous light. One was converted during Mr. Moody's recent mission; another at the Y.M.C.A. by a word spoken in due season. One was aroused by a verse of Scripture; another in answer to a brother's prayer. "Son, go work to-day in My vineyard" was the message to one, on whom was pressed home the necessity of participation in the new birth before he could engage in service.

"Down there," said another, pointing to a corner in the hall, "while standing by my mother's side, God spoke to me through a worker ten years ago. When, six years later, that mother heard me plead that I might go to the mission field, I wish I could tell you how she looked and what she said as she gave her full consent." Another said he was brought out into service by this word from a minister, "Do not wait for some great thing to do; begin where you are, in your home, or in business-life." Similarly, another did his first act of service for God by kneeling at the bedside of a sick friend who, in answer to his prayers, yielded herself to God. Soon after, when he led in prayer in his father's house, his mother put her arms round him, saying, "Thank God I ever brought up a child who should do that."

Mingled with such personal testimonies were loving entreaties to those still undecided. "I was a bit wild myself," said one, "but now I can see what joy and peace I was losing." Another expressed his experience in the lines:—

Oh the years of sinning wasted,
Could I but recall them now.

Others averred that it needs all one's manliness to come out on the Lord's side; there is no higher calling, no greater joy, than that of soul winner.

To each candidate there was handed by Mr. JAS. BARTON, of Dundalk, with appropriate words of encouragement, a copy of the life of James G. Paton, also a Teacher's Bible. The latter was the gift of one who is perhaps the staunchest friend of young men in Dublin, but whose name was not allowed to transpire. His genial face, however, betrayed the secret as he sat happy in his fancied security upon the platform.

During the evening solos bearing upon missionary work were sung by Mr. G. C. STEBBINS and Miss WHITTLE. Major WHITTLE made an important statement as to the origin of Mr. Moody's invitation. He gave a detailed description of the Seminaries at Northfield and Chicago, where young men and women of promise receive education and training at a nominal cost. These institutions are the outcome of many years' thought on Mr. Moody's part, as to the great needs of the masses of poor and destitute, especially in the large cities, where they are almost totally unreached by any existing agencies. The ordinary Christian organisations must be supplemented by the labours of men and women skilled in the knowledge and use of the Word of God and familiar with aggressive methods of Christian work. These can act as assistant pastors, missionaries, evangelists, and in various other spheres. The method of training is by careful systematic study of the Bible; by cultivation of musical talent, vocal and instrumental, for the service of God; and by practical lessons and experience in all forms of Christian effort, such as street preaching, cottage meetings, Sunday schools, hospital and gaol visiting, etc. In answer to a question as to the necessity of candidates going to Chicago for such training, Major Whittle urged the advantage of personal contact and association with Mr. Moody himself, a man who is unique in his generation; and especially in view of the efforts to be put forth throughout the coming summer at the World's Fair, an opportunity that may never occur again. Mr. Moody's offer holds good till twenty-five men have gone from Ireland. Candidates should apply to Mr. Wm. Fry, 13, Lower Mount-street, Dublin. Others desirous of entering the institutions should write to Mr. Moody direct at the Bible Institute Chicago.

Major Whittle concluded his earnest address by an appeal that others should give their hearts to God, and then dedicate their lives to his service; this would be the best way of cheering the hearts of those going forth. Several present signified their desire to do so.

ON SOUL-WINNING.

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent "G. M. H." expressed surprise that there have been so few letters on this subject. The reason is not that souls are not being won by many of the readers of The Christian, but that those who are being owned in this work have not the time to write out experiences, and also shrink from putting into print circumstances which are naturally of a very private and personal character, and which, unless the personal features are given, can scarcely be of much interest as illustrations.

As we are actively engaged in the Early Morning Adult Sunday-school and Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Movements, I could give scores and know of hundreds as remarkable conversions as any that are recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. Jesus says to his disciples of to-day, as He did to those of eighteen centuries ago, "Follow Me, and I will make you to become fishers of men." First follow Him, then obey Him, and when He says, "Launch out into the deep, and let down the nets for a draught," or, "Cast the net on the right side of the ship," do not argue, but obey.

Let me give a recent experience. Not long since I was appointed a borough magistrate. My prayer was that I might there be made of use for the Master's kingdom. On December 28 a publican was brought before the Bench for two offences, one being drunk on his licensed premises, and the other being drunk and abusive to a neighbour. He was convicted and fined. I recognised him as a first-class carpenter I had known for fifteen years, and whom I had often employed, but until then did I not know he kept a public-house. He seemed to feel keenly his position, while I felt exceedingly sorry to see he had fallen so low. Then came the call from the Master, "Go and seek him and tell him of Me." I had no rest till I obeyed. That same afternoon I went, beckoning him out from a room full of drinking customers, and went into one adjoining. Then I learned that from fourteen to twenty-one he had been an abstainer, member of a temperance society and Sunday-school; but, breaking his pledge at twenty-one, he was tempted into company, his good singing making him popular. Still he continued to attend his chapel regularly till eight years ago, when he took this public-house. Seeing so much money being spent, his frugal wife thought it possible she could earn money at a public-house while her husband worked at his business; but, alas! the eight years had brought them misery and to the verge of ruin in pocket and character. I pointed out Hosea xiv. 1, 4, 9, and Christ's loving messages. With broken sobs he signed the pledge, and in that smoking-room, within sound of the revelry of holiday-drinkers, we prayed together.

I called recently. His wife told me her husband was a completely changed man. He had turned right round, and they were giving notice on the morrow to leave, and return once more to a little cottage. I then sought the man at his carpenter's shop, and found him so full of hope and confidence that I trembled lest he was resting on his own strength; but no, he was fully trusting in God, and the first thing he did on the first Monday morning of this year when he entered his workshop was to kneel down and pray.

May this encourage others to obedience in delivering the personal message—realise that we are only the bearers, that Jesus is the sender; and while we realise that we are honoured on being thus sent, let us remember to act as gently and as lovingly as He ever did in dealing with such cases.

Wribbenhall, Bewdley. E. S.

In a recent issue of The New York Observer Rev. Gerard B. F. Hallock wrote:—"Every Christian is a missionary—a 'sent one.' 'As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.' Every Christian is a missionary appointed by Christ and for Christ, and to and for the world. We are all ambassadors for God, messengers of the Cross. It is the God-given duty and privilege of everyone who knows and loves the Saviour to strive to lead others to his love and service. 'Go work'; 'Go preach'; 'Go teach'; 'Let him that heareth say, Come'; these are the Christian's commands. Have you heard? Then say, 'Come.' Is the marching order yours? Then 'Go.' There is no disciple of Christ—no matter how feeble, no matter how lowly, no matter how old or how young—who ought not distinctly to propose it to himself as an aim never to be lost sight of, that he will lead other souls to the foot of the Cross. That motto deep-cut upon the sides of the great Eddystone Lighthouse would be a grand one for every Christian to take to himself. The words are these, 'To give light and to save life.' To give light and to save life! Verily, this is the God-appointed mission of every Christian.

"A recent incident of pastoral experience will give point to this thought. A lady in the congregation of the writer became impressed with the desire to speak with her neighbour, a very dear personal friend, and a woman of wealth, refinement and most excellent character, but not a Christian. One morning she felt that she must go to her friend and frankly tell her about her long-cherished interest in her soul; but so often had she yielded to delay that she could not seem to get the courage. At last she knelt and prayed for strength, and then, without waiting a moment to lose her resolution, she went and told her, at her very door, just what was in her heart. Think how that message, brought in such fear and trembling, was received! The answer was: 'O, I have wondered this long time why you never spoke to me. I have longed for your help, and I am so glad you have come. Will you not, please, come right into the room here and pray with me?' That woman, her husband, and two daughters, soon came into the church, and I know no better members in God's household to-day."

"That is practical soul-winning work. We need more of it. What our churches need to-day is more of that life-giving, vitalising fire of God's Holy Spirit, which will arouse every individual Christian to earnest consecrated personal work. 'Give me,' exclaimed Wesley, 'one hundred men who fear nothing but God, hate nothing but sin, and are determined to know nothing among men but Christ and Him crucified, and I will set the world on fire.'"

JEWS IN PORT SAID.

During the past year, in the midst of trials, we have experienced the Lord's lovingkindness. The poor, ill-treated Jewish refugees from Russia, on their way to Palestine, greatly exercised our faith in God, with regard to supplying their bodily wants.

As to their acceptance of the Gospel, we have seen no decided results; our work is only sowing now; by-and-by, perhaps, we shall find many unexpected sheaves.

The Jews are as hard-hearted as ever, ready to curse when the blessed Name of Jesus is mentioned, although at the same time they willingly accept any help.

A Jew whom I tried to the best of my power to help, and who was for several months under my special care, I found out at last to be a great impostor, who had been Protestant, Moslem, and Orthodox Greek in turn, his three children having been baptized, first at Jerusalem, and secondly here by the Greek priest. Having been asked one night at one o'clock to come and see his wife, who was dying, I found to my horror she was totally intoxicated. This opened my eyes, and of course from that time stopped all help from me. These experiences will serve to give the reader a little insight into the dark side of dealing with this people, who for centuries have had to undergo persecution and hatred from those professing Christianity, which to a large extent has made them what they are at the present day. On the other hand, many hundreds have listened attentively to the message of the Gospel. I have always sought to relieve those in their real bodily want before speaking to them about the Messiah, and great numbers have expressed their gratitude.

During the year several hundreds of Arabs, Europeans in the town and strangers from various parts of the world were helped in one way or another, with medical treatment and relief of bodily necessities; in most cases, the Gospel was presented and Scriptures distributed up to the end of last year, and during thirty years in the Lord's service He has graciously permitted me to distribute one million copies of portions of Scripture in thirty-six languages. G. A. Eoll.

Port Said, January 10th.

"LET HIM TRY."—If you find in a church or a conference a man who thinks he has a mission, give him a free rein. "Let him try," was the motto of Bishop Simpson; and he found in the trial men often accomplished what no one, at first, believed they could do. It is the wisdom of a church to find a place for the most peculiar talents.

PROGRESS IN TRAVANCORE.

Dear Sir,—On entering this town on Saturday, the 17th inst., I was presented with an address from native Hindoo gentlemen, many of whom are of considerable standing and ability. It is a document so extraordinary in its character, and so promising of good results in the future, that I send it to you, in case you may like to print it in your paper.

This is a city covering some nine or ten square miles, and containing some 60,000 people ordinarily, but on festival occasions upwards of 100,000. It clusters loosely round the old walled Fort, in which the Maharajah, Dewan (Prime Minister), and others have their official residences. This Fort is about half a mile square, and is full of the closely-built houses of the Brahmins, who alone are privileged to dwell there. The great Hindoo Temple and sacred Tanks are also within the now very useless walls.

There is an Anglican church, where services are conducted for the Europeans, East Indians, and English-speaking natives, as well as services in the vernacular; a small chapel built in 1837, which is chiefly used by the L.M.S. for their Sunday services, but is open to all Evangelical Christians; and a reading room belonging to the L.M.S., where services are held on Sunday and Wednesday evenings in English for English-speaking Hindoos. Numbers of these attend and seem very interested, and even appear to have a considerable respect for Christ and his teachings. Unfortunately, I fear this is not more than skin deep. Their heads assent, but their hearts are far from yielding obedience. This is shown by their lives. One cannot but be terribly pained at the contrast presented by their talk on the one hand and their walk on the other.

This reading room is a centre for glorious work, and seems well used. The subjoined address is a result of the work done there. We want a number of them, one in each district of the city. By means of these rooms the educated people are reached as they are not by the ordinary methods. Perhaps some of your readers would like to have a hand in putting up such a room. We do not lack workers, but we do lack resources. A room can be erected for £60, or even less, excluding, of course, the cost of the land.

A little money out here goes a very long way. Thus 4s. to 5s. per month will feed, clothe, and educate a child in one of our boarding-schools. From 12s. to 20s. per month will enable us to put on a catechist or pastor. It is true they cannot do much more than exist on this, but they are willing to do their work, and right nobly they do it, even at such a salary. Who would like to set a pastor or catechist to work out here? Some £12 a year will do this. Then a chapel can be built for little more. £20 will put up a very comfortable place, as places go out here. These facts are very inviting. The cost of one dinner party per year will do grand things out here. I, or one of my brethren in this mission, will guarantee that any funds entrusted to us are employed to the greatest advantage.—Yours in the King's service, Harold T. Wills.

C.M.S., Trevandrum, Travancore, December.

[Address.]

Trevandrum, Dec. 17, 1892.

To H. T. Wills, Esq., M.A., B.Sc., F.G.S.

Revered Sir,—It is with the most sincere pleasure that we Hindus and others are here assembled to-day to bid you a hearty welcome to our city, the scene of your future labours. Despite individual differences of opinion in certain ultimate questions, perhaps insoluble to unaided human intellects, it cannot but be a source of endless strength to all seekers after God and his righteousness to have, in their midst, in these days of advancing secular education, a living example of eminent intellectual attainments and earnest devotion to religion—a harmonious embodiment, in fact, of ever growing knowledge and ever growing reverence. Your fame having preceded you, we have been anxiously looking out for your arrival ever since the announcement of your appointment to this station in the full hope of having then in our midst, in your revered person, such an example of culture and faith for us to follow and imitate. From all that we have heard of you, we have not the least doubt that in you we will find, whether Hindu or Christian, a sympathetic friend in our own earnest struggles after truth and holiness, and an enlightened guide in our humble endeavours to reconcile the cool reasonings of the head with the ardent aspirations of the heart.

It does not require, indeed, any extraordinary insight to perceive that the spiritual needs of the times are not the same as those of a few decades back. It is not so much against the superstitions of unfortunate ignorance, we believe, the heat of the fight has now to rage as against the supercilious superficiality of pretended wisdom, with all its train of selfish pleasure-seeking—undermining not merely the common foundations of all religions but the universal principles of morality itself. It is time, therefore, to merge all differences of creed and to show against the common enemy a united front, armed with true culture and catholic sympathy. Fully hoping, as we do, to find in your profound and varied scholarship, and your equally profound and large-hearted devotion, those much-needed equipments for successful leadership in the struggle, we beg to express our sincere gratification at the choice the good London Missionary Society has made, and to bid you a hearty welcome to our city.

Praying that the God of all nations may in his grace grant you all strength and guidance in your noble work, and crown that work with success,

We subscribe ourselves, revered Sir,
Your friends and well-wishers,
Signed by SOONDRAM PILLAY, M.A.,
Professor of Philosophy in H.H. the Maharajah's English College, and some 100 others.

BIBLE TRAINING INSTITUTE, GLASGOW.

THE Bible Training Institute, which has found a home at 1, Blythswood Square, was opened last week, many of the influential clergymen of the city and others interested in Christian work attending. In the absence of Mr. J. Campbell White, Mr. J. S. Napier presided, and explained that the formation of such an institute had long been thought desirable. Mr. Moody had publicly recommended that such a home should be instituted, and the Chairman was happy that the desire had now ripened into a reality. The institute was formed with one express intention—the educating of young men and women who were willing to consecrate their services to their Maker. Already they had had many applicants, and twelve had been chosen in the meantime. The gentlemen immediately connected with the institute were confident it would be a blessing to many, and would lead to a larger increase in the spread of the Gospel. They had been especially fortunate in having for their superintendent Mr. Anderson, who had been ever ready to further Christian work. That gentleman had been carrying on the Bible teaching in the Christian Institute two evenings every week, and he was gratified to know that there was an attendance of 300 nightly. Finally the Chairman had to say he was glad to see within that room men and women representative of the different classes of church life, but specially representative of the eager spiritual life amongst them.

Mr. Galloway having pointed out the desirability of having such an institute in Glasgow for the training of young men, Mr. Anderson said they had calculated that the evening classes would be attended by 30 or 40, but instead 330 young men were enrolled. Already there had been 30 applications by students to get boarded in the premises in which they were now assembled, and 12 of these had been selected to begin the work.—Daily Mail.

Mission to Night Cabmen.

THE thirty-first annual report of this special branch in connection with the London City Mission speaks of patient, persevering work, carried on night by night amongst this class of the London toilers for bread. Some of them have regular customers, others have not. In the cab trade there are the day men, the long day men, and the night men. The latter have the worst side of the cab work, and are brought into touch with much wickedness of various kinds. Great ignorance of holy things has been found amongst them. The night men have two faithful missionaries, who converse with them in their cabs while waiting for a "fare," seek them out in the shelters and their other haunts, and strive to win them to a better life. They also explain to them God's way of salvation, and plead with them not to reject their only way of escape, and to attend a place of worship on Sundays. The mission halls draw many with their bright services and plenty of singing.

As some of the night men are seventy years of age, their opportunities of hearing what is good are lessening fast. There is great need for help in this interesting and blessed service. Communications should be made to Miss E. Hebert, Elmside, The Common, Redhill.

MISS WESTON reports that last year no less than 4,694 pledges were taken by herself and helpers in Devonport and Portsmouth alone.

A MISSIONARY PARTY.—The steamship by which Drs. Morison, Cousland, and McPhun crossed the Pacific Ocean from Vancouver to Shanghai carried some twenty missionaries bound for different Eastern fields, mostly China. They were of various denominations—Society of Friends, Independent, Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Church of England. Dr. Morison describes their intercourse as delightfully brotherly and mutually stimulating. They had Bible readings and "testimony meetings" daily. "It would have been impossible to say what each one was ecclesiastically; but, spiritually, it was clear that we were all one in Christ."

THE GOSPEL OF THE DAY.

"TRUST is born of fear; and fear is born of sin. How can I, who have sinned against God, draw near to Him? Till that question is answered God is but a terror to me. There stands the fact of my sin—all clear and naked in the sight of God. What can He do with it? Hush it up? Make light of it? Then I could not trust that love; my own sense of righteousness would suspect and condemn a love that made light of my sin. Love may pity; love may weep; but true love cannot hush up and hide my sin. Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. My sin is not hidden. It is brought out into the very face of heaven and hell; and there its penalty is met and satisfied. God Himself hath for ever met and silenced the voice that cried against me—redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, now hath God declared his righteousness for the remission of sins."

Religion means Service.—I pray you, by that agony and passion, by that death and burial, by all that life and death of the Saviour, have no other thought of religion than this—it means service, or it means nothing. Of all heresies there is no heresy more deadly than the notion that Jesus Christ has come into this world only, or even chiefly, to save us from hell and to take us to Heaven when we die. He has come to save us from the hell of our own selfishness; He has come to take us now and here into the heaven of doing good . . . He made you a man, and redeemed you at infinite cost for doing good. That is your destiny, your calling and election—to do good, to bless the world about you. If nobody is the better for you, how can you hope to get to Heaven? If you do not set yourselves to bless other people, what door can you get in at? "I was hungered, and ye gave Me no meat." It will be a poor thing for us to plead then that we thought religion meant singing hymns and feeling happy. "I was thirsty, and ye gave Me no drink; I was naked, and ye clothed Me not; a stranger, and ye took Me not in; sick and in prison, and ye visited Me not." It will not avail us then to say that we did not believe in that kind of religion. There is no other. The religion that fails me at the Judgment Day will not help me anywhere else; that which Jesus Christ, the Judge, has so commended is the only religion we can afford to have. I do not think the subscription list will count for much that day; doing good by proxy will not greatly serve us. Helpfulness, service, blessing others, that is the very heart of Christianity. Service is the very end and proof of our salvation.

The Loneliness of Christ,—"Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say? Father, save Me from this hour. But for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify thy name." What was this sudden spasm, so intense, so intolerable, that Heaven's pity burst through the veil, and the Father Himself gladdened and glorified the Son?

It could not have been the agony and shame of the crucifixion. The very bravest man that ever lived was our dear Lord and Master, the great Captain of our salvation. That Cross had no terrors for Him. He despised it—looked down upon it and all its shame—despised it as a thing that could not affright Him nor cause Him to falter for one moment in his purpose. But something in that approaching hour filled Him with unutterable grief and fear. . . . We call to mind the mystery of suffering in the garden of Gethsemane, when He was exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death. . . . An anguish beneath which it is not too much to say He would have died had not an angel appeared from heaven strengthening Him. On the Cross, as the mother and the loved disciple leave Him, there comes that which he had dreaded with such exceeding grief and fear. There comes a darkness over all the heavens, and out of the depths there rings a cry as of one cast out and hidden from the Divine Presence, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken Me?" Let us remember that there was a power of suffering in Christ which, alas! we cannot know. Sin has deadened and numbed us to the favour of God, and to the consciousness of guilt. But in the holy nature of Christ think what guilt meant—the awfulness and hell of it! Think, again, that even amongst us, dulled and insensible as we are to guilt, we can think of no greater grief, no keener anguish, than for innocence to be treated as guilty, to be condemned, to have the faces that have looked with love and trust and gladness turned away and hidden. To Him—the living and naked conscience of the world—what could Scriptures like these mean? "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." "He hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin." "He bears our sins in his own body on the tree." "He hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." This was the dreaded darkness; this that awful loneliness.

The above are quotations from "The Gospel of the Day," a new book by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse (G. H. Kelly). We have given them at length not only because we rejoice in their Evangelical and practical tone, but in order to express our gratification in finding so true a ring in them. That such methods of stating truth are becoming unpopular is well known. When one who commands so large a circle of readers writes of such themes in a manner at once so clear and interesting, we must express the hope that his little book may have a wide circulation.

Not that we could equally commend all that the book contains. In his treatment of our Lord's Temptation we think Mr. Pearse has allowed himself far too much liberty. Statements like the following cannot be admitted:—"From this moment (i.e. after his baptism) the life of Jesus is transformed. No more the carpenter dwelling in the obscurity of Nazareth, He at once becomes the Christ, the Anointed of God. At that hour there was revealed to Him the fact of his Messiahship; of the great work that lay before Him; and the fact of his Divine relationship. . . . Let us think of this Divine revelation coming in upon the mind of Jesus, overwhelming Him with wonder and awe. . . . Well might He seek retirement rightly to consider this revelation, and by communion with the Father to surrender Himself utterly for this sublime service." (The italics are the author's.)

We regard it as a serious mistake so to speak of the person of our Lord as though all mystery concerning Him were explained. Beyond the statement that "Jesus increased in wisdom and in stature, and in favour with God and man" (Luke ii. 52), we know nothing. The fact related concerning Him when twelve years old, and his memorable words, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business" (Luke ii. 49), seem contrary to the statement quoted above. Nor can it be properly said that Jesus sought the retirement of the wilderness in order to consider the revelation. Mark says "the Spirit driveth Him" (Mark i. 12). We are not criticising for the sake of criticism. The matter involved is serious. On all matters touching the person of our Lord we need to say as much, and no more, than Scripture says.

After uttering this word of caution, we commend the book, and trust it may find a large number of thoughtful readers. W.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

NOT because he is lovely does the mother love her child, but because he is a living part of herself—the child of her heart, a fraction of her own nature.—Herder.

NOW is the time for play; let the children have it. Those shoulders are too little to carry a burden, that brow is too young to be wrinkled, those feet are too sprightly to go along at a funeral pace.

Beneficial as sports are when used in moderation, they are injurious when pursued at the expense of a higher purpose, or when they are welcomed as an escape from duty rather than as a help in doing it. —John Palmer.

How imperative is the call to Christ's people to sweep away the reproach of neglecting these boys and girls, who will one day have the interests of Church and State in their keeping, either to conserve or to destroy.—Dr. Barnardo.

The make-believe of doll life seems to open a little girl's mind to the care and tenderness that will one day be demanded of her by the live dolls laid in her bosom. It is the miniature of a wider interest and deeper solicitude.—S. S. Chronicle.

There is no child explicable apart from his parentage. The foundations of one generation are in all respects laid in the antecedent generation. In an important sense the boy begins to live when his father begins to live.—C. H. Parkhurst, D.D.

Is it not too much the habit to relegate religious instruction to the governess? "I am too busy, dear, this evening; Miss So-and-so will hear you say your prayers." Too busy! What must be the impression made on that child's mind?—Dr. Francis Pigou.

How beautiful, how impressive it is to see a mother cherish her children! How much she does with her heart and her eye to control them, how little with her hand. There is no place for passion in her little circle; patience controls it; love hallows it.

Lord Shaftesbury's best legacy to London was the Ragged School Union, an association whose business it is to lend a helping hand to every ragged school in the metropolis, to strengthen the weak ones, and to promote new schools in districts where they are required.

Our Lord was in the habit of watching children as they played in the street or in the field, and they, on their part (we can hardly doubt it), welcomed with smiles and shouts, and laughter, his kindly presence whenever He appeared among them.—Rev. Gordon Calthrop.

Letters to the Editor.

FATHERHOOD AND SONSHIP.

Dear Sir,—Referring to some remarks in your last impression on a recently published sermon by Dr. Dale, and believing, as I do, that incorrect views respecting the Fatherhood of God are the most fruitful source of the numberless errors of the present day, may I be allowed to offer a few observations for the guidance of any who may be exercised by these divers and strange doctrines?

1. The truth that all men are by creation, in a general sense, the sons of God, is undisputed, and clearly stated in Scripture. Its meaning is unmistakable, and need not be further dwelt upon.

2. Beyond this, the Socinian of course openly maintains that likeness to the Divine character is the only claim to such a title as son of God, and that Jesus, the perfect man, was only entitled to it by courtesy.

3. Further, to limit the idea to "that ethical and spiritual sonship which implies the actual realisation of the life of God in character and conduct," is a step not much in advance of the conception of the Socinian; though it is to be hoped that the author quoted would admit (which a Socinian would not) that that life of God is organic and not evolved. [It is evident throughout Dr. Dale's sermon that he not only admits but affirms this.—Ed.]

4. But to speak of the sonship of believers in Christ as being similar in kind to that of the "children of the wicked one," and the "means of impregnation" as being the same in each case, viz. the obedience of faith to their respective heads, is a solution which I submit plunges us into errors far worse than those which it is proposed to combat. It likens the incarnation of the Son of God, by the power of the Highest (in kind), to the diabolic possession of the Serpent, and the sanctification of the Spirit (in method) to the malignant infusion of sin into our nature, by the suggestions of Satan; and limits the spiritual change in the believer to the restoration of the image of Emmanuel to its place, in lieu of that of Diabolus.

5. Where, then, is the Regeneration of John iii.? Is that mystic and unique action of the Holy Spirit of God to be ignored, whereby those who receive Christ have the right, power, or high privilege of becoming sons of God—not by courtesy, not by attainment, not by moral and spiritual character, but by actual new birth, and are made members of the family of God, not by metaphor, or Oriental imagery, but by the reception of a new and heavenly nature conferred on them by the operation of the Almighty Spirit, to which there can be no parallel in earth or hell?—Yours very faithfully,

Rich. H. Hill.

SACRAMENTALISM.

Sir,—I rejoiced to read the paragraph on this subject in last week's Christian. I have long perceived that the memorial service of the Last Supper is becoming more and more a "fetish," a thing to be worshipped! Like as the brazen serpent became an object of adoration (and was therefore destroyed), so is this Christian ceremony become with many distinctly idolatrous, though intended, I presume, by the heavenly Founder to be a simple reminder of Him, as the atoning sacrifice for sin.

It is written of nowadays as the most solemn of all services, the most sacred of seasons, the most holy act of devotion, and such like. Why? Did our Lord call it so? Did He say that an especial grace would be bestowed on this devotional act more than on any other? Did Paul say so? He warned that punishment would fall on those who by their ill-behaviour showed an unworthy spirit when the Christians met together to eat of the bread and drink of the wine (called by our Lord the fruit of the vine); but surely he would have done the same had the like levity, greediness, and ill-behaviour shown itself at a gathering for prayer only, or some other religious meeting.

No rules seem to have been given as to how often the memorial service should be held,—whether once a year as the Feast of the Pentecost, or frequently,—either by our Lord or his Apostles. Now it appears to be the object of an increasing church party to cram as many "celebrations" as possible into every month of the year, however inappropriate, apparently, the occasions.

Can it be denied that a service that should be one of simple loving obedience is becoming, in many instances, an act of positive idolatry through the influence of unjustifiable ecclesiastical pretensions, leading many far away along the crooked road of error, who will never come back to the straight paths of truth? Yours faithfully,

J. H. F

RAILWAY SERVANTS.

Sir,—May I trespass on your valuable space to call the attention of Christian shareholders to the continual long hours of railway servants, in spite of the recent accident when the signalman fell asleep? I have received only this morning a letter from a Christian railway guard. He is a widower, with six children; his eldest daughter is ill and not fit for service. I wrote urging him to take her to a doctor. This is his reply:—

I will do all I can for my child as soon as she comes home, but I leave home this week at 8 a.m., and I do not return home again till 11.30 p.m.

This is 15½ hours! If he complains to the company he will be told to leave, though he has been in their employ more than twenty years!

The signalmen generally are better off with their eight hours a day, but even they often have double duty if a mate suddenly falls ill. In their case with double work comes generally double pay, but the guards get nothing extra. I wish the companies generally knew more how to value the hundreds of Christian men they employ. On one line I know for certain there is a Christian man in every signal box; and in several more than one, and these are to a man total abstainers! What a protection this is to the public! Yours faithfully.

Highbury. A. R.

HOW SHALL WE GUIDE OUR BOYS?

Dear Sir,—At the close of the Christmas holidays no doubt there are many perplexed Christian parents who would be thankful if some discussion was awakened in your pages as to how to guide our boys with regard to amusements, etc.

I wish some parents who have had a whole family grown up unto the Lord, according to promise, would tell us whether they kept their boys entirely away from all Christmas gatherings for young folk, or if they permitted them to choose for themselves; at the same time, as Christian parents, giving their own reasons for abstaining from scenes where there might be round dancing or acting, if such were their views.

These things are now being so universally introduced into schools, that it seems a question of increasing difficulty to keep our children from being drawn into the prevailing worldliness of the day.

But which line of action has generally proved most successful in turning out manly, earnest, Christian men? To give them, as boys, a certain amount of choice as regards parties, or to steer clear of children's parties altogether? With girls my own opinion is the latter, but with boys the course is not so clear. Boys must see life more fully than girls, and a parent fears if the bow is too tightly drawn with boys lest the after rebound should be greater.

But will not some parents give their experience whose boys have one and all "grown up in their youth" for the Lord?—Yours faithfully,

An Anxious Mother.

KRIKORIAN MISSION, AINTAB.

Miss Krikorian, who returned to her work last autumn, writes:—I found on my return that the two ragged schools had been carried on very successfully in my absence under my father and Mrs. Shepard. About eighty children, from six to fifteen years of age, are learning about Christ, and telling of Him to their parents at home, and in this way some are brought into the fold. Our elder children go round the city and find old and young women who do not know how to read, and teach them the "Wonderful Words of Life."

I commenced to hold district meetings in three different parts of the city on Nov. 15. At first we had but a few women in these meetings, now we have about 100 in one, eighty in the second, and forty in the third. The most interesting is the one we hold on Sunday mornings. It is attended by both men and women. It is an uncommon thing for this country that men should attend a meeting conducted by a lady. Some of these men are given to drinking; one of them has given up the drink, and I understand he has not tasted it for the past five weeks, whereas he had scarcely passed a day without it for thirteen years. He attends the church quite regularly now, and I hope that others will soon follow his example.

A good deal of my time is spent for the Y.W.C.A. Last week, in various meetings, I spoke to about 600 people about Jesus their Saviour, and precious souls were converted to God.

The object of my visit to London, and of my medical training there, was to preach the Gospel in a wider sphere, which, by the grace of God, I am able now to do. I am in great need of a helper in midwifery who would volunteer for Turkey and for Christ.

[Communications respecting Miss Krikorian's work will be received by Mr. J. McDonald, Exeter Hall, London. W.C.]

WORK AMONG THE POOR.

ROTHERHITHE.

I have read with deep personal interest your paragraph on the great poverty and distress of Rotherhithe. I have for nearly twenty years carried on a mission there, and can endorse your statements fully. I may say the spiritual darkness equals the poverty. I have found the best way to relieve distress is to give relief work. For two years we had about a hundred men daily, each working two hours, at mat making. We have now given that up, as we could not dispose of the mats, but we endeavour to find work for the relief we give, to prevent pauperising the people, which is the worst injury that can be done in a poor neighbourhood, except, of course, in the case of the sick.

If your readers will send any donations for the Rotherhithe poor, who are all entreating for coals, I can pledge myself to see them rightly distributed. Our relief funds are nearly exhausted, so that we cannot do the things that we would.

M. Barclay.

WILLESDEN.

This morning I have been visiting among the poor in the vicinity of my church—poor, permit me to say, who have not become beggars, and who for very shame cannot parade their wants before even those who would perhaps help them. Many of these I found without fire, without food.

John Smith (I will call him, though that is not his name), a steady, honest fellow, has been out of work for four months. His wife, a worthy woman, has kept the home going by working in a laundry. Owing to the late inclement times, she has stood at the wash-tub, her feet frozen to the board on which she stood. She is now ill with a violent cold. Is it to be wondered at?

Henry Brown (another fictitious name), a butcher, unable to work at his trade through ill-health. I was just in time to save the woman's sewing-machine from being taken away (after £4 had been paid upon it), because five weeks were in arrears. With this she is able to work, so as to provide a scant supply of bread for a family of five. Here, too, I found no fire, no food; only tears, heart-breaking, and bitter cold.

These are only two cases out of a hundred visited last week, and forty this week. I am in despair, and can only pray to my Father, and plead with my fellow-men. May I, through The Christian, ask its well-to-do readers to help me? Any money or goods sent to my Church Treasurer, Mr. Smart, Mansfield Villa, Church End, Willesden, or to myself, will be thankfully acknowledged.

R. Taylor Warren,
Pastor, Willesden Independent Church.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The workers of this mission in and around St. Giles' find themselves sorely pressed by the poverty and destitution. During the recent severe weather great distress was felt, and even now there are large numbers suffering keenly from lack of work and sickness. Every effort is being made to help really deserving cases, the circumstance in each instance being carefully inquired into.

The three following cases which came before us in one morning last week are simply typical of the daily demands on our sympathy and help. We greatly need liberal support in order that we may extend in such cases the aid so urgently required:—

A girl looking very hungry and wretched came to one of our breakfast rooms. She had a sad letter from her mother, who said the children were without food, and that her husband was ill with consumption. Would we help her and them? The bearer of the note was fed at once, and the wretched home was visited. Necessary food and coals, etc., were provided at once, and within a very little time after the delivery of the note food and warmth were supplied. Even the child who had gone out without breakfast to the Board School was brought home and fed. Blankets were also sent to cover the sick man, who had only a sheet and his coat over him this very cold weather.

A very poor family was found in one of the worst parts of St. Giles'. Three children out of six had died within a very short time of the fever, and the poverty and wretchedness were extreme. This family were provided with food, boots, and other necessaries.

A girl was brought into the office who had fallen out of work. As she could get no employment she had gone on the streets. We admitted her into one of our Women's Homes, where it is to be hoped she will be temporally and spiritually benefited, as many others have been. Wm. Wheatley.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

MR. RICHARD CADBURY has become president of the Birmingham Y.M.C.A. for 1893.

From various parts of New York State come reports of blessing on recent special services.

A new Association, founded lately at Grand Forks (N. Dakota), has already 200 members.

Mr. R. D. Cringle, late of Highbury and a worker at the Camden Town Association, has been appointed secretary at Walsall.

The St. John Association, New Brunswick, held lately a series of mass meetings, which were greatly blessed to young men.

The Saffron Walden Association, a young but already vigorous one, has just opened a new building free of financial burden.

Rev. E. P. Marvin has just closed a series of meetings with great blessing in Syracuse, and also in the Y.M.C.A. of Oneida, N.Y.

In Illinois the State Normal Association had a large number of professed conversions, and is among the first in the interest taken in Bible study.

The Derby Association has since the opening of its new building made a bold advance in many directions. Amongst other things a new magazine has been started.

At the college Bible-class conducted by President Hyde, of Bowdoin, the great doctrines and modern theological problems are taken up in the light only of Scripture teachings.

The last report of the Alabama executive committee shows that there are sixteen city and town associations, five college branches, and six men's prayer meetings regularly maintained in the State.

Mr. R. D. Thomas, of Bangor, has arranged for a tour of the Zulu Christian Choir among the Y.M.C.A.'s in North Wales, and expects, as a result of the interest awakened, to form a number of new associations.

Mr. Hind Smith recently visited the Oxford Y.M.C.A., and delivered an account of his tour round the world to a crowded audience. The secretary stated that there were now 600 members in the Oxford Association.

A few friends of the old-established Association at Islington have generously removed the financial deficit which so long encumbered its operations, and the committee has recently been considerably strengthened with a view to enlarged work.

The last statement of the Minnesota executive committee gives the following as the field of the Association in that State: Two thousand college students, 20,000 railroad men, 20,000 woodsmen, 100,000 young men in small towns, 100,000 young men in cities.

The Lydd Y.M.C.A. committee have given up their house and premises, retaining only one large room for spiritual work. The Bible classes and evangelistic meetings have been much blessed, and the number of those attending has greatly increased.

A very successful start has been made by the Hendon Y.M.C.A. In the course of the last twelve months a dozen new associations have been formed in London and the suburbs. They are small, but are doing good work amongst young men. Only two of the metropolitan associations have lapsed during the past year.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams and Mrs. George Hitchcock held a reception at Stafford Rooms, Titchborne-street, Edgware-road, W., on Wednesday evening last week. The newly-appointed secretary, Mr. Basil Hewer, was warmly received, showing that already he has won the confidence and esteem of those among whom he has been called to labour in this old-established centre of usefulness.

Mr. Holmes, Y.M.C.A. missionary, writes that the week of prayer has been observed for the first time in Alexandria. The meetings have been well attended, hearty and helpful, and it will probably be the beginning of future united meetings for Christians of the various churches. The meetings have been held in the Soldiers' Institute. The Thursday meeting was arranged for the German and Arabic speaking Christians. On other evenings the proceedings were in English. It is probably the first time that so many Christians have been gathered together here.

CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER. — At Mr. Meyer's P.S.A. meeting last Sunday afternoon there were present over 280 bona-fide working men. These men are getting up a benefit society, and are also very earnest in temperance work.

MR. WILBURN F. COPELAND, in an elaborate calculation (admitted by trade organs to be fair), computes the annual drink bill of the United States to amount to £1,200,000,000, that being the cost of the liquor actually consumed, and excluding altogether indirect loss of every kind.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES.

THE report of the Bromley Y.W.C.A. shows a good year's work. Shaftesbury House, the new home opened during the year, has proved most valuable for young women far from home. The whole work of the branch has lately been much blessed.

A series of monthly meetings for the deepening of spiritual life are being held in connection with the Y.W.C.A., Blackburn. Amongst the speakers have been Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, Revs. T. G. Williams, E. W. Moore, J. G. Mantle, T. Lancaster, and J. B. Figgis. It is very pleasing to see the crowded meetings, and the great interest aroused, and we earnestly pray that the movement may be made a means of awakening and blessing to the town.

AMERICAN NOTES.

THE acquittal of Professor Briggs by the New York Presbytery is followed by a series of agitations. The prosecutors will appeal to the General Assembly. Professor Smith was condemned by another Presbytery for similar teaching to that of Dr. Briggs. Much wisdom is needed in these days to cultivate a large heart while walking in the narrow way.

The McGlynn episode is still the subject of inquiry. If he did not apologise, then, as is supposed to be the case, Mgr. Satolli backed down, and with him Leo XIII. No censure has been passed upon the rebellious priest; he refused to go to Rome, and, figuratively speaking, he kicked the Pope into the Tiber. McGlynn has certainly the best of it. A number of Protestant ministers are to give him a public reception to thank him for his championing the cause of religious liberty.

While stirring events were daily transpiring within the Romish Church, another movement is seen at work in those who are leaving. The last notable who has renounced Catholicism is no less a person than Dr. Merwin Marie Snell, lecturer on comparative religions in the Catholic University of Washington, also private secretary to Bishop Keane, the rector of the college. Dr. Snell is a learned writer on Catholic theology, heretofore loyal to its creeds and its commands. His abrupt repudiation of that faith is startling. He has taken to himself a wife, the daughter of a Presbyterian minister. He claims that his study of religion made it impossible for him to remain longer an honest communicant of the Roman Church. Father O'Connor has received Father Tobin into his mission. The latter has publicly confessed Christ.

WATER STREET MISSION, NEW YORK.

THE new report of Jerry McAuley's old Water-street Mission, New York, gives particulars of the conversion and Christian life of many of the trophies of God's grace that have been redeemed through the agency of the Mission. The following will serve as a specimen:—

"J. M. W.—This brother came into 316, Water-street, October 20, 1890. He was crazy with drink, and was really on his way to the river to end his unhappy life. A sweet song floated out over the transom that his dear old mother used to sing in his happy boyhood days. It was this:—

"'There is a fountain fill'd with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains.'

"He came in and took the back seat. When the invitation was given he came up to our Mercy Seat, and there poured out his sorrow to Jesus. He heard his cry and gave him a new heart that night. For twenty years this man had been a drunkard; he had served in the United States Army for thirteen years, and had finally been discharged for 'chronic alcoholism.' The sentries were ordered to keep him out of the yard. To-day he is a Missionary in the Brooklyn Navy Yard under the care of the Seamen's Friend Society, and God is giving him good success."

The superintendent of the work is Mr. Hadley, himself a fruit of the work.

ABORIGINAL WEST INDIANS.—In a letter to the directors of the London Missionary Society Rev. J. L. Green gives an account of a visit paid to Rev. J. Ketley, in Georgetown, Demerara, by twenty aboriginal Indians, led by a converted Portuguese. They had travelled over 1000 miles, and had taken seven weeks in coming. They sought Christian baptism, and pleaded for a missionary, guaranteeing a congregation of 1000 people. They have already erected a church.

IRISH NOTES.

THE annual collection on behalf of foreign missions was taken up in all the Presbyterian churches last Sunday.

A temperance mission has been held in the Congregational church, Armagh, in which Dean Chadwick and several other ministers took part.

A Methodist council has been established in Dublin, and the first general meeting was held last Friday evening, when the subject of a Dublin City Mission was considered and generally approved.

The Dublin Visiting Medical Mission has had a large measure of success during the year it has been in operation. Already over 500 patients, many of whom were Roman Catholics, have been ministered to.

Without intermission since the close of the Moody-McNeill mission in Belfast, special weekly Gospel meetings have been held in the Ballymacarrett district of the city in the various churches. The interest in the effort is still unabated.

Gospel missions have been held at Manorhamilton, co. Leitrim, by Rev. H. W. Gason; at Corlispratten, by Rev. Henry Ball; at Ballinamallard, by Mr. Elliott; at Glencar, by Rev. Hugh Moore; at Ballyshannon, by Mr. B. Jackson,

SCOTTISH NOTES.

THE Salvation Army had two large and enthusiastic meetings last week in the Waterloo Rooms, Glasgow, under the presidency of Commissioner Howard.

Rev. W. W. Peyton, of Broughty Ferry, preached his farewell sermon last Sunday evening. He has been compelled to retire from the active pastorate through ill-health.

The jubilee has been held of the pastorate of Rev. James Goold, of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Newton Stewart. Mr. Goold was presented with 200 guineas and an address.

The Dundee Advertiser states that Rev. D. Fairweather, of Kinfauns Free Church, has informed some members of his congregation that he intends to decline the call from Regent-square Presbyterian Church, London.

The Aged Christian Friend Society of Scotland, through the generous help of an Aberdeen friend, is able to offer to 100 aged Christians of both sexes annual pensions of £6. The society have eight cottage homes near Colinton.

At the annual meeting of the Scottish Protestant Alliance, the growth of Romish influence in this realm was strongly commented on. The speakers lamented that both political parties lend countenance to the clamours of the Roman Catholics.

At a Scottish National Temperance Convention in the City Hall, Glasgow, Principal Rainy counselled temperance men not to turn their backs on local option because of plausible objections to it; where secured it would be the lever to other reforms.

A meeting on behalf the C.M.S. was held last week in the Royal Hotel, Edinburgh. Rev. E. Cyril Gordon, Uganda, and Rev. W. Morris, from East Africa, were among the speakers. The latter protested against the vile trade in spirits with the natives.

Col. Wroughton, of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, gave many interesting particulars of the work at a meeting last week in the Queen's Rooms, Glasgow. The Chairman Sir J. N. Cuthbertson, said the mission was not so well known in Scotland as it ought to be.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a mission being held at Sutton-in-Ashfield, Notts, by Mr. J. Brown.—For much blessing to rest upon six days' special mission services at Halstead, Kent, January 30 to February 4, and for the two young servants conducting for the first time.—A mother for the conversion of her three children, that they may be speedily brought into the fold of God.—For a mission by Mr. William Forbes at Stockton-on-Tees, to begin on Sunday next.—For special services this week at King Stanley, near Stroud, by Rev. A. Johnson and Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud, from Jan. 23 to 30.—For a mission to be held at the Hope Mission Hall, Merton, from Jan. 25 to 31, by Mr. Johnson, of the African Mission. — That God may abundantly bless the men being trained at Liverpool as missionaries for the Protestant Reformation Society. PRAISE: For blessing granted on a mission held by Colonel Jacob at Ball's Pond: for backsliders restored and sinners saved.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mrs. Baeyertz is now holding a mission at Cardiff.

Nottingham.—Special missions have been held in various chapels, with very gratifying results.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has concluded an interesting mission at Stretton-under-Fosse. The power of God seemed present to heal.

Loughborough (Notts).—Mr. W. Moyle, district evangelist, has conducted a fortnight's mission here with great success. Many have been brought out of darkness into light.

Mr. Charles Inglis is completing a most successful month's service at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. Great interest has been manifested and much blessing granted.

Manchester. — A week of special services has been held at Radnor-street with many tokens for good. The chapel has been crowded night after night, and many have professed conversion.

Nash Mills, Herts.—Mr. T. Goudie has finished a six days' mission in the Wesleyan Chapel. The meetings proved to be a time of refreshing to the members of the church, and several inquirers were dealt with. Mr. Goudie began a six days' mission at Twowaters Wesleyan Chapel on January 22.

The Lowestoft Fishermen have, since finishing at Buckhurst Hill, held a few days' mission in the Baptist Chapel, Cheam, and several, chiefly young men, professed conversion. These workers are the outcome of a revival some fourteen years ago at the Bethel, Lowestoft, where Mr. Johnson has for many years faithfully laboured.

Rev. C. H. Yatman is holding a series of Evangelistic services in the Union-square Theatre, New York. A transatlantic contemporary states that these services have been well attended by those who seldom go anywhere, and that Mr. Yatman's vigorous style of declaring the Gospel has been the means of blessing to many.

Mr. Richard Weaver, who is this week at the Wesleyan Chapel, Stratford, preached on Sunday evening in Belgrave Church, Halkin-street West, when a large number rose for prayer. Mr. Weaver has been asked to conduct an eight days' mission at this West-end church, which he hopes to do shortly, though the date is not yet fixed.

Capt. Dawson and Mr. Geo. Clarke continue with excellent results, under God's blessing, the Sunday afternoon services in connection with the Y.M.C.A., at the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth. Last Lord's Day both these gentlemen took part. Many still in the town, and many who have left it, owe their salvation to these earnest, interesting, and fruitful services.

Rev. J. W. Chapman has had an abundant entrance into Gospel work in Lincoln, the capital city of Nebraska. For twelve days he preached to great crowds, and large numbers expressed the desire to lead a new life. A writer in The Evangelist says that Mr. Chapman's preaching is clear, strong, striking, tender, and evangelical. His spirit is the gentle, loving spirit of the Master.

Mr. Bewley Weaver and his brother Frank are in the midst of a stirring mission at Mealsgate, near Carlisle. There have been many tokens of great blessing. "One gentlemen has had the joy of seeing a prodigal son as well as his two sisters give their hearts to God. Footmen, carters, colliers, farmers are being converted." The prayer meetings have been seasons of great power.

Mr. W. Harry Dawe has completed a two months' mission tour through Devonshire villages, and everywhere there has seemed to be an ear for the Gospel. Good numbers came to hear, and many accepted Christ as their Saviour. At some of the villages the magic lantern proved to be a great attraction. Many rarely seen at such a place were thus drawn in, and so heard the word of Life.

Mr. H. W. Brown.—A work of grace has been going on in the Market-street Church, Seattle, for a month under the labours of Mr. H. W. Brown, of Chicago, closely followed up by Pastor and Mrs. Read and an aroused church membership. Meetings have been held every night during the month, and Bible readings afternoons for three weeks. The house has been crowded most of the time; over fifty have been received into membership.

Ashford.—A successful mission, conducted by Mr. Newton Jones, in connection with the Ashford Sunday School Union, was brought to a close on Thursday last. While the services were mainly intended for children, not a few adults were also blessed. The result of the mission is already felt by the superintendents and teachers, and the remark of a superintendent to his school on Sunday is the echo of all: "If ever a Saviour's love was made manifest, it was last week to the boys and girls of our Sunday schools."

Mr. Matthew Burnett has completed an encouraging eight-days' Gospel Temperance Mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Weston-super-Mare. The total number of pledges is about 590. The evening meetings increased in attendance until at the last meeting on Sunday night the building was crowded out. Mr. Burnett came in touch with all classes by holding special meetings for Bands of Hope, police, postal and telegraph employés, various friendly societies, and by visiting the homes of the people whenever he had a minute to spare.

Lockerbie, N.B.—Mr. T. W. Canning concluded an eight days' mission here on Sabbath last, which has been much blessed in bringing many to decide for Christ, while Christians have also received blessing. The three ministers in the town co-operated. The first Sabbath evening the evangelist conducted the service and delivered an Evangelistic address in the U.P. Church. During the week the services were held in the Town Hall, and on Sabbath evening last in the Established Church. The meetings were well attended throughout. Mr. Canning began a series of evangelistic services in View Forth Church, Edinburgh, on Monday.

Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a week's mission in the New Willesden Hall, Willesden-lane, N.W., recently opened in connection with the Evangelistic Mission. Notwithstanding the trying weather, the attendances were good and increased each night. Souls were saved every evening. On Friday, the last day of the mission, when Mr. Lane told the striking story of his conversion, the power of the Spirit of God was marvellously manifested, and the vestry was crowded to the door with persons anxious about their souls. Those unable to gain admittance to the inquiry room were dealt with in the hall, and a really remarkable time of soul-winning was experienced, for which the workers are praising God.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has concluded a ten days' mission in Aldershot. From the first it was manifest that the mission was to mark an epoch in the spiritual history of the place. The congregations increased from night to night. Christians of all denominations were present, and helped to secure the interest and blessing. At first not many inquirers came out, but ere long the response became manifest, growing from night to night, till on the last evening upwards of forty were found seeking Christ. The congregation at the men's meeting on the second Sunday afternoon was the largest gathering of the kind ever seen in Aldershot, while on the same Sunday evening the Wesleyan church was filled with a congregation numbering upwards of a thousand. Nearly all stayed to the after meeting, which in its tone and spirit was most hallowed and fruitful.

MR. CAIRNS IN ASHTON.

Mr. G. R. Cairns has concluded a fortnight's mission in connection with the Albion Congregational Church and Sunday-schools, Ashton-under-Lyne. The services were inaugurated by a watch-night meeting on December 31. Each evening saw the interest deepening, and when the services were brought to a close it was found that over 200 persons had intimated their desire to live a Christian life. Almost all the denominations in the town are represented in this number.

A noticeable feature in connection with the mission is the number of young people who have been inquiring the way of salvation. For the past twelve months, united and incessant prayer has been offered for a work of the spirit among the youths and maidens of our schools. God has answered through the numbers whom the Spirit has touched.

On the first Sunday afternoon of his visit, Mr. Cairns addressed the Ashton P.S.A., a society numbering 1500 men. The chapel was crowded, and a deep impression made. On the second Sunday, Mr. Cairns again addressed a P.S.A. meeting on the occasion of their anniversary, at which about 3000 persons were present.

On the afternoon of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of each week, Bible Readings were held in the Methodist New Connexion Central Schools, and were well attended. The whole mission has been characterized by a deep earnestness and a quiet operation of the spirit, which has greatly rejoiced the workers.

A scheme of systematic visitation has been devised and put into operation, so that the result of the mission may be followed up by Christian sympathy and fellowship. J. S.

WEST LONDON MISSION.—A special Gospel mission is proceeding this week in Cleveland Hall. There will be a similar effort next week in Wardour Hall, and, after an interval, a fortnight's mission at Prince's Hall and St. James's Hall.

THE PASTOR HIMSELF may aid in the terrible work of killing the Sunday-school. Let him withhold his sympathy from the young men and women; let him forget, if he ever knew, the children's names and only visit the school as seldom as possible.

Personalia.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson has been lying somewhat seriously ill at Hull, whither he went on Saturday week to preach on the Sunday, but was taken ill on the journey.

Mr. G. R. Cairns sails from Liverpool on Feb. 8, per s.s. City of New York, to enter on work in America. His address will be 48, South Sheldon-street, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

Dr. A. T. Pierson was unable to preach at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday, as, owing to a severe cold, he had felt it right to go to Bournemouth for a brief rest.

Dr. James Spurgeon is, we are glad to hear, a little easier. The bulletins issued on Monday stated that he had "passed a good night, and has less pain and less fever this morning."

Dr. Bruce, who is expected home shortly, has almost completed the translation of the Old Testament into Persian. The work (says The Record) is highly spoken of by such competent judges as have seen it.

Bishop Edward Bickersteth, of Japan, is coming to England to gather recruits for his work. He purposed leaving his diocese at the end of the year and calling at his old mission at Delhi en route. He hopes to reach this country by Easter.

Rev. A. Wallace, D.D. of East Campbell-street, Glasgow, has, after nearl fifty years in the ministry, felt compelled to retire. His active and successful labours in past years, both as an evangelist and a temperance advocate, will be remembered by many.

Rev. R. and Mrs. Wallace, of Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ontario, Canada, are again in this country, and intend taking out a party of children to Canada in the early spring. Communications may be addressed c/o Mrs. Bilbrough, 92, Wellesley-road, Croydon.

Rev. R. J. Ward, late of St. Helen's, has been taking part in the great Decennial Missionary Conference in Bombay, attended by upwards of 600 missionaries of various denominations from all parts of India. He will shortly leave for his sphere of labour at Madras.

Dr. A. Thomson, of Rusholme Congregational Church, Manchester, who is about to celebrate his jubilee, has laboured in the city nearly 38 years, while for some years he has filled the chair of Hebrew in Lancashire College. "Few men," says Dr. Mackennal, "have rendered better service."

Professor Rendel Harris, of Cambridge, is about to re-visit the celebrated Catherine Convent of Mount Sinai, the source from which so many valuable manuscripts have already been obtained. It may be anticipated, therefore, that further important discoveries of moment to the Christian Church will be made.

John Newton.—The remains of this Christian poet will be removed this week from the crypt of St. Mary Woolnoth, London, for re-interment in the churchyard of Olney. The fact will interest all those to whom the hymns "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds," "Though troubles assail," "Glorious things of thee are spoken," and others of equal power and sweetness are precious.

Rev. John Stevens and his wife and daughters reached Shanghai on the evening of November 25, and were most cordially received by members of Union Church. A public reception was held in Astor Hall, December 2, which was thronged. Mr. Ponte presided, and an address of welcome was given by Professor Bonnell. Archdeacon Moule, and the Revs. W. Muirhead and J. Reid also spoke.

Mr. W. P. Hartley, treasurer of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society, and one of the most generous members of that communion, has just given £1000 to his workpeople at Aintree as their share of the year's profits of his business. It has sometimes been said that Christians who contribute large sums to Christian institutions are not equally liberal in the treatment of their employés; certainly Mr. Hartley is not open to that reproach.

The Death of Bishop Phillips Brooks.

Dr. Brooks, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Massachusetts, and one of the most brilliant pulpit orators in America, died on Monday morning from pneumonia. The loss of Bishop Brooks will be felt as profoundly in England as in the United States. He was one of the greatest pulpit orators of America; and was not only a big man mentally, but physically also, standing six foot five in his stockings. He was a most unconventional man both in and out of the pulpit. He preached in churches outside his own communion, and in his pastoral work would often draw upon himself sharp criticism by such action.

Obituary.

REV. THOMAS SEAVILL.

WE hear with much regret of the departure of this aged minister. Having lived some years in retirement, he was but little known to the present generation, but in past years he did good and useful service. Born at Deptford in 1814, he was converted under the ministry of Mr. Rees, at Crown-street, Soho. In 1834 he had the care of several chapels built at Swansea, Mumbles, and Newton, by Lady Barham. After some years' earnest work he enjoyed a season of rest at Bath (where he attended the ministry of Mr. Jay). Mr. Seavill then went to Wareham, where for he laboured fruitfully for seven years. Afterwards he was the means of building a chapel and opening a new work in Somerstown, where for many years he carried on most valuable and blessed work. Finally he laboured some years at Swanage, resigning at last on account of his health.

REV. ALEXANDER RODGER.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. Alexander Rodger, of Dalry Free Church, Edinburgh, at his residence, 36, Coates-gardens. Deceased, who was in his 71st year, had for many years been suffering from a chest complaint. He was ordained in 1847, his first charge being at Coldstream, where he remained for several years, and built up a considerable congregation. Mr. Rodger was afterwards called to Stockbridge, Edinburgh, when the first Free Church was erected in the district, and there again he was successful in raising around him a large congregation. In May, 1878, he was invited to take charge of Dalry Free Church, where he may be said to have died in harness, although for some time past he has been assisted in the work by Mr. Westwater. Mr. Rodger was a good classical scholar and an able preacher, and possessed a great amiability of character. He could hardly be said to have taken any prominent part in Church politics, but devoted himself quietly and faithfully to his work as a minister, his large working-class congregation at Dalry demanding all his energies.

CANON MONEY.

We hear with regret of the death on Wednesday week of Canon Money, whose name is known and honoured by Evangelical Churchmen all over the country. There were few more familiar figures in the Church Missionary Committee-room than he. He also took a warm and active interest in the Church Pastoral-Aid Society. He was one of the leading members of the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance; and, indeed, all Evangelical efforts found in him a warm and true-hearted friend. Canon Money was in his seventy-sixth year. As to his work at St. John's, Deptford, where he laboured for twenty-eight years, it is stated that the parish presents several social contrasts, but Canon Money worked assiduously amongst all classes. He set on foot many and varied organisations, and the people living in the slums, in the lower part of his parish, were the objects of his special care. He opened mission-rooms, engaged mission-agents, and provided services and meetings suited to their need. With them he was very popular; they recognised in him a faithful friend, and to-day there are many in the parish who remember with gratitude the good work he did amongst them.

MR. JOHN CARR, J.P.

Many who know something of the work at Great Queen-street Chapel, London, know the part taken by Mr. Carr, who has just passed away. One can scarcely imagine Great Queen-street Chapel without the kindly face of John Carr. Last Christmas morning he sat in his pew, apparently in his usual health. It was his last public appearance. Returning home, he was seized with influenza and acute bronchitis, and after a severe illness, lasting thirteen days, he passed away to eternal rest. Rev. W. E. Codling had a delightful interview with him a few days before his death, whilst his mind was perfectly clear. Asked, "Are you able to rest on Jesus Christ as your only hope?" he replied, "I am. He is my only Saviour. I have no other; I need no other." Mr. Carr was born at Macclesfield in the year 1825. His conversion he owed, under God, to the ministry of Samuel Romilly Hall. For thirty-five years he worshipped at Great Queen-street. As treasurer of the trust he engaged with great zeal and success in the work of reducing the enormous debt which existed some years ago on the Great Queen-street Chapel. This office he retained until his death.

MISS TANNER.

This devoted worker for Christ was called to her Saviour's presence on January 7. For many years her life has been laid out for the spiritual and temporal welfare of others. She had been the counsellor of many a young woman in her trials and difficulties, through the Gosport Branch of the Girls' Friendly Society, of which she was the life and soul. She was much interested on behalf of lads, and founded for their benefit an institute and a gymnasium. Of temperance she was an ardent supporter, and the Victoria Coffee-tavern at Gosport remains as a memento of her activity in this direction. A family of orphans called forth her energetic efforts, nor did she cease till all was provided for materially, and then led into the way of peace and safety. Indeed, many now testify that she was the means whereby they obtained spiritual life.

Entirely unsparing of herself, she had no thought of rest or food while the Master's work was unfinished. It is to be feared that this neglect tended to undermine her constitution. She had been suffering for above a twelvemonth, but this was a season of growing likeness to her Saviour. Even from her sick bed she directed many of her agencies for good. Bright, happy, and peaceful to the last, she conquered death and passed joyously into the light. Her Christian work will be continued by her attached cousin, Miss Gosset, who has already been her fellow-labourer for about eighteen years.

CONVENTION AT NEWCASTLE.

A UNITED conference for the promotion of spiritual life and the consideration of practical methods in work was held on Tuesday week, in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, Newcastle. "The privileges of the Christian Life" were expounded by Rev. F. E. Marsh, while Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke on "Christian Living." Such forms of effort as "Saturday evening socials," "The Sunday evening social hour," and "Lantern services" were dealt with and discussed by Revs. J. Judson, D. C. Ingram, and J. W. Bainbridge.

Rev. W. M. Hudson, speaking of the Y.P.S.C.E., asked how are we to deal with our young people so as best to instruct them in the truth; so as best to bring them together to a confession of Christ; so as best to help them into activity for Christ? The answer is:—The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour meets this question, and is a most satisfactory agency for properly carrying out the work. The objects of the Society are to instruct and to bring to open confession; to lead to active service the young people of the churches. "For Christ and the Church" is our motto, It is not a mutual improvement society nor a mutual admiration society. It is not a society to provide amusement for young people, but is a direct Christian agency to instruct young Christians to bring to conversion those who are not Christians, and to give every young believer something to do for Christ.

At the evening meeting Pastor Marsh spoke on "The Holy Spirit as the Liberator" and Rev. F. B. Meyer on "Filled with the Spirit for Service."

A Persian Convert's Confession.

REV. J. L. POTTER, of the American Mission at Teheran, Persia, relates the following incident:—

"An intelligent Moslem, who had received considerable Christian instruction, called one day, and after earnest conversation was invited to attend the meeting that evening. He did so, and the address being earnest and searching he was much affected. When the invitation was given for those to rise who desired prayer on their behalf, this man also arose. At the close of the meeting, when approached by one of the missionaries for conversation, he remarked, 'This is a bad custom you have: religion should be a private matter between a man and God.' Immediately he slipped out at the door and was gone.

"He called a few days later and said, 'I had no intention of rising in the meeting, but something pulled me up.' He was evidently deeply interested, but not ready to cut loose from the religion in which he had been brought up. After several earnest talks, he called again some weeks later, his face fairly beaming, and after a brief salutation, exclaimed, 'I can now say that Jesus is the Saviour.' His case is an interesting one. He is intelligent and of a very respectable family, and he will encounter much opposition in living a Christian life. Prayers are requested in his behalf."

THE PUYALLUP INDIANS.—Mr. J. M. Pamment writes from Tacoma, Washington State:—During the three months ending with December 31, we have gathered the Indian people every Sabbath for preaching and worship. We have about 150 adults and children, white and Indian. Many have acknowledged blessing and profit. We look and pray for blessing to the children. This is specially desirable, as consumption takes off so many of them. We have an inquirers' class among the older pupils, and shall be glad if your readers will remember this in their prayers. Very determined opposition to our work here has been offered by some of the Real Estate men and others of Tacoma, who have designs upon the Reservation.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

MR. R. COAD has concluded a good Gospel Temperance Mission in Bradford.

The result of a recent canvass of householders in Lewes, Sussex, on the question of closing of public-houses on the Sunday is as follows: For, 807; against, 204; neutral, 114.

At a meeting of the Edinburgh School Board last week, it was agreed that a special time should be set apart every month for systematic teaching of the subject of temperance, and for encouraging in the children the duty of total abstinence.

Through the efforts of a few earnest ladies, a Home for Inebriates has been opened in Sydney The best medical and other means are employed: but above all it is a Christian Home, and every effort is used to bring the poor victims of drink to the Saviour.

In an appeal from a decision by the stipendiary magistrate at Cardiff, a Divisional Court has decided that under the seventeenth section of the Licensing Act of 1874 the purchaser of beer in a shebeen is, as well as the seller, guilty of unlawfully dealing in beer.

His Grace the Duke of Argyll writes:—"I have not been able wholly to prevent public-houses from existing on my estates. In some peculiarly situated localities I have been able to do so; and I certainly believe the absence of them has had the best effect among the people."

The second of a series of lectures on Inebriety was delivered by Dr. Norman Kerr, Chairman of the British Medical Association Inebriates' Legislation Committee, on Tuesday week in the rooms of the Medical Society of London. The subject was, "The Relations of Inebriety to Insurance."

The Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission held its annual business meeting on the 11th inst. The general report stated that the new field of work which they had undertaken in visiting of members and of girls in the various restaurants, had been of a most encouraging nature.

A short time ago a resolution was passed by the Bermondsey Vestry to the effect that a reduction of the number of public-houses in the parish was necessary, and a memorial has been drawn up by the officials to be presented to the licensing magistrates, with a plan showing the locality of the licensed houses, which number 166.

The Presbyterian Church is moving in the direction of greater effort for the spread of temperance. The Newcastle Presbytery is taking the matter up, and urging the formation of adult and juvenile temperance societies in connection with all the churches. The Liverpool Presbytery is anxious for the work of the Synodical Committee on Temperance to be enlarged so as to include impurity.

"It is impossible," says the Duchess of Rutland, "for those who are acquainted with the deadly dulness that prevails in countless villages not to feel that the temptations offered by the alehouse to the tired labourer must be almost beyond our power to realise." Her fervent wish, "that every hamlet in our land possessed a public-house without the drink open to all, with no rules or regulations," will be echoed by many.

The London Daily News St. Petersburg correspondent says:—"In consequence of the demoralisation caused amongst the workmen in the mining districts of South Russia through the unrestricted sale of spirits to the miners by private individuals, the mining congress lately assembled at Charkoff has decided that the drink traffic in the mining districts shall in future be entirely centred in the hands of the Government officials."

More than 62 per cent. of the beer supplied by order of the medical officer at Bristol Workhouse was found never to have been given to the sick at all, but had been allotted by the guardians as payment for work done by healthy inmates engaged in outdoor and other work. The rate of expenditure upon intoxicants at Bristol has for a great many years been double the average of all the other workhouses in the United Kingdom. Upwards of six thousand pounds has been expended upon alcoholic stimulants at Bristol workhouse during the period covered by the last four Government returns.

A few weeks ago (writes Marco N. Popoff) we held a public meeting in the interests of the temperance cause in Sofia. The church was crowded to its utmost capacity, making an audience of about six hundred people, the majority of whom were liquor-drinkers. Many temperance songs were sung, and such topics as the following discussed: "We must work against intemperance," "The influence of the saloon on the home," "Our duty as a nation," "The competition of woman with the saloon-keeper," and "The loss and gain of total abstinence." For two hours and a-half the undivided attention of the audience was held, and at the close of the meeting twenty-one persons signed the pledge.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. J. C. Wharton, having been Vicar for fifty years, is resigning the benefice of Gilling, near Richmond, Yorks.

A very successful adult Bible-class is carried on at St. Mary's, Sheffield, and much blessing has lately been granted.

The Archdeacon of Essex pleads for some effectual means to help the farmers of the county, some of whom he declares are in a sad plight.

Mr. Alfred Baker, F.R.C.S., who has lately died in Birmingham at the age of seventy-eight, was an uncle of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

A new mission church, containing 400 sittings, all of which are to be free, is to be provided for the Albert Memorial parish, Harpurhey.

Over three hundred temperance sermons are to be preached at 190 churches in the diocese of Liverpool on "Temperance Sunday," 29th inst.

Rev. A. H. Kelk, of Jerusalem, reports:—"On Christmas Day I had the pleasure of receiving into the Church five Jews who confessed Christ in baptism."

The vacant rectory of Little Berkhampstead, Herts, will be filled by Rev. George Gibson, English Chaplain at Dieppe, and formerly curate of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields.

The Church of England Young Men's Society has now entered upon its Jubilee, and the Council are asking for help to enable them to develop and to extend its work.

The Earl of Stamford was present at the P.S.A. meeting at St. John's Mission Room, Hanley, on Sunday week, and delivered an address on the life of the late Bishop Fraser.

The Bishop of Ripon has appointed Rev. John R. Stratten, vicar of St. Paul's, Leeds, to the honorary canonry in Ripon Cathedral vacant by the death of Canon Edward Jackson.

Rev. T. Walker, of the C.M.S. Mission at Tinnevelly, addressed lately the Lay Workers' Union at the C.M.S. House on the work at Tinnevelly. His account of progress was remarkably encouraging.

It is interesting to note that on Sunday week the Rev. Samuel Smith, rector of Kingsdown, Sevenoaks, a well-known preacher in his time, and the oldest graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, entered upon his ninetieth year.

Mr. Eugene Stock and Rev. R. W. Stewart are expected to be back in England about April 12. After leaving Bombay Mr. Stock will visit in succession the Punjab, Calcutta, Madras, and Colombo. He will make a short stay in Egypt to settle some matters connected with the mission there.

The Canon Jackson Memorial Fund is making progress. As much as £3000 has already been subscribed, the contributors including persons in all ranks of life and of all shades of religious opinion. The noble work he did in Leeds will be commemorated by the addition of a "Jackson wing" to the Cookridge Convalescent Hospital.

The Archbishop of York's remarkable condemnation of Evening Communion has given rise to a correspondence in The Times. Amongst others the Bishop of Exeter writes to The Times in reference to the Archbishop's "strong discouragement of Evening Communion," in which he states some reasons which have led many bishops and leading Churchmen to a different conclusion.

The Council of the G.F.S. in the diocese of Winchester have received from Mrs. Harvey, of The Cliff, Shanklin, Isle of Wight, a munificent offer of a seaside convalescent home near Shanklin, standing in its own grounds of about two and a-half acres.

As one of the results of the recent Protestant Congress at Portsmouth, six clergymen of the Established Church united with their brethren of other denominations in partaking together of the Lord's Supper in the Presbyterian Church, Southsea, on the evening of Friday, January 6. An address was given before the Communion, and another after it, by clergymen. It is said to have been a very blessed season, and to have knit the members of different flocks closer together in brotherly love. These seasons of intercommunion will probably be held periodically.

It has been arranged to hold a ten days' mission in the churches of Chichester, from January 28 to February 7. The Bishop has addressed a pastoral letter to the people in Chichester, in which he says:—The mission is for all, and is good for all. Let no one think, "This mission is not for me. It is for the hardened in sin, the dissolute, the abandoned, the lost." My dear friends, the mission is indeed for them, and may the Holy Spirit enable the missioner to carry on his work of conversion and restoration! But the Word of God has a far wider range. Can any Christian say that he needs no improvement, no growth in grace, no help against besetting sin, no cleansing of the flesh and spirit, no advance in the way of holiness? If any be sincere in their profession they will long to draw nearer to God, to live more in His faith and fear, and to follow the example of Jesus Christ. To all such the mission will be welcome. . . . In this restless age there are some who are sore troubled by doubts which sap the very foundations of the faith. Never, surely, was unbelief more active; never was the Divine authority of Christ as an Infallible Teacher so assailed; never were the Holy Scriptures so attacked and undermined. It is within my knowledge that the teaching of missioners has been greatly blessed in meeting the unbelief of the times.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. M. E. Thomas, Trelech, has accepted the pastorate at Staithes, Yorkshire.

Mr. D. Macfadyen, son of the late Dr. Macfadyen, is doing a good work at St. Ives.

Rev. D. O. Davies, Llanelly, has accepted the pastorate at Gowerton, near Swansea.

Principal Morris, of Memorial College, Brecon, celebrated his 80th birthday on Tuesday week,

Rev. D. Davies, of Lytchett Minster, has accepted the pastorate at South Cheriton, near Templecombe.

Mr. A. Whittingham, of Brecon Memorial College, has accepted the pastorate at Dovaston and Wilcott.

The Free and Open Church movement, in a modified form, is making progress amongst Nonconformists.

On Sunday last Rev. W. J. Dawson preached at the Richmond Hill Congregational Church, Bournemouth.

Rev. J. Bamford, after eighteen years' ministry at Castle-street, Launceston, has accepted the pastorate at Newcastle-under-Lyme.

A new Congregational church has been formed at Harringay. Rev. William Pierce presided at the first meeting, when sixty-three persons united in church fellowship.

The present week is being widely observed as a week of self-denial in connection with the L.M.S., and in furtherance of the forward movement intended to raise £25,000 in order to add 100 new missionaries to the staff.

A meeting was held at Tintwistle on Saturday week to bid farewell to Rev. J. Levitt, who is leaving for mission work in Calcutta. All the Congregational ministers of the neighbourhood were present and addressed meeting.

On Tuesday week Rev. J. R. Wolstenholme took farewell of the Committee of the Colonial Missionary Society in view of his early departure for Queensland as minister of Wharf-street Church, Brisbane. The Committee had a frank talk with Mr. Wolstenholme relative to work in Australasia.

The pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Hanley, says in his annual address:—"Our ordinary or rather, our extraordinary, P.S.A. meetings remain as usual, i.e., the church has been filled every Sunday with men. Our Morning Bible Class has grown largely, and has now become a real power. It is in the solid work of Bible teaching that one has most hope of permanent result."

The church in Phalapye, Bechuanaland, of which Rev. W. C. Willoughby is to undertake the pastorate, has 200 members; the building, which is in Gothic style, will hold 1000 worshippers seated, native fashion, on the ground. The King, Khame, who was disinherited by his heathen father, Sekehomi, on his conversion to Christianity, is a member of the church, and his brother is a deacon.

BAPTIST.

At Rowley, Durham, a cheering revival has been in progress and several have been added to the church.

The London Baptist Association proposes raising a fund to assist needy churches in the maintenance of the ministry.

Professor Silas Morris, M.A., of Bangor College, has been appointed the editor of the Welsh Baptist quarterly magazine.

Rev. L. Ion Evans on Sunday week preached his farewell sermon at Mount Pleasant Chapel, Cadoxton, previous to leaving for the mission field in Jamaica.

Mr. J. T. Schofield, senior student at Regent's Park College, has accepted a call to Waterbeach, Cambs, the church in which the late Mr. Spurgeon commenced his ministry.

An interesting meeting has just been held in connection with Wynne-road Chapel, Brixton, for the purpose of debt reduction. Rev. Z. T. Dowen gave encouraging details of the work.

Mr. Rockfeller has, as a New Year's present, given another million dollars (£200,000) to the Chicago University, thus making about £760,000 in all that he has bestowed upon that institution.

Rev. A. H. Collins has resigned the charge of Selby Park Baptist Church, Birmingham, which he has held for twelve years. He is leaving for New Zealand as pastor-elect of Ponsonby Church, Auckland.

The new session of the Tabernacle classes for providing free education to Christian workers commences this week. Those desirous of joining are requested to communicate with the secretary, Mr. G. Hall, Pastor's College, Temple-street, Newington, S E., enclosing stamped envelope for reply.

At the annual meeting of the St. Leonard's Baptist Church the statistical statement showed that sixty-five persons have joined the church during the pastor's, Alfred Hall's, two-and-a-half years' ministry, the present number on the roll being 127. Satisfactory financial statements were made by the treasurers.

At Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, W., pastor and people are rejoicing over manifest tokens of the power of God, and very specially amongst the senior scholars. The other Sunday nearly twenty of these openly confessed Christ, and since then their new lives have given evidence of the reality of the change.

Rev. Frank Harmon, Mrs. Harmon, and children have arrived from North China. Mr. Harmon has been labouring in the Chouping district, in the province of Shantung, where no less than 600 of the natives have recently become Christians. He was formerly an agent of the Bible Society, and became a missionary of the B.M.S. in 1887.

We notice that in connection with Westbourne-grove Church (Rev. J. Tuckwell), a house has been acquired as a "Widows' Home," in which female members of the church over sixty years of age will be permitted to live rent free under the charge of an efficient matron. Each inmate will use her own furniture, and otherwise provide for herself or be provided for by her friends.

METHODIST.

Rev. W. B. Lowther, of Thirsk, is seriously ill.

At Wesley Chapel, Leeds, an all-day Missionary Convention has been held.

A new mission hall, seated for 150 people, was opened at Winton last week.

A capital mission has been held at Barwell by Messrs. A. B. Pinnegar and W. Mawer.

At Stockport the four P.S.A.'s in the Methodist chapels are proving admirable feeders to the classes.

New Sunday-schools, with class-rooms, to accommodate 400 children, have been opened at Reading.

Special services held by "Sister Jenny," of the East-end mission, at Chelmondeston (Ipswich) have proved fruitful.

Mr. William Bell, secretary of the Central Hall Mission, Newcastle-on-Tyne, has accepted the secretaryship of the United Gospel Mission at Nottingham.

An interesting service was held on Thursday week in connection with the departure of Rev. W. Hindes, who is leaving to take charge of a mission in the Orange Free State. Revs. J. Travis, W. E. Crombie, and others gave addresses.

The Manchester Methodist Council have been considering Home Mission extension in that city, especially at Ancoats, Daniel-street, George-street, Ashton, and Stalybridge. The adoption of halls with free seats was most favoured, and an important movement will soon be made at Ancoats.

Hull Mission is helping the poor, who are very numerous just now, especially about the docks. At George Yard a free shelter is largely used by men both night and day. Coffee is sold at a halfpenny per cup. Over 1,200 free breakfasts for children were given last week, and at Wesley Hall soup and bread are being given to scores.

Rev. George Lester, of the Bahamas district, has, in accordance with instructions from the Wesleyan Missionary Committee, been visiting the Florida Keys, in the last of which, Key West, occupied by 10,000 Cubans, and upwards of 7000 Bahamas, chiefly engaged in the cigar factories, it is proposed to establish a Wesleyan Mission.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The cause at Tulse-hill is making most satisfactory progress.

Rev. J. G. Train has attracted large congregations since his settlement at Upper Norwood.

A series of interesting missionary and other meetings have been held at Queen's-road, Brighton.

At Oldham the annual meeting has been held, the reports showing steady progress all round.

Rev. Thos. Ballantine is to be called to the newly-organised congregation at Willowfield, Belfast.

The work at Cowden is reported as going forward well. The friends are, however, praying for a genuine revival.

The Cardiff congregation reports well. The membership is 450, and the congregation carries on a vigorous mission.

Rev. Hugh Rodger, of Southampton, has nearly recovered from his serious illness. He is staying at Malvern, and hopes soon to resume his work at Southampton.

Rev. Robert Stewart, M.A., of Gateshead, was at Brampton last week, and greatly interested large and increasing audiences, both of old and young, for five nights together.

The February Messenger is to give the first instalment of a most interesting account by Dr. Morrison of his visit to Swatow, Chao-chow-foo and Ng-kang-phu, and his impressions of the work.

During the twelve months which have elapsed since Mr. McNeill left Regent-square, the congregation have kept well together, and the ordinary finances for 1892 and the contributions to the schemes of the Church are in a very satisfactory condition considering that the pulpit was vacant during the year.

It is stated that an anonymous friend has forwarded £500 through Dr. Monro Gibson towards the proposed new Church Building Fund, which cannot, however, be launched before the meeting of Synod. Two previous building funds have been raised, one of £20,000 and another of £30,000. The scheme to be inaugurated at the Synod meeting in Manchester this spring may reach £50,000, the contributions to be spread over five years.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

John Henry Douglas writes that more than fifty new meeting-houses have been built in the compass of Iowa yearly meetings within the last five years.

Western Quarterly Meeting has been favoured with a series of visits in various meetings by Harriet Green, of Saffron Walden, much to their help and edification. This has been interrupted by a week's mission in Dublin, after which she returns to Penybont to complete her service in the West.

John H. Williams and Ernest Newnings both send cheering accounts of work and openings in India, and the missionaries seem to be actively engaged both in old and new fields of labour. Ernest Newnings has been evangelising among the Gonds. At home various missions have been and are being held.

A very able historical lecture by John S. Rowntree, York, was delivered at Devonshire House on the 13th inst. The title, "Micah's Mother," naturally excited much interest, which the lecture itself sustained. The lesson that an active and vigorous church must face opposition was afresh enforced. Each age has its own work and difficulties to encounter.

The Friends of Plymouth have been cheered and helped by a visit from George Gillett, of London. Besides attending their meeting and school, he attended the Sunday evening service in the Guildhall, and gave the address there. At the quarterly meeting on the 11th inst. he pressed the necessity of true spiritual and vitalising baptism as the basis of a consecrated life.

SALVATION ARMY.

New S.A. headquarters have been opened in one of the main streets of Christchurch, N.Z.

Ratora Pala, coming shortly to England as foreign special, writes telling of great work in South India and Ceylon.

The Russian Government has ordered the immediate withdrawal of the English and Swedish officers in Finland.

The accounts given in The War Cry of General Booth's visit to Lancashire show that very great interest and enthusiasm has been awakened.

The Queen Regent of Holland, in appreciation of the social work of the Salvation Army in the Netherlands, has contributed £25 towards the expenses.

In May and June General Booth proposes to have "his annual tour in Europe;" it is also announced that he will possibly this year again visit the United States and Canada.

A "Bi-European Congress" will be held at Copenhagen at the end of next month, in connection with which there will be the dedication of officers for "a great native people hitherto unattacked" by Salvationist warfare.

Apropos of the prolonged Eastbourne disturbance, Mr. Bramwell Booth states that it is intended that the band shall go out there, and he expresses the hope that "the authorities have at last determined to do their duty." The Eastbourne corps marched in procession on Sunday week, after a lapse of ten months, without evoking any disturbance whatever.

General Booth hopes to realise good results from the adoption of what he calls "grace before meat," by which is meant that before a meal is eaten pence shall be dropped into a collecting-box towards "the relief of Lazarus." If all the aid desired is not obtained in this way from "outside friends," the General intimates that he will have to "fall back upon his own dear soldiers."

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Cromarty, Mr. Taylor, late Provost of the town, an active and zealous Christian worker and Free Church elder.—At Haslington, Manchester, Mr. John Barnes, aged eighty-seven, a valued member of the Baptist Church.—At Woolwich, Mrs. Raitt, wife of Rev. Dr. Raitt, well known to and loved by many.—At York, Mrs. Hollier, aged eighty-two, wife of Rev. G. Hollier, formerly pastor at Sudbury.—In Montague-place, London, suddenly, Rev. Lorenzo J. White, D.D., of Green Bay (Wis., U.S.A.).—At Altrincham, Mr. William Armitage, a valued and highly-esteemed helper of the Lord's work, who will be greatly missed by many.—At Belper, Mr. J. Schmidt, aged sixty-one, a quiet but faithful worker.—At Streatham, Mrs. Salter, widow of Rev. W. A. Salter, formerly of Amersham and Leamington.—At Leicester, Mr. William Dicks, aged sixty-eight, for many years an active Sunday-school worker.—At Bowden, N.B., on 14th inst., Rev. J. Mackenzie Allardyce, D.D., who for nearly fifty years had laboured as minister of the Established Church there.—At Lorrimore-square, S.E., on 14th inst., Mr. F. Smith, aged seventy, a devoted friend of the children and of Sunday-school work.—At Cley, Norfolk, Mr. E. Raynor, for thirty-six years the superintendent of the Sunday-school.—At Outwood, Mr. M. Crossland, for over fifty years a useful class leader.—At Rochdale, Mr. John Sedgwick, for many years a local preacher.—At Heywood, Mr. S. Heywood, a preacher of the Gospel for fifty years.—At Merthyr, Mr. John Rees, aged eighty-four, an active worker at one time.—At Woodbridge, Mr. James Hunt, aged eighty-one, a ready helper of many.—At Whalley Range, Manchester, Mr. George Jackson, aged seventy-nine, greatly respected as a Christian, a giver, and a worker.—At Antrim, Mr. Graham Shannon, a devoted Christian worker.—At Wicklow, Rev. Ed. Ferrar, rector of Templescobin.—At Durrow, Rev. O. J. Tibeauds.—At Edinburgh, Sir Thos. McClure, of Belfast.—At Belfast, Rev. Colin McKay.—At Llanelly, Rev. D. D. Jones, B.D., vicar of St. Paul's, a hard-working clergyman.—At Dyserth (Flint), through an accident, Rev. Thomas Morgan, vicar of the parish.—At Felixstowe, Rev. C. Harwick Marriott, vicar of Walton-with-Felixstowe, a fervent and outspoken preacher, and warm supporter of missions, especially of the Irish Church Missions, Church Missionary Society, and London City Mission.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Mrs. PENNEFATHER, of Mildmay.

 There are still some subscriptions for 1893 outstanding. These being payable in advance, we must request our friends to give their attention to this matter at once, in order to secure the due despatch of future copies. Full particulars will be found in the special announcement above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard must be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Our correspondence this week as to Missionary Methods is instructive and important. We especially mention the letter of "Missionary," as to the primitive and apostolic method of forming native churches under native government, as worthy of consideration.

A friend writes to us from abroad:—

I see your Melbourne correspondent reports the meetings of Messrs. Klein and Edwards. You ought to be informed that these evangelists belong to the "Exclusive Brethren," who have followed in Rev. G. C. Grubb's footsteps everywhere, denounced his teaching, and marred much of his work. In all the colonies and in Ceylon I have seen the sad divisions caused by them.

Mr. Hudson Taylor is impressed with the necessity of providing for the education of the children of the C.I.M. Missionaries, and proposes to spend £5000 in erecting suitable schools for boys and girls at Chefoo, close to the mission sanitarium. The future possesses wonderful possibilities when Chinese-born missionaries, the children of English parents, occupy the China mission field.

A correspondent draws our attention to a method adopted by a Christian lady known to him, which he thinks, if widely adopted, would materially help to solve the problem of poverty, so pressing at this season. This lady has a certain number of poor families, to whom she almost daily sends food from her own table. If other households generally would follow this simple method, so far as their ability extends, the sum of existing destitution and distress would be sensibly diminished.

As we often have to call attention to abuses and wrongs, it is a sincere pleasure to note when they are redressed, or when arrangements are promised by which they may be mitigated and ultimately removed. The working women of England gained a great deal last week, if only by getting some of their troubles fairly set before the Home Secretary and the country. The things they revealed cannot shrink again into obscurity, and cannot be allowed to go on. Even if Mr. Asquith had been less sympathetic than he was, and had not promised the appointment of women inspectors to look after the condition of women workers, the representations made will be sure to touch the nation's conscience and heart. Some places of iniquity are no doubt already nigh to reform; they will not wait until the inspectors come.

A new channel for sympathy and sunshine has just been opened for the benefit of old women and young children in workhouses. It is an opportunity of which Christian women will, we trust, not be slow to avail themselves. The Local Government Board has empowered Boards of Guardians to appoint, at their discretion, committees of ladies, who need not be guardians, to visit the parts of the workhouse where women and children are accommodated, with the view of their reporting to the guardians any matter which appears to them to need attention.

Now that Parliament is sitting, we would remind our readers that they may greatly aid the cause of peace by petitioning in favour of a treaty of arbitration between England and the United States. The way has been wonderfully prepared for the attainment of this object, and if Mr. Cremer, who will bring forward a resolution, gets an opportunity of being heard, and can show that there is a strong feeling in the country on his side, we may see a long step taken in the direction of arbitration.

Another thing which we hope may be done this session would be the passing of an Act which will place immoral men and immoral women on the same footing before the law. Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., did get the principle acknowledged by the House of Commons last session, in a bill for the government of Glasgow, but it was rejected at the last minute by the House of Lords. Once make it possible to deal with profligate men in disorderly houses as we deal with profligate women, and there will soon be a change in that wicked sentiment which supports an unequal standard of morality for the sexes.

The chairman of the visiting committee for Pentonville Prison occupies a favourable position for discerning the condition of public morality. He is surprised at the large number of boys upon whom the gaoler's key was turned at Pentonville during the past year. No fewer than 276 boys under sixteen were received, eighty-one of whom had been sent to reformatory schools. One of the lads had told him that his only home was a common lodging-house in Whitechapel, and that there he had been taught the trade of picking pockets. It is a sad comment on our educational progress that schools for criminals are contemporaneous with our national efforts for elementary instruction.

Supplying strong drink to children seems so unnatural that we were loth to believe the crime was at all common. But a case has been tried at Liverpool, which excites suspicion, while it stamps the practice as specially corrupt and immoral. A little girl of about twelve stated in the court that she with two other girls of a like age had been supplied on occasions with rum, whisky, and port wine! The counsel for the defendant did not help his employers by suggesting that "poverty or some other cause had made them prematurely old." The magistrate marked his sense of the wrong by fining the publican. One of the children, sad to say, was committed to gaol for ten days, followed by five years in a reformatory, for robbing her father of the money with which the drink was purchased.

The old-time statement that Christ is "wounded in the house of his friends" unhappily receives many a modern confirmation. The world is very lynx-eyed in detecting departures from the straight line of righteousness on the part of Christian professors; and rightly so. The recent revelations in courts of law have been humiliating enough. In one court a Church of England canon is condemned in heavy damages for the issue of "a false and fraudulent prospectus"; in another a clergyman is successfully sued for divorce; in a third an ex-Wesleyan preacher is summoned for the support of his lawful wife, he having deserted her and attached himself to a branch of "King Solomon's sect"; the recent disastrous failure of the Liberator Society has implicated members of the Baptist and Congregational bodies; the most notorious case of all is that of an adherent of the "Close Brethren," who has been adjudged guilty of obtaining, by improper means, sums of money amounting to £140,000.

For such wicked acts, especially when committed in the sacred name of religion, no words of condemnation can be too strong. But when the sins of the individual are made to reflect on the community to which he may for the time belong, the limits of just judgment are in our opinion overpassed. From the days of Judas Iscariot downwards, there there have been hypocrites and black sheep in every fold, and one communion is not entitled to cast a stone at another. Rather let us all, as churches and organised bodies of believers, whatever be our name, humble ourselves before God, as Israel in the days of Achan, and strive to secure in ourselves and each other that consistent life which is void of offence toward God and men.

An "inquirer" sends us extracts from a sermon recently printed in a contemporary religious journal, which we forbear to quote, but the gist of which may be gathered from the following remarks, which we offer in reply to our correspondent:—Temptation is testing. A burglar may attempt every door and window in a house without effect, nor find any traitor within to open to him. The Lord Jesus was tested in all points—body, soul, and spirit—but the prince of this world found no response in Him. He was "God manifested in flesh," and He cannot deny Himself. Invisible or manifested; in heaven or in the wilderness; on the throne or in Gethsemane, He cannot contradict his nature. If any suggestion from without could awaken within Him a desire swerving from the straight line of absolute holiness and righteousness, He would not be God; and if Jesus were not God, He could not have been our Redeemer.

A disciple of the so-called higher criticism shows the effect they may produce in the following sentences:—"It may be at once asserted that the work of archæologists in the past thirty years has all tended to show the historical accuracy of the pictures contained in these chapters"—viz., those from Genesis xii. to l. "In the most impressive way the forgotten inscriptions of Assyria and the undeciphered papyri of Egypt come to light like a witness stepping out of the tomb to reaffirm the truthfulness of our records, just when a pitiless Biblical criticism was disposed to resolve the names into solar myths, and the facts into idle legends."

The question will occur to many minds, If the Book, so far as we can test it, is accurate history, why may we not go a little further, and accept that which, though untested, still bears internal witness of a Divine origin? A learned professor was remarking to a friend that, for his part, he believed that the history began with the story of Abraham, that the rest of Genesis was poetry or mythology, and the names in chapter v. belonged to tribes, not to individual men; whereupon his friend inquired, "Then does it refer to a tribe in verse 24, 'Enoch walked with God; and he was not, for God took him'"? No satisfactory answer was forthcoming.

The Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund have, it is said, undertaken to publish translations, by Major Conder, of the Tel Amarna Tablets, discovered by a peasant woman in 1887, at the site of the palace of Amenophis IV. in Egypt, on the east bank of the Nile, half way between Thebes and Memphis. This collection of 320 cuneiform tablets is described as the most important historical discovery ever made in the East. They date about the time of the Exodus.

The full value of such discoveries in these days of doubt cannot be told; God is making even the stones and dust of the earth rise up and bear witness to the truth. We are not of those who tremble for the fate of the Scriptures, and we do not therefore rejoice in the testimony of tablets and inscriptions and unburied cities as if we had nothing else to lean upon; but we say that the argument they bring to faith ought at least to be as great as the argument they would bring to unbelief if they told another tale. We should never hear the end of it if they could be used against the historical accuracy of God's Word.

China Inland Mission.

A missionary meeting in connection with the China Inland Mission was held on Thursday last at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, Mr. R. C. Morgan presiding. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, director of the mission, pleasantly referred to the fact that two former members of this hall are at work in China under the auspices of the mission—Mrs. Botham (née Barclay) and Miss Annie Sanderson—and spoke in warm terms of the esteem in which both these friends are held, and of the good work which they are doing—Mrs. Botham itinerating in the North-West of China and Miss Sanderson as principal of the girls' department of the schools for the children of missionaries at Chefoo.

Mr. H. W. Frost, of Toronto, gave a stimulating address, telling of some remarkable triumphs of faith in connection with the formation of the North American Council of the Inland Mission, and calling for a more earnest faith and devotion to God in carrying on his work. Mr. Hudson Taylor followed with some very fervent words, drawing many helpful lessons from the past history of the mission.

The Book of the Kingdom.

I. ITS SUBJECT AND METHOD.

If any title be sought for the Bible which should at once comprehend its contents and particularise its purpose, none would so well answer the requirement as "The Book of the Kingdom." For it is from first to last the story of a kingdom usurped, and the history and prophecy of its recovery.

"A bee line" and "as the crow flies" are observations taken from nature, expressing in language understanded of the people the mathematical definition that "a straight line is that which lies evenly between its two points," or, as more clearly defined, "that in which, if any two points be taken, the part intercepted between them is the shortest that can be drawn."

To that insect and that bird it is given to make manifest one feature of "the wondrous works of Him who is perfect in knowledge." For God always takes that straight line which lies evenly between its two points. A straight line is otherwise called a right line; and God always takes the right line, for the righteous Lord loveth righteousness.

Man having been created, the two points of human history revealed in the Scriptures of truth are (1) the putting of all things on earth under the feet of the first man, and his revolt from the rule of God; and (2) the putting of all things in earth and above the earth and under the earth under the feet of the Second Man, and his delivery of the recovered kingdom back to God. The first man rebelled; the Second Man became a propitiation for the sin of the first: wherefore God hath highly exalted Him; and when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all. The way seems long to us, but God takes the straight line, the direct line, the right line (all his ways are rectilinear), and the Bible is the record of that straight line. It is the Book of the Kingdom, and the inspiring Spirit in telling the story takes a bee line, and travels as the crow flies, in a straight, direct, right line—the shortest that can be drawn—from the revolt of the first man to the subjection of the second man; from the dishonour done to God by Adam to the glory given to Him by Jesus Christ.

The prophet Isaiah takes the ploughman to illustrate the ways of God. Let us also learn a lesson from him. From his starting point he ploughs his first furrow in a straight line, the shortest that can be drawn, to a point which he keeps stedfastly in view on the opposite side of the field. Every other furrow is made parallel to that, not independently of it. The inspiring Spirit ploughs a straight furrow from the Rebellion to the Restoration, from the Revolt of man to the Restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

The salvation of man depends upon his subjection to the rule of God. To a ship's company who have mutinied and deposed their captain, who alone knows how to steer the vessel, there can be no deliverance from tempest or from rocks, except by their submission and renewed allegiance. To a world fallen into disbelief and disobedience, there can be no hope except through the obedience of faith. To a revolted world groaning and travailing under the usurper's heel, there can be no Gospel but the glad tidings of the Reign of God.

The Bible is the product of one commanding mind, and it is written upon one commanding principle. The Kingdom of God, the rule of God, the reign of God—that is the furrow, parallel to which, subsidiary to which, every other furrow has been ploughed. Every truth and every doctrine, every mystery and every revelation, every typical thing or person, all prophecy and all history—all are dependent upon and contributory to the development of this great consummation—the Reign of God.

"Have ye understood all things?"

"Yea, Lord."

"Therefore every scribe who hath been made a disciple to the Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." M.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND STEBBINS.

KINGSTOWN.

The second week of the visit of these evangelists to Kingstown has shown the reality of much of the seed sown in the first. Many who were awakened during the earlier days have declared themselves openly upon the Lord's side, and thus the missioners and the large staff of local workers have been much cheered and encouraged. In spite of a measure of physical weakness, Major Whittle preached twice daily, and the word was with power.

At the concluding meeting in the Town Hall upon Friday night last there was scarcely standing room. At the close of a solemn address upon "Behold I stand at the door and knock," a large number responded to Major Whittle's entreaty to "let the Saviour in," and many, too, who had received blessing during the mission rose to indicate their desire to live unreservedly for the Lord who had bought them. The names and addresses of these were afterwards taken down by the workers.

Major Whittle's Bible readings every afternoon on the office and work of the Holy Spirit have been especially helpful, and were well attended. Another important factor in the work was the morning meeting for young ladies, undertaken by Miss Whittle, in addition to her singing with Mr. Stebbins in the general meetings. Her simple Gospel addresses have been owned of God in the salvation of several young ladies, in many of whose hearts the world had hitherto reigned supreme.

Major Whittle's addresses were characterised with a burning earnestness born of his deep conviction as to the verities he uttered. Frequent and forcible were his appeals to the written Word, and the utter helplessness of the sinner apart from Christ was repeatedly insisted upon. No uncertain sound, either, was heard regarding the necessity of the new birth preceding all service. The healing by our Lord of the man with the withered hand was a subject which lent itself in a special manner to the effective enforcement of this truth. Whatever work the man might do could only be the result of healing, and not a means to attain it. To an audience containing many nominal members of churches this teaching was not without cause.

During the second week of the mission Major Whittle had the help of Mr. John Currie, of Glasgow, an earnest and lovable preacher of the Gospel, who held several meetings for men only. These gatherings were of especial interest, being attended by men of all classes, from the most ragged to those of high social estate. One poor fellow, disheartened by the results of a sinful life, with little or no idea of the way of salvation, could only express his desire in the simple words, "I want to go where that fellow Whittle is bound for!" May the Lord grant him his petition. There is but one feeling on the part of all who have promoted the mission and helped in the work during this memorable fortnight in Kingstown, and that is that the mission has been a time of real revival. There are a number of genuine conversions, whilst the Christians have been stirred up and stimulated to holier living and increased faithfulness. The forthcoming movements of the evangelists (with the exception of Mr. Currie, who has returned to fulfil engagements in Glasgow churches) are as follows:—Wicklow to Feb. 3rd; Arklow, 4th to 10th; Enniscorthy, 11th to 17th; Athlone, 18th to 25th; Belfast, 26th to March 24th.

Spiritual Power.

Upon the subject of spiritual power we have received letters from many correspondents, but as these are written from different points of view, and as the outcome of different experiences, they are necessarily somewhat incongruous with one another. With the sincere desire to help inquirers on this subject we reproduce a portion of Andrew Murray's chapter on "The Spirit of Power" in his excellent and thoughtful book, The Spirit of Christ. We commend his teaching as both Scriptural and sensible, and as evidencing a perfect acquaintance with both the extremes to which some have been led upon this subject. He writes:—

"The baptism of power, the induement of power, is sometimes spoken of and sought for as a special gift. If Paul asked very distinctly for the Ephesians, who had been sealed with the Holy Spirit, that the Father would still give them 'the Spirit of Wisdom' (Eph. i. 17), we cannot be far wrong in praying as definitely for 'the Spirit of Power.' He who searches the heart knows what is the mind of the Spirit, and will give, not according to the correctness of our words, but the Spirit-breathed desire of our hearts. Or let us take that other prayer of Paul (Eph. iii. 16), and plead that 'He would grant us to be mightily strengthened by his Spirit.' However we formulate our prayer, one thing is certain: it is in unceasing prayer, it is in bowing our knees, it is in waiting on God, that from Himself will come what we ask, be it the Spirit of power or the power of the Spirit. The Spirit is never anything separate from God; in all his going out and working He still ever is the inmost self of God; it is God Himself who, according to the riches of his glory, is mighty to do above what we ask or think, who will in Christ give us to be clothed with the power of the Spirit.

"In seeking for this power of the Spirit, let us note the mode of his working. There is one mistake we must specially beware of. It is that of expecting always to feel the power when it works. Scripture links power and weakness in a wonderful way, not as succeeding each other, but as existing together. 'I was with you in weakness; my preaching was in power.' 'When I am weak, then am I strong.' (See 1 Cor. ii. 3-5; 2 Cor. iv. 7, 16; vi. 10; xii. 10.; xiii. 3, 4.) The power is the power of God given to faith, and faith grows strong in the dark. The Holy Spirit hides Himself in the weak things that God hath chosen, that flesh may not glory in his presence. Spiritual power can only be known by the spirit of faith. The more distinctly we feel and confess our weakness and believe in the power dwelling within us, ready to work as need arises, the more confidently may we expect its Divine operation when nothing is felt. . . .

"Let us also make no mistake about the condition of the working of this Divine Power. He that would command nature must first, and most absolutely, obey her. . . . . Many pray earnestly for power in or with their work, and receive it not, because they do not accept the only posture in which the power can work. We want to get possession of the power and use it. God wants the power to get possession of us, and use us. If we give up ourselves to the power to rule in us, the power will give itself to us, to rule through us. Unconditional submission and obedience to the power in our inner life is the one condition of our being clothed with it. . . .

"Let us be clear, too, as to the object of this power, the work it is to do. Men are very careful to economise power, and to gather it there where it can do its work most effectually. God does not give this power for our own enjoyment, nor to save us from trouble and effort. He gives it for one purpose, to glorify his Son. Those who in their weakness are faithful to this one object, who in obedience and testimony prove to God that they are ready at any cost to glorify God, they will receive the power from on high."

The few notes with which Mr. Murray closes the chapter are too important to be omitted. We quote a few:—

"This 'clothing' with 'power from on high,' this 'receiving the power of the Holy Ghost,' takes place in a way quite contrary to our natural expectations. It is a Divine Power working in weakness. The sense of weakness is not taken away; the power is not given as something we possess. We only have the power as we have the Lord Himself.

"Our great danger is waiting for the sight or sense of power. Our one need is faith, that spiritually recognises the Mighty Lord as present, and knows that He will work in weakness."

ON CHURCH WINDOWS.

The friend who writes in The Daily Mail of Glasgow, under the name of "An Amateur Vagrant," has been very active of late in getting up and distributing a "Barefeet Fund" for the relief of the ill-clad and destitute children in the city. Some of his letters have contained very scathing indictments of modern customs. Here is one on church windows and organs:—

"I am a bit savage this week, my blood is up; our workers' wrongs are too much for me. I feel my fingers itching for the club of my primitive ancestors. I am possessed with an almost irrepressible desire to break all the costly stained-glass church windows in Glasgow—in the name of Christ. To take the axe of the iconoclast, and let the wind and water out of the gilded organs; to melt the piping, and sell it for his poor. What kind of Christianity is it that spends thousands of pounds on church windows while Christ's poor are being trodden to death, and chivied and chased out of existence?

"The idea of stuffing wealth into church cushions, and plastering it on church walls in the shape of gold and tinsel adornments, dados, and æsthetic stencillings, while thousands of the 'little children' He loved so well are being done to death from exposure to the rigours of an Arctic winter like this, and for want of food and shelter! Oh, mockery of mockeries! Oh sin, thrice more heinous than will be laid to the charge of those who drove the iron spikes through the hands and feet of the tender and compassionate Master!

"Ministers of the future must 'minister' to the poor instead of swallowing up the people's earnings and dosing them in return with dreamy doctrines and prelatic puzzles. The test of membership must in future be the family likeness to the Master, proved by the life lived, and not by the gilt and glitter of priestly pomp and ceremony, and the glib-tongued profession of a faith that is known not by its works. The Master's own test must be applied; the time must come when it shall be easier to thread a needle with a camel than unlock a church door with a rich man."

RAGGED SCHOOL CHILDREN.—How personal contact produces sympathy! See these little things, with blue eyes and pinched looks, and you will never forget them. And will not the sight set the head and the hands to work?—John Kirk.

A MISSIONARY SPIRIT is thus kindled and sustained in a Sabbath-school at Montrose:—There are eight missionary meetings during the winter. One boy or girl prepares an account of a certain country, others read short sketches of missionaries who have laboured there. Others bring maps of the country which they have made, and all bring what objects of interest they can find that came from it.

CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA.

The India of to-day may be divided into two parts—one part, and that still a small one, marching on the road of education to the goal of knowledge; the other a huge rock-hewn solid mass, to move which seems to need the strength of a Hercules. Christianity stands between these, both unsympathetic, but on distinctly different grounds. The one turns away from our teachings, because it is full of that intellectual arrogance which refuses to accept any light but that shed by human reason; the other shrinks from or mocks at them because it is saturated with the teachings and traditions of a system which, though to us conspicuously baneful, is to it rendered venerable with age, and has intertwined itself with every detail of the life it lives, that it has become part and parcel of itself, which cannot be touched without rudely shocking all preconceived sentiments and crystallised prepossessions.

To aggravate the difficulty, Christianity presents itself as the faith of a foreign master, and I for one hold that this constitutes one of the greatest barriers in the path of Christianity in India, although to some it may be a circumstance of little moment. Reflection will show how this foreign aspect seriously influences both the India of enlightenment, and the India still sunk in the depths of intellectual darkness of a certain kind. I say a certain kind advisedly, for though uneducated classes fall short of our standard of the intellectual, yet are they not altogether strangers to a certain nimbleness of mind which constitutes them one of the most difficult people to deal with in any matter involving that mental process which is called argument.

It is too often the fashion with our missionaries to forget this—than which there cannot be a more fatal mistake. Were the people of India on the same intellectual level as the savages of the Pacific the progress of Christian work would go on without let or hindrance, and Christianity would number annually thousands of converts where it shows now only hundreds. The savage has little or no intellectual past. His ideas are most rudimentary. He easily yields to the force of representation because he has nothing that he knows of to oppose to it. His is the mental grasp of a child, and, childlike, he is readily bent by the operation of a superior will. Not so is the mind of an average Indian, which is extremely acute in finding the weak points in an opponent's contention. Everybody who has had any experience of street preaching in India will support this view.

Therefore it is necessary for missionaries to be well furnished as regards the theme they advocate and extremely careful in avoiding loose, crude, and random statements which give their opponents a chance of a thrust that is frequently disconcerting to the advocate of Christianity, and often provokes the ribaldry and mirth of the crowd. It is not everybody who is fit to go out as a missionary to India. The task of a missionary requires not only a full man but a ready man. This is a matter which is one of great importance, but which is very much neglected.

You will see how essential it is to select your best Christian men for the arduous work. I regret to say that the most important work of saving souls is often deputed to utterly incompetent men, and thereby a vast deal of mischief is worked to the Christian cause. How can progress be expected under such a condition of things?

W. Raja Naidu.

A brother, very experienced in missionary matters, to whom we submitted the foregoing brief article, writes to us:—

"I am very much obliged for your permitting me to read the enclosed letter, which I now return. There is much in the letter that I agree with. I have long been of opinion that missionary societies have not been sufficiently careful as to the kind of agents which they have sent to India as evangelists. I feel that we want the very best men the Church can give, and that there is no field which demands greater care than India, especially at the present juncture."

ANTI-OPIUM MOVEMENT.—It is hoped that the convention on this subject to be held on Tuesday, Feb. 14, at Devonshire House, and on Wednesday, February 15, at Exeter Hall, may be representative of all the Christian Churches, and made the means of awakening afresh the public conscience on this serious question.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

"CLAIMING VICTORY."—Joshua xi.

The Merom Water, which must have become encrimsoned with the blood of men on that great day, whose story we are now to tell, is described by travellers as one of the fairest scenes in Palestine.

It is not large, but its blue waters are skimmed by myriads of waterfowl which make their home in the forests of wavy reeds growing at the northern point where the Jordan enters it. On the gentle undulation of the hills that slope to it on the western side all the episodes of pastoral life are transacted, whilst from the further side the gaunt hills, two miles across, frown upon the placid scene.

To this sweet spot as mustering-place, Jabin, King of Hazor, aroused at last to fear and action by the tidings of the day of Gibeon, summoned all the tribes of the north of Canaan. Well would it have been for him (speaking after the manner of men) if he had not delayed so long, but had concentrated his forces in time to co-operate with Adonizedek, marching from the north simultaneously with the attack of the latter against Gibeon. To compensate for his lost opportunity, he now sent messengers with speed to raise the country. Possibly he adopted words like those with which in after years Saul summoned Israel to follow him to Jabesh-Gilead, where he took a yoke of oxen and cut them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the borders of Israel, by the hand of messengers, saying "Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul, and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen."

Throughout the hills of Galilee the messengers sped, to the far north beneath the shadow of Lebanon, all down the Valley of Esdraelon to Carmel, and along the shores of the Great Sea. The Jebusite heard the summons in the hill country, and the Hivite under Hermon in the land of Mizpeh, and even some remnants of the shattered Southern confederacy seem to have poured their scanty contribution into the accumulated ranks of that great host. "They went out, they and all their hosts with them, much people, even as the sand that is upon the seashore in multitude."

It was no time for dalliance in the camp at Gilgal, whither Joshua had led back his warriors to recruit after their toils; and as soon as tidings reached him he started with his army on the five days' journey that intervened between Gilgal and Merom, and marched to perhaps the greatest battle of his life. Josephus tells us that the united forces consisted of 300,000 foot, 10,000 horses, and 20,000 chariots. The Israelites were terrified at having to encounter the iron chariots which drove swiftly into the ranks of an opposing army, enabling the warriors to discharge their missiles with terrible effect. It may be that some tidings of the immense array that lay waiting for him within the circle of the hills reached Joshua, when he was within a day's march of the camp. A sense of the awfulness of the crisis may for a moment have thrilled his soul, but the stedfastness of his courage knew no shock, because, simultaneously with the tidings, there came the Divine assurance, "Be not afraid because of them, for to-morrow at this time I will deliver them up all slain before Israel."

Joshua repeated the tactics which had been so successful previously. He came against them suddenly, perhaps in the early dawn. As the Israelites fell upon them, the vast host was seized with panic. Angel-hosts no doubt in the heavenlies co-operated with the armies of the Lord, and the vaunted pride of the kings bit the dust as they beheld the awful rout that followed. Thousands must have fallen beneath the avenging sword, whilst three great bodies of fugitives made their way, one to the City of Zidon, forty miles distant, one to the sea-coast, where in after years Elijah sojourned with the widow; one to Mizpeh, sheltering under Hermon.

The strength of the foe was broken, but for some years after this final victory Joshua carried on a campaign against the cities standing, each on its mound or hill (R.V.) according to the custom of the time, from which Jabin and his allies had sallied forth to fight. Hazor was burnt, probably to intimidate the rest, being the most prominent in the alliance against Israel. For the rest, it was deemed sufficient to destroy the inhabitants that could bear arms, to render the horses useless, and to burn the chariots. "As the Lord commanded Moses his servant, so did Moses command Joshua, and so did Joshua; he left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moses."

Even the Anakim warriors of extraordinary height, who had been the dread of Israel, were destroyed, together with their cities; and, nominally at least, the whole land passed into the hands of Israel.

I.—IT WAS A DECISIVE VICTORY.

Often before had the Canaanites rallied to oppose the progress of Israel, but never after this did they dare to meet them in battle array. Their spirit was crushed, their power quelled. And herein we are reminded of the ascension of that greater Conqueror of whom Joshua was a type.

It is not improbable that those dark powers, who had opposed our Saviour throughout his earthly life, mustered for one last struggle, as He left beneath his feet the cloud, bathed in the roseate light of dawn, that hid Him from the eyes of his disciples. There is some trace of this in the words of the Apostle, who tells us that He was raised far above all rule, and authority, and power, employing the very terms afterwards used of our conflict with the wicked spirits in the heavenlies (Eph. i. 21; vi. 12).

But in any case He triumphed over all that opposed him. "Having put off from Himself the principalities and the powers, He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them." And the Apostle, borrowing from one of the sublimest triumphal odes in the world, speaks of Him as leading captivity captive (Eph. iv. 8).

Through the prophetess Deborah the Spirit of God first uttered that wonderful phrase when celebrating Israel's victory over a later Jabin, King of Hazor:—

> Arise, Barak, and lead thy captivity captive,
> Thou son of Abinoam.

The thought undoubtedly is that when the downtrodden becomes at last the victor, he leads captive that which had led him and others in captivity. The captive-making tyrant becomes in turn a captive.

So it was when Jesus rose and ascended into heaven. Up to that time Satan had usurped a supreme power over man: by the wiles of his temptations, by the witchery of the world, and the dread terrors of death and the grave, by the virulence of his accusations. None had been able to withstand him, and it seemed as if devil-power must be for ever triumphant over man—over the strongest as Samson, the wisest as Solomon, the meekest as Moses, the most innocent as Adam. But all this was altered by the glorious deeds of our blessed Master who, in his death, resurrection, and ascension, defeated the devil, and demonstrated for evermore the supremacy of man in Him over all the dark powers that infest the earth, or air, or heavenly places. He led captivity captive. We can almost see the long line of princely captives following his triumphal car as He ascends—the world which he had overcome—Death which he had abolished—Hades, the keys of which were wrenched from it to hang henceforth at his girdle—the devil and his hosts—the principalities and powers of hell led as a long line of slaves.

Never again need that conflict be repeated. It has been decisively demonstrated to the universe, and established for ever, that though the first Adam was not able to withstand the assaults of the Devil, but succumbed with all his race, yet the second Adam has proved Himself more than conqueror, not for Himself alone, but for all who are one with Him by faith. There may be war in heaven, but it will largely resemble the warfare carried on by Joshua after his final victory, harassing and difficult, perhaps, but of no importance as affecting the result of the successes already gained. If Jesus vanquished the powers of darkness when they hurled themselves on Him in the hour of his weakness and mortal agony, is it to be supposed for a moment that they will be able to effect anything now that He sits on the right hand of God, girded with power and glory?

II.—THIS VICTORY NEEDED TO BE FOLLOWED UP AND APPROPRIATED.

Though the victories of Israel were decisive, yet there was a sense in which they were incomplete. It is true that Joshua destroyed the cities and those whom he found in them, but it would seem that many of the inhabitants had previously retired for safety to the rocky fastnesses or caves in the vicinity of their homes, so that as soon as the wave of conquest had passed over the land and subsided, they emerged from their hiding-places and reoccupied the possessions in houses and lands from which they had been temporarily dislodged.

This was according to the word of Moses, who had predicted this very state of things when he said, "The Lord thy God will cast out those nations before thee by little and little: thou mayest not consume them at once, lest the beasts of the field increase upon thee."

It would have been in the highest degree impolitic to have exterminated all the inhabitants, for the land would have gone out of cultivation; the terraces, which were so needful in that hilly country, would have become broken down; and the water-courses would have fallen hopelessly out of repair. And all this in addition to the reason alleged by the great lawgiver that the wild beasts would have multiplied to an alarming and dangerous extent. How much wiser, then, that the displacement of the Canaanites should be by a gradual process. The victories of Joshua were decisive, but they were not final. They needed to be followed up by the various tribes. There was no more doubt as to their success in prosecuting their victories than there had been in winning them. The one was as much guaranteed by the Divine promise as the other. In the same breath as Moses had proclaimed the gradual process of Israel's settlement in the land of Canaan, he announced that the Lord their God would deliver their enemies up before them, discomfiting them with a great discomfiture till they were destroyed (Deut. vii. 23).

The sacred historian even affirms that it was of the Lord to harden their hearts, to come against Israel in battle, that he might utterly destroy them (Joshua xi. 20). We must not suppose, of course, that God stepped in to produce, in the case of these Canaanites, a result which would not have accrued to them by the working out of the natural laws which He has instituted. God loved them as He loves the world. They were included in the propitiation of Christ. They might have been saved, as Rahab was. And when it is said that God hardened their hearts, we must understand that their hearts became hardened by sinning against their light, in accordance with that great principle which God has established, that if a man resists his convictions of right he becomes more inveterate in his sinful ways. God is thus said to do what is done by the working out of the laws of that moral universe which He has constituted. It is clear that the Canaanites knew that God was with Israel. Rahab said, I know that the Lord hath given you this land, and that your terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land melt away before you. For we have heard . . . And as soon as we had heard it our hearts did melt . . for the Lord your God, He is God in heaven above and on earth beneath (Joshua ii. 10, 11). And the Gibeonites said, We have heard the fame of the Lord, and all that he did in Egypt . . . (ix. 10). There is no doubt, then, that throughout the land there had gone forth the fame of God; and when the kings flung their hosts in battle against Israel it was as it has always been:

> The kings of the earth set themselves,
> And the rulers took counsel together,
> Against the Lord and against his Anointed.

But how rich is the spiritual lesson to be derived from the peculiarity of this gradual appropriation of Joshua's achievements. "Joshua took the whole land, according to all that the Lord spake unto Moses, and Joshua gave it for an inheritance unto Israel, according to their divisions by their tribes." Yet Israel had to fight over every inch of soil to drive out their conquered foes. So, as we have seen, our blessed Lord has won a decisive victory over all our foes, but we have got to claim it repeatedly until, in the case of each of us—Death, that last enemy, is destroyed.

The world is overcome, but we must overcome it by faith. The flesh has been nailed to the cross, and the old man has been done away, but we have by the Spirit to mortify the deeds of the body that we may live. The devil has been vanquished once for all, but we have to hide ourselves in the Only-begotten, trusting Him to keep us, so that the evil one may not touch us. The grave and death have been passed and left behind in the triumphal procession of the second Adam, but we must meet them, unless He come first, saying, as we approach them, "O Death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." We are more than conquerors in all things through Him that loved us, but there will never be a day in our history when we shall not need to overcome by the word of our testimony and by the blood of the Lamb. Therefore the voice of the ascended Jesus speaks in sevenfold benediction to them that overcome.

There is no foe to your growth in grace, no enemy in your Christian work, no dreaded form of evil dominating and cursing the souls of men, which was not included in your Saviour's conquests. You need not be afraid of them. When you touch them, they will flee before you. God has promised to deliver them up before you. There shall no man of them be able to stand before you. Only be strong and very courageous. Fear not, nor be dismayed. The Lord is with you, oh mighty men of valour—mighty because one with the mightiest. Claim victory. Whenever your enemies close in upon you, claim victory. Whenever heart and flesh fail, look up and claim victory. Be sure that you have a share in that triumph, which Jesus won not for Himself alone, but for us all; remember that you were in Him, when He won it, and claim victory. Reckon that it is yours, and gather spoil. Neither Anakim nor fenced cities need daunt or abash you. You are one of the conquering legion. Claim your share in the Saviour's victory.

WELCOME TO MR. POLHILL-TURNER.

Speaking on behalf of the Army and Navy Missionary Union, Major-General Hutchinson, who presided over a meeting in the "theatre" of the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall Yard, S.W., last Thursday afternoon, extended a hearty and sympathetic welcome to Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner, late of the 2nd Dragoon Guards, who has worked hard and suffered much for the cause of Christ's Gospel in connection with the China Inland Mission.

In an address marked by great simplicity, combined with spiritual power, the missionary told how, after setting out with others in February, 1885, his first three years in China were spent in study and itineration, the latter principally in the westerly province of Sï-chuan, one of the largest and most populous in China. The first journey was from Hanchong, a town in the province of Shensi, to Ch'entu, the capital of Sï-chuan, and back. Then there were but two stations in the latter province, with nineteen missionaries and perhaps sixty converts. Now, including Songp'an, from which the missionaries were expelled, there are ten stations, fifty missionaries in the C.I.M., and about the same number in other missions, while at the Ch'entu station alone there are eighty converts.

During the first year in China, Mr. Polhill-Turner was strongly drawn towards Tibet, which is quite untouched by missionaries except for the Moravians in Kashmir on the west. There are thousands of Tibetans to be reached now along the borders of Kansuh, Sï-chuan, and Yünnan, without entering Tibet proper. In the autumn of 1888, Mr. and Mrs. Polhill-Turner reached Sining, in the province of Kansuh, seeking to learn the Tibetan language, and continuing the Chinese work already commenced. They made the acquaintance of a learned Lama (priest), who, while affording them useful lingual lessons, was by no means a careless listener to the Gospel, though he seemed to stop short of a decisive step. Although three years were spent in Sining, it appeared too far from the Tibetans for a permanent centre of work; and in 1891, the missionary went to Songp'an, in the Sï-chuan province, which had been well reported of as a likely Tibetan centre, the help of a native inquirer named Wang having been previously secured. After finding a house, bringing his wife and children to Songp'an, and residing there for two and a-half months, Mr. Polhill-Turner and those who were with him suffered violent expulsion from that place at the hands of those whom the devil stirred up to interfere with work upon which there were undoubted signs of God's blessing. The devoted workers, however, trust to return again to that scene of their loved work for God.

Mr. Hudson-Taylor also spoke, reciting instances of missionary heroism, side by side with evidences of God's providential care for those who devote their lives to his service in foreign fields. He concluded with an eloquent appeal concerning more Gospel labourers for the vast Chinese empire.

A successful mission was held at Martock last week by the C.E.T.S. and the Total Abstinence Society.

Bound or Free?

By Rev. J. P. Gledstone.

II.—PETER WHEN OLD.

Holy Spirit, Right Divine,
King within my conscience reign;
Be my Lord, and I shall be
Firmly bound, for ever free.

Holy Spirit, Peace Divine!
Still this restless heart of mine;
Speak to calm this tossing sea,
Stayed in thy tranquillity.

Into this "tranquillity" Peter entered through the grace of Christ, and when he became an old man he was bound but free. When he was chained and bound, when he stretched forth his hands and another girded him, and carried him whither he would not, when he was dying a martyr's death, he knew and felt himself to be free. The anguish of the cross, borne for his Saviour's sake, was sweeter than the old walks by Galilee and the grand sails upon its gaily moving waters.

There is something here which is better worth looking at and considering than almost any sight under heaven. There is a victory over self-will, over the desires of the flesh, over the power of man, over pain, over the fear of death. The secret power is "the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit who is given unto us," "We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us." "For I am persuaded, that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities nor powers, nor things present nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Peter did not gain his victory at once, or rather, he did not at once come into that state of mind in which victory was possible for him. Let us trace how he came into it. His mistakes and sins, and the lessons they taught him, were made useful in binding him to Christ. Perhaps we are all more easily taught in this manner than by any warning or admonition, however tender and wise. We would go as we wished, and we did; and the end was a fall. The experience of Peter on the night before our Lord's trial must have burnt into his soul a sense of his weakness and sinfulness which no amount of teaching even by the great Master could have imparted. After the denial he went out and wept bitterly; and yet that outburst did not empty his troubled heart; afterwards came the ever-deepening pain and sorrow of a more thorough and searching repentance.

Not by itself, however, would this fall and shame have wrought effectually to produce in him the meek and quiet spirit which distinguished him in his later days; neither will an experience of sin suffice to do it in anyone. All through, there was realised as his, and as present with him, a tender, patient, long-suffering, steadfast love, which no waters could quench—the love of Christ, which was his without money and without price, without desert or worthiness, which had sought him in his wanderings, which had held him by its sweet bonds amid all his strainings after the old mistaken liberty, which had looked upon him, not away from him, when he swore he "knew not the man"; which had sent for him to have an interview with him alone; which had recommitted to him the sacred charge of feeding the lambs and the sheep. Thus, along with all his painful self-experience and self-knowledge, was given a corresponding knowledge of the heart of Jesus. Only to have fallen and been humiliated would have made him hard and desperate, as it would any man, but the love of his Lord turned sin and shame into a blessing.

We come out of self-bondage into Christ-bondage, which is liberty, as we see that even our mistakes and sins have not estranged the love of God from us. "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." His unchanging goodness made Peter good as He Himself was good, because working always redemptively through Peter's sin and blindness.

Again: Peter discovered amid all his outbursts of passionate self-will that he was girt about and compassed in on every side with forces too strong for him; that he was overborne; that to throw forth his energies in a blind attempt to break down all that opposed him was to hurl himself against Omnipotence. It has been forcibly said that "we become men, not after we have been dissipated and disappointed in the chase of false pleasure, but after we have ascertained, in any way, what impassable barriers hem us in through this life; how mad it is to hope for contentment to our infinite soul from the gifts of this extremely finite world; that a man must be sufficient for himself; that for suffering and enduring there is no remedy but striving and doing. Manhood begins when we have in any way made truce with Necessity; begins even when we have surrendered to Necessity, as the most part only do; but begins joyfully and hopefully only when we have reconciled ourselves to Necessity; and thus, in reality, triumphed over it, and felt that in Necessity we are free." Well said as that is, it only hints at the great truth which Jesus came to teach us, and which He successfully teaches all who will sit at his feet, viz., that the Power which hems us in, which defeats us, which marches right over our obstructions to its goal, is not Necessity, but infinite and eternal Love. To the unbelieving heart Necessity; to the loving heart Love. Our Lord came "to reconcile us unto God," not unto Fate; and He Himself lived and worked under the sense of a Divine compulsion, but it was the compulsion of Love. "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day." "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish his work." And who sent Him? "The Father." "The Father loveth the Son, and hath committed all things into his hands."

We, too, can only bear the limitations of our lot, our trials, our losses, our pains, in the same manner as did Christ, when we see love behind them all. Peter could stretch forth his hands, and let "another bind him, and lead him whither he would not," as soon as he saw behind the human executioner the will and the love of God and of Christ. For this love places all things in a new light. Our dealings are not with man but with God. Love imposes upon us the burden; love nails us to the cross; love asks for life and all things. It is as love is seen and felt working in and through all our sharpest experiences, that we learn to cultivate and cherish a submission brightened with hope and sweetened with cheerfulness. St. Paul said, "To die is gain," but this high altitude of triumph is reached only when we have ceased from the strivings of self-will, and when Christ lives in us in supreme power and love. Peter could rejoice in the cross, because Christ, who had suffered for him, was in him with his own peace and joy.

These truths, which have to be experienced to be known, were profoundly felt by "Sister Augustine," one of the noble band of women who nursed the sick and wounded soldiers both in the war of Germany with Denmark, and also in that of Austria with Prussia. The vows of service which she had taken upon herself were presently found to be too galling to bear; and with her secret trouble she went one day into a little chapel to pray. As she bowed in prayer, the thought came to her heart as a revelation from God: "It was not the nails, but the love that held Jesus to the cross." Henceforth her life was free, joyful, and beneficent; she had found out the secret of her Lord.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

Dr. W. Fisher, writing from Central Africa, says: "Do urge friends to further energy in the matter of prayer for the spread of the Gospel in these dark lands. We must be united in this matter if we are to see God's mighty power made manifest."

I feel that the uniting of the hearts and voices according to the promise, "If two of you be agreed as touching anything," &c., of those who know and pray for our brethren, Dr. Fisher, Frederick Lane, Joseph Lynn, F. Schindler, and W. Smith, all from London and its neighbourhood, would greatly strengthen and cheer them in their work, as well as all others labouring in Africa. And so it has been arranged that all such should meet for one hour each week from 3.30 to 4.30 in the afternoon at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday, Feb. 6, and subsequent Mondays. F. S. Arnot.

A DESIDERATUM IN THE INSTRUCTION OF THE YOUNG.—A correspondent writes:—"Is there a book which sets forth in poetic form, and within the grasp of children, the contents and purpose of God's Word? My idea is that the order of the books, the number of chapters in each, with their object and chief teaching, should be set forth in rhyme and to music, so that the young may learn the glory of the book, as we learned to remember the number of days in the various months." Information as to the existence of any such juvenile helps may be sent to our care.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

III.

THE TWELVE TRIPLETS.

A very curious phenomenon arrests us in the opening chapter of the Apocalypse. Whatever may be its object or meaning, the fact is clear that the statements contained in that section of the book, the first of the three sections into which it is divided by its Divine Author, are arranged in a series of triplets, twelve in number.

This is clearly not accidental (if, indeed, that expression may be used with regard to any part of God's Holy Word); it must be as much designed, as the symmetrical arrangement of the Book of the Lamentations in five distinct divisions, each containing twenty-two verses (the number of the letters of the Hebrew alphabet), and each verse, speaking generally, consisting of a threefold division. In the Book of the Revelation, which bears such evident marks of the most methodical structure, and is full of accurately arranged numerical series of visions, the manner in which the first chapter is constructed is evidently of set purpose. We are bound then to notice the fact, and, if possible, to ascertain what it is meant to teach.

The triplets run thus:—

I.

"The Revelation—which God gave—and He sent and signified it (ver. 1).

Divinely Given—Divinely Sent—Divinely Signified.

II.

"John—bare record of the Word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw" (ver. 2).

The Word—The Witness—The Wonders.

III.

"Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things" (ver. 3).

The Reader—The Hearer—The Keeper.

IV.

"Grace and Peace from Him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne; and from Jesus Christ" (ver. 4).

The Father—The Spirit—The Son.

V.

"From Him which is, and which was, and which is to come" (ver. 4).

Jehovah eternally existent in Past—Present—Future.

VI.

"The faithful witness, the first-begotten from the dead, the Prince of the kings of the earth" (ver. 5).

Prophet—Priest—Prince.

VII.

Unto Him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father (ver. 5, 6).

Loved—Cleansed—Consecrated.

VIII.

"Behold, He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him" (ver. 7).

The Advent—The Vision—The Wailing.

IX.

"The Lord which is, and which was, and which is to come" (ver. 8).

Christ, eternally existent in Past—Present—Future.

X.

"I, John, who also am your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ" (ver. 9).

Tribulation—Triumph—Testing.

XI.

"I am the First and the Last; I am He that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive for evermore! Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death" (ver. 18).

The All-comprehensive One—

The Dead and Risen One—

The Omnipotent One.

XII.

"Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter."

The glorious Vision—the then existing Condition of the Churches—the Prophetic History of the Future.

Such is the series of triplets. The question is, What does this arrangement mean? is it designed to convey any special teaching, and, if so, what is the intended lesson?

In the first place, have the numbers of which the series is composed—$3 \times 4 = 12$—any meaning when considered separately? With regard to the first of these, the number Three, it is, I suppose, generally allowed that it has reference to the three Persons in the Godhead, and is, consequently, regarded as the Divine number.

In like manner, the number Four is believed to refer to man, to things human and terrestrial. The four corners of the earth—the four winds of the earth (Rev. vii. 1, Ez. xvii. 9, and Matt. xxiv. 31), the fourfold division of the sons of Japhet (Gen. x. 5), of Ham (Gen. x. 20), and of Shem (Gen. x. 31), which appears again in Rev. v. 9, vii. 9, x. 11, and xiv. 6, R.V., the four world empires of Dan. ii. and vii., the four Gentile powers and their overcomers of Zec. i. 18—21, the four-cornered sheet, with its fourfold contents of Acts x. 11—12, the four heads of the river which went out of Eden (Gen. ii. 10), the fourfold view of Jesus Christ presented to the world in the Gospels, the four living creatures of Ezek. i. and Rev. iv., with their four faces, four wings, and four hands, exercising control over the earthly movements of the wheels with their four faces—the four-square arrangement of the camp of Israel, and of the New Jerusalem, composed of redeemed sons of men, afford, it is thought, no small amount of proof in support of this view.

If, then, Three be taken as the number symbolic of the Celestial, and Four as that of the Terrestrial, what is their import when conjoined? Seven, which is Three plus Four, is admitted to be the number representing perfection or completeness, and it is noteworthy, as bearing upon what has just been stated, that in the Lord's Prayer—the perfect prayer—the first three petitions concern the things of God, while the last four relate to the needs of man.

But here we have to do with the numbers Three and Four in another relation, not added to each other, but multiplied the one by the other, and thus making Twelve. Has that number any symbolic meaning, and, if so, what is it? Shall we be wrong, if we see in it a reference to the Church of God? As Malcolm White, in his "Symbolical Numbers of Scripture," observes, "If Three be the symbol of the Deity, and Four of the world, how could the Church which God redeems out of the world be better represented than by the product of Three and Four = Twelve"? Without dogmatising upon the subject, there certainly appears to be no little foundation for the supposition.

What was the number of the heads of God's ancient people, and consequently of the tribes into which they were divided? Twelve. What was the number of the jewels representative of Israel that were borne on the high priest's breastplate? Twelve. What was the number of the heads of the Church in the New Testament—the Apostles? Twelve. When the Church appears in her pristine glory and beauty, clothed with the sun, her brow is encircled with a crown of twelve stars—bright with Apostolic truth. When she is presented to us as seated with Christ in heavenly places, the Church composed of the saints of both dispensations, it is as twenty-four elders (12×2), enthroned and crowned, that she is seen. When at different periods of her history she comes into view under certain conditions it is as a hundred-and-forty-and-four thousand ($12{,}000 \times 12$), first sealed by God (Rev. vii.) and then on Mount Zion with the Lamb (Rev. xiv.). And when finally manifested in glory, as the Bride, the Lamb's wife, we find the same number conspicuous in the form of the New Jerusalem. "Twelve gates made of twelve pearls," inscribed with the "Names of the Twelve tribes." "At the gate twelve angels." "Twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb." The wall one-hundred-and-forty-four cubits high. The city's length and breadth and height twelve thousand furlongs. And by the banks of the river of water of life the tree of life, "bearing twelve manner of fruits."

When all this is borne in mind, it is surely not a fanciful view which sees in the number so frequently employed in relation to the people of God, a very distinct reference to the Church, that wondrous new creation of which the Head is Divine, yet partaker of flesh and blood—all the members human, yet "partakers of the divine nature," and so indissolubly one with Christ as to be "His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

The question then remains, is there any special purpose in that arrangement of the opening chapter of the Apocalypse, which brings the numbers, which may be presumably regarded as symbolical of the heavenly, the earthly, and the union of both, in the Church, so prominently to the front?

As nothing can be purposeless in the composition of this marvellous book, of which Archbishop Trench says that "it is a work of such consummate art, a device of such profound wisdom, that one is slow to assume anything accidental in it," are we not bound, at least, to search beneath the surface for the meaning of so marked a peculiarity in the form of even its preface?

May it be that here, at the very threshold of the sanctuary—in the opening words of the deepest as well as the last book of Holy Scripture, a book which pronounces, both at its commencement and at its close, so emphatic a blessing on those who keep its sayings—there may be a veiled indication of its unspeakably important subject, sufficient to arrest attention, to arouse inquiry, and to form a prelude to the clearer statements, which soon follow, as to its main purpose and scope; just as, to use an illustration, an overture embodies the motif, and foreshadows the melodies which are brought out in more sharply-defined form in the music which follows?

Does, then, the use of these symbolic numbers, three, four, and twelve, in the first division of the book, image forth the truth that in its succeeding sections the vision is an Apocalypse of the things of heaven, the things of earth, and the things of the Church of God? Is it not in this view a marvellous epitome of the whole Bible, the first sentence of which speaks to us of "the heaven and the earth"—words repeated, either separately or together, no less than thirty-two times from Gen. i. 1 to Gen. ii. 6—and the last book of which mentions heaven and earth one hundred and fifteen times; while its whole scope is to set forth the dealings of God with men in redemption, and in his new creation, typified at the beginning by the creation and union of Adam and Eve?

As the constant recurrence of the number Seven, which is so conspicuous in the Revelation, unmistakably points in symbol to the completion of "the mystery of God," so may we well suppose that the use of the equally symbolic number Twelve either where distinctly mentioned, or where left, as in the present instance, to be discovered, is intended to call attention to the fact that the paramount object of God in his work of redemption has been to make "a marriage for his Son," "to take out a people for his name," to form the Church, whereby "unto principalities and powers in heavenly places" shall "be known the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord."

That this Church, the body and the bride of Christ, in her Divine calling, earthly history, and future glory, in her tribulation and her triumph, the object of Hell's hatred and of Heaven's care, is the principal figure in the great drama, prefigured in the Revelation, is, as it seems to me, incontestable. The book is written for her learning. It was to "his servants" that the Revelation was to be shown (ch. i. 1), "to the seven churches" that the book was to be sent (ch. i. 4)—in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks (or churches) that the Son of Man walks (ch. i. 13)—to the churches that the Spirit speaks in his sevenfold call to the listening ear (ch. ii. iii.), to the churches that Jesus sent his angel to testify these things (ch. xxii. 16).

Can any one attentively examine the book without being struck with the numerous names and figures under which the one, the unique body of the redeemed, the Church, is presented to us from beginning to end? The seven golden candlesticks; the twenty-four enthroned elders; the sealed ones; the white-robed multitude which no man could number; the worshippers in the Temple; the two witnesses (or candlesticks); the sun-clothed, star-crowned woman; the hundred and forty-four thousand on Mount Zion; the victors of the sea of glass and fire; the priestly partakers of the first resurrection, enthroned, judging, and reigning with Christ: the holy city, the new Jerusalem; THE BRIDE, THE LAMB'S WIFE. Such are the terms, varying according to the times, prefigured in the vision, and each teaching its own distinct lesson, which are employed to exhibit her character and history, her temptations and trials, her high calling and her final and eternal glory. If Twelve be the hieroglyphic number denoting the Church, inscribed over the portals of the Revelation, it may well prelude her eventful and marvellous career, whom her Lord and Saviour "loved," for whom He "gave Himself," "that He might present her to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot, nor wrinkle, nor any such thing," the partner of his throne "throughout all ages, world without end."

Wanted, Crown Advocates.

II.

Let us turn to the description which we find in the Word of God of a class of servants whose business it was to "watch the case on behalf of the Crown." In the first mention of the Watchmen of Israel we find these words: "The watchman lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold a man. . . . And the watchman cried and told the king. . . . And the watchman saw another man . . . and the watchman called and told . . . and the king said" (2 Sam. xviii. 24, 26).

The second mention of a watchman gives the same description of his work. "There stood a watchman on the tower, and he spied . . . and said, I see . . . and Joram (the king) said . . . And the watchman told, saying . . . and Joram said . . ." The watchman in both cases was simply one who "watched the case on behalf of the Crown," reporting faithfully all that he saw to the king.

And as we look closely into these two accounts of the watchman and his work, and compare them with what is said in other parts of the Bible, we get wonderfully clear and full teaching as to the character and work of those of us who hear the voice of the Lord saying, "Son of man, behold I have made Thee a watchman," and turn to his Word to see what such a calling involves, and how we can discharge the responsibilities of the office.

The first thing we are told of the watchman on duty is that he "went up to the roof and looked" (2 Sam. xviii. 24). He went to the place from which he could get the widest possible view. So in the second instance, "There stood a watchman on the tower" (2 Kings ix. 17), and Habakkuk says, "I will stand upon my watch, and will set me upon the tower, and will look forth" (Hab. ii. 4, R.V.).

How often our place of watching and prayer is down in the cellar instead of up on the roof! We enclose ourselves within four walls, on which are written respectively, I, me, my, mine, and within this enclosure, with comparatively no view, we watch and pray. Not that our prayers are necessarily selfish in the strict sense of the term, but how seldom we get for any length of time beyond our own family, our own classes, our own meetings, our own church, our own parish, our own girls, our own mission, our own work, or our own personal friends. How seldom in our prayers we "launch out into the deep" and in faith let down our nets for a draught. How many countries can you overlook from your place of prayer? Let us be roof Christians, and from the highest point within our reach obey the Lord's command—"Lift up your eyes and look on the fields."

This was the next thing the watchman did, after going up to the roof. "He lifted up his eyes and looked." It is not enough to pray with our eyes closed, for "all the kingdoms of the world," or for "all the heathen" in a general way, with no definite knowledge of definite need. We must look out over the expanse of country seen from our roof, watching to see what is happening, and so learning what to say to the King. For in every instance the watchman told the king what he saw. "Thus hath the Lord said unto me, Go, set a watchman; let him declare what he seeth" (Isa. xxi. 6). The faithful discharge of a watchman's duty involves faithful seeing as much as faithful declaring; and only as we are faithful in the looking out can we be faithful in the mediation.

The first thing that attracted the attention of David's watchman was "a man running alone" (2 Sam. xviii. 24); and it will not be long, if we take up our station on the roof, before we have to give the same report to the King, "I see a man running alone." How many of these lonely runners there are scattered over the world, some far away from home and friends, running alone because one and another who were once working alongside of them have been called by the King to higher service, or have been removed from their post by sickness or other circumstances, leaving one man or one woman to run alone; some quite close to us, with many fellow-labourers near at hand, and yet to all intents and purposes "running alone," perhaps by their own fault, perhaps from the force of circumstances or temperament.

Might we not take it as one special part of our work as watchmen to look out for the lonely ones and tell the King of them? Might not one result be that He would let us cheer the loneliness of which we had told Him? For it is not only the far-off ones for whom we must watch and be mediators with the King. There is a danger sometimes, just because we are on the roof, of our being so intent upon what is happening in the distance, that we do not notice what is passing close to the tower. It was not long before the watchman saw two men, of whom one "came apace and drew near," while the other was only just in sight (vv. 25, 26), and the watchman gave equal attention to both, and told the king what he saw of each. Do not let us ever get so absorbed in one "runner," however lonely, whether at home or abroad, that we fail to see "another," who may have equal demands upon us, and equal need of our mediation with the King.

As the messenger drew near, the observant watchman detected a peculiarity in his manner of running (v. 27), and it will be impossible for us to watch attentively on the Lord's behalf, without observing many a peculiarity in many a worker for Him as we come into close contact with them, but let us be careful that, as we see them, we speak of them first to the King, not to our fellow workers, unless it is done "on behalf of the Crown," and then only after we have told the King, never on our way to tell Him. For it may often happen that when we go to tell Him of what we consider a defect in a worker, He will reply as David did—"He is a good man," and even when the adverse opinions that we have formed are altogether true, how different will be the spirit of a judgment, expressed after fellowship with the King, from that which we should utter if we talked things over first with others.

Sometimes, like Joram's watchman, we shall see "furious driving" (2 Kings ix. 20); at other times it will seem to us that people are holding back and hindering the Lord's work from over caution and fear of going too fast. Sometimes we shall see "one running alone"; at other times our cry will be "I see a company" (2 Kings ix. 17). Sometimes we shall see messengers coming towards us bringing tidings of the battle which they have seen, and of the defeat of the King's enemies (2 Sam. xviii. 28); while again and again we shall have to say of messengers whom we saw start out bearing the offer of reconciliation to opposing forces:—"The messenger came to them, but he cometh not again" (2 Kings ix. 18); occasionally because he has deserted to the enemy's ranks, more often, thank God, because he has laid down his life on the King's behalf. But whatever we see, let us tell the King. Who can say what new grace and power might be given to individual servants of the Crown in answer to our believing, watching, and prayer, or how often as we told the King of the sent ones who had not returned, He might, in response, send others to fill the vacant posts (see 2 Kings ix. 19).

The watchman was not only the mediator between the people and the King; he was also the mediator for the King with the people. "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me" (Eze. iii. 17). If we act faithfully towards God as watchmen, we shall be sure to get messages from Him to men. Our business as watching ones will not only be to tell the King what we hear and see of men, but also to tell to men what we see and hear of the King. For we shall see Him and we shall hear Him. So surely as we "stand continually upon the watch-tower" and "hearken diligently with much heed," we shall be able to say sooner or later "That which I have heard of the Lord of Hosts . . . . . have I made known unto you" (Isa. xxi. 8-10). "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will look forth to see what He will speak with me (or by me) . . . . . And the Lord answered me" (Hab. ii. 1-2, R.V.), as He will answer every watching and waiting and listening one. He will tell us the meaning of many things that we see, which would be strangely puzzling without his explanation (see Isa. xxi. 7-9).

Sometimes He will answer us by action, by doing what we have pleaded with Him to do; sometimes, as with Habakkuk, He will answer us in word, telling us that the visible answer is "yet for an appointed time"; for the day of God's "answer" is not always the day on which He manifestly gives us what we ask. There is an answering of his heart back to our heart, of his personally-spoken promise to our personally-spoken request, which is as real to faith as the reception of a tangible gift is to sight; and as sure, though the outward reception may be long delayed.

The watchman has pre-eminently need of patience and of persistence. "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, take ye no rest, and give Him no rest, till He establish and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth (Isa. lxii. 6)." Nearly two thousand six hundred years have passed since this command was given to the watchmen, and still Jerusalem, instead of being "a praise in the earth," is "a scorn and a derision to them that are round about"; still the promise waits, and still the watchmen wait, and still the Lord waits, but after all the centuries of silence, the day will come when the cry of the watchman on Mount Zion shall be answered by the watchman on Mount Ephraim, saying, "Arise and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God"; when "They shall come and sing in the height of Zion . . . and they shall not sorrow any more at all . . ." but "shall use this speech in the land of Judah and in the cities thereof. . . . The Lord bless thee, O habitation of justice and mountain of holiness" (Jer. xxxi. 6, 12, 23).

Are we among the number of the Lord's remembrancers, thus watching and thus waiting for the fulfilment of his promise; watching for literal Israel, his "brethren according to the flesh"; watching for the spiritual Israel, whom "He is not ashamed to call brethren" too; watching for souls, as they that must give account? Or are we, in our watching and in our praying, like the "blind" watchmen, who are not looking forth; "dumb" ones, who cannot make our voice to be heard by God or man, "sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber," instead of standing continually on the watch-tower, looking out for the interests of the King, for the commands of the King, for the coming of the King?

For day by day, as we watch on his behalf, we see on every side the tokens that "He is nigh, even at the doors," and we wait and watch "like unto men looking for their Lord." "My soul waiteth for the Lord more than watchmen look for the morning, I say more than watchmen look for the morning" (Ps. cxxx. 6, R.V.). The watchman, "set in his ward whole nights," looked for the morning, not with doubtful wonder, but with confident anticipation, as for something that he knew was coming; and he not only looked for it, but proclaimed it: "The watchman saith, The morning cometh." And we know that "the night is far spent, that the watching time will soon be over," for "the day is at hand." "Yet a little while and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." "The vision hasteth towards the end, and shall not lie: though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come; it will not delay" (Hab. ii. 3, R.V.).

And even as we wait for Him, as we look forth into the darkness for the first streak of dawn that shall herald the everlasting day, watching for Him as for One who has gone away, and is coming again to receive us unto Himself, that where He is there we may be. We hear his own voice close beside us, saying, "Lo, I am with you alway." "Couldest thou not watch with Me one hour?"

THE ILLUSTRATED SCRIPTURE MISSION is the present style of what has hitherto been known as the Scripture Gift Mission. The object of the mission is to print illustrated Scripture portions for distribution in hospitals, workhouses, soldiers' barracks, lodging-houses, and such like institutions, as well as among the poorer classes of the community. The Superintendent is Mr. Walters, 79, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.

"CRAVEN LODGE" CONVALESCENT HOME, ST. LEONARDS, is intended for respectable women and girls. Situated in St. Margaret's-road, near the sea, the lodge will accommodate twenty-five inmates requiring temporary rest from the strain of work, or quiet during convalescence. The hon. superintendent, Miss Agnes Young, in a brief report just issued, says:—"It has been our privilege to see many, who through serious illness or trouble have become quite unfitted for their work, regain health and strength, and return home once again to face life's battle. We are also most thankful to know that many have received spiritual as well as temporal help from their stay at Craven Lodge."

THE LOST INDIAN.

By Rev. Egerton R. Young.

The following beautiful story deserves a place among the great number of real answers to prayer. Still does the Lord God say to his followers: "I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them."

Our Indian converts believe in God. With a simple, childlike faith, they take Him at his word. One of our Indians at his baptism received the English name of Edmund Stephenson. He was an earnest yet simple Christian. His religion made him industrious, and so by his diligent hunting and fishing he comfortably provided for his wife and two little ones.

One evening about the middle of last October he left his family at his little home at Norway House, and started up a rapid river to visit some of his relatives who lived several miles away. In those high latitudes the cold winter sets in very early, and so already the river was covered with ice. To make the trip more quickly he fastened on his skates, and when last seen he was rapidly speeding away on his trip in the evening twilight.

As he did not return the next day, as he had promised his family, they became alarmed, and an Indian messenger was sent to inquire the reason. To his surprise, he was informed by the friends that Edmund had not visited them, and they knew not of his whereabouts. When these tidings were carried home, there was great alarm and a search party was quickly organised. From the point where Edmund was last seen alive, they carefully examined the ice as they hurried along, and after a little time discovered the most conclusive evidence that the poor man was drowned. Over a part of the river where the current is very rapid, they discovered that the ice had been broken through, and although now again firmly frozen over, yet in the congealed mass they discovered one of his deerskin gloves, a button of his coat, and other evidences that here he had fallen through the ice, and had made a most desperate effort to escape.

As it was nearly dark when the searchers made these discoveries as to the place and manner of his death, they were obliged with this to be satisfied, and to postpone the search for the body until the next day.

Early the next morning they diligently set to work. As much snow had fallen during the previous evening they were very much hampered in their efforts, and although a large number of men, with snow-shovels, axes, and grappling-irons, diligently sought in many places for the remains, several days passed by, and they were still unsuccessful in their efforts.

Among the searchers were some Indians who still believed in the skill and supernatural powers of the conjurers, or medicine-men. These having become discouraged in their efforts, resolved to consult one of these old men, and so they said: "Let us go and consult old Kwaskacarp, and get him to conjure for us and tell us where to find the body."

The Christian Indians protested against this, and tried to dissuade them from their purpose. But they would not listen to them, being so discouraged in their efforts. So they carried a gift of tea and tobacco to the conjurer, and told him of the object of their coming. In response to their wishes, and in return for their gifts, he took his sacred drum and medicine bag into his tent and noisily drummed away until he worked himself up into a kind of frenzy or delirium, and then he told them where they were to cut the ice and drag for the body of their dead comrade.

When the Christian Indians heard that these others had thus gone to the conjurer for help they were very much grieved. One especially was very much distressed in spirit. He is a grand old man, by the name of Thomas Mustagan. While feeling deeply the loss of Edmund, he was very much hurt when the news reached him that some of the searchers, instead of going to God in their perplexity and trouble, had, like poor old King Saul, resorted to such disreputable agencies.

No sooner had he received the news of their conduct than he resolved to adopt a very different course. Getting his wife to cook a quantity of food, he carried it with some kettles and tea over to a spot on the shore near to the place in the river where the men were now diligently searching for the body.

Clearing away the snow, he made a fire, and then when the tea was prepared, he called the hungry and almost discouraged men around him and made them eat his food and drink his tea. Then he talked to them of the one living and true God, and of his power to hear and answer prayer. He then spoke of the foolishness and wickedness of the conduct of those who, having heard about Him, had gone and consulted the wicked old conjurer.

"Let us go to that God about whom we have been taught by our missionaries. He is the one to help us in our trouble." Thus he talked with them. Then with the people all around him, he kneeled down in the snow, and earnestly and reverently asked God to hear and help them in their sorrow and perplexity. He prayed that wisdom might be given them, so that they might find the body of their dear friend that was lying somewhere in that cold river, that they might take it up and bury it in their little village graveyard. And very earnestly did he ask God to comfort the poor sorrowing widow and the little helpless children. Thus did this venerable old Indian, of over four score winters, with believing faith call upon God.

When they arose from their knees he said: "Now, trusting in God to answer us, let us go to work."

As much snow had fallen on the ice, they had to first scrape it away, and then use their judgment where, over the rapid waters, to cut through the ice and drag for the body. Although Thomas was such an aged man, he now seemed the most alert and active man in the party. By common consent he was given charge of the party of Christian Indians, who now all diligently worked under his direction. As fast as the snow was scraped away from the ice he carefully scanned every part of it.

In the meantime the old conjurer, Kwaskacarp, in a confident voice told his followers that he had conjured, and the answer was that they were to cut the ice in a certain designated place.

Paying no attention to him and his party, the Christian Indians worked away, and as fast as the ice was cleared of snow Thomas looked through it as well as he could.

All at once he quickly rose up from a spot of semi-transparent ice which he had been carefully examining. Calling to the men with the axes and ice-chisels he said, "Try here." Soon they had a large hole cut through the ice, the grappling-irons were speedily brought into use, and there the body was found and quickly brought to the surface, although it was hundreds of yards from the place where the conjurer had directed his followers to look for it.

Thomas, while intently searching through the ice, had seen on the under surface at that place a quantity of air bubbles. The thought came to him that here the body had rested, and the last air from the lungs had escaped, and formed these bubbles. He asked for wisdom and help, and he obtained it, and in less than an hour after these pious Indians had been on their knees in earnest prayer in the snow, the body of their comrade was being borne away to his home, and from thence to its final resting place in the "God's Acre" of the little Christian village.

THE BOOK OF BOOKS.

The Book of books—the Bible
How gloriously divine!
Around our hearts from childhood,
Its words so sweetly twine;
We lisp its sacred measures
Ere infancy has sped,
And carve its hallowed numbers
Above our sleeping dead.

The Book of books—the Bible,
How practical, how real!
The Trinity of glory
Has set to it its seal;
In heaven—securely settled,
On earth—supremely sure,
Its truths divine, effulgent,
Will age to age endure.

The Book of books—the Bible,
Thank God, to us 'tis given!
To gild our pilgrim pathway
To his fair rest in heaven;
Life, light, and joy gleam from it,
As from the throne on high;
On it I gaze with rapture,
And "Best of Books!" I cry.

ROBIN DINNERS.

The happy thought of Rev. Charles Bullock of a Robin dinner for very poor children fell in good soil. After a growth of fifteen years it is still bringing forth abundantly. This season Mr. Bullock's friends have responded more liberally than ever, and more than 30,000 children will rejoice. Not a penny contributed goes to the cost of management, the agents for the distribution being in the large majority of cases the clergy living and working in the poorest parishes of London, and through the Ragged School Union.

On a recent evening the great hall of the People's Palace presented a fine spectacle as a thousand little lads and lassies enjoyed knife and fork exercise, Truly the guests were of the raggedest, three hundred of them being cripples, members of the Home Cripples Band of the Ragged School Union.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES AT EALING.

An eight days' mission has been held in Ealing by Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, of the C.S.S.M., and Mr. L. T. R. Hutchinson, B.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge. The mission commenced on Sunday, Jan. 15, and, notwithstanding the inclement weather that prevailed, the numbers attending increased daily. Meetings were held in the mornings and on Sundays in Princes Hall for children at home for the holidays, and in the evenings for schoolboys. There were also evening meetings in St. John's Schools, Ealing Dean. The meetings were very bright throughout, and it is believed that many received definite blessing and help.

On Tuesday, January 17, a special Scripture Union meeting was held. Rev. H. G. Thwaites spoke to workers on—

Co-workers with "God the Father,"
Co-sufferers with "God the Son,"
Co-witnesses with "God the Holy Ghost."

On Thursday a large audience assembled to hear a lecture by Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby on the Niger Mission. Mr. Dodderidge held two special meetings for Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers in the Drill Hall on Sunday afternoons. The mission concluded on Monday evening, January 23, by a praise meeting, when many testified to blessing received. Through these services the work amongst the young has been brought forward publicly, and many new members added to the Scripture Union. The results cannot now be fully estimated, but will one day be revealed, when the "redeemed will with Jesus stand," "washed in his precious blood."

THE PRODIGAL SON.

Luke xv. 11-24.

What a picture this is, of the pride and foolishness of man and of the love and forgiving grace of God. Look at:—

1. His selfish demand—"Give me." His highest idea of happiness is to do his own will.

2. His wayward journey—"Far country." Anywhere, where the Father is unknown (Job xxi. 14).

3. His reckless living—"Wasted his substance." Abused his father's gifts: the selfish life.

4. His miserable plight—"Spent all ... famine arose." Want follows waste (Isa. lv. 2) (Luke xvi. 24).

5. His despairing effort—"Joined himself." The last attempt at reformation (Rom. x. 4).

6. His friendless condition—"No man gave unto him." God only can satisfy the famished soul (Isa. lv. 2).

7. His wise resolve—"I will arise and go." The remembrance of a father's love constrains (2 Cor. v. 14).

8. His gracious reception—"He fell on his neck and kissed him." Behold what love (John vi. 37).

9. His happy change—"Let us eat and be merry." The pleasures of sin are exchanged for pure delight. In the father's presence he is saved, reconciled, rested, rejoiced, satisfied.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 5.—1 KINGS I.

To the end of his life the effects of David's sin followed him. And as Bathsheba and he met for perhaps almost the last time on this dark day, both of them must have remembered the announcement of Nathan, still with them as friend and counsellor, which he had given so long before (2 Sam. xii. 10, 11). How carefully we should walk with God, trusting Him to keep us moment by moment, since one glance of the eye at the forbidden may lead to such disastrous results.

Old age had not dimmed David's clear apprehension of wise policy, nor dulled his sense of God's redeeming mercy. Old age gives us time to review the way in which we have been led, and to recall interpositions of God's helping hand, which in the rush of life we had hardly noticed.

The coronation of Solomon, amid joy that made the earth ring, again carries the heart on to the moment when the Lord Jesus shall be proclaimed as King, not only of his Church, but of the world. Then shall trembling take hold on his foes, and the earth itself shall break into song.

It was very grievous that Abiathar and Joab should turn from their olden allegiance to David, which had been tested by so many years of common suffering and trial. David must have felt their disaffection severely. Let us not put our trust in princes, or in the son of man, in whom there is no help; but in the living and unchangeable Saviour. He cannot fail, nor forsake us.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6.—1 KINGS II.

Let us so live that we may not fear to die, and that even when about to pass through the solemn article of death we may speak calmly and helpfully to those who gather around us. Without doubt there will be grace to die by as to live by.

David could speak not only by the inspiration of the Spirit of God, but as epitomising his own experience, and it is good to ponder the sentences in which he embodies his conclusions. To keep God's charge; to walk in his ways; to keep his statutes and commandments: such is the pathway of prosperity and peace. And ever through his heart there ran the sweet assurance of those ever-memorable words of promise. When once God hath passed his word years may intervene, but it shall be even as He hath said.

At first sight it would seem that David carried to the grave feelings of bitter hatred to these men named by him to Solomon, but we must not forget that he spake as much as a politician as a man. He saw that they constituted a source of great danger to the realm, and therefore warned Solomon against them. And, indeed, as this chapter goes on to show, they were each of them discovered in acts of treachery, for which, rather than because of David's injunctions, they suffered death. What a comment on such the expressions as Psalm lv. 23.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 7.—1 KINGS III.

Shadows began to gather on the fair dawn. Solomon had no right to take to wife the daughter of the idolatrous Egyptian king, such intermarriages having been distinctly forbidden. And there are two significant onlys in the second and third verses. But these reservations may have been due to the want of a proper Temple in which the people might observe their religious rites. In any case, Solomon loved the Lord and the Lord loved Solomon. How pitiful the love of God is, always willing to find a reason why He should not turn aside His mercy.

To each soul, abiding in Jesus, there come the gracious words, Ask what I shall give thee (1 John v. 15). The only limitations are those placed by our faith or ability to receive. Happy are we if we seek not our own, but the things that are Jesus Christ's! For when we seek the kingdom of God and His righteousness, all things else are added. When we are set on doing God's work, He will qualify us for it, giving us the qualities we needed most, and doing for us in other respects exceeding abundantly beyond all that we ask or think. Oh what a wonderful God is ours. There is no good thing that He will withhold from them that walk uprightly. And He not only shows great kindness, but keeps it.

The closing verses of the chapter show how great an insight Solomon had into the human, the mother's, heart. And it has been truly said that Satan, who has no right to the heart, will be satisfied with a bit of it, whilst God, who has a lawful claim on the whole, must have all or none.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8.—2 KINGS IV.

How proud and exulting is this record of the greatness of Solomon, his Ministers, his unparalleled riches and honour, his stud of horses and cavalry, the provision for his table, his wisdom and knowledge, and the prosperity of Israel under his reign.

But from Solomon we turn to the greater than he. Who can measure the unsearchable riches of Jesus? What roll-call could contain the names of those who have served Him faithfully, and are now gathered around his throne in his glory? What tongue can recount all his wisdom, who is the Word of God, the home and the fountain of truth? Happy and safe are they who already own Him as their King, and that indeed will be a blessed day when the world shall own his blessed sway.

Let every child of God avail himself of those rich provisions which are ours in Jesus, feasting on his bounties, participating in his wisdom and largeness of heart, and drawing on the resources of that understanding, which, whilst it can deal with the greatest concerns, can also take cognisance of matters as insignificant as the hyssop springing out of the wall. So comprehensive is the heart of Jesus. There is no limit to the height or to the depth of his uttermost salvation.

Well may the New Jerusalem be represented as a city of gold, the metropolis of our great, wise, and glorious King, who more than realises the portraiture of Psalm lxxii.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9.—1 KINGS V.

David, for years before his death, had made great preparations for the building of the Temple, but had not been permitted to erect it, because he had been a man of war. But now war on every side had been exchanged for rest on every side (3-4); and, therefore, the day of temple-building had arrived. It is when the churches are at peace that they are edified (Acts viii. 31.) Times of temptation and difficulty are needed to brace and inure us to hardship, but we grow most in days of calm and loving meditation.

Hiram was a Gentile, perhaps very little instructed in the ways of Jehovah, but he had an important function to perform in the building of the Temple. Indeed, much of its beauty and magnificence was due to him. And in this he foreshadows the part which we Gentiles are called upon to perform in the up-building of the Church.

How careful the historian is to fall back reverently and repeatedly on the Divine promise (12). Amid all the splendour of Solomon's realm, we can never forget the Divine purpose and promise to which all was due. My soul, boast not of aught which thou hast, thou hast nothing which thou hast not received.

Be content to be a hewer on the mountains, shaping rough blocks of granite, so long as thou canst do something for God's temple.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10.—1 KINGS VI.

Three years were spent in preparation, but they were not wasted or misspent. There must be times of subsoil work ere there can be the harvest of results.

The Temple was just twice the size of the Tabernacle, 90ft. long by 30ft. broad, and 45ft. high. It was built on the plan given by God to David (1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 12), and was the type, first, of the body of Jesus (John ii. 21); then, of each believer (1 Cor. iii. 16); and, lastly, of the whole Church of God (Eph. ii. 21, 22). Each of these is the dwelling-place of God, the inner Holy of Holies. The spirit, the Shekinah, still finds its home. There is no need to go into any material structure, or to ascend into Heaven—God is within. He dwells among us, and will not forsake us (13).

The silence in which the Temple was reared was very significant. Like some tall palm, growing amid the silence of the desert, that wonderful building rose upon the summit of Zion. The stone was made ready at the quarry (7). Thus all true work for God is being done in the world.

How rich the pattern, how lavish the gold, how solid the workmanship! No wonder that it took seven years to build. Nor can we wonder that so many centuries have passed since the corner-stone of the Church was laid in the deeps of Calvary.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11.—1 KINGS VII.

There were changes in the Temple from the ancient Tabernacle. Two pillars were erected at the entrance, 27ft. high, and 18ft. in circumference. Jacinth meant "He shall establish," and Boaz "In Him is strength." How needful that we should always remember those two great facts in all worship and service. The molten sea (23—36) was substituted for the laver, and reminds us of the constant need of washing our feet ere we enter the presence of the holy God. We need not only the blood of the altar, but the water of the Word, and of that basin from which Jesus washed his disciples' feet. The same lesson is taught in the ten lavers used for washing what was offered as burnt-offerings.

The enumeration of brazen and golden work leads up to the announcement that Solomon left the vessels unweighed, and the margin records the words "was not searched out." In this, too, there is a shadowing forth of the unsearchable riches of Jesus. You cannot weigh them up. They defy calculation. And as you leave the outer courts and go on towards the inner shrine and heart, you find that, however finely burnished the brass is it must give place to the finest gold. In the Christian life there is a sensible advance from grace to grace, from strength to strength. Higher, ever higher! Swifter, and ever swifter! Holier, and ever more like the glorious Lord!

NEHEMIAH'S PRAYER. Neh. I. 1—11.

GOLDEN TEXT, Psa. xxx. 10.

THE Temple was completed B.C. 515. Between that event (Ezra vi.) and the second return from captivity under Ezra recorded in his chapter vii. a period of about sixty years elapsed. The story of the Book of Esther, about B.C. 473, belongs to this period. It is in the year B.C. 445, seventy years after our last lesson, that the story of Nehemiah begins. Artaxerxes Longimanus (or long-handed) reigned in Persia from B.C. 465 to 423. He was the son of Xerxes, called in Esther Ahasuerus. In his seventh year, he had given permission to Ezra to return with other captives to Jerusalem (Ezra vii. 11—28).

The Persian kings had four capitals for the four different seasons of the year; for the spring in Babylon, for the summer in Ecbatana, for the autumn in Persepolis, and for the winter in Shushan, where our lesson opens. The word Shushan, or Susa, means "a city," and the city was situated on the Choaspes, a branch of the Tigris. It was strongly fortified and possessed a most magnificent palace.

Of Nehemiah we know only what this book tells us. His name means "Compassion of Jehovah." He was probably of the tribe of Judah and the house of David, hence his reference to his fathers' sepulchres (ii. 3). As "cup-bearer" (11) he filled a very responsible position. The term implies that he "was a councillor, statesman, courtier, and favourite." His duties brought him into close connection with the king. Can we not see the providence of God preparing for the blessing of his people by exalting his servant to this position? The piety of Nehemiah is most worthy of note. The idolatrous surroundings among which he lived, the lucrative office which he filled, and the favour of the king which he enjoyed did not make him any the less a humble, devoted, loyal servant of God.

Tidings of the condition of Jerusalem were brought to Nehemiah in the month of Chisleu (our November and December) by Hanani, supposed by some to have been an actual kinsman (1, 2). Josephus says that Nehemiah overheard certain Jewish strangers conversing in his own language outside the walls of Shushan, joined himself to them, and learned, on inquiry, the truth concerning Jerusalem. Notwithstanding the people and the wealth which Ezra had taken to the city, the new community was still in deep distress (3). Their subjection to Persia, and the consequent heavy tribute they were called to pay; the oppression practised upon them by subordinates of the Persian power; the forcing of Jewish recruits into Persian armies; the pillaging of their country by day and the kidnapping of their citizens by night; the spectacle of murdered men lying on the road—these were some of their afflictions.—Geikie. Besides all this, the walls, broken down 140 years before (2 Kings xxv. 10), were still unbuilt; and in these countries, at that time, "a city without locked gates and lofty walls was no city at all."—Stanley.

It was an evidence of Nehemiah's piety that this narrative troubled him deeply (4). His mourning continued for four months (ii. 1). He fasted, as did also Daniel (ix. 3), Esther (iv. 16), and Ezra (x. 6). Distance from the city of Jerusalem did not lessen his grief. He had probably never seen the city, and was enjoying great prosperity himself, but he was not indifferent to the distress of his people there (Ezek. ix. 4). True piety is unselfishness, sympathy, helpfulness.

He did more than fast. That may express, but cannot relieve, our distress. He found relief and deliverance through prayer. No trouble can overwhelm those who know God as the hearer and answerer of prayer (Psa. lxv. 2). The favour Nehemiah desired could be granted only by Artaxerxes but the most direct way to his heart was by prayer to God.

The prayer of Nehemiah (5—11) includes adoration (5). We tell out what God is in prayer, not for his information, but for our encouragement. A deep reverential spirit is necessary to the exercise of strong faith. Confession (6, 7). He identifies himself with his people, so that their sins become his own. Confession gives glory to God (Josh. vii. 19) by acknowledging the justice of his chastisements, and by recognising the absence of all merit on our part. Argument, drawn first from God's promises (8, 9), and next from his former dealings with his people (10). God will not violate his word, nor forsake his people (1 Sam. xii. 22). That He has done so much is a proper reason for expecting more. Petition (11). The plan he had formed needed the favour of the king; this is his definite request.

As a model, Nehemiah's prayer is very valuable; but the persistency "day and night" (5) with which he prayed, and the patience which he exercised, and which waited three or four months for the answer, these are necessary to successful prayer.

One Year Ago.

ANNIVERSARY OF MR. SPURGEON'S DEATH,

On the last Sabbath of January 1892, Pastor C. H. Spurgeon passed away at Mentone, from the sphere of his earthly service, into the land of eternal light and Sabbatic rest. Such a circumstance, in our human methods of computation, brings back to the memory a renewed and vivid realisation of the loss and sadness of that sorrowful time. By the day of the month Tuesday was the exact anniversary of the pastor's home-going; but the memorial services in connection with the year-old event began on Sabbath last, when the sermons by Dr. Pierson, morning and evening, had special reference to Mr. Spurgeon's decease. There was also a children's special service in the afternoon, when Rev. H. O. Mackey was the preacher.

At the service of Sunday morning the congregation was a full one. Whatever may be the ultimate bearing of the long-loved pastor's removal on the history of the vast church and congregation at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, it must be said that up to the present time they have kept well together. Under Dr. Pierson's ministry of preaching there seems to be little observable falling off in numbers. As the people flocked into the building on Sabbath morning it was pleasant, and a thing of happy omen, to note the homely brotherly ways of the regular attendants. There was none of that sombre frigidity and starchy sullenness that passes for reverence in so many churches where the life is not too superabundant. Decency and order are very desirable things, but these are not at all incompatible with the hearty hand-shaking and subdued conversation that were so good to see and to hear in the Tabernacle on Sunday morning as the congregation gathered.

Dr. Pierson's brief opening prayer and the hymns, (sung with a fervour that is far better and more inspiring than the product of faultless art), were all in keeping with the memories that dominated the minds and hearts of the assembly. The lesson for the day was from 1 Cor. xv., a passage into which, as the preacher said, Paul seems to have gathered all the available truth revealed with respect to the resurrection from the dead. The latter half of the chapter, was that which Dr. Pierson read, and shortly expounded. The two main points he emphasised were, that a man's resurrection body, though not composed of the atoms that went to make up his earthly body, will yet prove the identity of the individual; and that while the natural body is designed to be a fitting home for the soul of man, the resurrection body will be the glorified temple of his spirit. "The first Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam a quickening spirit."

The second and comprehensive prayer of the service was offered by Mr. William Olney; and a great deal might appropriately enough be written about the wonderful elevation of spirit; the happy grouping of subjects for special petition; and the choice diction in which the prayer was framed. In the very tone and accent of Mr. Olney's voice the listener detects continually recurring echoes of the master tones that rang so sweetly and musically for so many years through the great spaces of the Tabernacle. Mr. Olney prayed that this memorial time of the church's great loss might prove a season of Divine quickening and power. In peculiarly pathetic words he besought a special blessing on the sorrowing widow at Westwood, and on the two sons across the sea. He also prayed with much earnestness for the speedy and full recovery of Pastor James Spurgeon, and finally for the Spirit's power on Mr. Pierson, the preacher for the day.

The sermon might be described as a powerful plea for

THE IMMORTALITY OF MAN.

The text was John xi. 25, 26, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

He began by referring to the two questions propounded in the Book of Job (which he described as the oldest poem ever written), "Man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" and "If a man die shall he live again?" (xiv. 10-14). There is in these questions a far deeper meaning than we are accustomed to see. Death is the separation of the soul from the body. So there comes this double question: Where is the man himself—the soul? and secondly, Shall the body live again? It is common to say that in these words to Martha our Lord referred to the fact that the bodies of all saints should rise when He comes, and the bodies of the living saints shall be transformed without the experience of death. No doubt his words cover that double mystery; but is there not in them an answer to the two questions in Job—an assertion of the truth that the dead shall be raised, and on the other hand that the living disciple shall never really die, but the life out of the body shall be a continuation of the life in the body? This thought, said Dr. Pierson, had been a source of untold comfort and joy to him in connection with the great sorrow that took from that congregation their beloved pastor, and he wished the same comfort to be theirs.

As to the question of human immortality, the preacher said it was interesting to look at the hints that nature gives. In the great world of nature there is what is called the correlation of forces. Everything is related or matched to some corresponding thing by a divine adjustment and adaptation. The wing pre-supposes an atmosphere; the eye is the promise and prophecy of the light, and so forth. If man's instinctive longing for immortality has no immortality to match it, that longing is the only thing in the world that is not correlated. There is also in nature the conservation of force. Force may change its mode of operation or the conditions of its existence, but it remains force and can never be lost. Some familiar illustrations of this were given, as for instance the storage of heat in the coal beds, now being released to provide our homes with fire. The most indestructible force in the universe is life, and if inferior forces are never lost, who shall dare to say that the great and stupendous monarch of all forces shall ever be lost? So in nature we have hints of the indestructibility of life.

Nature also gives us hints as to resurrection, through changes in the forms of existence. The dormant caterpillar becomes the beautiful butterfly, and disports itself in the sun. The seemingly dead trees, by the action of the summer sun, burst into new life and verdure.

Coming from the page of nature to the Word of God, we find that throughout that word the doctrine of immortality is taught, directly and indirectly. At the creation we are told that God breathed into man's body the breath of life, and man became a living soul—not a body with a living soul. The soul is the man; the body is only the man's habitation. In Ecclesiastes we read that man's dust returns to the earth whence it came, but his spirit returns to God who gave it. That is the Bible notion of death. We say that a thought cannot die, but lives on and on after the man who uttered it is dead. If a thought cannot die, can the thinker who projected it die? Death is but the pulling down of the body, that the man may enter another and grander house—"not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Further, throughout the Old Testament, the greatest incentive to obedience is found in the possible union of the obedient soul with the Lord Jehovah. So Enoch and Elijah were taken into full union with God without passing through death. The same thing was indirectly taught by our Lord when he said to the Sadducees that God who is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is not the God of the dead, but of the living—inferring that these fathers of the race were then living as much as ever they were.

Two passages were quoted, giving direct New Testament teaching on this point—"To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise" (Luke xxiii. 43) and Matt. xvii., where the Transfiguration is described, showing Moses and Elijah, conscious, intelligent, recognising our Lord and conversing with Him. Other passages cited were 2 Cor. v.; Phil. i. 21; 1 Thess. iv. 13. In closing, the preacher said, "All I have to say is that if this doctrine is not true, it ought to be. It has been to me a strength in every sorrow, and I bring it to you this morning to comfort you. You have not buried Charles H. Spurgeon. You could not bury him if you tried. You could bury his body at Norwood, but it makes very little difference to him what you do with his body—whether you bury it or burn it, or sink it in the depths of the sea, or tear it atom from atom and scatter it to the winds of heaven. He is profoundly indifferent to what you do with his body, for he is not there. For nearly a year his redeemed spirit has been present with the Lord. Like Paul, he was in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better, but he thought his abiding here was needful for you. The Lord settled the question, and his soul passed into the presence of God. The eye that kindled with light has ceased to shine, but the light shines still. The ear that rejoiced in the sound of music and friendly voices has been dissolved in dust, but that heard behind the ear hears better music than was ever heard on earth. No, you have not buried him; I defy you to do it. You cannot catch him to bury him. He has evaded your grasp, and the indestructible life survives. The best monument you can erect to his memory is to follow his example as he followed Christ; to give forth the message of life he proclaimed, and to perpetuate the institutions he founded, and the work to which he laid his hands."

ALL DAY MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Tuesday, the anniversary of the date of Mr. Spurgeon's death, was observed at the Metropolitan Tabernacle as a day of solemn memorial. Three services were held in—the morning for pastors and students, "Pastors' College men"; in the afternoon for ministers and workers of every kind; and in the evening for the public generally.

Professor Gracey, D.D., who presided at the first gathering, in the place of Dr. James Spurgeon (whose illness has caused some anxiety, and has been a matter of much prayer), said that while at the succeeding services of the day much might be said concerning the life and work of the late Mr. Spurgeon, it would be in harmony with his own desire (had he been present) that on this occasion they should seek the source of all strength, and in strong wrestling prayer draw near the spring of Divine power. A few brief words would be interspersed, but prayer would chiefly occupy the morning.

After a season of prayer (in which many took part) the chairman suggested that messages of love should be sent to Mrs. Spurgeon, the two sons, and Dr. J. A. Spurgeon. Proceeding, he said: We are not met here to revive the memory of the departed—that cannot fade; nor to express lamentations or speak in praise of the leader called home. Neither are we met to found a new cult. What, then, are we met for? According to the exhortation of Heb. xiii. 7, to consider his faith and follow it. There were two special features characterising Mr. Spurgeon's faith: his profound reverence for what was of God, and his sense of the Divine presence or nearness to God. The more we study his life and labours, the more we see how potent were these in shaping his whole career.

A telegram was read by Dr. Pierson from Mrs. Spurgeon, giving as comfort and hope John xvii. 24. Then followed Mr. Spurgeon's first student, Pastor T. W. Medhurst, of Cardiff, who spoke in some weakness, giving touching reminiscences, and reading three very characteristic letters penned by the late pastor.

Next came Pastor Williams, Upton Chapel, who, speaking as one who knew Mr. Spurgeon intimately in his later days, paid a fond tribute of love, and boldly maintained that in this "age of preachers the one taken home might be spoken of as peerless amongst all the preachers of this century." Pastor Cuff recalled some blessed memories, and touched on the inexpressible loss the Church had suffered, for she never needed such a defender of the faith more than she does now. In concluding, he ventured to hope and pray that this day might be a day of consecration, and that the brethren might learn to trust one another more heartily and generously than ever. Pastor Hackney, of Birmingham, lovingly referred to the departed president, and ended with ringing words of exhortation as to standing by the cross—preaching a gospel of salvation only, and always through Jesus Christ crucified for sinners.

We hold over to our next issue some account of the afternoon and evening meetings.

THE FIRST STEP in the regeneration of the Church is the laying of a sound religious education in the children; but the Sunday-school must never attempt to do the work of the parent—that is a Heaven-appointed relation, and involves a responsibility which no man can take away.—Rev. D. McLean.

"PROHIBITION IN MAINE," says General Neal Dow, "has reduced the volume of the liquor traffic to one-twentieth of its former proportions. In more than three-fourths of our territory, containing more than three-fourths of our population, the traffic is practically unknown. An entire generation has grown up there never having seen a saloon or the effects of one. The drink habit is nearly or quite unknown among the people there. I have seen many of them, men and women grown, who have never seen an intoxicated person."

PASTEUR REUBEN SAILLENS,

OF PARIS.

WHATEVER material aid may come from without in the vast work of bringing France to the knowledge of the Gospel, it is manifest that her chief hope, instrumentally, is in her own sons. It is therefore cause for rejoicing that, in this period of religious freedom and golden opportunity, faithful men are being raised up of God whose one life-passion is that of soul-winning. Among this number, at present all too small for the existent need, is the subject of our sketch.

PASTEUR SAILLENS was born on June 24, 1855, at St. Jean du Gard, in the romantic and historic district of the Cevennes, whose mountains and valleys were, during three centuries, the asylum of the persecuted Huguenots. M. Saillens is a descendant of this race, and their fervent characteristics are not lacking in his mental and moral constitution.

When seven years old he was taken to live at Marseilles, where his father became engaged as a colporteur and evangelist, and six years later another move was made to Lyons. It was here, at the age of sixteen, that the ardent youth was led to devote himself to a religious career, under the influence of the much-honoured Miss Blundell and the late devoted evangelist, M. Eck. He feels to-day that there was a lack of depth and thoroughness in these early spiritual experiences. Howbeit, he entered with great zeal upon Christian work in connection with the Y.M.C.A. of Lyons. Here he was baptized by his father, who was a member of the Eglises Libres, a section of which practise believers' baptism.

In November, 1871, M. Saillens founded a Sunday School for Roman Catholic children, the success of which was so great that, at the end of a year, there were six branches in Lyons, with over six hundred scholars. He has in his church in Paris to-day two young women who were converted in these schools. Being at this time urged to devote himself to the regular ministry, he read an appeal for missionaries for South Africa, made by the late venerable missionary, M. Casalis. He offered himself and was accepted, but was subsequently disqualified on account of his baptismal views. Shortly afterwards, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness visited Lyons. He had just started his East London Institute, and easily prevailed upon the young man to place himself under his tuition—a step which he regards as one of the greatest blessings in his life, his contact with the spirit and methods of English Christianity having proved of immense advantage in his subsequent career. We believe also that there are few of whom the honoured principals of this great institution are more proud than of their first French student.

His student life, however, was all too brief, occupying but a single year, for in 1874 he was prevailed upon to join Mr. McAll, who had just commenced his mission in Paris, and was in urgent need of workers. Twelve months later he was obliged to go to Marseilles for a year's military service, but here he found opportunities for Christian usefulness. He spoke week by week in a small reading-room founded by Mrs. George Pearce, the well-known soldiers' friend. The attendance and interest were such that he felt the need for permanent effort there; when he returned to Paris he urged Mr. McAll to take up work in the provinces, and in Marseilles in particular. Mr. McAll could not then see his way to do so; and at the end of two years, after the great work of the Exhibition of 1878, during which he regularly preached twice daily in the well-known Salle du Trocadéro, M. Saillens decided to go to Marseilles upon a small guarantee of assistance from the National Committee of the French Y.M.C.A., and with the practical help and sympathy of that noble giver to missions, Mr. W. T. Berger, of Cannes.

(From Photograph by Mons. Eug. Pirou.)

His success was remarkable. By the end of the first year, three large halls had been opened in Marseilles, and at the close of the fifth year there were nine in Marseilles, two in Nice, one in Cannes, and two in Corsica, whilst the income of the mission, from French and English sources, was £2400. He also founded and directed a school of evangelists, which has given several good workers to France, and, since passing out of his hands, has become one of the recognised institutions of the National Church of France.

Upon the lamented death of Rev. G. Theophilus Dodds, M. Saillens, who had often been urged by Mr. McAll to unite his work with that in Paris, offered to return to the capital in order to assist in the general direction of the combined missions. Before doing so, however, he visited America, in company with the late Rev. Robert McAll, in the interests of the consolidated work, and the result was not only a substantial amount collected for its immediate needs, but the establishment of those auxiliary committees of ladies in various cities which have secured its permanent interest and support. One generous lady alone in Philadelphia contributed 4000 dollars specially for the school of evangelists at Marseilles.

He returned to Paris in July, 1883, and resumed the work of an evangelist with ever-growing success. His special fields were at the hall of the Rue Royale and the Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle. For five years he laboured here, and it was in connection with this last-named hall, the best situated in Paris, that he first realised the necessity of gathering the converts into spiritual fellowship. Some few of these eventually became the first members of his present church.

It was in October, 1886, that Pasteur Saillens experienced a remarkable soul-quickening and increase of spiritual power. In addition to his regular preaching, he was led to hold meetings in his own house, and many conversions resulted. In 1887, the Baptist Church in the Rue de Lille being pastorless, he served it pro tem., at the same time sustaining his previous work. He was pressed to accept the position permanently, but did not consider the building well placed for reaching the masses, and therefore declined. But the pastoral instinct was strong within him, and later, upon the visit of Drs. A. J. Gordon and N. Murdoch, the president and secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, an arrangement was concluded with the McAll Mission, by which a special hall, which had formerly been a convent chapel, was taken in the Rue St. Denis, 133, placed under the charge of M. Saillens, and supported jointly by the two societies. Here, in December, 1888, fourteen converts, who had previously made a profession of faith by baptism, were united in Church fellowship.

Far from realising that definite organisation and the practice of the New Testament ordinances impede evangelistic success, Pasteur Saillens has been encouraged beyond all expectation. To-day he has nearly 200 members, the greater part of them converts from Romanism. Ninety-three of these were added during the past year. Evangelistic services are held on four evenings of the week, in addition to Sundays. These are largely attended, and are seldom without numerous inquirers. There is also a standing congregation, which has reached of late nearly 300, and which meets for worship on Sunday afternoons, and is well represented at the interesting Monday evening prayer-meetings. Midday meetings for working people are likewise conducted every week-day, and the number of those coming in to listen to the Gospel during their dinner-hour ranges from forty to seventy. On the first Saturday of the month a temperance meeting is held, at which the large hall is sometimes filled to the doors, and many have not only been rescued from intemperance, but brought into the full liberty of the Gospel. There are also societies for young men and young women, mothers' meetings, etc., in full and effective operation.

In addition to this extensive work, mission branches are sustained with cheering results outside the Western walls of the city at Courbevoie, Rueil, and Buogival. In all these activities M. Saillens has the devoted co-operation of his colleague, Pasteur Foulquier, and also of a band of workers, male and female, who are mostly his spiritual children, and are busy in proclaiming the Gospel which has so gladdened their own lives.

Mention must also be made of Madame Saillens. Whilst a youth, engaged in the Sunday school work at Lyons, M. Saillens was associated with Mdlle. Cretin, daughter of the now venerable Pasteur Cretin, of La Fére, who was the first Baptist pastor in France, and then had charge of the little church at Lyons. She and her sisters headed the girls' section, and M. Saillens that of the boys, and it was thus that they were drawn together. Their marriage took place in 1877, at Versailles, in the chapel built by the saintly philanthropist, Madame André Walther, who was a warm friend of the bride. Madame Saillens is, in every sense, a true helpmeet to her husband. Her beautiful voice often blends with his in a very telling manner in "singing the Gospel," and in many other ways she seconds his preaching. They are also united in literary labours, both having distinguished gifts in this direction.

In 1889 they were asked to undertake the direction of the illustrated religious papers, L'Ami de la Maison and Le Rayon de Soleil, which had been ably edited from their commencement by Miss Blundell. Their success has been more than maintained; they have a larger circulation than any other religious papers in France, and are the indispensable supplements of almost every work of evangelisation.

It remains to be said that M. Saillens was led some time since to resign his official connection with the McAll Mission. This step was not taken on personal grounds, but from difference of view as to matters relating to teaching and organisation. That Pasteur Saillens' action did not lack the Divine approval is manifested by the great and increasing blessing which has since attended his ministry.

MISSION WORK IN BUENOS AYRES.

Mr. W. Barnett, who has lately returned to South America, writes as follows with regard to the Spanish and Italian Mission at Buenos Ayres:—

"The long-felt want of a mission hall for this work has at last been met, through the kindness of friends in England, and to-day a permanent centre has been established in Noventa-tres-street, North Barracas.

"The work is carried on amongst the poorest of the people, and it has been found best, while having a central place for free day and Sunday-schools and Gospel meetings to carry the message to the large conventillos, or huge tenement houses, containing as many as 200 people each. A room is taken and seats provided. On one occasion, at the first meeting, no seats had arrived, but the roomful of people stood willingly while they heard the Gospel, nearly all for the first time. For a season this teaching is continued in this room, conversions taking place. Another conventillo is then entered in a similar manner, and with similar results, it being found that converts follow the work and also attend the mission hall services.

"In November, having lately arrived in the city from England, I attended at the conventillo in Herrera-street. The congregation, although small, was an interesting one, composed chiefly of those converted during the mission, which was about to be moved to another place. A good deal of noise took place near the door, two men fighting for the possession of a room. This culminated in women shrieking, a scuffle, a cry, and a heavy fall. The address in Spanish quickly gave place to prayer, while we besought God to have mercy on these poor ones living in the power of Satan. Two of those present were a converted policeman (off duty) and his wife. This man remained quite passive on his knees all the time, but told me afterwards that one of the noisy men was arrested for wounding the other. Such scenes show how much the Gospel is needed.

"Will friends interested in this country specially remember this work in prayer, that those carrying it on—Messrs. Torre, Fletcher, and McCarthy—may be helped and guided? Owing to the increased number of pupils attending the free day-school, the expenses have increased; but as the children form a most important branch of the work, and are well trained in Bible truths by the two Christian women teachers, it is hoped that practical sympathy will not be withheld. Communications may be forwarded to Mr. Geo. Maynard, 1, Palace Gardens-terrace, Kensington."

MISS DE BROEN'S BELLEVILLE MISSION.—"A.K." writes:—"Let those who desire the extension of God's kingdom on earth, and who understand the difficulties of evangelising in France, so ignorant of God, so needy, and so unbelieving, come to the help of this work, and of all who are bringing souls to God. It would be a sad day for the poor were Miss de Broen's Belleville Mission to be seriously crippled, for it is a work long proved, carried on in faith and love; it has great success and wide influence."

CONGO-BALOLO MISSION.

We have just learned that Mr. W. J. Scarnell has died at Bongandanga. He was one of our best workers out there, if one can make any comparisons where all are so devoted and so earnest. He was left alone in charge of Bongandanga station, Mr. Cole and his wife having been obliged to go down to see Dr. Sims at Stanley Pool on account of Mrs. Cole's serious ill-health. We always endeavour to make arrangements which shall prevent any worker being left alone at a station, and Mr. Ellery went up from Ikau to stay with Mr. Scarnell. He was obliged to leave Ikau station vacant in order to do this; but went in spite of that, knowing well the danger of leaving one at a station alone, for it was usually under such conditions that our workers in the early days of the mission died. He seems to have arrived safely at Bongandanga, and found Mr. Scarnell down with fever there. We do not know much more. The news that has reached us is very brief. We gather that while Mr. Ellery was with him, dear William Scarnell succumbed to the fatal hæmaturic fever, the fever of which John McKittrick and John Luff both died.

Strangely enough, these tidings have reached us within a week of the time when, last year, we had a telegram of the death of McKittrick and Luff. Mr. Scarnell must have been called away towards the close of 1892, probably about the anniversary of the date of those first two deaths in our mission. We should be very glad to think that the sympathy and prayers of the readers of The Christian were with our distant workers at this time—with the widowed mother left behind here in London, and with those of us who represent the mission here at home. News such as this comes as a terrible blow, and brings to the leaders of the mission an unspeakably solemn sense of the responsibility of carrying on such a work.

The news was read out at prayers this morning in our college hall, where seventy-five men and women students, members of our missionary household, were gathered for morning worship. Our hearts were deeply stirred by some of the prayers that followed, more than one volunteer offering himself to the Lord as ready and willing to go out and fill the gap. Lucy E. Guinness.

KITKATLA, NORTH PACIFIC.

At this station, Rev. F. L. Stephenson, of the C.M.S., is labouring amongst the Indians with much blessing on his work. To readers of the C.M.S. annual report, the name of Kitkatla will call to mind a wild and exposed station on the coast, near the mouth of the Skeena River, where seven years of prayer have resulted in the triumph of the Gospel over a determined stronghold of the evil one; till at last Mr. Stephenson can write:—"The Kitkatlas are now, to a man, the professed followers of Christ."

The wonderful scene when the Chief Skenksh publicly announced his profession of Christianity has been too well described by Bishop Ridley's graphic pen to need repetition. For a part of every year a large proportion of the Kitkatla people adjourn to an island some twenty miles or so out to sea, for the seal-hunt. Thither their pastor desires to follow them, but the passage is dangerous and his canoe is of slight build, easily split or swamped in the waves if used in bad weather. At present he has the use of Bishop Ridley's boat, but this is only a temporary loan. Will those who value the means of grace help to procure a suitable boat such as would enable Mr. Stephenson to minister to the needs of these people, who would be debarred from such privileges but for their pastor's zeal in braving the transit in his own light canoe, as he has done before? The cost of a suitable boat would be £40 or £50.

Miss Mittendorff's Home.

In the new report Miss Macgrath says:—"Children are received at the age of four and kept until sixteen or seventeen. During the year twelve children have been admitted. Eight left the Home, five going to situations. Sixty-six are now in the Home, and some are waiting to be admitted. We have had many mercies and with them many trials.

"The Home can be seen every afternoon. The children are instructed in the word of God, and read it daily; they get a plain English education and are carefully taught house-work, needlework, and knitting, to make and mend their clothes; they are brought up for service." Copies of the report may be had from the Home, Clayton House, Epsom.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS SPOTLESS RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Is it not a very beautiful thought that in Jesus we have One who, from the beginning to the close of his life, was perfectly holy? Of all men that have ever lived He alone never did a wrong act, spoke a wrong word, or cherished a wrong thought. As he looked back upon his life He saw nothing that He had reason to regret. The confession, "We have done the things we ought not to have done, and left undone the things we ought to have done," had no application to Him. His life was such that nothing could be taken from it, nor anything added to it without spoiling its perfection. "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners" (Heb. vii. 26). Take time to think of this. The youngest child who is able to read this paper has done something—perhaps many things—which trouble the conscience. In this one thing Jesus was happily unlike us. Is the fact at all important to us? Let us see.

His was not the holiness of one who came into the world a full-grown man, as Adam did. As we were reminded last week He began life as an infant, passed through childhood and boyhood into perfect manhood, and was perfectly holy from beginning to end. How do we know this? We have only one incident recorded of his early life, that in which, being found by his parents in the temple, He went home and was subject to them (Luke ii. 42—51), and this is followed by the statement, "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man" (52).

During his public life there is abundant testimony to his spotless innocence. Have you noticed how many and how striking were the witnesses to his holiness? Devils beheld it, and proclaimed it (Matt. viii. 29). Is it not a terrible fact that there are beings so consciously guilty that the very presence of the Holy Saviour was a torment to them? When Jesus challenged his hearers in the words, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" (Jno. viii. 46), the silence of his hearers was a testimony to his holiness. Pilate, who sentenced Him to death (Matt. xxvii. 24); Judas, who betrayed Him (Matt. xxvii. 4); and the thief who died with Him (Luke xxiii. 41)—all bore the same testimony.

What is still more important, God Himself, on two occasions at least, declared his perfect satisfaction with his Son (Matt. iii. 17; xvii. 5). Turn up each of these texts that you may see how carefully God has secured witnesses to the holiness of Jesus. This should be enough to make you think of it. If it is so important to God it must be important to you.

There are two ways in which it affects us. 1. Without it He could not have been our Substitute. This was what God taught men through the types of the Old Testament. Imagine the Israelite in Egypt on the night when the destroying angel is to pass through the land. According to the command of God by Moses, a lamb must be slain in place of his own firstborn (Exod. xii.). May he go to his flock and take the first that comes? If the blood of a lamb is sprinkled on the lintels and door-post, is not that all God requires? The Israelite does not think so. Looking carefully through his flock, he rejects one after another, and at last fixes upon a certain one. Why? Because he can discover on it neither spot nor blemish. From the tenth day to the fourteenth, according to some authorities, the examination was repeated; a defect in the lamb would render its sprinkled blood no security to the Israelite.

The death to which we are exposed is due to us because of sin. The Saviour whose death is to be accepted in our stead must be free from sin, or He would be under sentence of death Himself. How thankful should we be that Jesus was subject to such careful inspection from heaven and earth and hell, and that no single flaw was ever discovered in Him. In the light of this fact read 1 Peter i. 19, and 1 John iii. 5, and give them direct and personal application to yourself. Only a spotless Saviour can avail for guilty sinners.

2. How much more wonderful it makes his death appear. Think of it in this way:—The death of Jesus was not like that of the martyrs, who in the midst of great physical suffering could sing and rejoice. They died in the full enjoyment of the favour of God. Why was there such a difference in Jesus? Why had He to cry out as though God had forsaken Him (Matt. xxvii. 46)? Because sin was laid on Him; He was made sin; and it appeared as though the sword of Jehovah woke against Him (Zech. xiii. 7). And yet He alone of all men deserved the favour of God. He was absolutely without sin, and yet He willingly submitted to endure this! How indignantly we repel any false charge made against us. He did not resent it when our sins were charged upon Him! Let the thought of his holiness deepen your appreciation of his death.

In the presence of God seek to know the value of Christ's perfect holiness to you. His holy life alone could not save you; but without it his death would not save you either. His righteousness is not put upon you as a garment to cover your sins; but it gives value to his death so that it puts away your sin, and makes you in Him righteous before God.

JOHN NEWTON AND HIS WIFE.

IT may sometimes be difficult to distinguish between that kind of hero-worship which is nothing more than a species of idolatry, and that regard for the memory of God's faithful servants which it is lawful to entertain. Whether it be the one, the other, or neither, being only nine miles distant from Olney, I could not hear that John Newton and his wife had been brought from London, to be laid among the old friends to whom they ministered in Jesus a hundred years ago, and not wish to be present at their re-interment.

One of our churchwardens offered to drive me; he, by the way, comes from a house where John Bunyan was wont to preach more than two centuries since. Away over the hill is "Great Oaks Wood," where tradition tells us Bunyan used to meet the faithful from Turvey, Carlton, Stevington, and Pavenham, and where once, to protect him from the pelting rain, the females of the congregation pinned their aprons together, and spread them over his head.

We had to drive through Turvey, still fragrant with memories of Legh Richmond. The sainted writer of "The Young Cottager" awaits "The First Resurrection" beneath the chancel floor of the ancient church we leave on our right; as, here and there, we pass by houses that must have been standing when he shepherded this village flock, we wonder how often his voice has been heard beneath their roofs. One of his old hearers is still living at Pavenham; another was buried a few months since. Old people tell us that he never entered a home ministerially without saying, "Peace be to this house."

There are some fairly steep hills between Turvey and Olney, and I have often thought, when walking the journey and looking across the Olney meadows to the lofty spire of its old church, that, maybe, it was on the crest of one of these that Newton received the inspiration for that beautiful pilgrim song of his which, excluded from every hymn-book of to-day, was included in every one used by our fathers:—

> As when the weary pilgrim gains
> The height of some o'er-looking hill,
> His heart revives, if, o'er the plains,
> He sees his home, though distant still.

The old idea was now revived, and the pleasanter it was to cherish it as we got nearer the little Bucks town that lay ahead of us.

There is always something in Olney that makes me think of Puritanism. It is old, quaint, small, replete with hallowed associations, and seemingly ready to repudiate anything like innovation. It is evident that a tramway was begun which was to connect it with some other town, but it is quite as clear that it was a failure. Olney belongs to the past, and yet asserts its right to exist at the present.

But here is the historic church where Newton and Scott preached, and where Cowper and Carey sat as listeners. We entered to find two coffins, each with the original breastplate on its lid, standing in the middle aisle. The fine old building soon filled, and the venerable vicar, his son, and the curate of Olney, commenced "The Burial Service." From my seat in the gallery (which was erected when Newton's work began to tell through the neighbourhood, and crowds of visitors made additional accommodation necessary to the church) I looked down on the coffins, and could not keep fancy from following him who lies in the one nearest the pulpit through many of the scenes of his changeful life. Sailor, soldier, slave, slaver, and honoured minister of the Gospel he had been! Now I saw him as the boy-lover; now I hear the whizz of the lash that wheals the deserter's back; now I had before my eyes the poor prodigal who tried to keep body and soul together while feeding on the entrails of the fish which went to his cruel mistress's table.

The first part of the "service" was brought to an end, and the congregation rose to sing:—

> How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
> In a believer's ear!

I was so delighted to mark the absence of everything ritualistic in the proceedings. It was a mixed choir; the tune was old St. Peter's, and all in the church united in singing it. Fancy began to wander again. Where are those who sung this world-known hymn, when under this same church roof it was used for the first time? Did Mr. Newton have the faintest expectation when he took up his pen, in yon vicarage study, across the churchyard, that he was writing these pregnant lines for the joy of the Church through all time? But, with the prayer,

> And may the music of his name
> Refresh my soul in death,

the hymn ended, and, to the strains of "The Dead March in Saul" from the organ, men reverently took up the coffin of Mrs. Newton, and bore it off to the grave prepared for it under the north wall of the churchyard. They returned for that of her husband, and the Vicar of Olney finished the service. There was no address, not a single word; the crowd slowly melted away, and one of the finest opportunities for sowing the Word of Life in ground specially prepared by circumstances, went by for ever—unused.

We had a characteristic address from Canon Benham, after a luncheon at one of the hotels; he rather unnecessarily, as I felt, introduced Cardinal Newman and his "sincerity." There was a shorter address from Sir Henry Peek, much more Newtonian in its way; a few words from Mr. W. H. Collingridge and one or two more visitors: then my friend and I returned home.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

A LARGE and animated company of preachers connected with this mission assembled for their quarterly meeting at the Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn. After a social tea, Mr. J. Herbert Tritton took the chair, and Rev. Dr. Gritton opened the meeting with a prayer which touched all hearts.

A special address on "Fundamental Truths" had been announced to be delivered by the Rev. Dr. NEWMAN HALL. The venerable Doctor, who still speaks and works with almost youthful vigour, was warmly welcomed as he rose. He began by denouncing the recent trumpeting of infidelity in the columns of The Daily Chronicle, and proceeded with much animation to discuss the fundamental truths of inspiration and atonement. Arguing from the existence of the Old Testament in the time of our Lord, and his acceptance of it as Divine, Dr. Hall emphatically said, "If He used it I will use it; if He quoted it I will quote it; if He believed it I will believe it." On the great central doctrine of the atonement the Doctor was equally emphatic and Scriptural, and his address evidently delighted his hearers.

No less profitable were the words of the chairman, who followed Dr. Hall. Indeed, his address was a model of wise and winning speech, and it was listened to with deep interest. Such gatherings as these are of the utmost importance, and the Open-Air Mission sets a splendid example in so frequently calling its members together that they may be the better equipped for their difficult toil.

THE STUDENT VOLUNTEER CONFERENCE.—With a view to binding our members more closely together, and giving them an opportunity of encouraging and guiding one another, we intend to hold a volunteer conference next July. Keswick has been selected as a suitable spot; and though our gathering will have no connection with the Keswick Convention, it will be held on the four days immediately before it, so that all who desire to attend the larger meeting may do so conveniently. By dwelling in tents for a few days, we can carry on the conference for a very small sum. It is hoped that out of this meeting a summer-school may be developed, somewhat on "Northfield" lines.—The Student Volunteer.

MRS. BAEYERTZ AT CARDIFF.

The fortnight's mission held in Cardiff by this estimable lady has come and gone, and we hear regrets on all sides and from all classes that it is over. The first day being Sunday, Mrs. Baeyertz in the afternoon gave an address at the Park Hall, when two thousand persons must have been present, notwithstanding that the ground was covered with snow. In the evening she conducted the entire service at the same place, which was well attended, her subject being "The unpardonable sin."

Day after day at the Bible readings, and at night, the interest deepened, until the buildings were not large enough to hold the numbers wishing to attend. The afternoon Bible readings were held in the crush room of the Park Hall. The subjects treated were "The secret of failure in the Christian life," "Clean hearts," "Worries," "Rest," "Fruit bearing," etc., ending with the "Secret of Victory." It is a question among some of us, who have taken part in this delightful mission, whether our sister has been more used in the conversion and bringing to decision of the unsaved and wavering, or in the reviving, refreshing, and establishing the souls of believers. Mrs. Baeyertz has shown us the value of the Old Testament; she has linked truth with truth, from Genesis to Revelation; and many things which the ordinary Bible-reader overlooks she puts in such a way that a flood of light is shed over the Christian life, as well as on the Scriptures. It was in these afternoon meetings, attended almost exclusively by Christians, that there was so specially to be felt the power of the Holy Ghost, producing deep searching of heart, under the application of Scripture truths. She considers the secret of all power is entire subjection to the will and guidance of God; only the surrender must be genuine and complete.

In speaking of the evening addresses, "The Great White Throne," "The Atonement," "Cain and Abel," Coming of our Lord," etc., we find it difficult to specialise, but the one perhaps which seemed most deeply to affect us all was that on Friday night, when, by special request, "The Passover" was given for the second time. In simple but beautiful language, with an utterance refined and sweet, yet so distinct as to be heard all over the chapel, Mrs. Baeyertz addressed three thousand men and women. We felt as we visited with her the different places referred to that we had really been there. We saw the first-born son leading the spotless white lamb into his father's courtyard, slaying it, dipping the hyssop into the blood, and sprinkling it on the door-posts and lintel. Then she took us into the Jewish homes, where the families stand waiting for the destroying angel to pass over at midnight to kill the first-born. In the first home we saw the mother with weak faith, hoping God would see the blood, and save her first-born; in the next we saw them all looking happy, and the mother is sure God will save her first-born, as they have followed his directions and sprinkled the blood. Then she took us to Jerusalem to see the Paschal Lamb upon the cross. While this picture was brought before us, the silence was intense, but at the concluding words, spoken in a most touching voice, such a wave of sound came from the audience as will never be forgotten by those present. A chord had been touched that vibrated through the heart of every believer, and when with her pleading voice she begged the undecided to come to the inquiry room, we were not surprised to see many rise and go in. There has been a large number brought to decision during these meetings, and it has been most touching to see men sobbing and crying aloud for salvation.

Many Jews and Jewesses have attended the meetings, and some of them are anxious to know more about the Savour whom their sister has found.

On Thursday afternoon, January 22, Mrs. Baeyertz addressed over a thousand persons in Wood-street Chapel upon the "Day of Atonement." In the evening she conducted the service at Tredegarville Chapel. A great blessing was felt here, and a number went into the inquiry room. On Monday afternoon an address on the "Enduement of the Holy Spirit" was given. In the evening a holiness meeting was held in the same chapel. Some three thousand were present, each one admitted by ticket. It had never been our lot to attend such a meeting before. We are all very sorry that our sister's labours amongst us are ended. She came at the invitation of the Young Women's Christian Association. When we heard that her first attempt to speak for the Master was tremblingly done to a class of six girls at the Y.W.C.A. in Melbourne, it helped many of us who felt weak to see what may be accomplished if we yield ourselves to God's guidance and training. REV. J. McNEILL IN SCOTLAND.

FALKIRK.

The visit of this specially-endowed preacher has awakened a deep interest in religious things such as Falkirk has seldom witnessed or felt. There were three crowded meetings on the Sabbath. The afternoon meetings during the week have been a wonder unto many. Such large gatherings were thought an impossibility in this district. The Graham's Road U.P. Church was filled to its utmost limits each day at 3 o'clock. These services have resulted in the deepening of spiritual life and the heightening of religious enthusiasm.

The evening meetings in the large West U.P. Church have been stirring seasons. As the week proceeded the interest grew, and before the mission ended all the sitting and standing space was more than required. These large afternoon and evening audiences were mostly composed of regular churchgoers. In one sense this was regrettable, but in another it was opportune. Mr. McNeill believes there are "lapsed masses" within the church as well as outside of it. Few will doubt his position, and therefore it was fitting that they should be aroused out of their sleep and made to feel their need of new life, and their responsibility for the ungodliness beyond their borders. The evangelist has done much to awaken the dead and re-convert those who had stumbled back into the world of careless indifference—a great and difficult work.

The after-meetings are not likely to be soon forgotten. They were quiet, but full of power. It was pathetic to hear fathers and mothers asking prayer for their children, converted sons making the same requests for their Christless parents, and others asking for neighbours and companions still in the darkness of spiritual death.

Mr. McNeill is to the Scotch in prose what Burns was to them in song. He points his arrows well, and sends them home with precision. In his breast there beats a large heart. He has not forgotten his early struggles and varied experiences, and does not blush to make use of them to win men to the Cross.

We have been much indebted to Mr. Burke for his service of song, and for his genial and kindly bearing. Mr. Burke is no mean factor in the success of these great meetings and grand awakenings.

BERLIN CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Writing on the work of the past year, Mr. Fritz Schaaff, superintendent of the Berlin Christian Mission, says:—"Our present hall is in a desirable situation, and we have taken it for a term of three years, as changing from one place to another is not conducive to the consolidation of the work. We have been much engaged in distributing tracts and back numbers of our paper, the Vorwärts, in the streets. From the Stirling Tract Depot we received about 10,000 tracts, which were very welcome. Also a lot of tracts, about 20,000, touching on the immorality question, now before the German Parliament, were presented by German ladies, and have been distributed in the streets and houses.

"The police gave us a permit to do this. We have established a Sunday-school and a branch of the Y.M.C.A. Both are going on well, and by-and-by will be a great help for the building up of the mission. We have been much pressed on the financial side of the work, and, during the year, took only £22 8s. out of the mission funds for the supply of our personal needs."

Mr. Schaaff's address is 33, Britzer Strasse, Berlin, S.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES gave on Wednesday week, in Waterloo-road Schoolroom, a tea to a large number of women employed in various theatres, who listened attentively to Gospel and temperance addresses. Mr. Forbes has been carrying on these meetings with good result for nearly fifteen years. Recently he has had good work at Olympia, the closing of which has afforded him fresh fields of service among the employées. His address is 71, Tollington-road, Holloway, N.

MR. SCROGGIE AT FRASERBURGH.

Mr. John M. Scroggie has completed a full fortnight of earnest and God-owned work in the Free Church here. He had the assistance and support of nearly all the ministers and earnest Christians of the town. During the week the area of the large church was full; on Sabbath evenings the church was crowded. There has been a general quickening over all the churches, and from the outside not a few have been won for Christ.

It is necessary also to mention that up to the date of Mr. Scroggie's arrival a most successful mission in one of our town halls had been conducted by Messrs. Macfarlane and McKendrick, of Hamilton; now, at the end of nearly two months of daily work, we are prepared to say that the fruits have been manifold and precious. Ministers and congregations have during the last fortnight been brought together and have been heartily co-operating for the common interest of the Kingdom of God.

In regard to all these evangelists, we might truly say that great grace rests on them. They are specially gifted for their work. May the Lord keep them prayerful and single-eyed! They demonstrate the need of both evangelists and pastors in the church. Mr. Scroggie is both an evangelist and a teacher. His addresses are full of Scripture, and he can thus both arouse and edify.

For some time there has been a continuous work of grace in the Free Church here, especially amongst the young men and women. During the present series of meetings most of the cases have been of this class, and even of little children. This may be equally true of some of the other congregations, and we believe that it is so—surely a hopeful sign for the future of our town. There have been some conspicuous cases of conversion among the older people, among whom is a grandmother who was hitherto opposed to evangelistic work.

Amidst many reasons for praise to God, there is still a dark and dead world around us. Aberdeenshire, generally, is in great need of a deep and widespread quickening from God. A Worker.

THE CHRISTIAN'S FAREWELL.

"Thine eyes shall see the King in His beauty; they shall behold the land that is very far off."—Is. xxxiii. 17.

I am leaving, I am leaving, for the country of my King;
Let not words of grief be spoken,
Let not loving hearts be broken.
Rather let the joy-bells ring,
For earth's wintry life is changing into everlasting spring.

I am going to the homeland, to the palace of the King;
There to dwell with Him in glory,
Read in light life's clouded story,
Hear his voice of welcoming,
And pour forth with Alleluias the new song the ransomed sing.

Leaving for the many mansions, for the presence of the King;
See His beauty, more transcendent
Than the morning star resplendent;
Lift, my soul, thy drooping wing,
Rise into the light of Jesus, that can know no shadowing.

MISS DANIELL'S HOMES.—We hear that an officer (who owes his conversion to Miss Daniell) has come forward in the emergency mentioned in our last and offered to give the last £100 provided the £1,000 required be raised. We trust many will be stirred to come to our sister's aid at this time.

ANTI-OPIUM DEMONSTRATION AT BOMBAY.—On Thursday evening, Dec. 29, Grant-road Methodist Church, Bombay, was crowded, the occasion being an anti-opium demonstration. Missionaries from all parts of India, who had assembled in the city to attend the Decennial Missionary Conference, were among the large audience. Dr. J. H. Condon, late of Cawnpur, now of Mussoorie, presided; and addresses were delivered by Rev. D. D. Fox, M.A., of Poona; Mr. A. S. Dyer, of Bombay; Rev. R. M. Banboo, of Madras; Miss Jessie A. Ackermann, round-the-world evangelist of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union; and Mr. Henry Varley. The misrepresentations of those who excuse the traffic were exposed by men who spoke with the authority of knowledge, and claimed respectful attention as intelligent and honest observers. The proceedings were reported at length in a supplement to the Bombay Guardian of Dec. 31.

A MISSION ON THE HUDSON.

Yonkers-on-the-Hudson is a beautiful suburban city on the rim of New York. A number of countries are represented in its population, among them England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, France, Germany, Italy, Sweden, Turkey, China, and Japan. The city commands a fine view of our American Rhine and miles of the massive Palisades. To the south is New York, and prominent among the objects in the spacious harbour is the gigantic statue of Liberty Enlightening the World. To the north are Irvington and Sunnyside, where Washington Irving lived and wrote with musical pen. Eastward lie the bright waters of the Sound and the blue hills of Long Island, against which glide the glistening sails of ships oceanward or homeward bound.

To the west, the superb valley of the Hudson unfolds its purple glories. Wealth has erected her mansions on these river banks, and industry fills the counting-rooms, markets, mills, stores, and avenues with the hum of activity and toil. The bells swinging in the spires of the beautiful churches sprinkle the air with holy sounds, and seem to say:—

To the bountiful Father above,
Let us render the tribute of praise,
For the glorious gift of his love,
And the blessings that hallow our days.

But while grace abounds in these homes and streets, wickedness also abounds. The greed of gain, Sabbath desecration, worldly pleasures, intoxication, and other sins degrade manhood and womanhood. A revival of pure and undefiled religion was greatly need. Such a revival came to several of the churches in the early months of 1892, and such a revival blessed the city in November and December, when the evangelist, Gipsy Smith, brought to us tender messages of love from the Master whom he serves.

Four Presbyterian, two Reformed, two Methodist, and two Baptist churches united in the evangelistic services. Various churches were opened for the week-day and Sunday services. The daily papers devoted generous space to the reports of the meetings, and large advertising sheets posted on the bulletin-boards drew the attention of thousands. Prayer meetings addressed by the city pastor and by Gipsy Smith were held every afternoon except Saturdays. The evangelist preached to crowded churches on every evening except Saturday. Simultaneous meetings were held in several churches on Sundays. Two great meetings were attended almost exclusively by men, and two meetings were held for children, one of them a boys' meeting under the auspices of the boys' branch of the Y.M.C.A.

About eight hundred adults and children passed through the inquiry rooms, where they received counsel from Christian friends. When the evangelist told his life story three churches were filled with eager hearers. The meetings were in progress from November 12 to December 5, and gave the churches a spiritual uplift, the value of which is inestimable.

The evangelist supplements his earnest preaching by effective singing. He knows that "a sweet tone is a messenger of God," and he sings the old, old story as a lover sings a love song. In "that last day for which all other days were made," many will rise up and call him blessed.

I, who send across the ocean these good tidings to the churches, am a stranger to you; nevertheless, I am your brother in the Lord. Together we will rejoice in time and eternity, because He who ascended up far above all heavens "gave some apostles and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

"FOR AND AGAINST" is the title of a periodical of which the first number has just been issued. The editor is Mr. James Marchant, who is well known, especially in East London, as a lecturer on Christian Evidences. We trust this new penny monthly will have many readers, and that the infidel classes will be influenced for good through its contents. MELBOURNE JOTTINGS.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

Y.W.C.A.

On November 22 the tenth anniversary of the Young Women's Christian Association was held in the Melbourne Town Hall. The hon. sec., Miss S. C. Booth, stated that the history of the institution was a continuous history of prayer answered. One very useful department of work carried on by the young women is that of the Travellers' Aid. Ocean and intercolonial steamers are regularly met, and during the past twelve months 279 strangers have been helped and have passed through the Home. Miss Lily Mitchell, the factory visitor, beside visiting the factories, has distributed 1200 Y.W.C.A. letters per month. A number of new branches have been opened throughout the colony during the year.

W.C.T.U.

After a number of months spent in Australia—months of much good and true temperance work done in these colonies—Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell were accompanied to their steamers on December 3 by a band of loving friends, who bade them good-bye in hopes of seeing them out here some day soon again. The W.C.T.U. is being felt as a power in Victoria, as it has sent delegates to interview Ministers and members of Parliament on important measures relative to social questions within their special domain.

THE MINISTERING CHILDREN'S LEAGUE

held its first anniversary gathering in the Melbourne Town Hall on Saturday afternoon, 3rd December. Much of the success of this interesting League is due to the organising secretary for Victoria, Mrs. Francis Ormond, who has spared herself no pains to consolidate the work and increase its usefulness.

The motto of the League is "No day without a deed to crown it"; and while the members do their best to have some little act of kindness done each day, there are others of riper age who have been banded together in happy union for service, and who are known by the D.C. badge they wear as those who seek to serve each "Day for Christ." There is hope for the Church when the lambs are looked after and when Sunday-school children get united in Christian bonds to serve the Master as Christian Endeavourers, D.C.'s, or workers in Band of Hope and Fellowship Unions.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

At a district meeting held in St. Augustine's capacious Sunday-school, Hawthorn, Rev. Professor Gosman, while welcoming the members of other societies than the one meeting in his own (Congregational) church, stated that the Endeavour movement had taught us two good things. The first was that much prayer could be poured out in a few words; he felt sure many a meeting had been killed by long prayers. The other thing was that excellent addresses could be made in ten minutes. The hearty and crowded meetings of the Endeavour societies are a lesson to the Churches generally.

TEMPERANCE.

Gradually a welcome innovation is being made in a number of the churches in and around our city. I refer to the introduction of the unintoxicating wine at the Communion service. Though the Presbyterians are somewhat behindhand in this matter, only a few churches having made the alteration, the subject is one which is simmering in the Fellowship Union of that church. Amongst a number of the older people, however, a strong feeling in favour of intoxicating wine still prevails. The Endeavour movement, with its high ideal of consecration to Christ, will, it is expected, work a great change in this matter, for the young people begin to say, "We never tasted intoxicating drink till we partook of the Lord's Supper!"

FEMALE CONVALESCENTS.—A meeting of the After Care Association for Poor Female Convalescents on leaving asylums for the insane was held at 83, Lancaster-gate, W. A paper was read by Mrs. Henniker (lady guardian of Fulham) on "The After Care Association from a Poor Law Guardian's Point of View." An interesting discussion followed. A house has been taken for the reception of cases in Surrey; for this funds are much needed. It has also been decided to extend the work of the association to the After Care of Men, for which help is invited. The offices are at the Church House, Dean's-yard, Westminster, S.W.

WORKERS AMONG THE POOR.

CLAPTON.

For upwards of sixteen years I have laboured as a missionary in east and north-east London, yet have not experienced during those years so much to occasion sadness as this winter. The two lay missionaries and three Biblewomen, who are associated with me in the work at Clapton and Hoxton, are daily brought in contact with families in deepest destitution, and we have been grieved by being unable to prevent some of the Lord's poor having the whole of their furniture sold for rent. Our sisters nurse the destitute sick irrespective of sect or party.

We are giving 3000 free breakfasts weekly to poor children who have little or no food at home, and our soup kitchens have supplied upwards of 13,000 quarts this winter to the families of the unemployed. We are in urgent need of funds.

COVENT GARDEN AND CLERKENWELL.

Practical Christianity has never found a more worthy way of expressing itself than in the breakfasts which Mr. John A. Groom, of the Flower Girls' Mission, is in the habit of giving to poor girls and women at Covent Garden, and to large numbers of famishing Board-school children at Clerkenwell. It is grievous to learn that his operations threaten to be severely checked through want of funds.

In the dark early hours of a Saturday morning is the best time to see what is being done at Covent Garden. To save expense, a room is hired at one of Lockhart's coffee-houses, and for use on the part of the mission in the early morning only. Among the many anxious buyers in the busy market are homeless women, flower-girls, and even children. The missionary is there also to give a kind and earnest word as he distributes the breakfast tickets. The poor creatures gather in the room a few at a time, when our friend, with his helper, gives cocoa and bread-and-butter all round. Better than the mere giving of a breakfast is the opportunity afforded of proclaiming the Gospel to such needy ones, the Word of Life being to them, indeed, a rescuing word, a door of escape from the evils which afflict them.

The breakfasts to famishing children at the Mission Hall, Clerkenwell-close, are on a larger scale. The tickets are given away to the most needy by teachers; and also by a band of mission visitors who go the round of the courts and alleys. At the present time most heartrending cases of distress are met with. Children starving through the father being ill; widows struggling with helpless dependents; little ones who are motherless, the cry of hungry children in wretched homes are typical cases. Though the breakfast is not given until 8.30, many little ones are to be seen waiting for admission at 6.45; and such a fact is the strongest plea for its necessity. There is an immense number of unemployed persons in the neighbourhood, while the distress among flower-sellers is fearful.

It seems fitting that the young people in happy homes should find such solace in giving to such as are less happily situated. In addition to all this, the missionaries and Bible-women perambulate the streets, and weekly give hundreds of meals at Lockhart's coffee-houses to starving women and children. Mr. J. A. Groom, secretary, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C., will be happy to hear from sympathising friends.

Medical Prayer Union.

The annual meeting of this union was held in the Board Room, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on January 25. The president, Mr. J. Croft, F.R.C.S., in some very helpful words spoke of the conversion of Saul. Major Liebenrood (of Reading) gave a stirring address on the words, "What think ye of Christ?" terminating with the solemn question, "What does Christ think of you?"

About forty members were present. The next monthly meeting, to be held at 186, Aldersgate-street, at 5.15 p.m., Monday, February 6, will be open to all members, both senior and junior. It is hoped that as many as can come will do so.

DUNMOW.—Gospel services commenced here by Miss Barker about three years ago are still being successfully carried on. Evangelists from the Evangelisation Society go down every week, and the Town Hall is well filled on Sunday afternoon and evening.

THE BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.

The report of this institution for the past year, prepared by Pastor Gregory Baghdasarian, breathes an earnest evangelistic spirit. Indeed, the work of the Orphanage, besides being directly helpful to the inmates, has been the means of diffusing the Gospel in that dark land. The poverty of the Bithynian Christians is in itself a loud and importunate appeal to the people of our highly favoured land. Some kind friends have responded, but the need is very great. The Pastor says:—

"In the course of eighteen years the Broussa Orphanage has been developed to such an extent that it has become an Evangelistic Mission Work for our neighbourhood, which is inhabited—besides the millions of Mohammedans—by over 200,000 nominal Christians. These once rejected the Gospel and persecuted those who tried to bring to them the tidings of salvation; now, they are not only well disposed, but pleading for the Gospel and—sad to say—no attention is paid to their cry: 'Come over and help us!' Ours is the only Protestant institution of this kind in all Asia Minor, up to the Russian, Persian, Arabic, and Syrian frontiers, while the Jesuits have in all Turkey twelve hospitals with dispensaries, treating yearly 100,000 people; thirty orphanages, fifty boarding-schools, and a great many day-schools, with 20,000 pupils in them. They support these institutions by contributions from the Romanists in Europe. Should it be a hard task for the Protestants in Europe and America to support the only Protestant orphanage in this part of the Bible lands?

"We do our best to fulfil our Lord's last order, and preach the Gospel to all with whom we come into contact. But we must do more. We must go to them and send them preachers and teachers. The harvest-field is large—very large indeed—but few are the faithful labourers. The funds committed to our disposal are so small that they even do not cover the expenses of the Orphanage. Last year we received only £563, of which £86 were sent from England. We could not help closing the accounts with a deficit of £45.

"Our task for the new year is first of all the Orphanage; at least our fifty orphan and destitute children should be trained, until they too may, like their many former schoolmates, go out to spread the good seed. Then come the day schools, with fifty boys and girls, and the kindergarten, with twenty-five infants. We have further to distribute Scriptures and other good books, and wish to hire a coffee-hall in the town to make it a 'Rest,' where we can freely talk with many inquirers who are so anxious for the salvation of their souls. The last, but not the least, task of ours, is to send earnest evangelists into the neighbouring villages, who would teach in the schools and preach the everlasting Gospel. To carry out the Evangelistic Mission in Asia Minor we need only £1000 for this new year."

Rev. T. W. Brown, D.D., Secretary of the Turkish Mission Aid Society, 32, The Avenue, Bedford Park, Chiswick, London, will send copies of report.

South American Missionary Notes.

Letters have been received from South America promising Rev. G. C. Grubb a "brotherly reception" on the occasion of his approaching visit.

Mrs. Hay, the first lady medical missionary to Paraguay, has safely arrived at her destination, having travelled by steamers and bullock-cart to the interior of the Paraguayan Chaco. A recent letter informs us that she is "the first Scotchwoman to penetrate these unfrequented wilds of the Chaco," where she was "settled in her palm-log hut, surrounded by the whole population of men, women and children in the place, most of whom had never seen a white woman."

In the south, at Tekenika, Tierra del Fuego, Mr. and Mrs. Burleigh were well satisfied with the site chosen for the new station, where the natives were numerous.

There is much distress in the Settlement, and the people go off in groups in search of food, only (in many cases) to return in a more pitiable and famished condition. To make matters worse Mr. Hawkes was ill with rheumatic fever.

SCRIPTURE PATCHWORK.—A correspondent is anxious to know name and address of the maker of small calico handkerchiefs printed with coloured designs, and bearing Scripture texts and mottoes. Answers may be addressed to "A. K.," care of the office of The Christian.

A TWO YEARS' TALE.

Miss Lucy E. Guinness has prepared a very readable account of recent work in connection with the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions. It is entitled, Our Last Two Years, and from its pages we make the following extracts:—

"Twenty years have passed away, and 1872 is exchanged for 1892—Carey's centennial year. The little seed sown in obscure Stepney Green by Dr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness has germinated and grown till to-day it spreads its branches and bears fruit in no less than forty countries. The small private house first taken has developed into three colleges—two in East London, one in Derbyshire. The group of a dozen young men who gathered round the early home-like fireside has grown to include 700 labourers scattered all over the world, and 130 men and women now in training. The first handful of applicants for missionary training has increased to 3500 'cases,' each of which has been carefully considered, sifted, examined, and decided upon.

"Seventeen years' work in both the home and foreign mission sphere lay behind our missionary institutions when, on October 1, 1890, our college session opened with 120 students. Six score young men and women to be provided for, not more than two or three of whom contributed anything towards their support or tuition, meant bills amounting to £200 or £300 a week, and the year began low in funds—no new experience in a work that had from its earliest days leant only on the raven-supply system. Daily bread for daily need has been ours almost always, but we don't have next week's bread till next week comes. Nor do we know in this week whence next week's bread will fall. . . .

"In the spring of 1891 Dr. Harry Guinness went out to visit Lolo Land. His wife and children left us at the same time for a twelve-months' trip to Tasmania. It was the last year that our beloved mother filled the secretary's desk at Harley House. In the spring of 1872 this Congo Mission was founded. In the spring of 1892 came her serious failure in health. The last year was a very hard one, and peculiarly a time of steady 'toiling on.'

"Both the Institute and the Congo Balolo Mission are entirely dependent on the free-will offerings of the Lord's people. Their needs are large and constant, the expenditure on all accounts being about £20,000 per annum. Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., is the treasurer of the work. We require £400 every week, and there is often but little tangible treasure in the 'treasury' to draw on. Many and many a time has the oil in the cruse and the meal in the barrel seemed exhausted finally. Were it not that God is, we should all lay down at once the work we have in hand. We believe that He who calls out men and women for the evangelisation of the world will not leave his work half-finished, but will also provide the means required to fit and send them forth."

This deeply interesting number of Regions Beyond should have a specially large circulation (6d., Partridge). It gives a clear account of the recently founded Regions Beyond Helpers' Union, which has already attracted the co-operation of many earnest Christians.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Rev. W. J. Mayers has returned from paying visits to Leeds and Bristol, where he has conducted sixteen meetings on behalf of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. The concluding meeting in Leeds filled the large town hall, and awakened great interest. Mr. Mayers announced that fifty children had been received from the town and neigbourhood since February last. At Bristol (where Mr. Mayers ministered for so many years) the meetings were densely crowded on Sunday afternoon, the 22nd ult., hundreds were unable to obtain admission to the large Colston Hall. The limelight views illustrating Mr. Mayer's tour in the colonies were much enjoyed, and those which presented various aspects of work amongst the waifs and strays deepened the interest in Dr. Barnardo's work.

On Sunday last, Mr. Mayers was preaching at West Croydon Chapel for Dr. Spurgeon, who is still very ill; he will also occupy the pulpit on Sunday next, February 5th.

IN SOME SUNDAY SCHOOLS large sums are obtained for foreign missions by the scholars collecting a halfpenny a week from personal friends. In one Baptist school £115 have been gathered in one year by this method.

LIVERPOOL AND THE CROSS.

TOWN MISSION VICTORIES.

The annual meetings of the Liverpool Town Mission were held on Monday and Tuesday, January 23 and 24, in Hackins Hey and Hope Hall. The gatherings were very largely attended, and included the committee of directors, the subscribers, ministers of the various Evangelical bodies in the city, the missionaries and their wives, as well as several thousands of the general and sympathetic public.

At Monday's meeting Mr. Thomas Matheson, J.P., president of the mission, occupied the chair, being his first public appearance after a protracted illness. The sixty-fourth annual report was read by Mr. F. B. Babcock, hon. secretary. The adoption of the report was moved by Canon Burbidge in a very sympathetic speech, and ably seconded by Rev. John Watson, and unanimously adopted. From the report it appears that the Town Mission have had victories all along the line. An important feature of the mission is its unsectarian character. The Gospel is its only creed, and this the missionaries carry from house to house—the courts, alleys, lanes, streets, garrets, cellars—great and small, rich and poor are alike presented with the Gospel, which is still "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." In this great field of Liverpool, with its teeming thousands of needy souls, the city missionary has been much encouraged by the labours of last year. Victories for the cross have been his reward in the most unexpected parts, and his heart is glad because the Lord has done great things for the people.

There are at present, the report tells us, thirty-four men on the staff, ably superintended by the energetic and well-known Mr. J. Barnabas Bain, who is a host in himself. Of these, thirty-one are placed on districts which they work up by house-to-house, and in other ways, such as meetings—evangelistic, temperance, lectures, prayer, etc., etc.—seek to win the city for Jesus. Three men are devoted to the visiting of lodging-houses, cabmen, and public-houses. Referring to rescue work, it appears that one missionary "rescued from bad ways" no fewer than 306 lads and sixteen girls during the year. From Kirkdale in the north to Sefton Park in the south, the town missionary is well known and sought after as the friend of everybody. Meetings are held by him at the docks, railway stations, workshops, shipyards, halls, cottages, and in the open street.

The meeting on Tuesday, which was preceded by a reception tea, was presided over by Mr. Babcock. The principal speaker of the evening was the Rev. John Robertson, of Gorbals Tabernacle, Glasgow. The famed Scotch preacher, although suffering from neuralgia, gave an address on "Home Mission Work," full of instruction, interest, warmth, and power.

AMONG JEWS IN PARIS.

At our Mission-hall, 2, Rue du Roi de Sicile, we continue to have crowded meetings. Jews and Jewesses come in such large numbers that on more than one occasion our little hall has proved far too small for all who sought admittance. Their interest in the plain Gospel address, setting forth Christ and Him crucified, is certainly a most wonderful sight to behold, and from the questions they ask, it is evident that they have listened well to the discourse.

A Rabbi, who was several times invited by our colporteur to attend our meetings, but stoutly refused to do so, was at last prevailed upon to enter the hall. He took off his hat, as all do, but put on his little skull-cap, and paid great attention. He was evidently interested in the proceedings, for he not only showed keen attention, but followed the reading of the New Testament, and the singing. Moreover, after the meeting he came forward and asked for a copy of the New Testament. His example was soon followed by many others.

There are many deserving poor among Jewish exiles, who appeal to us for help. They are in great misery and distress, owing to the severity of the weather. We are trying to relieve some; we would gladly do more if we had means at our disposal.

L. C. Mamlock.

Paris.

THE DUKE OF FIFE visited Spitalfields on Tuesday week for the purpose of opening a Church Army Labour Home for youths, which has been in operation since last spring. Already 128 youths have been received into the Home, seventy-two of whom are now doing well in situations outside.

PROTESTANT SCHOOLS IN MADRID.

The building fund for mission and school premises at Chamberi, Madrid, progresses slowly. The gentleman who offered £500 on condition that £2500 were raised (more than £3000 are needed altogether) by January 8, has kindly extended the time somewhat, as he is very desirous that the money be immediately raised for the purpose. Indeed, as it seems necessary for the continuance of the work to build, the sooner it is done the more economical it will be, as some outlay in rent would be saved.

Through donations received the schools continue, and we trust they will. We thank your readers for their kind help. Before men, Mr. Fenn is responsible for this outlay, but before the Lord is it not the Church of Christ? Some inquire whether we think it is the will of God they should continue. Full reasons are given on this point in the little book, "Christian Work in Madrid," by Mr. Kingsmill, 31, Buckingham-place, Brighton.

Hyde Park Hall Mission.

Mr. Chas. Cook, having completed twenty-one years' work at the West-end of London, is desirous of having a change of ministry for twelve months. Accordingly, he commences a month's mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-End, on Sunday next, at the close of which he leaves for work in Ireland. After this he will be free to take missions in any town where united efforts would be put forth for the strengthening of believers and the gathering in of the unsaved.

The work at the Metropolitan Music-hall this season has been most encouraging. Last Sunday night numbers were unable to get in, and much power was evidenced in the meeting. During Mr. Cook's absence, the work will be under the care of Mr. R. A. Elvey, and the preachers for February will be Messrs. George E. Morgan, J. H. Lydall, H. M. Sidford, and R. A. Elvey. Friends desirous of a visit from Mr. Cook during the few months he has vacant can address him at 6, Frithville-gardens, Shepherd's Bush, W.

"Christian Endeavour Day."

The following is a copy of a circular which has been sent to the members of a Christian Endeavour Society in the North of London:

On February 2, twelve years ago, the first Christian Endeavour Society was formed in America by Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D. February 2 is, therefore, observed each year by the societies all over the world as "Christian Endeavour Day," and this year it has been arranged to celebrate the Christian Endeavour anniversary in a practical way by setting apart the present week (from January 29 to February 4) as a "Week of Self-denial" on behalf of foreign missions—all members of Christian Endeavour Societies being urged during this week to deny themselves of something and to give the proceeds towards the work of sending the Gospel to the millions of heathen who are still in darkness and ignorance of the good news which has brought such joy and gladness into so many of our lives. Myriads of men and women and boys and girls in the dark places of the earth, which are "full of the habitations of cruelty," are waiting and longing for the Sun of Righteousness to arise upon them with healing in his beams. Will you not try to do something—if only a little—to hasten the glad day of salvation for these our brothers and sisters?

We are very anxious that our Society should honour itself and its Master by joining with the hundreds of other societies who are observing this Christian Endeavour "Self-denial Week." We, therefore, hope you will have a share in this part of "the King's business," and will endeavour to get your friends also to unite with you. We shall have a missionary-box at our meeting next Tuesday to receive your offerings.

"INTOXICATING LIQUOR," says Dr. Joseph Cook, "is the devil's fish-hook. It easily goes in—but not out. The tendency of the use of a little intoxicating liquor is to produce a diseased appetite for more. Wine is a mocker, and he who is deceived thereby is not wise. Tippling is Satan's kindling wood."

THE COST OF STRIKES.—It appears from the statistics furnished to the Labour Commission by Mr. Giffen, of the Board of Trade, that the loss by lock-out and strikes in Great Britain during one year was £1,292,000, and that the total amount of wages represents about £48 per annum for each worker. Mr. Giffen also stated that the total immigration of persons who came to stay in Great Britain represented in 1890 a maximum of 21,000, including the Russian and Polish Jews.

BRUNSWICK HALL, MARYLEBONE.

On Tuesday last week, Mr. Samuel Cawston presided, in the place of Sir Arthur Blackwood (prevented by illness from doing so), at a meeting of friends invited to join in the dedication of a new hall to spiritual uses. The hall is intended to accommodate the meetings hitherto held with considerable inconvenience in the adjoining Brunswick Institute, 85 and 86, High-street, Marylebone. The institute premises will thus be left free for other purposes, including reading-room and club for Christians, classes, gymnasia, and work among ragged and destitute children. The hall will be used for meetings every evening, one for children the other for adults, and for services, Sunday-schools, and meetings on Sunday.

The work is of the kind set forth in the new scheme of the Church Association, and has been carried on for many years with much blessing in the conversion of the young. The meeting was addressed by Rev. C. E. Britton, Mr. A. Jepson, Mr. R. A. Caird, and Mr. Thorne, who laid particular emphasis upon the need of simple Gospel work in parishes where ritualism has the upper hand, and the urgent duty of every Christian living in such parishes to be a Gospel worker among the people. The command is to go and preach to "every creature," and the ritualist parishes are in special need of such preaching.

Mr. Thorne, who is a gentleman of colour, a native of Barbadoes, and expects shortly to be fully qualified as a doctor, gave an account of an Evangelistic, Medical, and Industrial Mission in Africa which he is organising. For some time he has been conducting meetings at the institution. It was announced by the chairman, who, with Lieut.-Col. Sandys, M.P., headed the list with a donation of £50, that nearly half the sum required for the extension had been given or promised.

The Poor in Sheffield.

The Sheffield Board of Guardians have adopted a scheme of classification which certainly seems to meet a number of the difficulties in the way of the better treatment of the deserving poor, and we sincerely trust, therefore, that it may meet with the ready approval of the Local Government Board. They propose to erect special buildings, with rooms furnished in a homelike way, for persons sixty years of age with twenty years' residence in the parish, and who have not in that time applied for relief; and to give these inmates further advantages in the way of food and clothing. A second class of inmates will have fewer privileges than these, but more than the third class, while the fourth class, persons of bad character, will receive more severe treatment than at present. The plan is a liberal and admirable one, and the result of its adoption will be looked for with much interest.

BISLEY, SURREY.—Any who are in the neighbourhood of Bisley on a Sunday ought to visit the boys' chapel. The public are admitted. The order of the 300 boys and the interest they take in the services is encouraging to the masters and the preacher.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

CAMBRIDGE.

The first meeting of the Cambridge University Church Missionary Union was held on Monday evening, January 23, when an opening address was given by the president, Rev. H. C. G. Moule. After noticing the fact that the blessings attending last term's endeavours in the missionary cause furnished matter for deep thankfulness, and pleading for earnest prayer on the efforts of this term, the president gave three biographical sketches of great missionaries of the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries.—John Eliot, Ziegenberg, and Adoniram Judson.

Great interest is being centred in the forthcoming University mission (February 4—12), to be held by Rev. G. Grubb. Many of the undergraduates are giving practical evidence of their interest by distributing invitations and notices.

There was no special speaker at the first meeting of the Cambridge Inter-Collegiate Christian Union, held on Sunday evening, January 22. Instead of the usual address, a prayer-meeting was held to ask Divine guidance and blessing with regard to the coming mission.

Rev. Joseph Armitage Robinson, B.D., Fellow of Christ's College, has been elected to the Norrisian Professorship of Divinity, vacant by the election of Professor Lamby to the Lady Margaret Professorship.

The University sermon was preached on Sunday week by Archdeacon Sinclair, of London.

The annual meeting of the Cambridge branch of the Missions to Seamen Society was held on Monday week in the large room of the Guildhall. Professor Jebb, M.P., presided over a large and interested attendance.

OXFORD.

As these notes do not usually appear during vacations, it may perhaps be well to refer to the hearty and united meetings held in connection with the Week of Prayer.

The very serious illness of the Dean of Christ Church (Dr. Paget) caused great anxiety last week, but the crisis is past, and recovery is now but a matter of time. The widespread interest and sympathy testified to the Dean's influence and popularity in Oxford.

One very valuable result of Mr. Moody's mission is the formation of the Oxford Prayer Union, open to all Christian workers, for the purpose of seeking for more of the Holy Spirit to rest on the Oxford churches. The inaugural meeting was held in connection with the Week of Prayer, and there will be a monthly meeting at the Y.M.C.A., conducted by various city ministers.

Reports from various quarters testify to the lasting character of many of the cases from Mr. Moody's Mission.

On Saturday last the annual breakfast of the Oxford University branch of the London Missionary Society took place, at the invitation of Drs. Fairbairn and Legge. About 130 guests were present, consisting of graduate and undergraduate members of the University and ministers of city churches. Rev. S. Mateer gave a most interesting account of his thirty-eight years' work in Travancore, and Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon, closed with a solemn and spiritual address.

On Sunday, Dr. Mackennal preached at Mansfield, and in the evening a missionary meeting was held, with Canon Fremantle in the chair. His presence, and a letter of regret at being absent, through ill-health, from Canon Christopher, testified to the warm sympathy felt for the London Society by these Churchmen, and also showed the Christian union which missionary effort evokes.

The University sermon on Sunday afternoon was preached by Rev. John Matthews, of Derby, whose faithful testimony as an undergraduate thirty years ago is not forgotten, and whose ministry here on Sunday evening, in St. Aldate's Church, was greatly valued.

Mr. Hind Smith was at the Y.M.C.A. recently, and was warmly welcomed by a large meeting. Mr. Robinson Souttar has again been elected president of this prosperous and growing branch.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT has caused it to be announced that he does not intend to tax teetotal drinks.

ROMAN CATHOLIC MARRIAGES.—The Roman Catholic journals have taken alarm at the disclosures affecting Romanism in the last report of the Registrar-General, the figures in regard to marriages showing clearly that the Roman Catholic population in England and Wales is decreasing. The Registrar-General shows that out of every 1,000 marriages in the two countries 700 are celebrated in the Church of England, and of the remaining 300 only 42 take place in Roman Catholic chapels.

Letters to the Editor.

MISSIONARY METHODS.

Dear Sir,—I have read with much interest my friend the Rev. Arnold Foster's letter in your issue for this week, headed "Cheapness or Efficiency?" This letter is all the more valuable from the fact that its writer and his wife, who is a splendid Chinese scholar, though on our staff, cost us nothing. They are both Christians of a high type. With your permission we propose issuing the letter as a leaflet.

Very truly yours,
George Cousins, Editorial Sec.
London Missionary Society, 14, Blomfield-street, London.

Dear Sir,—In an article on "Missionary Methods" in your issue of Jan. 12 you say that a correspondent's letter "seems to raise the question whether the principle of sending out missionaries without definite provision is a sound one." Judging from the experience of Paul, I do not think the statements in your correspondent's letter need at all raise the question of the scripturalness, at any rate, of this mode of support. Paul speaks of being "in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness." Also as "being poor, yet making many rich, having nothing, yet possessing all things," "in necessities," &c.

But, on the other hand, it shows in what luxury, almost, most of us are living at home, and how many things we might do without in order to minister to the necessities of those who are labouring for Christ in trying circumstances in heathen lands.

I was much pleased with the article headed "Wanted, Crown Advocates," in your issue of Dec. 29. I have for many years tried to help the mission cause in a very similar way, and can speak of the joy and blessing it brings. There are many whose path to the mission-field is blocked who yet might most really take part in the work by following the suggestions given in that article.

With Christian regards, yours sincerely,
44, Dick-place, Edinburgh. Grant Jackson.

Dear Sir,—Regarding missionary methods, as very justly commented on by you in your issue of Jan. 12, I would add the inquiry, Is there any Scriptural reason to conclude that it is God's will that those labouring for the Lord in foreign fields should be continually under trial of faith as to the supply for their needs of food and raiment? Is it duly considered how much trial is necessarily linked to their calling to foreign service? There are trials connected with the acquirement of the language, trials connected with the effect of climate on the health, heavy trials from all the depressing influence of their surroundings, from loneliness, and from all the "long patience" required from the husbandman.

Does the Church at home really believe that it is God's will that there should be added a continual trial as to the supply of temporal need even to the point of not knowing "where the next meal is to come from"? Are not Christians deplorably deceiving themselves if they think that to relieve those wholly given to the Lord's work of this burden, would be to "clip the wings of their faith"? A stated salary is not necessarily advocated.

Yours faithfully,
T. A. S.

THE C.I.G.M.

Sir,—"The object of the mission is to raise up self-supporting, self-governing, and self-extending churches." Excellent, wise words. God aid those who have written them to carry them out to a practical issue. But to do this all denominational teaching must be eschewed. Paul's method of establishing missions will need to be followed, which, as given in the Acts, was preaching the Gospel till there were real converts, men and women, converted by the Holy Ghost. These were then formed into simple churches, and the government of the same was committed to native elders. Will not the Holy Ghost sanctify the knowledge which such already have, of the customs, characters, modes of thought, etc., of their countrymen, and lead them to set up the form of Church government best adapted to their needs. This knowledge a foreigner can rarely, if ever, acquire.

When will missionary societies in Europe and America send out their missionaries on the Lord's lines—"preach the Gospel to every creature," but do not carry our denominational differences and our sectarian feuds into your new fields. Self-supporting and self-extending churches are scarcely likely to arise, unless they are self-governed. He (the Holy Ghost) shall teach you all things, said our Lord, and amongst the "all things" which assuredly He will teach to converted natives everywhere is, once that they are converted, how to organise and direct a church, and a church so organised and directed they will watch over and support. It is to them as a first-born son; their hearts are bound up in its prosperity. Missionary.

A VILLAGE NEED.

Sir,—We are anxious to start a toy industry in our village, as the harvest has been so bad, and the orchards and fruit-gardens have failed, so that for many months our people have had no work. We send thousands of pounds yearly to Germany for toys, which can be made as well and as cheaply in England. We have got a market in London for our toys when made, but require £20 before we can start, as I must pay some one to teach them, and of course they will spoil a great deal of material at first.

I have got £10 towards the amount required. I can get no help from our village, which is in the midst of the Fens, as the farmers are as badly off as the labourers. We do all we can, but our little is only half what it was when we came here. The entire expense of schools, etc., falls on the clergyman. We have a men's Bible-class, with 120 members, whose ages vary from sixteen to seventy-two; a girls' Bible-class, with over fifty members; and a Sunday-school of over 200 children. When we came here there were no Bible-classes, and only forty children in the Sunday-school.

Yours truly,
Bluntisham Rectory, St. Ives. Mina Rumpf.

"HOW SHALL WE GUIDE OUR BOYS?"

Dear Sir,—I am very glad to see in this week's issue of The Christian a letter signed "An Anxious Mother," raising the question of Children's Amusements.

As a father, I had the difficult question to face during the past Christmas holidays, and I was perplexed as to what was the right thing to do. My son, now nearly fifteen, urged me to let him go to a Christmas pantomime, as other Christian parents were allowing their boys to go. However, after earnest prayer for Divine guidance, I declined to let him go, telling him that as a Christian I did not approve of such distinctly worldly amusements, and pointing out to him that pantomimes and so forth had too often been the commencement of a life of pleasure and sin.

I cannot say that the result at present has been altogether satisfactory; I fear it has given him an impression that Christianity is a pleasureless thing, and not suitable, at any rate, for boys. Did I do right or wrong? This is the question I should like answered, as I should be sorry to keep him from any pure and rational enjoyment; but deeply grieved to have been—however indirectly—the cause of his taking the first step in a life of worldly enjoyment.

My own conviction is—be the result what it may—I did the right thing, as in after years, if the sins and pleasures of the world fascinate and allure him, he will never be able to say, "Well, my father is responsible for it."

Yours faithfully,
Kensington Lodge, Folkestone. James Bryant.

Dear Sir,—May I reply to an "Anxious Mother" (as having had something of the experience she asks for) that I do not think she will find any warrant in Scripture for training boys differently from girls, and, therefore, what is bad for the one is surely bad for the other also. The fact that boys have to face life earlier is no reason for giving them the power of choice in the question of amusements before they are properly qualified to judge for themselves. Their safeguard will lie in being early and patiently taught to "obey their parents in all things," and to carry out the principles laid down for them in the Word of God.

My own experience has been that keeping children from parties where acting and dancing are the amusements provided is no injury to them, but, on the contrary, helps them to be more decidedly on the Lord's side when they are grown up. But this need not necessitate their being kept from all gatherings for young people. There must surely be, in the circle of an "Anxious Mother's" acquaintance, families like-minded with herself, where such amusements are always excluded, but where harmless games, suited to all ages, are provided and greatly enjoyed by both boys and girls. It needs much wisdom and firmness nowadays to draw the line in such matters, but "the Lord giveth wisdom," and if our children go without the amount of worldly amusements now deemed so desirable because of their parents' allegiance to Christ, they need not be without either enjoyment or recreation of a far more healthy kind, which will bring no evil results.

If for ourselves, gambling, dancing, and acting are injurious to spiritual life, they must be equally so for our children, and cannot help them to walk in the way they should go, even if they have not yet confessedly entered the narrow path. I would earnestly counsel an "Anxious Mother" to protect her boys as much as her girls, from such evil influences, but to give trouble and thought to the attempt to provide for them amusements which will be equally enjoyable, but not deleterious in their effects. I should like to recommend a book on the training of children, entitled "Mothers in Council," written, I believe, by one of the Bickersteth family, which I found very helpful years ago. Yours faithfully,

An Older Mother.

RESCUING THE DROWNING.

Sir,—In 1874 Lieutenant Brunel, of Dieppe, introduced his pocket life-saving lines, of which already upwards of 3340 are being used in France, where they now rescue annually some 285 lives. Nevertheless these admirable inventions are almost unknown in our Empire.

Brunel's small pocket line consists of a wooden float round which some ninety feet of stout cord is wound. The other end of the cord terminates in an efficient grapnel armed with four small hooks. The whole apparatus complete weighs only five ounces, and is the most convenient of all life-saving lines. Hence I urge its adoption everywhere, especially for officials and others engaged about our coasts and inland waters. These appliances could be profitably retailed for about 1s. 6d. each, and anyone can make them. I am, Sir, yours, etc.,

J. Lawrence-Hamilton, M.R.C.S.

FATHERHOOD AND SONHOOD.

Dear Sir,—In discussing the question of the Fatherhood of God, I think it should not be overlooked that the term "offspring" (Acts xvii. 28—29, a very exact translation of the original), is distinctly inferior in dignity and import to that of "sons," "daughters," or "children." A hen's brood are her offspring; but no one would call them her children, except in the language of poetry.

The Jews were God's adopted children nationally, under the Old Covenant, and believers in Christ are such under the New; but I venture to affirm that there is not a single passage of Scripture where the term, "sons," "daughters," or "children," is applied to mankind indiscriminately. Truly yours,

Horace Noel.

Woking, Jan. 30.

EVENING COMMUNION.

Dear Sir,—Valuing The Christian as a record of evangelistic work all over the world, and having especially appreciated it when far away, I am very sorry to see that you suggest discussion in your columns of the modes of administration of the Lord's supper.

I suppose we may take it for granted that all readers of The Christian are united in their abhorrence of the turning of this memorial of our Lord's death into a sacrificial act. There are, however, many of us, including, I suppose, all Evangelical Churchmen, who believe that the administration of the Lord's Supper by ordained ministers is a wise safeguard against possible abuse.

We should probably reverence more highly our Lord's last command than your correspondent "J. H. F." seems to do, but is it not best that upon the exact modes of administration each should act according to his conscience, and if we cannot all follow the same rule, should we not agree to differ?—Yours faithfully. Charles F. Harford-Battersby.

THE MADRAS TAMIL MISSION.

The latest news from India of this Hindu Christian Mission is very encouraging. The ragged day, night, and Sunday schools, open-air evangelistic work, and free dinners are all working successfully and efficiently. It is pleasing to note that the seal of God's blessing is on all departments of the mission. Six converts of the mission were readily received into Christ's fold by baptism by Rev. Aseervathum Gnanamutthu, B.A., of the Church Missionary Society, Madras.

The annual Musical Festival in connection with our prayer union was held in the upper hall of the Pophams' Broadway School on Christmas Eve. Addresses were delivered by missionaries connected with various societies. Mr. Samuel Israel is very anxious to continue the free dinners to nearly 100 children daily for the next twelve months, as the distress is still keen among the labouring and poorer classes; £40 to £50 will do this.

Gnanamutthu J. Israel.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

A new Association has been formed at Burford, Oxon.

The Birmingham Association is contemplating a move into large and central premises.

Mr. S. R. Mabin, the new general secretary at Devonport, has been heartily welcomed.

At Derby 200 young men have joined the Association since the opening of the new building.

The Wandsworth Common Y.M.C.A. has just held its first annual meeting. There was a large and representative attendance.

Tavistock Y.M.C.A. has secured premises in Bank-square, which have been comfortably furnished, and were opened on the 18th inst. About seventy members and associates are enrolled.

Sir Thomas Lee, M.P., president of the Dawlish Y.M.C.A., gave the other night a reception to a large number of young men. Suitable rooms have been secured by this new Association.

Rev. C. C. Walker, who lately visited California, wrote:—"I was delighted with the Y.M.C.A. at San Francisco. The secretary, Mr. M'Coy, is a splendid fellow—a warm-hearted Christian, the right man in the right place. They have a good work going on."

The Greenwich Y.M.C.A. opened new premises on Thursday last in London-street, Mr. G. Ledgett, L.C.C., in the chair. Addresses were given by Mr. Hind Smith and others. Young men coming to Greenwich should communicate with the hon. sec., 47, Royal Hill.

The annual meeting of the Lads' weekly Bible class, in connection with the Newport Y.M.C.A., was held recently, and the report showed an average attendance of sixty. Several boys have shown definite signs of conversion; also many have had situations procured for them.

Chudleigh Y.M.C.A. (Devon), has just held its second annual meeting. The president, Dr. Cunningham, said the Association was in a most flourishing condition. During the year the membership had made a great increase, and capital rooms had been secured and furnished.

The Cork Y.M.C.A. had a discussion last week upon the relation of the Association to the neighbouring churches. It was shown that the Association was a valuable accessory to the churches, introducing many young men to their membership, and training others for service in various departments of church work.

The Mayor and Mayoress of Leicester have given a reception in the museum buildings in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Many members of the corporation and other influential townsmen were present. In welcoming his guests, of whom there were about 700, the mayor spoke in warm praise of the work of the association.

The Buenos Ayres Y.M.C.A. has appointed Mr. A. E. Holder as permanent secretary. The midday prayer-meeting has again been started. The visit from the Keswick Mission party is being looked forward to, and is a constant subject of prayer at the meetings that God may send showers of blessings to this dry and parched land.

The Employment Bureau at Exeter Hall has completed its second year, during which upwards of 12,180 interviews took place, but only 650 were placed on the register, and 126 were brought forward from last year. Appointments were secured for 598. The number registered will give some idea as to the care exercised in registering applications.

Mr. W. R. Lane is to hold a mission in Cardiff, commencing Sunday, Feb. 5; speaking in the Park Hall in the afternoon and the large Philharmonic Music Hall in the evening. Week-days: Afternoon Bible Readings in Y.M.C.A. Hall; and evenings, Ward-street, large chapel, where Mr. Moody's meetings were held. Will the Lord's people earnestly pray for much blessing?

Mr. Holmes, missionary secretary for Egypt and Palestine, has just formed a promising Association at Alexandria. This is the eighth Y.M.C.A. Mr. Holmes has established since the commencement of his tour in October last. Calls are coming in from every side for the services of Mr. McCann, English Missionary Secretary for the Bombay Presidency, who has started upon a second tour of the principal towns. There is reason to hope for a speedy development of Y.M.C.A. work in the Presidency.

Old members of London Y.M.C.A.'s scattered throughout the world will learn with interest that the annual "Radley" meeting, which for more than forty years has brought together the committees of Metropolitan Associations, was held a few nights ago at Exeter Hall. The lower hall was well filled with representatives of the various associations, young committee-men being largely in evidence. Mr. George Williams was in excellent spirits, delivering a brief prefatory address upon the Y.M.C.A. motto for the current year, "Only be thou strong and very courageous." Numerous reports were presented from the different centres, all showing that the good work is being well maintained, and that, so far from being discouraged by their difficulties, the workers are determined to press forward more hopefully and manfully than ever.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES.

Lady Jersey addressing the members of the Y.W.C.A. at Sydney last month, spoke in the warmest possible manner of the value of the association, especially amongst lonely strangers in great cities.

A branch of the Y.W.C.A. has been opened at Blisset-street Mission Room, Greenwich. Hon. Miss Kinnaird inaugurated the opening. Miss Moses, 45A, Devonshire-road, S.E., will welcome young women and give all information.

The Buenos Ayres Y.W.C.A. has just welcomed Miss Ellen Smith (whose sister manages the Protestant Orphanage at Nazareth). She has come out to superintend the work in Buenos Ayres. It is earnestly hoped that in answer to prayer the association may make steady progress and be appreciated.

The annual report of the Ryde Y.W.C.A. shows valuable work and good progress for the past year. The "Seaside Home" is open to all respectable young women from every part of the kingdom, and application for admission, with a recommendation, should be sent to the resident Lady Superintendent, at Garfield House, or to Mrs. J. T. O. Johnston, honorary secretary, at Caithness House, Ryde.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Dr. Pierson's missionary lectures under the Duff Bequest are to be delivered in Dundee.

A conference was held in Glasgow last week on the need of starting definite temperance work in connection with all the church organisations.

The ministers of the Protestant denominations in Broughty Ferry have arranged for a general interchange of pulpits about the middle of this month.

An enthusiastic public reception was accorded to Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard at Glasgow on Monday evening by various temperance organisations.

Dufftown is becoming a rival to Campbelltown in the matter of distilleries. There are already two in operation there, and two others are in course of erection.

News has come that Mr. Cockburn, head of the Church of Scotland Mission at Ichang, China, was made the special object of attack in the recent serious riots there.

A general mission is procceding this week in the Episcopal churches of Edinburgh. Among the missioners are Dr. A. J. Harrison and Canon Newbolt, of St. Paul's.

A correspondent of the Dundee Advertiser calls for sweeping improvements in the common lodging houses of the city, in the matter of cleanliness, ventilation, and other important particulars.

During the past year the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has dealt with cases affecting the welfare of 3876 children in Scotland. Of these cases about 160 were of a serious nature.

Rev. John Robertson and his congregation at Gorbals Tabernacle, Glasgow, are looking for a site on which to erect a larger building, so as to accommodate the great crowds that attend his earnest ministry.

The Regent-square congregation, notwithstanding Mr. Fairweather's refusal of their invitation to the pastorate, will prosecute the call before the Perth Presbytery, in the hope that he may be induced to change his mind.

The agitation against the Declaratory Act proceeds with a quiet persistency throughout the Highlands, a fact which does not bode well for the real spiritual prosperity of the North. Revival does not flourish where controversial bitterness prevails.

The past year's report of the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society shows much work accomplished for the benefit of seamen sojourning in the port. Mr. R. H. Hunter has retired from the post of hon. sec. and treasurer, his place being taken by Mr. Maclay.

The Scottish branch of the Evangelisation Society has, through its agents, conducted nearly 4600 Gospel meetings in all parts of Scotland during the past year, with a computed aggregate attendance of 900 000 people. The Society needs larger support from the Christian public generally.

We deeply regret to record the death, at the age of 56, of Rev. Duncan Colvin, F.C. Minister of Auchterarder, after an illness extending over several months. He filled a pastorate in Inverness for some years, and has been at the historic little town of Auchterarder for nine years. He took a deep interest in evangelistic work, and was very active in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit to central Scotland last spring.

IRISH NOTES.

The Dublin Methodist Council has passed a resolution favourable to the establishment of a central mission in the city.

The Misses Nugent, of London, have given the Representative Church Body £1,000 for the benefit of poor parishes in the south and west of Ireland.

Evangelistic services have been held at Glenady, by Rev. P. E. Donovan, and at Maguiresbridge, by Revs. G. Coulter and T. Walmsley, and Captain West.

The cause of temperance is receiving more attention than formerly in co. Limerick. New branches have been started, and meetings held in various places.

The Belfast Female Mission is doing an excellent work. During the past year the agents visited 15,378 houses, held 946 cottage services, and ministered to 861 sick persons, besides establishing several clothing clubs.

At the annual meeting of the Dublin Deaf and Dumb Association, of which Mr. Hewson is the missionary, it was stated that the work is in need of financial help. A sale of work is to be held at the beginning of March.

CHICAGO NOTES.

The World's Religious Congress has taken definite shape. Its sessions are to be held in the new Art Palace, on the lake front. The building, now nearing completion, is one of the finest and most substantial of any of Chicago's great buildings. All religions are to be represented, and representatives of note will participate in the parliament.

Rev. E. P. Goodwin, of the Congregational Church North-side, has had a great ovation during the past week, celebrating his twenty-fifth year in the active pastorate of a Chicago church, which is something remarkable, for pastors here change so often that the average of years in one pastorate is very low. Dr. Goodwin is a most worthy brother; he has done valuable service for the Master, and is still in the forefront of the battle.

It is the feeling among the brethren that all the evangelists should be called in, and during the next six months the most vigorous campaign of evangelisation inaugurated ever known. There is room for it, and the millions of people coming will certainly be a fit sequel to Pentecost, if the Word of God shall be carried to distant lands by the returning multitudes.

The fight over the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday has been opened afresh, and Congress is besieged this week by the champions, pro and con., and the Press of the land is all awake on the subject. How it will go we cannot tell. To rescind the law already enacted is the effort of the baser element.

A new benevolent movement has been organised in the city. Over one thousand destitute crippled children between six and fifteen years of age have been found; there has no provision heretofore been made for them only to send them to the poorhouse. Some benevolent ladies have secured fourteen lots, several thousand dollars in money, a competent superintendent, and now propose to take care of this long-neglected class. The movement has met the approval of the best men, and will doubtless be a grand success. It is proposed to put up a building worth 50,000 dols. as soon as possible.

Mr. Moody has revisited Chicago in order to consult with the pastors of the city as to planning special work for the World's Fair, and to attend the annual meeting of his Bible Institute. In an interview with a Tribune reporter he stated that among those who had promised to work in the city during the summer are Pastor Stocker, of Berlin; Pastor Monod, of Paris; Rev. W. H. Webb-Peploe, Rev. Hubert Brooke, and Dr. John Hall, of New York. Mr. Moody preached at Chicago-avenue Church, morning and evening, on Sabbath, Jan. 16.

SUNDAY ENTERTAINMENTS.—We have long wondered why the National Sunday League and the Secularist Society have been allowed to charge for admission to the entertainments and meetings held on Sunday evenings under their auspices. The County Council has, we are glad to note, decided to test the legality of their doing so.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY. — The second monthly prayer meeting was held in the committee room, 20, Berners-street, W., on Friday last. Mr. W. J. Fraser presided, and mentioned that the Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, M.A., Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, had become a vice-president, and that the Rev. Dr. Waller, Principal of St. John's Hall, Highbury, had joined the executive committee. Rev. A. E. Foster delivered an address on Romans v.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. J. Hixon Irving, of Leamington, has been holding interesting services and giving profitable Bible readings at Consett, co. Durham.

St. Pinnock, Cornwall.—The Lord has been greatly blessing the labours of Mr. John Elliott in this village. The congregations have increased, and night by night some have professed decision, so that the mission has been extended from three weeks to five.

Mealsgate, Carlisle.—Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver's Mission in the George Moore Memorial Hall here has been full of encouragement. The meetings extended over a fortnight, and at every meeting souls professed decision. To the Christians all around the meetings have been a source of deep heart searching and a time of consecration.

Shrewsbury.—We are in the midst of a most interesting work of grace following in the wake of Mr. Moody's meetings. Nightly for the last four weeks the hall has been filled to hear Mr. Wharton, and scores who were awakened then are now rejoicing in Christ. We ask for continued prayer for the meetings still in progress. W.

The Evangelistic Mission.—The work in the new Willesden Hall is giving great encouragement. Scarcely a Gospel meeting has been held without manifest conversions ; and notwithstanding the weather the hall has been well attended on week nights and crowded on Sundays. A blessed time was also enjoyed on Sunday evening at Gibraltar Chapel, Bethnal Green, when about twenty stood up in the after meeting confessing Christ as their newly-found Saviour.

Mr. Thomas Wales commenced on New Year's Day a three weeks' mission at the Town Hall, Farnborough. In spite of the severity of the weather, the services increased night after night, while the hallowing influence of the Holy Spirit seemed manifest throughout the whole mission. Last Sunday night was a memorable one ; the hall was crowded in every part, and many precious souls were brought into the fold of Christ. The services are of a purely unsectarian character.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has been holding meetings in Windsor, Ct. At the first meeting there was a great blessing. Nearly fifty came out on the Lord's side. It was evident that the Spirit of God was present, with great power and blessing. At a meeting the next day, many who had professed conversion related, in a few words, how they had been led by God's Spirit to trust in Christ alone for salvation. On Jan. 8 Mr. Hammond began a series of evangelistic meetings in Waterford, N.Y.

Rev. F. E. Smiley has held a fruitful series of evangelistic meetings in Huntingdon (Pa.), concerning which Dr. D. K. Freeman writes :—"Not since the great awakening of 1876 has this city felt such interest, nor has the spirit of prayer and the personal effort been so manifest among the members of our churches. Mr. Smiley's methods are simple, scriptural, and effective. God has been with his servant, and blesses his labours in reviving the churches, reclaiming the backsliders, and persuading many souls from among the careless and indifferent to follow Jesus."

Mr. Richard Weaver concluded on Monday evening a week's mission in the Grove Wesleyan Chapel, Stratford, E. There were large congregations at the meetings, and many entered upon the new life in Christ. Not only did weary souls realise a peace they never knew before, but some who had wandered from the Christian path were restored to their former joy. Moreover, believers were greatly edified. Mr. Weaver has now begun a short mission at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green.

Rhayader, Radnorshire.—Mr. W. Skinner has concluded a three weeks' united mission here. Services were held in the various chapels alternately. Judging from the large numbers that came night after night to the services, the earnest attention paid to "the things that were spoken," the deep and increasing interest in the mission which was manifested, and the number who professed to have found the Saviour, there is a good prospect that the seed sown will bear much fruit in the quickening of the churches and the conversion of souls.

S. Prosser, Congregational Minister.

Bristol.—Rev. E. Davidson has closed a ten days' mission at Langton-street, which appears to have been very much blessed. A friend writes:—"A considerable number of conversions have taken place. In some cases whole families and whole Sunday-school classes have rejoiced in the fact that all have become members of the household of God. The services of the second Sunday were the most remarkable of all, the presence and power of the Highest being gloriously made manifest. A rich blessing has come to the society. Conspicuous among the workers were some who had only started the new life a few weeks previously."

Dr. Munhall has closed fifteen days' meetings in New Castle, Pennsylvania. Twelve churches united in the work. A large rink was fitted up for the meetings, with seating capacity for eighteen hundred persons. After the second service the rink was burned, and the meetings had to be carried to the churches, no one of which was half large enough to accommodate the crowds, and sometimes two churches were used at the same time. Fully twenty-five hundred persons expressed publicly their desire to begin the Christian life. Between six and seven hundred made confession of Christ as Saviour. In the two closing meetings, held in the opera hall, God wrought mightily.

Mr. Joseph Clarke has just completed a six weeks' mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. There has been much blessing. The after-meetings have been well attended, the inquiry room being filled each night, and very many have found peace. Mr. Clarke has been particularly successful in his visits to the poor of the neighbourhood, winning his way to many hearts, and carrying into many a wretched room this winter hope and peace. Some terribly destitute ones have been brought to light through his visitation. Through the help of the Tower Hamlets Mission they have in some measure been rescued from their terrible condition. The workers feel they owe much to Mr. Clarke for his indefatigable work of visitation.

The following missions, among others, are being held during February in connection with the Church Parochial Mission Society :—

Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Jan. 28—Feb. 13, All Saints, Chorlton-on-Medlock; Feb. 18—March 6, English Church, Paris.

Rev. J. A. Cleworth, Jan. 28—Feb. 7, St. Stephen's, Chorlton-on-Medlock.

Rev. A. J. Harrison, Feb. 19 and 25, St. Paul's, Beckenham, St. Anne's, Soho ; 20 and 27, Parish Church, Ealing ; 21 and 28, Emmanuel Church, Maida Hill, N.W. ; 15 and 22, Roxeth, Harrow ; 16 and 23, St. James's, West Hampstead, N.W. ; 17 and 24, St. Margaret's, Brighton.

Rev. W. Haslam, Jan. 28—Feb. 7, St. Saviour's, Chorlton-on-Medlock ; Feb. 11—21, All Saints, South Lambeth, S.E.

Rev. J. H. Haslam, Jan. 28—Feb. 7, St. Paul's, Withington.

Personalia.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey began a campaign in Wilmington, Del., on Jan. 22.

Rev. Pedr Williams, of Lower Clapton Congregational Church, has, he states, declined the offer of a pastorate at Leeds.

Professor Henry Drummond will deliver the Lowell lectures at Boston this spring. The subject is to be "The Evolution of Man."

Rev. C. Inwood is about to conduct in Canada, in connection with various denominations, a series of meetings for the promotion of spiritual life.

Rev. C. Spurgeon Medhurst and Mrs. Medhurst, owing to failing health, have been compelled to abandon their mission work at Shantung, North China, and remove to California.

Mr. Richard Weaver will conduct a week's mission at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W., beginning on Sunday next. The co-operation of local Christians is earnestly invited.

Dr. Heywood Smith has undertaken the responsible but honorary post of medical director of the medical mission department of the West London Mission, Mr. Howard Barrett finding himself compelled by over-work to retire.

Rev. Lawson Forfeit, of the Baptist Missionary Society, leaves London on Saturday for Antwerp, and proceeds thence per s.s. Akassa direct to the Congo river, to resume his missionary labours at Underhill Station, after furlough in this country.

Rev. John Bennett, D.D., in his farewell sermon at Worthing on his removal to St. Luke's, Redcliffe-square, Kensington, W., said nothing was more antagonistic to the New Testament idea of the ministry than the present-day conception of the priesthood. This false idea of the ministry would, he feared, be the ruin of the Church of England.

Miss Geraldine Guinness has been obliged to relinquish for the present the preparation of the second volume of the "Story of the China Inland Mission." For some months she has been suffering from occasional malarial attacks, and is now so prostrate that entire rest is necessary. We regret to learn that though enjoying a measure of strength, Mrs. Grattan Guinness is quite unable to resume her much-loved work.

Rev. John B. Gribble, so well known for his work among the aborigines of Queensland, has been compelled, through continued illness, to quit his post and return to New South Wales for complete rest. He was attacked by malarial fever, followed by pleurisy, while working in the bush country. The work, however, goes on well, under the care of his eldest son, who has been appointed to fill the vacant place.

Mr. Stanley P. Smith.—The connection of Mr. Smith with students' work is so close, says The Students' Volunteer, that his movements will be watched with interest. After a period of rest in this country he is now about to resume his work in China. In the January number of China's Millions he tells of his deliverance from the state of depression and doubt into which he had been thrown by the death of his wife.

Rev. Dr. Pindor, of Teschen, Silesia, Austria, has been invited to preach the Gospel in the Polish language at the Chicago Exhibition. He intends starting for America after Easter, and would like to stop in London for a few days to address meetings on the martyr history of the Evangelical Church in Austria in general and in the province of Silesia in particular. He aims at securing the sympathy of English Christians with his proposal to build a much-needed Evangelical church in the village of Trsyniec.

Obituary.

REV. C. G. HARTSOCK.

We regret to hear of the death of Rev. C. G. Hartsock, of the American Baptist Missionary Union, who died on Nov. 19 at his station of Irebu, on the Upper Congo. Dr. Harry Guinness reporting this sad intelligence says :—"Mr. Hartsock leaves a young wife, who will need our prayers in this time of her bereavement and trial. He was a brave and good man, one of the best that America ever sent to Central Africa. His work was one of peculiar difficulty, in the midst of a warlike and enterprising people, amongst whom he exerted a marked influence by those traits of Christian manliness and ability that distinguished him. There was a combination of firmness and kindliness which none can readily forget who were personally acquainted with him."

MR. BENJAMIN CLARKE.

We deeply regret to announce the death of Mr. Benjamin Clarke, secretary of the Farningham Homes for Little Boys, and for some time general editor for the Sunday School Union. He died on Monday afternoon of pneumonia, from which he has been suffering for three weeks. As a ready writer of books for young people, and the editor for many years of Young England and of The Sunday School Chronicle, Mr. Clarke was known and esteemed by a wide circle of friends and fellow-workers. He conducted for about thirty years a mission in the back streets of the Caledonian-road, known as Gifford Hall, where Sunday and evening classes, as well as various religious and philanthropic agencies, were carried on. In this building the first experiment in London of penny dinners for poor school children was made, and boots and clothing were found for those really destitute.

REV. H. J. BEVIS.

This aged minister, who in bygone years did good service, has passed away at Ramsgate, where he settled in 1836, before the Queen came to the throne. He remained pastor of the church for forty-three years, and resided in the town till his death last week, at the advanced age of eighty-one. Ramsgate in these days was frequented by the upper and middle classes, who came from London by steamboat or stage coach. With the exception of the parish church, the Independent Chapel was the only Protestant place of worship until Cavendish Baptist Chapel was built. In his early days Mr. Bevis's style of oratory was florid, but it mellowed with years. His knowledge of the Scriptures, felicitous quotations and similitudes, and command of lucid nervous English, rendered him an attractive and impressive preacher. He never wrote his sermons, but used to prepare them mentally word for word pacing his study floor. His name in Ramsgate and all over Kent will be a watchword of honour for many years to come.

Gathered Gold.

Do you hear the children weeping, O, my brothers,
Ere the sorrow comes with years ;
They are leaning their young heads against their mothers,
And that cannot stop their tears.
The young lambs are bleating in the meadows,
The young birds are chirping in the nest,
The young fawns are playing with the shadows,
The young flowers are blowing towards the west ;
But the young, young children, O my brothers,
They are weeping bitterly!
They are weeping in the playtime of the others,
In the country of the free.

—Mrs. Browning.

What grand designs some have formed of future service for God! What small results have followed! Ah, it is better to lay one brick to-day than to propose to build a palace next year.—C. H. Spurgeon.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A most successful mission has been held by Mr. T. Horrocks in the Grand Hall, Maidenhead.

"Teetotalism," says Rev. Peter Thompson, "will solve nearly all our difficulties, including that of the unemployed."

Mr. R. Coad has been conducting a successful Gospel Temperance mission at Wheatsheaf Hall, South Lambeth.

A united Gospel Temperance meeting was held in the Westport Congregational Church, Malmesbury, on Sunday week.

"The life of a man who tampers with strong drink," says Miss Frances Willard, "can be written in two chapters; the first, 'He could have left off if he would'; and the second, 'He would have left off if he could.'"

The fourth and concluding lecture on "Inebriety," by Dr. Norman Kerr, was delivered in the rooms of the Medical Society of London on Tuesday (31st) on the "Relation of Inebriety to Criminal Responsibility."

The temperance mission, conducted in Nottingham by Mr. William Bell, sen., has been attended with much good. The mission extended over the whole of the past week, the meetings being held in Nonconformist chapels.

The Rechabites seem to be doing good work in Wiltshire. The "tents" at Trowbridge, Warminster, and Salisbury report an increase of members for the year. At Swindon a new "tent" has been formed, with thirty members.

The annual meeting of the Bradford Band of Hope Union was held last week. The report showed that the Union included 166 societies, with 29,000 members, and that nearly 8,000 of the members were over sixteen years of age.

Harald Hagan, the Norwegian skater, advises all athletes to abstain from intoxicants and tobacco as very injurious. He has never used either, and is a fine specimen of manhood, twenty-six years of age, over six feet high, and straight as a rush.

An important conference of the Irish Temperance League was held on Wednesday week in Belfast. Representatives were present from nearly all the principal temperance organisations of the land. Canon Barker, Hon. C. Dillon, Mrs. Lamb, and Dr. Mackenzie were among the leading speakers.

Under the auspices of the Western Temperance League an important conference of Temperance workers has been held at Bradford-on-Avon. Mr. T. Harris, of Colne, who has been an abstainer over fifty years, presided. There was a consensus of opinion that the time had come for drastic Temperance legislation; nothing short of Sunday closing, no compensation, and the direct veto.

For some time past, says The Tablet, the city of Dublin has been gradually filling with clubs for working-men and persons of the lower middle-class status. It now turns out that these are only so many public-houses open between 11 p.m. and 8 a.m., where thirsty souls can get "a wet," of which, owing to the police regulations, they are deprived in the ordinary drinking-houses "before turning in."

Augustine, speaking of the evil effects of wine-drinking in his day, declared it to be "the mother of all mischief, the root of crimes, the spring of vices, the whirlwind of the brain, the overthrow of the sense, the tempest of the tongue, the ruin of the body, the wreck of chastity, a loss of time, a voluntary rage, a shameful weakness, the shame of life, the stain of honesty, and the plague and corruption of the soul."

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, presiding at the annual meeting of the Gloucester and Bristol Diocesan Council of the Church of England Temperance Society, held at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, said that they were about to effect a union with the diocesan mission work, and a clergyman who seemed very qualified for the work had been engaged. This connection between the mission work of the diocese and the Temperance Society had his heartiest and most cordial approval.

A public meeting in support of what is known as "the Manchester Licensing Scheme" was held on Thursday, in Manchester, under the presidency of the Bishop of Manchester, who explained the provisions of the Bill that has been drafted. While the Bishop was speaking it became apparent that the brewers and publicans were present in considerable force, and in derisive interjections they gave vent to their feelings. A motion in favour of the proposed Bill was submitted by the Archdeacon of Manchester, seconded by Rev. Dr. Goodrich, and supported by Sir Henry Roscoe, M.P. The motion was opposed by Mr. J. G. Groves and Major Heap (two brewers), and others. On the motion being put to the meeting, the opponents of the resolution were found to be in a slight majority, and the announcement of the result was received by the brewers and their friends with loud cheers and the singing of "Rule, Britannia."

The Book World.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Glimpses of George Fox and His Friends. By Jane Budge. (2s. 6d. Partridge & Co.) A very readable little book, describing a special type of Christian testimony, and the unrelenting persecution which attended it. The Penningtons, Thomas Ellwood, William Penn, and others are admirably sketched.

The Friends: Who they are—what they have done. By William Beck. (5s. Edward Hicks. jun., 14, Bishopsgate Without.) A well-written account of the rise, progress, and present state of the Society of Friends, from religious, philanthropic, social, and industrial aspects. It tells of conflicts for freedom of conscience, followed by victories which have been beneficial to many who are not members of the Quaker community. The book takes a world-wide survey, and records without boasting the great and varied activities of Friends at home and abroad, and many famous names are scattered up and down its pages.

Mr. W. G. Wheeler has issued three thoughtful and stimulating booklets by Dr. A. T. Pierson, entitled, The Pillar of Fire: a Word of Witness from Personal Experience; The Hand on the Plough: or, Some Secrets of Service; and The Dove in the Heart: or, the Perfect Peace of God. (6d. each.)

In Memoriam—Rev. A. A. Bonar, D.D. The sermons preached by Revs. J. H. Wilson, D.D., and D. M. McIntyre on the occasion of the death of this revered minister, have been published, together with notes of a recent sermon by Dr. Bonar himself. Many will value these as a touching tribute, and a precious memorial of him who has gone. (Glasgow: John Smith and Son.)

Horner's Stories.—The penny series issued by Mr. Horner are now happily circulated all over the land, doing, we believe, real service in the way of counteracting the cheap and trashy literature so widely spread. We gladly note that the best of these penny stories are now being reissued in pocket form, nicely bound and well printed. Each volume contains at least two stories.

Twofold Life, or Spirit Songs. By R. Alleyne Harris. (E. Stock.) Many of the pieces in this little volume are of high merit, and there breathes through all the taste of a cultured mind, the spirit of a true disciple of Christ. If Mr. Alleyne will run over his verses before another edition appears and alter phrases here and there, his work will not only delight the pious-minded but attract the more critical reader.

The Coming of Christ and the Coming of Anti-Christ. The article under this heading which recently appeared in our pages has been reprinted with references, showing whence the various statements are derived. It is designed for convenient circulation in letters. We commend it, especially to those to whom the subject may be somewhat new, as containing a simple outline, which personal research will enable them to fill up. It may be obtained by letter to J.V.S., Cuffnells, Wimbledon, post free, three copies 2d.; eighteen copies 1s.

The Question of Questions: "What Think Ye of Christ?" By Samuel Wainwright, D.D. (7s. 6d. Nisbet.) This volume, from the pen of an able controversialist, demolishes every argument of Unitarianism, by whatever name it may be known in ancient or modern theology. Passing from the examination of heretical opinions, the author sets forth the true doctrine concerning the God-man, combining ample learning with great power as a persuasive reasoner. We heartily commend the work, not only as an answer to Unitarianism, but also as an important contribution to evidential literature.

Memoir of William Marcus Falloon, Canon of Chester, by Hugh Falloon, vicar of Long Ashton. (Nisbet & Co.) The life and letters of this eminent Evangelical leader will interest numbers outside the Church of England. His early days, his active and varied labours, are stimulating and full of instruction, though circumstances have altered considerably since the palmy days of McNeile and Haldane Stewart, etc. Mr. Falloon, though a most influential preacher, excelled also as an organiser and counsellor. Of this latter gift his biographer supplies instances in a well-assorted group of letters, both on public and private subjects.

Characters and Characteristics of William Law, Nonjuror and Mystic. Selected and arranged with an Introduction by Alexander Whyte, D.D. (9s. Hodder & Stoughton.) A peculiar interest attaches to every page of this handsome volume. The "characteristics" cover a wide range of teaching, sound and deep; the "characters," taken from "Christian Perfection," "Serious Call," and "Way to Divine Knowledge," are as striking as they are lifelike and quaint. While exercising good judgment in the work of selection, Dr. Whyte has thrown much enthusiasm into the introductory lecture. Surely it would be impossible to improve this outline of a devout and inspiring life. A chronological list of William Law's works is prefixed to this beautifully printed book; at the close are Law's rules for conduct, three prayers for private use, and other useful and interesting matter.

Three powerful temperance pamphlets are: The Dangers of So-called Moderate Drinking; England's Glory and England's Shame; and Bad Trade: Its Cause and Cure. They are all by "J.W.," and published at 1d. each by J. Wright and Co., the Minster Press, Beverley.

Two leaflets, for distribution in church on Ash Wednesday and Easter-day, have been published by Mr. Creech, 55, Seymour-place, Portman-square, W. One is entitled, Suggestions for the Better and More Useful Observance of Lent, and the other Eastertide. (1s. 2d. per 100 post free).

Rev. A. Hastings Kelk, M.A., minister of Christ Church, Jerusalem, has published in booklet form, with the title Jehovah, six hymns on the Divine name as found in the Sacred Scriptures in composition with distinctive words—"Jehovah Jireh," etc. These hymns deserve a place with the many which the same beautiful designations have from time to time inspired. (Printed at the L. J. S. House of Industry, Jerusalem.)

Inspiration Defended and Modern Errors Exposed, by Rev. John Tuckwell, of Westbourne-grove Chapel, is an able reply to arguments of Dr. Clifford which have more than once been combated in these pages (3d. Holness). Rev. Henry Sturt, of Dewsbury, has published two sterling pamphlets, one entitled How to Use the Bible—the Old Way and the New (1d.) and the other, The Pentateuch: the Biblical Theory v. the Modern Theory (4d.) They are the result of wide reading and sound thinking. (From the Author, Leeds-road, Dewsbury.) Rev. John Urquhart's What is the Bible? is well reasoned, and will be welcome to many for circulation among such as have been inoculated with modern doubt as to the Word of God. (2d. Shaw & Co.)

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

There's a knowing little proverb,
From the sunny land of Spain;
But in North land, as in South land,
Is its meaning clear and plain.

Lock it up within your heart;
Neither lose nor lend it—
"Two it takes to make a quarrel,
One can always end it."

The girl who practises faithfully on the school-room piano till the hour strikes will not fail when called to play her part in the orchestra of life.—Mrs. A. R. Simpson.

When thou art contemplating some base deed, forget not thy child's tender years, but let the presence of thy infant son act as a check on thy headlong course of sin.—Juvenal.

He is an unhappy child and an ill-omened one who does not have helpful lessons whispered into his young life from day to day, and from Sunday to Sunday, in words that are tender as they are wise.

The boy ceased to care for his mother! Why? I fear that much blame rests upon mothers who fail to study their boys sufficiently fully to understand them, to be able to adapt themselves to them, and to cultivate their affections.

A missionary writes from China that her housewoman's little daughter had just reached the age when her feet should be bound. "Some one must be an example," she said. She unbound her own feet, and she did not bind her baby's. Shortly after four mothers followed her example.

Be patient with your dull boy. Some minds are like Norwegian pines. They are slow in growth, but they strike their roots deep. Dryden and Smith were dull boys. So was Goldsmith; so was Gibbon; so was Sir Walter Scott. Isaac Barrow was so stupid in his early years that his father once said that if God took away any of his children he hoped it would be Isaac.

I was speaking, says Rev. Charles Garrett, in a ragged school, and I asked all who were abstainers to hold up their hands. Every hand was held up. Then I asked a little girl to say why she was an abstainer. In a clear, musical voice the answer came: "Because drink is the children's worst enemy." Let this terrible truth arouse the conscience of every man who loves children and fears God.

A certain father had long and earnest prayer about a bad son, but no mark of grace appeared in his character. Seeking for advice, the parent received this counsel:—"My friend, your prayers won't do that boy any good unless you give him a good deal more of your companionship. Make yourself actively his friend; take an intelligent interest in all his affairs, and he won't seek for other company."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

LAST week the Bishop of Chester (Dr. Jayne) dedicated a new mission church in Newbridge-lane, Stockport.

The Right Rev. Dr. Travers Lewis, Bishop of Ontario, was on Thursday elected Metropolitan of Canada.

Dr. G. Wright and Mr. F. C. Smith, just arrived from Uganda, speak of the situation there as satisfactory, but not without danger.

The Bishop of London opened last week at Zion College what is called the F.S.M. by a vigorous address to clergy on Foreign Missions.

Canon Jenkins, of Lyminge, Folkestone, did a few weeks ago a graceful and Christian act in preaching a memorial sermon on the death of Miss Fox, a Methodist class leader.

Mrs. Oczeret, widow of Rev. L. Oczeret, formerly missionary at Paris, Jerusalem, and Safed, has been appointed to work as Bible-woman amongst the Jewesses of Bucharest for one year.

During the past seven years a total sum of about £47,000 has been raised in aid of the Bishop of Chester's fund for supplying the spiritual needs of the rural deaneries of Stockport and Mottram.

The Ashton Reporter has been informed on good authority that the living of Ashton, vacated by the lamented death of Canon Eagar, has been offered to Rev. George A. Pugh, vicar of Swindon, Dudley.

Rev. A. O'Brian Brandon, who for several years past has been doing clerical duty in North-east London, has been appointed to the vicarage of St. Paul's, Tottenham, vacant by the death of Rev. Hugh McSorley.

The important charge of St. George's, Kendal, has been conferred by the Archdeacon of Westmoreland (Archdeacon Cooper), upon Rev. R. W. Britton, curate of the church. The appointment has given great satisfaction.

Mr. Arbuthnot presided on Monday week over a meeting of the Lay Workers' Union at the Church Mission House, when an address was given by Mr. James Monro, C.B., late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police.

It is stated that the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol's examining chaplains rejected in the last ordination half the number of candidates who presented themselves for deacon's orders for imperfect knowledge of the Bible.

The Bishop of London attended the thirteenth annual meeting of the St. James's, Holloway, branch of the C.E.T.S. The president (Rev. E. A. Stuart) took the chair, and the Bishop delivered an address on the claims of total abstinence upon Christians.

The lectures on Church History at St. Paul's Cathedral will be continued on Tuesdays, Feb. 7 and 14, at 7 p.m. The subject of the present course will be "English Church History in the times of Wilfrid and Bede." The lectures will be delivered by Canon Browne.

Taking advantage of the Dean of Achonry's visit to Liverpool in connection with the anniversary of the Church Association, Canon Woodward, D.D. and Rev. H. W. Bainbridge secured his services on Sunday week. The Dean preached at St. Silas', Toxteth, in the morning, and at St. Chrysostom's in the evening. Both deliverances, which were powerful, were listened to by large and interested congregations.

The Archdeacon of London presided on Wednesday week in Manchester at a committee meeting of the Sanitary Association. It was resolved that, in view of the possible return of cholera, it was desirable that the clergy and ministers generally, having special opportunities throughout the country, should call attention to the duty of everyone to concern himself in sanitary matters, and should encourage the formation of sanitary vigilance committees.

The annual meeting of the Sherborne, Dorset, branch of the C.M.S. was held on Monday evening, the 23rd. Sir J. Kennaway presided. Mr. J. K. D. Wingfield Digby, M.P., spoke of the work of the Missionary societies from the Christian-statesman point of view. Rev. A. E. Price, North Pacific, by his spirited and deeply-earnest words carried the audience with him to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Rev. F. B. Westcott, head master of the King's School, Sherborne, gave a helpful address.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new mission-room has been opened in Queen-street, Midhurst.

Rev. J. Owen Jones, of Chorley, has accepted a call to Drybrook.

Rev. W. Newton, of Redcar, has accepted the pastorate at Rillington,

Rev. T. F. Touzeau has resigned the pastorate of Milton Church, Gravesend.

Rev. D. C. Tincker has been welcomed as pastor at Seaforth Church, Liverpool.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has conducted an eight days' mission of the united churches in Devizes.

As one result of the forward movement at Belgrave Chapel, Leeds, all the sittings are now free and open.

Rev. W. Basil Anstey, late of Leyton, has been welcomed to the pastorate at Tollesbury, in succession to his father.

Rev. F. Vaughan, of Boscombe, is suffering from an attack of paralysis. The service on Sunday was conducted by Rev. Dr. McAll.

The report of the Sidney-street Congregational Chapel, Bethnal Green, E., shows quiet, faithful work and tokens of genuine blessing.

A new Sunday-school and class-room have been erected, at a cost of £550, adjoining the mission church at South Park, Reigate, to accommodate 150 children.

Rev. Llewellyn H. Parsons, in his farewell sermon at Zion Chapel, Bristol, mentioned that during his five years' pastorate 223 had been admitted to church fellowship.

New schools were opened on Thursday at Patricroft, Manchester, by Rev. Dr. Mackennal. Mr. G. Hadfield sent £100 towards the building fund, making his total donation £350.

A meeting was held at Dulwich-grove on Thursday evening, to bid farewell to Mrs. G. Hutchings, who, at her own cost and charges, is leaving for mission work amongst the Eurasians in Poonah.

Rev. D. Picton Jones, a Welsh missionary, who has been labouring for years in Central Africa, is at present on a visit to his old home in Cardiganshire. On their journey home Mr. and Mrs. Jones lost one of their children through death.

At the annual meeting of the Park Hill Congregational Church, Nottingham, Rev. W. Crosbie, the pastor, spoke of the tokens of God's blessing. The secretary's report showed that sixty-three members had joined the church during the year, the largest gain to the church in any year of its history, and many of the new members were from the Sunday-school and the children's classes.

Rev. Dr. E. P. Goodwin, reviewing his twenty-five years' ministry at Chicago, said the population had increased from 300,000 to 1,400,000, and the Congregational churches from eight to fifty-six; the membership from 114 to 10,452, and the Sunday scholars from 1,312 to 21,920. The membership of the First Congregational Church, which in 1858 was 542, was at present 1361. Altogether, 3155 had been received. The income during the quarter of a century amounted to £216,647.

Princes-street Church, Norwich (Rev. G. S. Barrett), reports that during the past year seventy persons have been received into fellowship, the church roll numbers 768. In twenty-five years, during Mr. Barrett's ministry, there have been raised £83,000. In the home school are 822 scholars, 508 being over thirteen and 385 over fifteen years of age. Of the seventy teachers and officers, sixty had been scholars in the school, and sixty-three are members of the church. Of the scholars, twenty have joined the church in the year. Connected with this school is a band of hope with 600 members.

BAPTIST.

At Merthyr Tydvil, Rev. H. Edwards has entered on the pastorate.

Rev. William Pulford has accepted an invitation to the Baptist Church, Largo, Fifeshire.

At Moss Side, Manchester, much vitality is manifest under the pastorate of Rev. A. Streuli.

Rev. J. Harper, of Bury, Lancashire, has entered on the pastorate at the Baptist Church, Ledbury.

The jubilee services of the church at Cinderford were held on Sunday and Monday, Jan. 15 and 16.

At Dorking Baptist Church, on Thursday, fourteen were baptized on profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Efforts are being made to organise and advance new churches at Longsight and Grosvenor-street, Manchester.

Special services for young people have been commenced at Broughton, Hants, by Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., Rev. E. R. Pullen, and the pastor, Rev. A. W. Wood.

At the annual tea at London-road, Redhill, reports of the various branches of Christian work in connection with the church were given, which were encouraging.

The Baptist Union for New Zealand, at its recent annual assembly, again engaged the services of Mr. Thomas Spurgeon (son of the late Mr. Spurgeon) as its itinerating evangelist.

At Camden-road Chapel a public service is being held this evening to bid farewell to Rev. Lawson Forfeitt, F.R.G.S., who is returning to his work at Underhill, Congo River, S.W. Africa.

The Jamaica Baptist Reporter says that the managing committee of the college at Kingston is making arrangements to celebrate the jubilee of the college, which was opened in the month of October, 1843.

The annual meeting of the London Baptist Association was held in Regent's Park Chapel on Tuesday week, under the chairmanship of Rev. J. T. Wigner. Pastor W. Cuff was elected vice-president for the ensuing year.

To the pastorate of Maze Pond Church, in South London, one of the oldest in the denomination, of whose history all Baptists have reason to be proud, Rev. R. O. Johns, of Haverfordwest, has just received a unanimous invitation.

Rev. E. Carey Pike, B.A., who as successor of the late cultured and spiritual Mr. Bosworth has for the last twelve years filled the pastorate of the Baptist Church at South-street, Exeter, on Sunday evening last intimated his intention to resign.

At Bacup, the anniversary of Zion Chapel has just been held. During the past twelve months the spiritual element in the church has been strengthened, forty-five having been received into fellowship, and at least twenty more are attending the pastor's class for inquirers.

The twenty-fourth annual report of the Baptist Union of Scotland shows that the Union consists of ninety-two churches. From eighty-four of these returns have been received, which report 779 admissions by baptism, as against 698 last year; total increase in membership in forty-two churches, 424; total decrease in thirty-two churches, 324. The number of members is 11,502, as against 11,317 last year.

On Tuesday week the friends at John-street, W.C., gave a tea to two hundred and fifty men and women from the common lodging-houses visited week by week. After the tea a meeting was held, presided over by the pastor, Rev. J. E. Shephard, and addresses by Sister Grace, Messrs. J. Lobb, Evans, and others. Songs and anthems were rendered by the members of the choir. Every week six or seven lodging-houses are visited and the Gospel preached to their inhabitants. During the past year several have been reclaimed from a life of shame, and others have confessed conversion, thus encouraging the friends in their work.

METHODIST.

Rev. George C. Main sailed last week for Cape Coast Castle, West Africa.

The blind evangelist, Mr. G. H. Cox, of Cornwall, has held a mission at Skegness.

A stirring meeting on Home Missions was held the other evening in West-parade Chapel, Wakefield.

The Primitive Methodists propose starting in May a mission van in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk.

Oakley-place Chapel, Old Kent-road, has been reopened with a revived interest and indications of real blessing.

The Wesleyan work at Weymouth has recently developed remarkable interest, and great results are being granted.

The annual missionary meeting was held in Brixton Hill Chapel. Revs. William Goudie and F. W. Macdonald were the leading speakers.

Rev. J. B. Stoneman is conducting a series of special Sunday evening services at King-street, Oldham. Large congregations gather.

The "Sisters of the People" held last week an enthusiastic meeting in Liverpool, advocating the claims of the Rescue Home at Walthamstow.

In the Shebbear Circuit, which has sixteen chapels, good work is steadily progressing. Additions to the Church have recently taken place at ten of the places.

The death of Rev. Thomas Phillips, Wesleyan minister, at Aberystwith, has removed an eloquent and able preacher. He was a native of Rhymney, and entered the ministry in 1864. Impaired health induced him to reside in Aberystwith, where he acted as supernumerary.

Rev. S. Chadwick, speaking of the Central Mission, Leeds, states that there were 400 conversions last year, and that they had been turning people away for twelve months, the chapel being too small. The congregations consist chiefly of men—four men to one woman.

Through the intolerant bigotry of the Roman Catholic padres, the Governor of Fernando Po has closed all the day-schools of the West African Mission. The British Foreign Office has the matter in hand, and the Spanish Government will probably see the propriety of giving a hint to its imperious little padres on the African coast.

A delightful scene was witnessed at Arkwright-street Chapel, Sheffield, on Thursday week. At the annual church meeting, which was largely attended, in answer to an appeal made by one of the ministers, about a hundred persons stood up and solemnly pledged themselves to endeavour to bring one soul each to Christ during the coming year.

Rev. William Musson, of Richmond College, who is designated for Hong Kong, where he will take charge of the new position created in connection with the Army and Navy Committee there, and Rev. Alfred Woodward, of Handsworth College, who is sent out to open a new Wesleyan station in Burmah, are being ordained at Watford this day.

In his paper at the London Ministers' meeting on Monday week, on "Faith in his Message the true Source of the Preacher's Inspiration," Dr. Jenkins laid stress on his argument that the Gospel is a supernatural message, and to secure a successful presentation of it there must be a demonstrative power which does not belong to mere human reasoning, but is the effect of the illuminating power of the Spirit. It was the preacher's privilege, Dr. Jenkins urged, to claim a special revelation, and some measure of spiritual power for every sermon preached.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The congregation at Forest Hill hope to secure Rev. Martin Lewis.

In connection with the extension movement of the Presbyterian Church of England a new place of worship was opened on Sunday at Finchley.

At the annual meeting of the Nechells congregation it was shown that the most satisfactory advance had been made in every department of work.

Rev. R. C. Gillies refers in the Monthly Messenger to the story of Earle-road Church, Liverpool, as a marvellous illustration of successful home mission work.

Rev. O. D. Jones has tendered his resignation to the Park Place Church, Tredegar, where he has laboured for three and a-half years, and will leave in March for his new sphere of labour at Spellow-lane Church, Liverpool.

The annual meeting of the Gosforth congregation, held on the evening of the 17th inst., was the largest, most successful, and enthusiastic meeting of the kind that has been held during the ministry of Rev. W. McLean Brown at Gosforth.

The annual report of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church, Barmouth, shows that the members number 450, and the adherents 780, or more than one-third of the population of Barmouth. A second chapel is in course of erection, and is to be opened in June.

A conference on Sunday-schools, held last week in Belgrave Church, devoted special attention to the causes of comparative failure in Sunday-schools. The changes advocated by Mr. Whyte were certainly sweeping enough, and would need careful consideration before adoption.

The "Proceedings of the Fifth General Council" of the Presbyterian Alliance, held last year at Toronto, have now been published in a volume of more than six hundred pages, carefully edited by Rev. Dr. Mathews, general secretary of the Alliance. It has been brought out by the Publication Committee of the Presbyterian Church (14, Paternoster-square) at the price of 7s. 6d.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Mrs. Booth-Tucker makes, we regret to hear, but slow progress towards recovery.

Enthusiastic and crowded meetings were held on Tuesday and Wednesday in last week at Exeter Hall.

Two officers, Reynolds and Springer, have been imprisoned at Dulwich, charged with obstruction while preaching in the open air.

General Booth's northern tour has been very successful. His visits to Sunderland, South Shields, and Stockton have awakened great enthusiasm.

The Officer, a new S.A. paper, has appeared. It is devoted, as its title indicates, to the interests of the officers of the Army. So far it is circulated privately.

Mr. Herbert Booth is following up the successful councils recently held in Toronto by holding similar gatherings in the Eastern Provinces and Newfoundland.

The Highgate corps is now without barracks, and is vigorously testifying in the open-air, as the neighbouring corps at Hampstead did for eighteen months.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Bloemfontein (South Africa), where he had gone in search of health, on December 27, Rev. W. C. Tucker, Vicar of St. Matthew's, West Kensington, W., aged thirty-four.—At Stirling, Mr. Thomas Aikman, of Glasgow, who was known for his generous philanthropy, and one of the oldest members of Dowanhill U.P. Church.—At Rutherglen, Mrs. Morton, an earnest local worker, who died suddenly as she was entering her mothers' meeting.—At Bedford, Rev. John Millis, who, after twenty-five years useful service, has lately been living in retirement.—At Above Bar, Mrs. Yonge, age seventy-five.—At Westbury, Mr. C. Smith, aged eighty-nine.—At East Dereham, Mr. William Cooper, an active helper, of the Congregational Church.—At Sheffield, Mr. E. Walker, well known as a local preacher.—At Bolton, Mr. W. T. Constantine, aged sixty-seven.—At Swinfleet, Lincs., Mr. G. West, author of "Methodism in Marshland."—At Knighton, Rev. W. R. Dalby, aged sixty, for many years a useful Wesleyan minister.—At Ipswich, Mr. G. J. Sizer, aged sixty-seven, a useful worker.—At Worksop, Rev. T. Denham, who entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1836.—At Swanton Morley, Mr. W. Draper, aged ninety-three, for sixty years a preacher of the Gospel.—At Preston, on 19th inst., Mrs. Sarah Ann Antliff, widow of the late Rev. Dr. William Antliff, in her 78th year, held in high esteem by many ministers who were trained by her husband, and by thousands to whom she was known as a high type of Christian womanhood. One of her sons is Rev. S. R. Antliff, a Congregational minister.—At Marlborough Gate, W., on 22nd inst., Rev. S. Paynter, aged ninety-two.—At Torrington Rectory, on 23rd inst., Mrs. H. Fuller, wife of the rector, and beloved as a helper of many.—At Stirling, on 24th inst., suddenly, through an operation, Rev. Andrew Ritchie, for over thirty years a minister in the U.P Church.—At Wexford, Rev. Wm. Sproule, Methodist minister, aged forty-five.—At Portadown, Mr. Ben Robb, an earnest Christian worker, aged sixty-nine.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.—During the past year more than a thousand cases have been investigated by the officers of this society, and a large number of children rescued from the cruelty of parents and from immoral surroundings. Seventy-two lads were sent to Canada, where the society has an agent, who, after finding suitable places for those consigned to his care, endeavours to keep up communication with them for at least three years after their arrival in the new country. The secretary of the society is Mr. A. J. S. Maddison, 32, Charing-cross, London, S.W

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Mr. RICHARD MAHONY, J.P., of Dromore Castle, co. Kerry. To give time for some needful alterations in the portrait of Mrs. Pennefather we prefer its publication for two weeks.

 There are still some subscriptions for 1893 outstanding. These being payable in advance, we must request our friends to give their attention to this matter at once, in order to secure the due despatch of future copies. Full particulars will be found in the special announcement above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard must be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

One of the most striking features of the religious life of our times is the attention which is being paid to the poor but densely populated districts of our large towns. If the churches have been to blame for neglecting them, if well-to-do Christians have forgotten their duty to them, there is now a turn in the tide. Some of the ablest students on leaving college select their first field of labour in the east or south of London, while suburban churches sometimes affiliate a poor church, and supply it with workers and means. The more this is done the better, as well for the rich as the poor. This desire to further aggressive work explains the invitation to Mr. R. F. Horton to undertake the charge of Westminster Chapel, of which Revs. Samuel Martin and Henry Simon were formerly ministers.

The Peace Society has just rendered a great service to the cause of international arbitration by publishing an essay on the subject by Sir Edmund Hornby, a public servant who has discharged not a few duties of a delicate and difficult kind for his country, and who can speak from great knowledge. The simplest mind may see how much better, how much more Christian, it is to settle disputes by rational means than by an appeal to brute force; but it requires great grasp of mind and intimate acquaintance with the difficulties to be overcome for anyone to tell us how to carry the rational means into effect. To formulate a plan which shall meet with acceptance is the work of the publicist.

Sir Edmund Hornby has given an essay which will be turned to with satisfaction by all who wish to supersede our present unsatisfactory methods of disposing of international difficulties; it will afford food for thought to those who believe that nothing can be done; and though, possibly, it may be some time before its suggestions are put into practice, their day of service will come. Here and there sentences are found which are full of serious warning for kings and nations, and which we trust may speedily gain currency in the writings and in the conversation of men.

A correspondent recently requested information regarding the training of young people, especially so as to protect them from the evils attending doubtful or improper holiday amusements. We have received a number of instructive replies to this request, some of which are given on page 16. It is exceedingly cheering to read of the blessing which has, in so many cases, attended the anxious efforts of praying parents. It is no less striking to note that these happy and grateful Christians all emphasise the importance of the home being made bright and interesting, so that there may not be that domestic discontent which the tempter can so easily use to the unsettlement and demoralisation of those who, through lack of experience, do not know his wiles.

Among the many who knock at the door of Parliament for redress, it is to be hoped that the friends of India will make themselves heard with regard to the opium traffic. They cannot forget that on April 10, 1891, the House of Commons affirmed the trade to be "morally indefensible." To such an expression of opinion there is only one reasonable issue—abolition. Its retention is a national sin, and no financial reasons ought to stand in the way of its utter suppression. The whole of the East, with the exception of Japan, which would have none of it, lies under the incubus of this curse.

The Roman Catholic world is somewhat exercised just now owing to the intimation by the Public Prosecutor as to the illegality of lotteries in connection with bazaars or otherwise, as it is seen that what one of our Romanist contemporaries calls "this simple and innocent expedient" must be discontinued. Most people will think that attention has not been drawn to the practice a moment too soon, as it was becoming a widespread evil, fostering gambling. It is desirable that other churches should notice the official utterance on the subject.

A friend writes:—"We learned from a minister in Italy that the power of the Pope in that country is entirely broken, and that were it not for England and other Powers the Romish Church would be disestablished. He gave us many interesting facts, illustrating how entirely the Government ignores the Pope, and stated that in Italy he was not even reverenced. I wonder how long England will be in finding out what Italy has learnt through such bitter experience?" Yet it is an English Cardinal who has recently spoken of the Pope's recovery of the temporal power, and asked prayer for himself in his stupendous work of seeking the conversion of thirty millions of England's people.

Rev. Jonathan Lees, of Tientsin, sends home some encouraging reports of the work of God in the Yensan out-stations, which show the power of God in strengthening men against their deadliest sins, and in enabling them to meet death peacefully and hopefully. This victory over death makes a great impression on the heathen as it is a testimony which all can understand and appreciate. Even the unbelieving require a consistent life, and can see that there is something of supernatural power in a triumphant death.

The difficulty of rooting the Gospel in Matabeleland has been very great, and has tried the faith of the missionaries to the uttermost. Now Mr. Rees, of Inyati, sends home the good news of the baptism of the first convert at that station, by name Matambo. One looks anxiously to see what manner of man he is; and from all his antecedents and from the risks he dared in confessing his Saviour, we judge him to be one of those quiet men who stand firm. He seems to be made for a pioneer of the truth.

The little daughter of Rev. Oscar Michelsen, missionary to the New Hebrides, was looking at a copy of The Graphic, which had reached the far-off island which it was her parents' mission to evangelise. Many of the natives had become Christians, and the child knew that their conversion had transformed them from warriors into men of peace. Seeing a picture of some Englishmen with a peculiar head-dress, she asked why they wore feathers on their heads. Being told that they were soldiers, warriors, she asked how it was that they had become heathens again, after being Christians.

Is not that process going on continually? Had every converted man gone on preaching the Gospel to every creature within his reach, the world would have been evangelised long ago; the freshness and power of the Gospel would have remained in each; and first love to Jesus would not have been left. But we have settled down and have not spread abroad the Gospel, but have discussed and quarrelled over it in the letter instead of seeing on every hand its life-giving and soul-saving power; so that there is very little exaggeration in the title of a book published some years ago, "Modern Christianity: a Civilised Heathenism." It is a flagrant illustration of reversion to type.

Our correspondent, Rev. Charles Harford Battersby, in his letter last week misconceives us. We have not "suggested discussion in our columns of the modes of administration of the Lord's Supper." What we have suggested goes far deeper than that. We have called in question the perversion of the Lord's Supper into a Sacrament. We said that "Evangelicalism and Protestantism will only overcome Romanism and Popery in proportion as they are themselves free from the errors of that system." We asked whether Baptism and the Lord's Supper are sacraments, and what is a sacrament? We also said, and we repeat, that answers to these questions would bring us down close to the pagan roots of Papal error. This is no question of "exact modes of administration," but of vital and fundamental truth. Souls are being deceived to their destruction by being led to trust sacraments instead of Christ, and if we are not content to remit to our children a paganised Christianity we must face these questions in the fear of God.

On another page will be found a letter from Mr. Francis Palin, the country secretary of the London City Mission, in which he tells us of unblushing Popery in a parish church, where Mass, high or low, is evidently performed daily. Is this a solitary case, with its prayers for the dead, and its daily "Holy Sacrifice"? Our correspondent does not think so, for he says, "If this is what our beloved Church is drifting into, then the sooner all her faithful and loyal members come out of her the better." This state of things is far too serious for men of God to "agree to differ." Unless Evangelical men are recreant to their antecedents and to their ancestors, they must awake from their sleep, and Christ will give them light.

The letter of Mr. Palin is written under the apprehension that "the turning of this memorial of our Lord's death into a sacrificial act" is on the increase. But making this a sacrificial act is secondary and subsidiary to making it a sacramental act. Sacramentalism is prior to and deeper than Sacrificialism. Sacrificialism may be Levitical; Sacramentalism is pagan.

In like manner Apostolical Succession is a delusion secondary to and less mischievous than Sacramentalism. Apostolical Succession endeavours to confer an exclusive right and power upon the ecclesiastics of one Church which those of other Churches do not possess. But Sacramentalism puts the whole people under priestly domination; and involves both "priests" and people in one common perdition as deceiving and being deceived. It is to be remembered that, by Evangelical men, words and forms are used, whose inherent significance lies in abeyance; but the Romanisers are resuscitating the latent paganism, and Gospellers must go back to Gospel formulæ.

Another correspondent, a member of the Society of Friends, writes to this effect:—

To your question, What is a sacrament? I would reply, The very idea of a sacrament is unscriptural. The term is not in the Bible, and it was not used in connection with Christianity until the Church had lamentably fallen. It was originally an oath administered to Roman soldiers. In Christianity it signified a ceremony combining certain material elements with a certain form of words, and it is understood not only to typify or symbolise a certain grace or divine benefit, but also to convey it. Hence the need for a human priesthood, usurping the place of Christ. Hence the phrase, "administering the sacraments," or "administering the communion," phrases heard too often, not only in Popish or High Church, but in Dissenting places of worship. As if, forsooth, communion were a thing to be administered! Communion is a reciprocal act, a giving and receiving, as when the soul of man enters into loving intercourse with the Heavenly Father, the one in exercises of faith, adoration, thanksgiving, praise, and prayer, the other in filling the soul with a sense of the Divine presence, of pardon, peace, and joy, such as no performance by a priest can ever, in the slightest degree, communicate.

The only way to arrive at the healthy state of things which you desiderate, and become entirely free from the errors which Popery has introduced, is to adopt the view of the Society of Friends, and to discard all symbolic ceremonies, as Christ Himself evidently intended to be done.

We do not think it is desirable at the present moment to leave our testimony against the abuse of the two Christian ordinances, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, and to enter upon a discussion as to their disuse, though it is possible we may come to this. No wiser thing was done by any king of Israel than when Hezekiah broke up the brazen serpent and called it Nehushtan—a piece of brass—because the people of Israel burned incense to it. It was a memorial of the grace and power of God; an object lesson calling their sin to remembrance; the most vivid of all the types of Christ our Redeemer. But, guided by God, Hezekiah broke it up. The two Christian ordinances show forth our second birth and entry into the Kingdom of God; and the means whereby our spiritual life is sustained; but a thousand times better that they should cease to be observed than that they should take the place of the realities of which they are only shadows, and that we should attribute to men the power that belongeth only unto God. Burning incense to the brazen serpent was the priestly way in Israel of sacrificing unto their net and burning incense unto their drag; and the Romanising priests in England are doing very much the same thing.

The Book of the Kingdom.—2.

THE OLD TESTAMENT.—1.

The Creator had, in the nature of things, supreme title to rule that which He had made. But Satan's temptation and conquest of man was not an end, but a means to an end. It was an attempt to undermine and overthrow the authority of God. And the history of man, as written in the Bible, is a solution of the question raised by the adversary in the Garden—"Who shall reign?" God might have stamped out the rebellion by annihilating the rebels, spiritual and human; but in wisdom, as a physician lets the disease manifest and exhaust itself, so God permits sin to work itself out to its extremest issues.

The King-Creator stood aside, and for fifteen dreadful centuries the world was without law or government. The Cainites were the mighty and progressive race—theirs the Music, the Art, the Science, the Agriculture. Of the Sethites it is recorded that they lived so many years, begat children, and died; beyond this we only know that in the days of Enos—frail, miserable man—they began to call upon the name of Jehovah, and that Enoch walked with God and was not, for God took him. But left to itself, without the government of God, man's wickedness was great on the earth; the earth was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence. Anarchy is nothing new. The principle, and all that can come of it, has been tested to its last analysis; and having proved that under Satan—the Lord of Misrule—life on earth had become a scandal in the universe, God swept the human race off the face of the earth, except Noah and his family.

No sooner had the flood subsided, and the few who had been saved had drawn near to God by sacrifice, than God instituted human government (Gen. ix. 1—6). The words, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made He man," laid the foundation of human government. This is a formula parallel to that of the Apostle, speaking of the civil ruler, "He beareth not the sword in vain."

Men again revolted, and at Babel God confounded their language and scattered them. Then He called out the seed of Abraham to be a special people, and gave them right judgments and true laws. Moses was king in Jeshurun, and God continued to Joshua the same delegated power: "As I was with Moses so will I be with thee."

Thus the five books of Moses and that of Joshua tell us of revolt from God; anarchy ending in destruction; government committed to man; again rebellion against God; then the nations left while God called a special people near unto Himself, to whom He gave his good statutes and commandments under Moses and Joshua, who ruled as kings. Thus far, then, government, rule, kingship, is the main subject of the Bible.

The Book of Judges records a period in which there was no king in Israel; every man did that which was right in his own eyes. Had the critics adequately noted this four-times repeated statement (xvii. 6; xviii. 1; xix. 1; xxi. 25) they might have been saved from saying many foolish things about Jael, Ehud, Samson, and others. Public opinion falls far below the Sermon on the Mount when there is no settled government.

The beautiful little Book of Ruth is of historical value, as showing God's preparation for a king of his own choosing.

Then Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles tell the story of the Kings of Israel and Judah, from Israel's rejection of God as their king, in favour of a human king to rule them like all the nations, down to the Captivity, when, with some bright exceptions, the kings had served God not with a perfect heart, or refused Him altogether.

During this period the Prophets prophesy concerning the Kingdom of God. Their time is fixed at the beginning of each book by the Kings who were reigning during the time of their prophecy. Upon the dark background of "the affliction of Joseph" they paint their glowing pictures of the coming reign of the Man of Sorrows.

Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther tell the condition of the people during the Captivity. Esther is, for those who have eyes to see, a typical epitome of the Kingdom of God; Mordecai, like Joseph, foreshadowing the Elect Servant of the Great King, who says, "Only in the throne will I be greater than Thou."

The prophet Daniel shows the character and foreshows the end of Gentile rule, and links the Old Testament to the New. It teaches the Gentile king that the Heavens do rule, that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and setteth up over it the Lowest of men, who cried, "I am a worm and no man, a reproach of men and despised of the people."

Thus the leading element of the historical and prophetical books of the Old Testament is—anarchy under Satan, who became prince of this world by Adam's default; human rule under Jew and Gentile, ending in disaster, and the promise of the rule of the Ancient of Days, and under Him the Son of Man, in conjunction with whom the saints possess the kingdom. "SCRIPTURE PATCHWORK."—We are informed that quilt texts—the small calico handkerchiefs printed with coloured designs, and bearing Scripture texts and mottoes, about which a correspondent recently inquired—may be obtained from Mrs. Grimké, Higher Broughton, Manchester. Such handkerchiefs may also be obtained from J. E. Hawkins and Co., 36, Baker-street, W.

SUNDAY REST ASSOCIATION.—This Association, basing its operations on the principle of moral suasion, has been successful in entirely or partially closing very many Sunday-trading businesses, thereby releasing a great number of toilers from desecrating the Lord's Day. It has also induced many thousands of buyers either wholly to abandon or materially diminish their purchases on that day. The distinct and avowed object is to reduce to the very minimum all unlawful and unnecessary labour, as preliminary and preparatory to commencing the righteous use and employment of the Christian Sabbath. During the year 1892 the systematic visitation of the various open Sunday markets, shops, stalls, and barrows of the metropolis has been maintained; as in former years the results have been satisfactory. The secretary is Mr. John Whitehead 22, Charing-cross London, S.W.

Worry.

Not a few Christians live in a state of unbroken, unrelieved anxiety, and others fret and fume terribly. To be perfectly at peace amid the hurly-burly of daily life is a secret worth knowing. What is the use of worrying? It never made anybody strong; never helped to do God's will; never made a way of escape for anyone out of perplexity. Worry spoils lives which would otherwise be beautiful and useful. Restlessness, anxiety, and care are absolutely forbidden by our Lord, who said: "Take no thought"; that is, no anxious thought, "saying, what shall we eat or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be clothed?" He does not mean that we are not to take forethought, and that our life is to be without plan or method; but that we are not to worry about these things.

When standing some time ago in a large manufactory, I saw machinery at work on all sides of me. Men were using oil to prevent friction being caused by the swift revolution of wheels and the quick motion of bars and pistons; everything was kept well lubricated. A full trust in God's love and providence is the oil of human life. It lubricates all the wheels in the human machine.

We may think for to-morrow, and of next week, up to the point of painfulness, but the moment we begin to be anxious we begin to sin.

The people who get through most work with the least amount of wear and tear are the people who are content in daily life to do the will of God. When God cares so much for us, it is a shame for us to be anxious about ourselves. What creates this killing care? Frequently it is an overweening estimate of one's own importance. We bring the great big I into all we do, and feel not a little ill-used if other people have not so much regard for it as we have ourselves. So long as that I lives we must be anxious; we have imposed upon ourselves the task of caring for it which we cannot perform. The I is not to be taken care of, but to be crucified, and rest from anxiety will be found in the death. It may be that we have set our minds on being rich. Christ would correct us even in this: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." Why? "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Riches without Christ fill the life with care, selfishness, and sin. God is quite content that we should have wealth if our heart is right. But perhaps your anxiety comes from thought for to-morrow; you fidget and fret about next week. "To-morrow," says the Master, "shall take thought for the things of itself."

The plan of your life, if you are fully the Lord's, is mapped out in the sky. Come weal or woe, sadness or brightness, prosperity or adversity, God will take thought for to-morrow, as He did yesterday, and the day before, and last year. "Remember the years of the Right Hand of the Most High." Worry is deadening, paralysing; it unfits us for present service; it spreads over the soul like a mist and fog; it ensures failure; it grieves the Spirit of God. We should feel very much offended if our children manifested by their words and acts a fear that we did not care for them. God holds in his hands all our earthly concerns. He steers our life in a course where no rocks can wreck it. It is not for us to meddle with the chart or compass, the all-skilful Pilot will do his own work perfectly if we will let Him.

The only true, sure, and peaceful life is in covenant keeping with God. He does the keeping, we the trusting. Scale the heights of a life abandoned to God, then you will look down on the clouds beneath your feet. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee."

Bible Study for Christians

By Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, Birmingham.

Bacon says "Some books are to be tasted, others swallowed, a few chewed and digested." God meant the Bible to be chewed and digested. Yet many persons lazily taste it where they ought earnestly to study it. The Rev. Charles Simeon, of Cambridge, was accustomed to say, "Justification comes by faith, but knowledge of the Bible comes by works." God has put his wisdom into this Book, surely we should put our energy into the study of it.

Beware of that fatal languor of thought which steals over the minds of some Bible readers, who only skim the surface of the sincere Milk of the Word. Let such renounce their Scripture-skimming habits, remembering that the Bible cream always goes to the bottom. All Bible readers, then, ought to be Bible students. But in this age of push and pressure the question is, How busy Christians may profitably study the Word of God? I shall attempt to answer this.

I. Get some time in the morning. "Be ready by the morning and come up in the morning. . . . . and present thyself there to Me on the top of the Mount." So God would address us as He addressed Moses. As Sunday colours the week, the morning colours the day. "Read your Bible," said Mr. Ruskin to some Oxford students, "making it the first morning business of your life to understand some part of it clearly, and your daily business to obey it in all that you do understand." Rev. H. C. G. Moule thus insists on the importance of morning meditation:—

"Under God immensely much depends on that watch time and its exercises of confession, faith, love, prayer, and praise. Its tendency is to open, as it were, the soul's window skyward for the day." Read a portion of your Heavenly Father's letter to you before you read social epistles and business correspondence, that so by a Divine preoccupation of soul you may get the start of the world for the day; and if on some morning there seems to be a general conspiracy of circumstances to narrow to a few minutes the time you had intended to give to soul exercises in Scripture fields, do not despair. Let intensity of thought do its best to make up for brevity of time; get at least one text into your mind, extracting from it, by occasionally meditating on it during the day, what may feed and even feast your soul, fortifying it, too, against temptation.

II.—Study the Bible with the help of its Author—I can understand Milton's "Paradise Lost" without Milton, and Macaulay's "Essays" without Macaulay. But I cannot comprehend the Bible without the Spirit who inspired it, because there is a spiritual element in it, which defies the acutest intellect, and is only spiritually discerned, even as some other things are only microscopically or telescopically discerned. The man who turns from his newspaper to his Bible, expecting no more supernatural aid in comprehending the latter than he did in regard to the former, may grasp the history and geography of the book, and all that is simply the vehicle for its distinctive spiritual revelation of God in Christ; but that revelation itself will remain to him an unsolved mystery, without the Spirit's aid. Let us distinguish between the body and the soul of Scripture. Its body unassisted human powers can dissect; its soul eludes the most penetrating mind, unaided by the mind of God.

And the Spirit who shows us the great verities of Scripture can do yet more. He can give them vitality, so that their very life shall seem to pass into us as we ponder them. What is the Bible to many but the dead literature of a former day? But to the spiritually-instructed man the Holy Spirit is still breathing on the Book so that, as Dr. Adolph Saphir beautifully said, "It seems as if the ink were not yet dry, and as if the warm breath of Eternal Love were even now quickening and consoling the troubled soul." As the mercies of God are new every morning, so the truths of the Bible may be to us, but only by Him who makes all things new.

III.—Study the Bible practically so as to find out God's truth and God's will.—Men study the time-table that they may find out how they may go by railroad to a certain place. Now the Bible, which is a time-table and an eternity table in one volume, has to do both with our earthly path and our eternal condition. Let us study it to find out how we may better go along the highway of holiness to the heavenly place. Study the Bible so as to pass an examination (which is compulsory on all Christians, and non-Christians, too) in the school of life, by the testings of everyday existence and the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the devil, so as to find the Word "profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction (or discipline) which is in righteousness" that you "may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work" (2 Tim. iii. 16, 17).

Let the Bible be to you seed, telescope, and sword. For the ground of your heart it may be seed to sow all the acres, be they many or few, of the inner man. For the eye of your faith it may be a telescope bringing nearer the things of the Kingdom of God. And for your hand, as a soldier of Christ, it may be a sword whereby you shall better fight the battles of the Lord.

IV. Study the Bible topically.—Use if possible Cruden's large unabridged Concordance. But in any case, if that is not practical, use the smaller one. By its help you may trace out the unfoldings of God's thoughts as contained in such words as "grace," "righteousness," "hunger," "saved," "sin," "blood."

Look out for example the word "hunger." You will find at least three interesting applications of the term. (1) The miserable hunger of the unregenerate man. "I perish with hunger." (2) The blessed hunger of the Christian man. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." (3) The vanished hunger of the glorified saint. "They shall hunger no more."

Similarly, the word "saved" has three very suggestive applications:—(1) In the past salvation is divinely perfect, as wrought out for us by Christ. "God who hath saved us." (2) In the present it is humanly imperfect as wrought into our hearts by the Spirit "The Lord added unto them day by day these that were being saved" (R.V.). (3) In the future it is humanly and divinely perfect, as completed in Heaven. "He that endureth unto the end shall be saved."

So, too, you may better understand the theological significance of the word "blood" by following out the numerous allusions to it in the Old and New Testaments. Its frequency there, as contrasted with its absence from some modern sermons, suggests grave deficiencies in the latter.

Joshua and the Land of Canaan.*

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

"REST IN THE HEAVENLIES."—Joshua xi. 23.

The Book of Joshua naturally divides itself into two parts, the first of which deals with the conquest, the second with the partition of the Land of Promise. The junction of these two is at the close of the eleventh chapter. There the story of the conquest ends, and that of the partition begins. And just there we have the significant record, "And the land had rest from war"—a note of blessed tranquillity and peace, which is repeated in the fourteenth chapter. But even that is not all, for in the twenty-first chapter we are again told "that the Lord gave Israel rest round about, according to all that He sware unto their fathers."

Now, all this is in precise keeping with the spiritual analogy that we have been tracing throughout this book, and indeed the symbolism is so close that we are certain that we are not following cunningly devised fables, but are tracing the patterns of things in the heavens, sure anticipations of the plans and asserts of God. He who embodied anticipations of Calvary in the sacrifices and offerings of Leviticus, embodied anticipations of the empty grave and the Ascension Mount in the Conquest and Apportionment of Canaan by Joshua. In the case of the glorious Antetype, there was also a pause of blessed rest. Between the completion of his victory and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, we are told that He sat down at the right hand of God. And in her noblest song, the Church has repeatedly addressed Him thus:—"Thou sittest at the right hand of God, in the Glory of the Father."

The session of our Lord Jesus at the right hand of God is a graphic and beautiful metaphor, pregnant with food for holy thought. Obviously, it asserts the glorious honour of his majesty, that He is one with God in his Divine nature. Equally clearly, it indicates the oneness of the Lord Jesus in the Divine Unity of Being, albeit that He now wears our nature. But with similar force, it teaches us that He rests. The sitting posture naturally suggests repose. And we may reverently ask what was the nature of his rest, that we too may enjoy the Sabbath, which He keeps through the ages.

OUR SAVIOUR'S REST.

It wasnot the Rest of Overweariness. When a man has wrought with vigour, he throws himself into a sitting posture to recruit his exhausted energies. Now it is true that Jesus never spared Himself. The intensity of His love and pity consumed prematurely the lanthorn in which they had been kindled. There had been the strain of unceasing toils, unsleeping vigils, and bitter sorrow; there had been the anguish of the Garden and the weight of human sin; but none of these had availed to exhaust the Divine energy of his being. On the morning of the resurrection, He awoke, as a sleeper from refreshing slumber. He had not fainted, neither was He weary. And whatever else it meant, his session at the right hand of God did not imply that the Saviour had overspent Himself, and needed rest.

Did it mean that He had entered on a period of inaction, and that there would be a pause put on his redemptive energies? The supposition has only to be stated to be dismissed. The Evangelist Mark, who ends his Gospel on the high note of the Saviour's session at the right hand of God, instantly and in the same breath tells us that when his disciples went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord worked with them, and confirmed the word by the signs that followed. The descent of the Spirit at Pentecost, the government and maintenance of the Church, the perpetual communication of life and power from the Head to the members of his body, prove that behind the veil, which trembles as each spirit whom we have loved enters behind it, Jesus is at work. For Zion's sake He does not hold his peace, and for Jerusalem's sake He will not rest.

The Rest of the Lord Jesus, symbolised by his session at God's right hand, was therefore not that of weakness or inactivity. What was it? Surely it meant that He had finished that which He rose up to do. He arose from the throne, emptied Himself of his glory, stripped Himself of much that was his by inherent right, and became flesh, that He might finish transgression, make an end of sins, make reconciliation for iniquity, and bring in everlasting righteousness. All these things He had done. On the cross, He said, It is finished; from the throne, He could say, It is done. As it was said of Joshua, so it might be said of that greater Joshua, "He left nothing undone." And therefore, as the Father entered into his rest, when He had ceased from the work of creation—a rest, not of weariness or inactivity, but of a completed scheme; so did the Son enter into his rest when He ceased from laying the foundations, both of his redemptive work and of the future triumphs of his Church. Not weary; not inactive; but so far satisfied. He had done all that He essayed to do, all that could be done, and He sat down—the attitude of completion; of contentment; of calm expectancy for an inevitable result. "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou at my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool."

There is, therefore, great doctrinal significance in this vision of Christ, which perhaps has not been sufficiently considered. To quote words from the last charge of Dr. Wordsworth, the late lamented Bishop of St. Andrews, "It must, I am afraid, be said that the doctrine of Christ's session at the right hand of God, though stated plainly and repeatedly (not less than a dozen times) in the New Testament, and embodied in each of our three creeds, is not receiving from us the attention it deserves. It has been obscured by the undue prominence given to the doctrine of the other character in which He not only intercedes for us, but is supposed to be continually pleading in our behalf the merits of his precious death and sacrifice offered once for all upon the cross." And then he quotes with approval the words of the Liturgy in reference to our Lord's sacrifice:—"He is the very Paschal Lamb which was offered for us, and hath taken away the sin of the world."

When once the believer apprehends the meaning of the Lord's session at the right hand of God, he is not only assured of the Divine Majesty of Jesus, and of the Father's acceptance of his mediatorial work, but he goes further to realise that there is nothing to be added to that finished work. Since Jesus sits in the heavenly places, his sacrifice is sufficient and complete; his blood can avail for sins of crimson dye and for a race of sinners; his obedience unto death has satisfied the demands of law, and its sword is sheathed, and through the universe, like a peal of marriage bells ringing in heaven, there goes the announcement that there is now no condemnation.

But there is an experimental significance also in the repeated affirmation of Scripture that our Lord sits at the right hand of God. We must never fail to bear in mind that all the work of Jesus, since He took our nature into union with Himself, is as the representative man. As such He died, and rose, and reigns. And just in proportion as we are one with Him by a living faith, we also shall die, and rise, and reign. Such thoughts were burning in the heart of the Apostle, when he said, "God raised us up with Him, and made us to sit with Him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus." As the cathedral dome rears itself above the roar and strife, the smoke and mist, the slush and dirt of the streets—above the lounge of the idle, the hurry of the business men, and the cry of the huckster and city Arab—so it is the purpose of God that we should sit with Christ and in Christ; that we should share in his triumph, his reign, and especially his rest; that we should drink deep draughts from the crystal depths of that river which washes the foot of the eternal throne. "The Lord God hath given us rest."

IN WHAT RESPECT CAN WE SHARE CHRIST'S REST?

It is a very needful question. Some of us have been men of war from our youth; we must see to it, lest, like David, we should be debarred from building the Temple of God. Only Solomons, whose names bespeak their peace, are competent for that. It is only when we are at rest that we can do our best work. They say that it is impossible to get the highest results of workmanship when the workers are perturbed by the fever and rush of our modern life. The masterpieces of art come from days when the strain and pace were less, or from workshops where the roar of the tide is hardly heard, and the rush of life's hurricane is almost unperceived. So our best work for God cannot be done unless we have learnt to be quiet: still, that God may mould us; tranquil, that the tremor of our nerves may not interfere with the thrill of his energy; calm, that we may drop the silt and mud, which make our hearts so dull, and so inapt to mirror the deep blue of the heavens above.

The restful heart lives above the storm and strife with Christ. Sensitive to human sorrow and to its own, but able to discern the purposes of Divine wisdom, to await the unfolding of the Divine plan, and to trust the love of the Divine heart, it keeps silence for his word. Its daily tasks are holy. It is not disturbed by emotional change. It is not anxious or troubled about many things. Over all its chambers is written the legend, Occupied and Satisfied. Such is its peace that it has no stumbling-block. Such is its joy that it lives in a perpetual Eastertide. Such is its acquiescence in the Divine will that it is content with whatever comes. Its winters are always going, its springs always coming; the turtles call softly within its woods, the flowers deck its soil. "I felt," said Fletcher, "the will of my God like unto a soft pillow, upon which I could lie down and find rest and safety in all circumstances."

There is no unnatural quietism in this life. Rather the most intense earnestness and activity. When the nature is yielded up completely to the Holy Ghost, it attains to a speed of movement and a strength of endeavour which can only be accounted for by remembering that when once a man has surrendered himself to the current of the Divine nature he will acquire something of its velocity and force. But in the midst of the most rapid and vehement movement there is rest, deep rest, sweet rest. When a wheel is moving most rapidly, it often appears to stand still.

There is the Rest of Reconciliation. The soul no longer works up towards the cross to obtain justification. It is assured that all that needed to be done to win it, had been done, when Jesus dying said, "It is finished." Thus standing at the cross-foot, conscious of his acceptance through the precious blood, the redeemed sinner cries, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?" And he does not wait for a counter-challenge, because he is so sure that there can be none?

There is the Rest of Assured Victory. Before we understand the meaning of our Lord's ascension, we oppose Satan by the armoury of our own resolves and efforts at amendment. We fight and strive, and vow and fail, and start again. But when we realise all that Jesus has done, we come to see that Satan is a conquered foe, that his weapons cannot reach a life hidden with Christ in God, and that so long as we maintain our standing in our risen Lord, we need not dread his attacks, nor be perturbed in the affray. We have but to keep within our fortress, and we shall see him spend himself in vain upon its impregnable walls.

There is the Rest of a Surrendered Will. When our wills move off the pivot of self on to the pivot of God, then our lives become concentric with the life of God, our hearts are allured to his love, our feet keep step to the marching music of his Divine purpose. Oh, the bliss of living when our wills blend with his, like perfect words married to perfect music! Then trial and sorrow are treated as our Father's messengers, but in their winter costume. Then our very infirmities indicate the direction into which we should send our energies. Then disappointment becomes impossible, because all is God-appointed. Then we always have our way, because God's and ours are one. Then prayer is the discovery of God's plans, and a taking hold of his willingness. Then the heart keeps Sabbath, like a valley encircled by the great mountains on which the storms expend themselves.

There is the Rest of Unbroken Fellowship. For as Jesus is one with the Father, so we become one with Him, and through Him one with the blessed Trinity, according to his own prayer. "I in them, and Thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." What pen can describe the blessed fellowship between the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, in the serene tranquillity of the Divine nature? Yet something of that may be realised by those who claim that they shall be admitted to enjoy all that Jesus has purchased for his Church.

There is the Rest of Perfect Love. Our affections have sorely troubled us, straying far away to forbidden things, and allying us to many drifting islets, lovely to the eye, but unstable as the tide. But when we enter into the life of the Ascended Jesus, which is the life of Pentecost, we find that our hearts become pervaded by the love of God. There is no longer the murmur of the babbling brook, because the great ocean has poured its waters up, filling its bed. There is no longer the yearning, and jealousy, and bitterness of unsatisfied desire, because the heart has found in God all its desires more than met. It hungers no more, neither thirsts any more, for the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne satisfies it with the green pastures and still waters of eternal love. It is silent in its love.

There is also the Rest of the Holy Heart. It is not occupied with inbred lust, not tossed to and fro on seething passion, or driven by every gusty whim. The flesh is crucified, the self-principle is quelled, the empire of the Holy Saviour is supreme. Immanuel has taken the throne, and all discordant elements are still.

It may be that some who read these lines are passing through great suffering, and in that suffering are tempted to feverish restlessness. They expend themselves as the imprisoned songster from the woods that beats itself passionately against its cage bars. It is almost useless to bid such to rest and be still. They must learn the source of rest. Let them see that Jesus has entered into his rest that they might enter it too. Let them open their hearts for Him to breathe in his gentle resurrection, "Peace be unto you." Let them reverently and believingly claim this also as part of their inheritance, of which they are co-heirs with Christ. And if such will only believe that it is as they ask, and act faith, and adopt a restfulness of demeanour by the reckoning of a trust that cannot be ashamed, they will find that there will be a gradual subsidence of passion; the moaning sea will rock itself to rest beneath a superhuman spell that shall hush its voice into a great silence. "Be still, and know that I am God." "Rest in the Lord, and He will mould thee," so Luther renders one of our favourite texts.

HOW TO ENJOY THIS REST.

But these blessed experiences are only possible through the Power of the Holy Ghost. The ascension of Jesus is mystically and inevitably connected with the descent of the Holy Spirit. As the one Advocate passed up into the Glory, the other came down into the heart of the Church, that He might realise in our experience that which is ours in the purpose and intention of God, creating within us the faith that shall be able to claim our share in that inheritance of rest which Christ has won for us. You cannot divorce these two thoughts, or if you do you will bring inevitable disappointment into human hearts. If we magnify our rights in the glorified Saviour, and fail to unfold the willingness of the Holy Spirit to make them your own in daily and living enjoyment, we set souls the impossible task of climbing inaccessible heights, and they abandon hope. Or, if you always dwell on the Pentecostal fulness, apart from the Saviour, whom the Holy Spirit has come to glorify, you drive souls into a self-analysis, an introspection, a spiritual self-centredness, which is fatal to their true development. Teach men the meaning of Christ's session, and that they have a right to all it means of the rest of God; but tell them also that the power to claim that right is through the grace of the Holy Spirit, whom God hath given to them that obey Him.

We must not anticipate the teaching of the remaining chapters. For what student of the analogies of this wonderful book can doubt that "the much land to be possessed" of the following chapters refers to the gracious fulness of the Holy Spirit which awaits our quest? But as we close this meditation on the rest that awaits all the people of God, who sit with Christ in the heavenly places, let us lift our hearts to the Blessed Spirit, asking that He would reveal to us that which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived, but which God hath prepared for those that love Him.

THE McALL MISSION, PARIS.—The Ladies' Committee of the McAll Mission would be glad to welcome a few voluntary workers. Some knowledge of French or music is desirable. There are a few vacancies in the Mission Home. Miss Johnstone, 17, Rue de l'Arc de Triomphe, Secretary Ladies' Committee, will be happy to give any information on the subject.

MRS. MEREDITH'S INSTITUTIONS.—A meeting was held at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, on Tuesday week, to praise God for giving the means to erect new buildings for the spiritual work of Mrs. Meredith's institutions. Mr. J. H. Hayward occupied the chair, and short addresses were given by Miss Lloyd, Mrs. Hayward, Rev. J. H. Sparshott, and Mr. H. Ernest Waterfield. £300 is still needed to complete the work.

Dr. Stalker in London.

THIS eminent Scottish preacher occupied the pulpit of St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church last Sabbath, morning and evening. At the morning service there was a very full congregation. Quite a number of friends were present from Marylebone Presbyterian Church, from which the Doctor some months ago received a pressing call. The preacher took for his text our Lord's threefold question to Peter as recorded in John xxi. "Lovest thou Me?"

There were special reasons (he said) why this question was thrice addressed to Peter; but it may be regarded as being also thrice addressed to every believer. The real reason why, after getting an affirmative answer, Jesus put the question a second time, was because the first answer was too superficial. Christ wanted an answer from a deeper place. In like manner the second answer was too superficial. There are in the Christian three places from which Christ wishes an answer to the question. The first and most superficial is the Feeling; deeper still is the Intellect; lowest of all is the Will. Or the matter may be put in this way: In the house of each man's life there are three storeys—the basement, the Feeling; the middle storey, the Intellect; and the top storey, the Will. At the door of each of these Christ comes and puts the question of the text.

THE FEELING.

There are in us feelings of many different kinds, but all of them passing by the general name of Love. The feelings of a father and mother toward their child are very different from their feeling toward each other. The gentle kindly feeling of a grandfather toward his grandchild is very unlike the heat and pain of youthful passion. So with the feelings we cherish toward brother or sister, lover or friend. Yet all these feelings and many more pass by the general name of Love. Take love out of life, and how much is left? Take love out of home, and how much is left? A home with love in it is a kind of Paradise; and I suppose a home with love out of it is a kind of Pandemonium. There is not one hearing me who does not know something at least of that of which I am speaking; and there are many who know it in all its heights and depths.

Among all the kinds of love that your heart has known, has love to Christ been one of them? That is a possible kind of love in every life; and I may say without fear of contradiction that it is the most sacred, the most sweet, and the most influential of all species of love. When in you has this possibility become a reality? Can you remember when this love dawned in you as you know that other kinds of love arose? Or if you cannot, can you remember how it has grown in you; and can you say that at present it is the most influential passion in your nature? That is the meaning of Christ's question: "Lovest thou Me?"

THE INTELLECT.

Having got the answer at the basement storey of the soul's life, Christ ascends the stair to the middle storey, where Intellect dwells. He knocks at the door of the intellect and says, "Lovest thou Me?" Some of you may ask what the intellect has to do with this matter; you thought it was altogether a matter of feeling. Let me show you. There is a couple whose hearts have long been united. Their love at first was blind; the impulse was irresistible, and the choice was made. But as far as judgment and common sense were concerned, it might have been disastrous. For they did not at that time know each other well enough, or the kind of life they were committing themselves to. That is long past. They know each other now through and through; and the more they know the more they are satisfied. The mind is satisfied as well as the heart. Their love is not mere feeling; it is also approval and esteem. If the choice had to be made again they would make it with far more decision than at the beginning; for they have done each other good and not evil all the days of their life. So we see how intellect may undergird the feeling.

Christ wishes this intellectual element to come also into the love with which we love Him. With many of us religion began in a kind of outburst of feeling. I daresay not a few here would confess that they were swept in on some wave of popular excitement; perhaps under some tender appeal, or some moving description of the love and the sufferings of Christ. Christ wishes our choice of Him to be one not only of emotion, but of judgment as well.

There are two ways in which knowledge may deepen and strengthen our love to Christ. It may increase our gratitude to Him or it may increase our admiration of Him. Christ has done something for us. Yes, you say, "He died for us." To some people that is merely a common-place and uninfluential claim. To others it is a mystery on which their minds are brooding during the whole of life. They are always trying to understand what it means; to understand what their condition was which made it necessary that He should die; to comprehend the depth of humiliation to which He descended when He gave Himself for them; and to understand the height of privilege and honour to which He has raised them. The more they think of these things, the profounder becomes their gratitude and the brighter burns the flame of love. You say that a man's love to Christ does not depend on his theology. Those who make much of feeling in religion frequently despise theology. I venture to say that the amount of any man's love to Jesus Christ will depend very much upon how much meaning he puts into these words, "He gave Himself for me."

The other way in which knowledge may strengthen and deepen love to Christ is by increasing our admiration of Him. In common life it is not always the man to whom we owe most that we love most. Is it not a maxim in human life that we are not to love anyone because of what he possesses, and has offered to give us, but because of what he is? That maxim applies to Christ as well. Not that we are to disparage or speak lightly of his gifts to us. Yet I think those who have loved Him most profoundly would say that they love Him not so much on account of what He does as on account of what He is.

THE WILL.

Christ ascends to the topmost storey, where the Will dwells. There He stands and knocks at the door and says, "Lovest thou me?" There are two totally distinct kinds of love in this world—the love that receives and the love that gives. The love that receives absorbs its object and enjoys it; but it is easily transferred from one object to another. The love that gives, on the contrary, is absorbed in its object and forgets itself. Its one aim is to do good to another; and it does not change. There is many a man who has only the first kind of love; who imagines that he understands all the heights and depths of passion when he has not yet learned the A B C of real affection.

Our love to Christ has to be submitted to this test. Is it merely a luxurious thing that may be increased when the intellect points out the advantages which love to Christ would bring? What if love to Christ should mean disadvantage, self-denial, and suffering? It was here that poor Peter broke down. As long as love meant mere emotion he had plenty to give. As long as it meant words, who had words so brave as his? But when it came to mean self-denial, taking a stand, running a risk, where was Peter? Love to Christ does mean disadvantage and self-denial. Thus He asks everyone who says he loves Him to take up his cross and follow Him; to take on his shoulders his cause; planning for Him, praying for Him, working for Him, giving to Him.

Of course there must be emotion. I am not running down feeling in religion; there is no such thing as religion without feeling. Yes, but that is only the commencement. We love Christ just as much as we are able to do for Him and to endure for Him; just as much as we are willing to give to Him; just as much as we are nothing, that He may be all in all. That is the pathway of the perfect life.

Such is Christ's question in its height and depth, its length and breadth. What about the answer? You must give that. Jesus Christ goes from pew to pew, from heart to heart, putting this question. What is your answer? When He put it first to me, standing at the door of the Feeling I could answer quite easily. When He put it the second time, at the door of the Intellect, I could answer still more easily. But when He ascended to the top storey and put it at the door of the Will, the answer stuck in my throat. I could only cast down my eyes and murmur, "Oh for grace to love Thee more."

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—The monthly muster of the Christian Harbour Lights took place on Thursday last at the Temperance Seamen's Chapel, Wells-street, E., under the presidency of Rev. G. J. Hill. The testimonies from converted seamen and others were of a most practical and cheering character.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

IV.

THE SUBJECT OF THE BOOK.

"Shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."

Such was the command to Daniel at the close of the Apocalypse vouchsafed to him in the wonderful visions which he beheld concerning the latter days. "Shut thou up the vision, for it shall be for many days." Rapt in prophetic spirit, the course of history extending over 2500 years had passed before his view; the rise, progress, and fall of the four great world empires had been displayed; that which should befal his people in succeeding times had been unfolded; and he is carried on to hear of the resurrection of the dead and of eternal judgment, of the advent in glory of Him whose dominion should be an everlasting dominion, and whose kingdom should never be destroyed.

Then the revelation ceased; the records were to be "shut up"—"the book sealed"; for "many days" were to elapse ere its knowledge would be required, and though doubtless the marvellously minute predictions recorded in the eleventh chapter of the events to occur in the second and third centuries before Christ were of immense value to the Maccabean heroes, and were understood by "the wise," the meaning of the wider and further-reaching prophecies was hidden.

But the seventy weeks foretold in Dan. ix. 24 had passed; "the Most Holy"—the Anointed One—had come, and had Himself announced that "the time was fulfilled." "Cut off," not for Himself, but for others, He had made reconciliation for iniquity and brought in everlasting righteousness. He intimated that those who stood around Him would see the "abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet stand in the holy place," and prescribed what they should then do. Very soon the disciple, to whom it was vouchsafed to see the glorious vision of the Apocalypse, declares, "Little children, it is the last time." The closing dispensation therefore had set in, and the roll of the prophetic word, so long "shut up" and "sealed" "to the time of the end," was now to be opened for the instruction, guidance, and warning of the servants of God in the Churches.

The command now is the very opposite to that given to Daniel: "Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book, for the time is at hand." Many were now to search its mysterious utterances (to "run to and fro" in its pages), and the knowledge thereof was to be increased. (See Septuagint, Vulgate, Luther, De Wette, and other versions.)*

What then should we expect would be the subject of the book? Divesting ourselves of preconceived opinions, and laying aside "schemes" of prophetic interpretation, we should, I think, be led by analogy to expect:

1. That the opened volume of Divine revelation would be a continuation of the one lately closed—closed for a time. The New Testament is the continuation and complement of the Old. When the books of the law and of the prophets ended, the book of the Gospel was opened. Our Lord, when preaching in Nazareth from Is. lxi. 1, "closed the book" in the middle of a sentence, and proclaimed the advent of the dispensation of grace, and we know that He will open it again at the same place and announce that "the day of vengeance" has arrived. So we should suppose that the great prophecy of the New Testament was to commence where that of the Old (with the exception of a few distant glimpses of still later days) ceased.

2. That the symbols being so similar, the subject would be much the same. The greater part of Dan. vii. is occupied with the description of the fourth wild beast with ten horns, which made war with the saints and prevailed against them till the time came that they possessed the kingdom. The most prominent figure in the Apocalypse is the wild beast with ten horns, to whom "it was given to make war with the saints and to overcome them," until, as victors over him, they reign with Christ.

3. That, as the main subject of Daniel was the course of the four great world empires, and the tribulations, conflicts, and final glory of the people of God, the Revelation would be also chiefly concerned with the same.

4. That, as both at the beginning and the end of the book it is declared that the things shown must "shortly come to pass" (ch. i. 1, and xxii. 6), and are described as succeeding "the things which are"—namely, the then existing condition of the seven churches in Asia—the fulfilment of the predictions would immediately commence. In other words, that the prophecy would relate to the history of the last world-empire (the Roman), and of the Church from the time of the Revelation onward. If the visions to Daniel were to be shut up and sealed, because "many days" were to elapse before their fulfilment, and that period was only about five hundred years, the things revealed in the opened book and "shortly to be done" could hardly be supposed to occur after the lapse of a period at least four times as long.

5. That the Revelation being given to show unto the servants of Christ things which must shortly come to pass (ch. i. 1), its contents would relate to things which concerned them most directly and intimately, and not be occupied with matters which, instead of affecting them, referred to a generation which should arise some two millenniums later. For, unlike the prophecies of Daniel, which he was never told to publish to his contemporaries, it is several times expressly insisted upon that it was to the churches then existing, and consequently to those succeeding them, that the Revelation was to be communicated.

"What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia," was the very first command of the great voice, as a trumpet: and obedient thereto, the prophet inscribes his testimony with the words, "John to the seven churches which are in Asia." Seven times in the epistles is heard the urgent call for him that hath an ear to "hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." And lest it might be said, that while all this could not be gainsaid, as applying to the particular churches with which the first three chapters were concerned, it did not apply to the succeeding contents of the book, the Apostle is told at the close of all the visions that they were to "show unto the servants of God the things which must shortly be done" (ch. xxii. 6); and the Lord Himself declares that "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches" (ch. xxii. 16).

Such considerations, among others, would then lead us to expect that the Revelation given to John in Patmos—Christ's last legacy to his dearly loved Church, for whom He had given Himself, whom He lived to save by his perpetual intercession, and for whom He would ere long come again—would be the disclosure of all that was to happen to her during her history of many centuries; her temptations, trials, and sufferings; her internal and external foes; their final overthrow; and her own eternal glory in the triumph of her Lord.

And that such expectation is correct is, I believe, conclusively, nay overwhelmingly, proved by the marvellously exact correspondence of the facts of history during the last eighteen hundred years with the prophecies which the book contains.

It is, however, urged by some:—

First, that the condition, character, and circumstances of the Church on earth being described in the epistles to the seven churches, there is no need for a second and more lengthened delineation. But this ignores the fact that the Divine prediction of future events, has frequently, and specially in the more important instances, been given in a two-fold form.

Next, that if the Apocalypse contains the prophetic history of this dispensation, it is useless to the vast majority of Christians, who, being "the poor of this world," are neither learned in history nor skilled to understand the abstruse language of symbol. But it is forgotten, for one thing, that all prophecy must deal with the facts of history to come, and that its fulfilment eventually becomes history. For another, that those who cannot themselves study history must take its facts on trust from those who have studied it, just as we take our modern versions of the Bible on trust from those who have studied Hebrew and Greek. And, further, that the symbolic language of Scripture is to be interpreted mainly from the Scriptures themselves, and is itself the easiest language of all.

Again, that as the Church is seen in glory in chapter iv., and takes part in the scene connected with the opening of the book recorded in chapter v., that book cannot be opened until the Church is in glory. Consequently, that the rapture of the Church must precede the opening of the book and the fulfilment of the events therein predicted, and that, therefore, the prophecy cannot relate to the present dispensation during which the Church is on earth.

But this objection is not founded on fact. It asserts that the book has not yet been opened. But the book has been opened. Its seals were broken, and its contents disclosed to the apostle, 1800 years ago, and by him published to the whole world. This took place prior to the rapture of the Church, for as certainly as the book was then opened, so certainly is the Church still here, and her presence in glory is, therefore, not an antecedent condition to the opening of the book. Though a glance at her final happiness is given in chapter vii., it is not till the end of the book that the vision of the Church in glory is presented. The twenty-four elders seen in chapters iv. and v. represent the Church not in her final glory, but as she now is in the sight of God, and in the experience of every believer—"seated together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."

I do not here go into the scheme of interpretation according to which it is held, in accordance with the view just referred to, that the events prefigured from chapter VI. onward, all relate to a period subsequent to the rapture of the Church, and that consequently the Church is nowhere seen in the book after the close of the third chapter.

This view, which was originally propounded by the Jesuit Ribera, in order to remove from Rome the stigma of identification with the Babylon of the Apocalypse, has been so fully, as well as effectively dealt with by Dr. Grattan Guinness in his remarkable work, "The Approaching End of the Age," that I should only be repeating his (to my mind) unanswerable arguments to the contrary, and for that the space accorded to me would be inadequate.

* The words in Dan. xii. 4 have no reference, as is so commonly supposed, to the march of science and increase of locomotion. They relate entirely to "the book," which is the subject of the whole passage.

FROM PASTOR CHINIQUY.

Dear Christian Brethren,—Allow me, at the beginning of this new year, to give you and the English benefactors of my mission a few words about the evangelisation of Roman Catholics of Canada and the United States. It is a public fact here that the power and influence of the Church of Rome are visibly shaken to their foundations. From every side we hear of some coming to the Saviour's feet after having broken the heavy yoke of Popery. In the humble Church of St. John we do not have a single meeting without good numbers of Roman Catholics coming, not only to hear but to receive the message of life.

But what fills my heart with an unspeakable joy is that that Evangelical religious movement which brings so many stray sheep into the true fold around me here, is extending all over the world. Almost every day I receive letters from newly-converted Roman Catholics. I could send you hundreds of such letters. The following has just come from China:—

Tainan, Formosa, November 15.

Though unknown to you, still being one in Christ Jesus, we take this liberty of addressing you. Our object is to thank you from the bottom of our hearts for your bold and fearless exposure of the wickedness and idolatry of the Church of Rome. Our dear father died when we were very young, and we went of course under the protection of the American Consul, who placed us under the care of the so-called Sisters of Charity in the Convent of Shanghai, where we remained for over eight years. While in the Convent, our mother married a Christian man, who, in course of time, with the assistance of the Consul, rescued us from that awful place.

Of course, we were both fervent Catholics; it was against our will to live with heretics, and some little pressure had been brought upon us to make us stay with our dear parents. We were four years and one month respectively under the awful yoke, till it pleased the dear Lord to show us what slaves we were, and bring us to Himself. And, oh, we feel we can never thank Him enough for opening our eyes.

We are reading your books, kindly lent us by Rev. Dr. Mackay—"The God of Rome eaten by a Rat!" and your "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," and we do feel so very grateful to you for exposing the wickedness and idolatry to which we were once being brought up. May the Saviour bless and use you more and more; and may you yet be the means of bringing numberless poor dark Romish heathen souls to the Light and the Truth as it is in the Lord Jesus. Yours, most affectionately in Him, Maggie and Lucy Strangman.

Though eighty-three years and six months old, by the mercy of God, I am as strong as when forty years old. My hands do not shake, my ears, my eyes, my lungs are as good as then. May the Lord Jesus bless you and all those who love him in your Great Britain. Your devoted and grateful friend,

C. Chiniquy,

"How many guns have you?" was a curious inquiry early addressed to me by a party of Lumbukuti warriors. "None," was the reply. This was quite incredible to men who would not dare to leave their village unarmed. Continuing, I admitted the possession of just one gun, and this I showed to my astonished interrogators. Need it be said that it was the one weapon of Christian warfare—the Word of God. "This," I explained, "is the only gun I have; and in course of time it will silence all the others on the island."

It is excusable that at that time the Tongoans should declare the book without power. They neither knew it as the sword of the Spirit nor the shield of the Lord. To-day a different conviction prevails, for marvels have been wrought in the name of the Prince of Peace.

Within the first month or so all the chiefs called upon me, with the exception of two. Most likely the object of the visitors was to receive presents. One of the two who did not come was Marimaraki, head of Pélé, the bush village, which was engaged in war at the time. The other was Manambalea, of Selembanga, on the east side of the island. This chief, of which much will be said hereafter, was an energetic and courageous man, rather pleasant in appearance. He had made himself no less distinguished as a warrior than as an organiser of friendly gatherings of the tribes.

Manambalea thought well to inquire concerning the new religion before visiting its teacher, so he despatched some of his people to see what they could learn. Now, a week or two before, while working for me, several men of Selembanga had seen a picture of Jesus at the Well, talking to the woman of Samaria. Accompanied by some women, one of these men turned up at the mission house, saying they wanted "to see Jesus." The picture was shown, whereupon the man exclaimed, "Yes, that is it! That is the Son of God who came into the world to save us from our sins and from hell, and to help us to get to heaven hereafter."

The women evidently thought the man had not got a correct version of the story; so they appealed to me, and I explained the wonderful incident, telling of the love and power of Jesus to save. They had heard enough at home to impel them to walk six miles to learn more; and they went back with the feeling that the half had not been told them.

At length the tardy chief made a personal call, and asked for information. An acquaintance was then formed, which has been fruitful of important results throughout the history of the mission. Not knowing the chief's mind, I began by explaining that I had taken up my abode on the island in order to tell the people the way of salvation. Manambalea seemed greatly astonished at the good news. He attended evening worship in the mission house, and afterwards made no sign of leaving. He ceased not to ask questions concerning the Gospel, and when I set forth the truth in song, the uniform request was "Sing it again!"

At a late hour that evening he was asked to retire to rest, with the prospect of hearing more on the following day. His answer was: "I want to go home in the morning, and tell my intentions to my people; but I will return hither in the afternoon." This he did, coming back to learn to read! At that time no person of importance in the island had taken such a decided stand, except Matabuti at Meriu. Meanwhile, in Malakaleo's quarter, strong words and feelings were prevailing against the Gospel.

Not long afterwards a company of Malakaleo's fighting men appeared at the mission station, probably to inquire about Manambalea's object in staying with me. When they met him, they asked if he intended to work for the missionary. Of course, he would be working there, and it would be the easiest thing in the world to say so, and conceal his real object. "No," he said decidedly, "I have come to 'take the Book,'" i.e., submit to religious instruction.

The tone of his voice was such as to discourage further interrogation. He remained a considerable time at the mission house, and made rapid progress in knowledge. It was his real determination from the first to become a Christian; I had to be faithful, and the inquirer had to be honest, or it would not have been possible now to report Manambalea's conversion, and his humble position at the feet of Jesus.

My deliberate judgment is that there is no man on Tongoa who would make the same sacrifices for his Master, nor has anyone exerted himself so much on the island for the Redeemer's kingdom as Manambalea. At times, when all others have failed, I have found a faithful friend in him. The story of him and his work would almost require a separate volume to do justice to it.

GROWING LIGHT IN HUNAN.

SIR,—A great many Hunan men have been coming about us of late, and among them some very interesting characters. It is now over a year since I became acquainted for the first time with the name of Têng Mou-hwa, one of the three publishing firms in Changsha employed by Chou Han in his anti-foreign crusade. The eldest son of this firm is now at Hankow, reading Christian books and attending Christian services. So far, he has made no profession of faith in the Christian religion. He simply assumes the character of an inquirer and a learner. The first time he made his appearance in my study he was undoubtedly very sceptical and somewhat timid. He was brought in by one of our converts. According to my invariable custom I ordered tea for them both. The Christian took the tea thankfully, and soon drained the cup. Mr. Têng, however, never touched it; and I learnt afterwards that he was under the delusion that it might contain some grains of the bewitching medicine used by the missionaries in making converts. Mr. Têng has called on me again, and I am glad to be able to say that he is gradually becoming more enlightened. The last time he paid me a visit he looked more cheerful and confiding. He took my tea without hesitation, and talked as if his mistrust of me, at least, had wholly passed away. I hope to send him back to Hunan a wiser and less prejudiced man.

On the 7th of last month two Changsha men came to the London Mission Hospital at Hankow—one afflicted with a hare-lip, and the other a companion. The name of the former is Jen Ch'en-siang, the eldest son of Jen Sing-yüen, who at one time was a major-general in the province of Kuangtung. Mr. Jen Ch'en-siang is a Yin-sang, an honorary title conferred on the sons of high officials, indicating that they are noble born. It is Mr. Jen's intention to proceed to the capital early next year, to claim certain emoluments which are due to him on account of military services rendered to the State by his deceased father. It is this that brought him to the hospital. He felt that he could not appear in the capital with this disfigurement upon him, so he came to the hospital to have it removed.

But young Jen had his difficulties. Both he and his companion Huang have had a good deal to do with Chou Han, and they were thorough believers in all the vile reports which have been circulated by him concerning the foreigners and their doings. They very much wished to come down and see the foreign doctors; but the very thought of entering a foreign house or a foreign hospital filled their souls with dread. Fortunately they met a nephew of the Marquis Tsêng, and he advised them strongly to come to Hankow, assuring them at the same time that they would be treated kindly by the foreign missionaries. At last they mustered sufficient courage to leave Hunan for Hankow.

They landed on the Wuchang side of the river, and tarried there a day or two, hesitating as to what they should do. They resolved to come over to the Hankow side, and have a look at the terrible barbarians, but they returned to Wuchang without having called at the hospital. They came across the next day, and timidly entered the waiting-hall of the London Mission Hospital; but again their courage failed them, and they returned to Wuchang without having seen the doctor. On the morning of the 7th ult., they were at the hospital gate once more, but in great perplexity as to whether it would be safe to enter. Fortunately the gatekeeper, who is a very good old man, saw them and spoke kindly to them. They asked him if the rumours about foreigners gouging people's eyes, cutting out people's hearts, etc., were true. The old man assured them that all such rumours were false; and they felt half inclined to believe him.

At that moment I made my appearance, on my way to the chapel, where a marriage between two natives was about to be performed. The old man advised them to follow me, and witness the ceremony. This they were afraid to do; but one of our Hunan converts happened to be present, and he prevailed upon them to accompany him. They were much surprised to see what they saw, and to hear what they heard. Here was a fine opportunity for the perpetration of all the wickedness with which the missionaries and the Christians are charged. But they saw nothing of it, and, as they have told me since, they were simply astonished at the fact. At the close of the marriage service, which seems to have impressed them greatly, they were introduced to me. I took a great liking to them at once, invited them to come to see me at my house, and gave them a letter of introduction to the doctor. Doctors Mackay and Thompson took the case in hand, and, to the infinite delight of Mr. Jen, they have succeeded in giving him a perfect lip.

Mr. Jen and his companion left Hankow for Changsha on the 28th ult., with hearts full of gratitude, and minds completely delivered from all prejudice. Whilst at the hospital they attended all the Christian services held at the chapels, and read everything we could place in their hands in the shape of Christian literature. This they did from their own free will. When leaving they made special application for copies of the New Testament and other books, which they wished to take with them and present to the gentry of Changsha. They also begged me to write a letter to Chou Han, promising to take it themselves to him, and place it in his hands. Of course I wrote a letter and supplied them with books.

I asked Mr. Jen why he hesitated to come to the hospital, and this was his reply:—"I was afraid that if I once entered I might never come out again. I thoroughly believed that the foreigners did gouge the eyes and cut out the hearts of men, women, and children. I know now that it is all false, but this is to be ascribed to the fact that I have seen. I believe that if Chou Han himself could only see, his feelings would change just as mine have changed." Then he told me that in Changsha ninety-nine out of every hundred at least thoroughly believe these reports about the foreigners and their doings.

If two or three experienced missionaries could settle down in Changsha, and carry on their work of preaching and healing at Changsha as they are doing at Hankow, a great revolution would soon take place in the Hunan sentiment with regard to us. I pray that that day may soon come. In the meantime we are trying to influence Hunan from Hankow, and not in vain. This year ten of the Huanese have joined the church in connection with the London Mission at Hankow, and there are some fine fellows among them. But this letter will show you that the number of converts does not represent the measure of our influence; for not a few good men like Jen and Huang, though not professing Christians, have returned to their homes with enlightened views and right impressions, and will do much towards removing the ignorance and breaking down the prejudice which have long reigned in Hunan. I am, etc.

Hankow, December 3. GRIFFITH JOHN.

THE McALL MISSION, FRANCE.

THE McAll Mission is extending in various directions, and a measure of success attends its operations. A deputation from the Central Agency in Paris has recently narrated at Cannes a good deal of the work of the mission. But the deepest interest is centred in the new departure, namely the Mission Boat. France is intersected with rivers and canals, and it is quite practicable to visit a large part of the interior by means of this boat. Its visits have created great interest wherever it has penetrated, and led to the establishment of several new centres of work.

The local work in Cannes has also experienced a considerable development. Through the kind instrumentality of Mrs. Bevan, a very zealous evangelist has come to the help of the labourers, and there are indications of revival. The neighbouring town of Grasse and the villages of Le Cannot, Mougins, and La Bocca are now comprised in the work of evangelisation, and the cries all round are "Come and help us"; "Why don't you tell us the same good news that you tell others?" It is distressing not to be able to respond to those who are thirsting for the words of life. Help, then, is needed in contributions, in offers of personal service, in the gifts of Gospel portions and Gospel tracts.

BILLY THE SHOEBLACK.

"Clean your boots, sir?" Such was the cry that arrested our attention when on the way to a Sunday morning prayer-meeting in Torquay. It came from the lips of a ragged, shoeless, but clean-faced boy, called Billy Smith. After the prayer-meeting was over poor Billy was still at his post by the Market corner, when the following conversation took place. "What is your name?" "Billy Smith, sir." "How old are you?" "Nine years old, sir." "Where is your father?" "I think he must be dead, 'cause I never knowed he. I have to work for my own living. I pays freppence for a bed when I earns enough, and when I can't the landlady trusts me." "Where is your mother, Billy?" "In gaol, sir." "Wouldn't you like to go to Sunday-school, Billy?" "Yes, sir, but I can't afford it." "They don't pay anything." "No, sir, but you can't earn nuffing and I must pay for my bed." "Look here, I'll give you a shilling if you will come this afternoon." "Will 'e, sir?" "Yes." "But I got no coat to go in, sir." "Never mind, come without." "All right, I come; but, I say, you won't make a fool of me. If I come you'll give me the shilling?" "Oh yes, you shall have it."

True to his promise, at three o'clock Billy was seated by the side of half a dozen well-dressed boys. He had borrowed an old coat sadly the worse for wear, but his face was remarkably clean. How eagerly did he listen to the story of God's wondrous love. His heart was touched, tears began to flow, and poor Billy had only the sleeve of the ragged coat to wipe them away with. After school he remained to the prayer-meeting and desired to be prayed for. A few Scriptures were explained to him, such as John iii. 16 and v. 24, and God then saved poor Billy's soul. He was so happy he never said a word about the shilling until it was given to him. We got him better clothes and lodgings, and still Billy continued to cry, "Clean your boots, sir?"

But how tidy and bright and happy he looked. Even the bad boys saw the change, and used to say, "Ah, old Billy is turned religious." I tried to comfort him by telling him of the Better Land. How little did I think that poor Billy would so soon be there. But so it was, for a wretched drunkard knocked him down for trying to stop two boys from fighting. The blow and the fall injured his spine. A policeman lifted him up, and he was taken to Exeter Hospital, and despite the doctors' skill and nurses' care he got worse and worse, until at last he peacefully passed away to be for ever with the Lord. His little body may lie in a pauper's grave; but what matters? he is at rest with Jesus now.

Truly that was a shilling well spent to get the poor lad to the Sunday-school. This was the first precious soul I ever won to Christ, so I shall never forget Billy Smith.

A JAPANESE PROVERB.

It is a long way to send a message, but if you will give it the attention it deserves, it will be worth all the trouble.

You live in the West; it may surprise you if you watch how many of the things that make your life pleasant come from the East. I do not mean simply when you are taking breakfast, but even when you are reading the Bible.

Now for my Eastern message. The schools in Japan are very different from those at home, and so is their A B C. They have as many as forty-seven letters to get by heart, and as an aid to memory forty-seven little wise sayings have been chosen and arranged into what is called a "proverb game." As the little children play this game, at the same time they learn their long A B C.

One of these proverbs is, "Defeat is the path to victory." This proverb represents a truth which Japanese parents very much wish their children to learn; and long, long ago, it was coupled with the story of a fish.

The people of Japan have a great love of art, so when they draw a picture, or carve a piece of wood or ivory, they put in here and there the drawing or the likeness of a fish. Then, when the children see it, they remember the story and the proverb, "Defeat is the path to victory."

I will tell you the story in a minute; but, first of all, let me say that "Boys' Day" in Japan is a festival that comes once a year. It would be hard to say whether the parents or the children enjoy it the most, for it is a very merry time for all. Upon that day on every house in which a boy has been born a fine flag flies. You have no idea how much fathers and mothers think about their boys, striving all they can to train them well, that they may be an honour to them and to their Father in Heaven.

So "Boys' Day" is a very happy time. And what do you think in the emblem that is on every flag? It is a fish—a carp in the apt of springing. Oh, yes, fish can spring in a fashion of their own. This brings me to the story. A carp is an active little fish, which, like the salmon of our rivers, attempts to leap the falls. The fish tries to do this at one leap, but it is feeble, and it falls back; then it tries again and again. These leaps, oft repeated, are fine exercise for the carp, and it becomes stronger and stronger every time, until at last, by a grand final effort, it bends itself round, and bounds over the fall into the clear water above.

Now you see how the picture of a carp, in the act of springing, tells to the Japanese boy that "Defeat is the path to victory." But that is not all. Until very lately the Japanese had no Bible, and no knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, as you have in England. We poor human beings are so much in need of Divine aid, that where there is no knowledge of the true God, men imagine there must be gods, and then they give them names according to the nature of their supposed character.

This is how the fish story ends. As the carp never gave in, but made each defeat the means for a stronger effort next time, it was said that the gods rewarded it by turning it into a dragon. "Why a dragon?" you may ask. A dragon is supposed to have great wings; and it was thought by them to be the most fitting reward, for then the fish could fly, and so the labour of leaping up day after day would for it be over for ever; so the fish that once could move but a short distance, and by repeated efforts, in the world of waters, was enabled to fly away up in the air, and live in a new world altogether. I think that is a beautiful story, one which may be useful to boys and girls in England and to their parents as well. But those who begin very early in life to find that "defeat is the path to victory" will have the best opportunity for finding it true. Is it really true? Of course it is, and I hope you will find it true in your life.

A little girl I know found it true in this fashion. She was studying music, and she found the early lessons at the pianoforte very dull and uninteresting. She often wished she had never begun; but she was an honest, good girl. She said to herself, "Mamma expects me to practise every minute of the hour, and I will not disappoint her, tiresome though it is." The result was that her lessons soon ceased to be dreary, for she was able to play beautiful music, and she was filled with a pleasure she had never dreamt of before. Defeats were to her the path to victory.

A bright lad, a friend of mine, went to an engineer's shop to learn the trade. Some of the men bought drink, and said he must take some in honour of his coming. He was a total abstainer, and he said so. "Then we will pour it over you," they said. "That may dirty my jacket," he replied, "but it won't spoil my character!" And he went home amid the jeers of his shopmates, with his clothes wet with beer. But he was never asked to drink again, and his conduct that day was the means of the drinking custom being stopped. He, too, was taught that defeat is the path to victory.

Does this put you in mind of something in the life of Jesus? It is said of Him that He was made perfect through suffering. He abased Himself that He might be exalted. He took upon Himself the form of a servant, in order that He might rule. To-day He is the King of kings, the Lord of heaven. The path to victory lies by the way of seeming failure, perseverance, and the sunshine of God's favour.

ENCOURAGEMENT IN IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—As a constant reader of The Christian, it is with gratitude and thankfulness I see from time to time your interesting account of work in Ireland, thereby drawing the attention of Christian friends to what is going on amongst us. Mrs. Smyly's letter in a recent issue is deeply interesting, especially the story of the "Little Child Schoolmistress," but such I believe is only one of many hundred similar stories which could be told, showing the good work which is going on unknown to very many of us.

Coming from one of Major Whittle's thronged meetings during the Moody mission in Dublin, I was asked, about 10.30 p.m., by a poor little ragged lad to buy a box of matches. After I had asked him a few questions, he told me stayed at the (R.) Catholic Boys' Home. He knew very many of the sweetest verses in the New Testament by heart, and repeated John iii. 16 quite as fluently as I could myself. He had learnt them, he told me, in Mrs. Smyly's school at Largan-street.

Some time before this, passing along the streets of a town in the West of Ireland, I saw a little girl coming towards me, and singing sweetly—

> We shall have a new name in that land,
> In that land, that sunny, sunny land.

Struck by the familiar words and tune, sung under such unexpected circumstances, I watched her as she moved along, wondering where she could have learnt them. After some days, and many inquiries of friends, I heard she was the child of R.C. parents, going to the convent school each day to the nuns, while in the evenings she went for a few hours each week to the wife of one of the Irish Church Mission agents to learn sewing, and while there had learnt this hymn as well as many others. I could supplement these by others which have come under my notice quite unexpectedly.

We know not what good the Holy Spirit may be pleased to work by means of these poor children both in their own homes and amongst their companions. I know one child who, only a short time ago, let fall by accident among other papers a Gospel tract in her class at the ——— Convent. The teacher, a nun, very quickly picked it up and put it in her pocket with anything but a look of displeasure. These child missionaries, perhaps, may accomplish work in places which are entirely closed to us who are grown up.

Very faithfully yours,

John Carson.

A MESSAGE FOR CLOUDY DAYS.

Job. xxxvii. 21.

"Not now," when the sun's bright rays
Are hid from the mourner's sight;
"Not now," when the dawn seems waiting long
Do we catch the coming light.

"Not now" in the heavy cloud
May we see the golden thread,
For the earthward side is dark indeed,
And the path seems rough we tread.

But there in the golden land,
We may see the golden side
Of the trial clouds, the Father sent
When his children's faith was tried.

Ah, wait, tho' the night seem long,
For the sun shall rise once more.
And the clouds be bathed in golden light
That were dark and grey before.

Let Faith from the Tower of Hope
Keep watch for the coming day,
And our heart shall sing when morning breaks
And the shadows flee away.

"Not now" with our untrained ears
Can we catch the heavenly sound
Of the minor chords so sad and strange
To the listening ears around.

"Not now" thro' the mists of earth
With sorrowing tear-dimmed eyes,
Do we read the Master's dealings plain,
But we trust the "Only-Wise."

And there, when we dwell with Him,
He can teach us all we'd know
Of the trials hard to comprehend
When his children walked below.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 12.—1 KINGS VIII.

The Feast of Tabernacles was blended with this solemn ceremony of dedication. All Israel in its most festive attire welcomed the ark to its abiding-place with sacrifices that could not be numbered. And it is a time for rare joy when He, of whom the ark was a type, takes up his abode in the human spirit. Then the glory-cloud fills the whole being, and there is no longer any part dark, but the soul, and mind, and strength, the Holy Place and the outer court, are all aglow. The budding rod and the pot of manna had disappeared. These were symbols of a life that had passed away. But the Holy Law was there. In our most rapturous experiences, meditation on the law gives weight and solidity to our character.

Solomon recited the chain of incidents that had conducted to that august moment. Each link is worthy of notice, especially that clause which declares that though David was not permitted to carry his pious intention into effect, it was yet accepted. "Thou didst well that it was in thine heart." There are many who fully desire to devote their lives to God as missionaries or ministers, but they are prevented by death, or necessary duty to others. But they are credited before God with the desire. In the seed God beholds the perfected plant. We may learn from this prayer how we may intercede, recording before God the cases of such as are in need, and laying out our requests.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13.—1 KINGS IX.

God's second appearance to Solomon had a twofold object. In the first place, to assure him that his prayer was heard, and that the new Temple was hallowed. So with us, as soon as we yield ourselves to God, desiring only to be his, He enters upon his possession, hallowing, and guaranteeing our security. In the second place, to declare the conditions on which both king and people might be assured of permanent prosperity. There must be the walk before God in whole-heartedness, and the strict keeping of his statutes and judgments. Obedience to the least prompting of the Divine Spirit is an essential condition of blessedness and prosperity. Let us beware lest we become indolent in the strictness of our self-watch. It is not enough to admit generally that we are not under the law but under grace; we must never forget that we are under the law to Christ.

It was a pity that after all he had done for the building of the Temple, Hiram was so ill-pleased with the cities given him by Solomon. But it is thus that the rewards of this world fail to satisfy us apart from God's presence and favour.

Solomon used the remnants of the Hittites as slaves, but the children of Israel were promoted to high office. Thou art not a slave, but a son, if thou hast been born again, and it shall be thine to reign with Christ, to judge angels, to rule over the cities of the children of men.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 14.—1 KINGS X.

We, too, have hard questions, which often perplex ourselves and others. But there is a solution for each of them in Jesus, the greater than Solomon. Too often, alas! we think that we must stay away from Him until they are all answered, and only afterwards go to his blessed feet. But thus we shall never come to Him at all. We must go to prove Him with our hard questions. He invites us, saying, "Come and see." But we must come before we can see. In the presence of Jesus the mists are dispelled.

But when we come to Jesus we feel that the half was never told us. His wisdom and goodness far surpass the power of the tongue of men and angels to utter. The soul basks in a golden radiance of Love and Grace which are unspeakable and full of glory. And it need not go out again from his presence-chambers. It may know the happiness of standing continually before Him, hearing his words. It may feast in his presence. It may live on his royal bounty. Ask, my soul, of Him, what you will, and it shall be done unto you. No good thing will He withhold. He will give grace and glory, exceeding abundantly above all you ask or think; all your desire, whatsoever you ask (13).

How dazzling this description of Solomon's glory! And yet it is excelled by a single lily made by our Father's hands. Fair indeed must Jesus be, the Son of his Love, in whom all that is beautiful and strong and glorious is combined.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15.—1 KINGS XI.

Solomon's fall was directly attributable to his wives, whom, in direct defiance of God's command, he married from the neighbouring nations (Deut. vii. 3, 4). Strange women caused him to sin (Neh. xiii. 26). And temples were reared in Jerusalem to the deities of the heathen. The sin was greatly aggravated in his case by the great privileges he had enjoyed of fellowship with God (9). There was no help for it but that he should be severely chastised. He had been specially forewarned that such would be the case (2 Sam. vii. 14).

The more privileged and honoured we are, the more disastrous will be our fall, and the more certain our suffering. If God loved us less, He might spare us more. But because we are capable of such heights, He makes it impossible for us to rest contented in the depths and lengths of our transgression. He punishes us with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men. All the while his mercy does not depart from us, but lingers over us, as a father will listen at the door of the closed chamber of the child to detect the first symptoms of broken-hearted sorrow.

The instruments by whom God chastened Solomon were Rezon, Hadad, and Jeroboam. But the obduracy of his rebellious heart was shown in his endeavour to kill the latter. Thus sadly had the fine gold of his character become dim.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16.—1 KINGS XII.

Solomon's reign had been splendid but very oppressive, and it was reasonable to ask for some relief. And there was much wisdom in the counsel of the older men, "Serve them, and they will be thy servants for ever." That is a true principle. It underlay the sacrifice of Calvary. "Thou art worthy to take the book, for Thou wast slain." It is because Jesus has girded Himself and washed our feet that we gladly bear the brand-marks of his service for ever.

Jeroboam knew better than to make these two calves. Ahijah had clearly told him (xi. 38) that if he would hearken to all that God commanded him, and walk in his ways and do what was right in his eyes, He would be with him, and build him a sure house; but he was not content with this, and set his ingenuity to work to make his position surer. Forsaking the promise of God, he had resort to mere expediency. Fearing that if the people went up to Jerusalem they would return to their allegiance to David's throne and kill him, he set up the worship of Jehovah within the limits of his kingdom, under the form of these calves. He thus broke the Second Commandment, and sowed the seeds of which in days long after his descendants were to reap a bitter harvest. Alas for that devising expedients out of one's own head! We all know something of that.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17.—1 KINGS XIII.

The altar which Jeroboam thought would consolidate and strengthen his kingdom was the cause of its overthrow and of disaster, until Israel was carried into captivity. Oh, that we may never turn from the living God, to hew out for ourselves broken cisterns that cannot hold water. It is impossible to do this and go unpunished.

Literal obedience to God's Word is indispensable in those who would carry his messages. And that was a noble answer that in the first instance the prophet gave the king; when he told him that the bribe of half his house could not induce him to tarry so long as to eat a meal with him. This minute and rigorous obedience stood out in striking contrast to the conduct of Jeroboam.

But when the prophet afterwards violated the distinct command of God and turned back at the earnest solicitation of the older prophet, he incurred God's very decided displeasure.

When God has spoken to us, let us not dare to turn aside at the words of others, however good they seem, and though their proposals be draped in the guise of religion. God does not say yea and nay. But all his commands, like all his promises, are yea and amen in Christ. In Him is no variableness, nor shadow cast by turning.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18.—1 KINGS XIV.

This chapter is full of those results which disobedience and rebellion bring not to kingdoms only but to hearts and homes. We veil ourselves under many disguises, but we do not deceive God; often we fail to deceive man. We are senseless enough to suppose that God can answer our questions, and not read ourselves, can solve our problems and not unriddle us. But God is never mocked, and we reap as we have sown.

It is an awful sentence which is indissolubly associated with Jeroboam's name, "He made Israel to sin." Does it adhere to him on the other side the veil, which parts time and eternity? For certainly if Baxter expected another heaven for himself in the case of each of those who reached heaven through his means, so there will be another hell for each that has brought another thither. May we be preserved from laying stumbling-blocks or being such in others' ways.

How was the fine gold dimmed. Brass was but a poor substitute. But such deterioration in the character of the metal was the outward evidence of sad change for the worse in the spiritual condition of Israel. Mere traditional goodness, like that of David, cannot save us from the strong set of the current away from God; we need the mighty power of the Holy Spirit, in answer to the prayer: "Hold up my goings in Thy paths, that my footsteps slip not."

FEBRUARY 19.

REBUILDING THE WALL. Neh. iv. 9—23.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 9.

It is probable that Artaxerxes had several cupbearers, and that they served him in turn. This may explain why it was four months after his prayer that Nehemiah appeared in the presence of the king (comp. i. 1 with ii. 1). See how fully God answered his prayer. He made very bold requests, but all were granted in the most royal fashion (ii. 1—11). Six months later the work was completed (vi. 15). The journey to Jerusalem probably occupied four months as in Ezra vii. 9. This rapid success, in spite of serious hindrances, was largely due to Nehemiah's enthusiasm, and to the skill with which he planned the work (chapter iii.). "It was like the rebuilding of the wall of Athens after the invasion of Xerxes, like the building of the walls of Edinburgh after the battle of Flodden. Every class of society, every district in the country, took part in it." —Stanley. Great things can be accomplished where there are willing, united workers.

Our lesson to-day furnishes an illustration of the difficulties which beset all work for God, and the manner in which to meet them.

I. The opposition had its origin with Sanballat and Tobiah, "who were district magistrates under the government of the Satrap of Syria; and they seem to have been leaders of the Samaritan faction." They were formidable adversaries, and, worked with great subtilty and persistency to defeat the work. They began with mocking (ii. 19; iv. 1-3), and sought to laugh to scorn those who attempted it. In all ages the people of God have had to meet this trial (Heb. xi. 36). Next they tried slander, and represented that Nehemiah and his companions were preparing to rebel against the king (ii. 19; vi. 6). Thirdly, they determined to make a sudden attack upon the city, and, if need be, to slay the Jews rather than allow the work to proceed (7, 8, 11). Add to these the difficulties of the work itself (10), and it will be seen how seriously Nehemiah and his friends were opposed.

In Christian life and Christian service similar difficulties must be expected. Our Lord never promised an easy life to his followers, and if there is a change in the form of the world's opposition, there is no change as to the fact.

II. The example of Nehemiah in meeting these difficulties is worthy of careful attention.

(1) He did not ignore them.—He took their full measure. Many a Christian has fallen through under-estimating the strength of his foes. Count the cost (Luke xiv. 28—32). If we do not know, or will not fully recognise the strength and subtilty of our foes, we cannot overcome them.

(2) He depended on God for victory.—"Remember the Lord, which is great and terrible" (14); "Our God shall fight for us" (20). We need not fear to see the worst of our difficulties if we have a right view of God. What could Nehemiah and his feeble Jews do against Sanballat and his forces? But what were even these formidable adversaries compared with God? On the front of a hall in North Wales is an inscription in Welsh, which, being translated, signifies, "Without God, without all; with God, enough." See Jno. xvi. 33; 1 Jno. iv. 4.

(3) He made use of every proper means.—Faith in God is not a substitute for effort, but prompts and directs it. Work without faith is presumption; faith without work is folly. The means he used were these:—Prayer (9). This is first because it was the natural expression of confidence in God without it there could be no prospect of success in the use of other means. It is the first condition of a prosperous life. Watchfulness (9). If we expect God to deliver us we must not be unwatchful against our adversaries (Matt. xxvi. 41). The watchman must wake, though it is the Lord who keeps the city (Psa. cxxvii. 1). Encouragement (14, 20, 21). He knew that if his workers lost heart the work would cease. The wise arrangement of his people.—No general ever displayed greater tact than Nehemiah. Behind those places where the wall was lowest, and upon the highest places, he put a special guard (13), disposing of his forces by families. This was a wise arrangement. It added the powerful incentive of love to their dear ones to the motives of loyalty to God and patriotism. Under such conditions who would not be bold? See how he disposed of his own servants and of the rulers (16), and how all the workmen were prepared either for work or warfare (17, 18). Beside all this, he was himself an example to others of courage and vigilance, and endurance (23). In the Mexican War, when the troops were wavering, a general dashed into the enemy's lines, shouting, "Men, follow!" Encouraged by his example, they dashed on after him, and gained the victory.

Our Boys and Girls.

In our issue of Jan. 26 "An Anxious Mother" asked for advice as to the training of our boys, especially in regard to holiday amusements. Last week we inserted two thoughtful letters on the subject; we now summarise several others, nearly all from parents who have had the joy of seeing their children advance, not only in wisdom and stature, but also in favour with God and men.

"A Thankful Father" writes:—"I have adopted the same plan with my boys as with the girls, and have always kept them away from scenes of dancing, acting, and, indeed, from Christmas parties altogether, feeling sure that such associations were not compatible with bringing them up in 'the nurture and admonition of the Lord.' The results have been most happy, my whole family of four sons and two daughters being brought to the Lord in their youth; they are now connected with the Christian Church, and mostly engaged in happy service for the Master.

"I should like, however, to add that, while not allowing them to choose their own amusements, I have endeavoured to make home the happiest place on earth for them; and although I could not sanction football, cricket, and rowing clubs, on account of their associations, yet I have encouraged all these exercises amongst my children and their young friends, at a good deal more expense in one way, but perhaps at less if all were taken into account. Good, bright singing and music, with carefully-selected but readable books and periodicals always at hand, have also contributed to the end in view."

"A Happy Mother" writes:—"We prayed that our children might be the Lord's, and we expected they would be, and therefore trained them for that service into which we believed He would call them. We did not consider worldly amusements would fit them for this. Charades we thought would only give them a taste for the theatre, dancing for all the vanities and follies of the world. We thought that if we took them to the edge of the precipice, and told them not to fall over, they most likely would fall, and so we had better

KEEP THEM FROM THE PRECIPICE.

"We also avoided all parties as they are generally understood. We guarded them, so far as we could, from worldly literature, associations, occupations, and pleasures. On the other hand, we put before them the chief end of man 'to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever'; and endeavoured, by precept and practice, to show them the pleasure of caring for others, the joys of God's service, the rich treasures in his Word, and the satisfying portion in Himself. We were careful also to make their home life bright and interesting, giving as many smiles and kind words as possible, that they might never connect gloom and sadness with separation to the service of God. We gave them to God, and He accepted them; in early life they were the objects of his converting grace, and all are now earnestly engaged in his service. We sought for them 'first his Kingdom,' and He has not been unmindful of his promise."

Another correspondent, "A Thankful Mother," who has brought up a large family of boys, all of whom have grown up Christian believers, speaks of her husband's endeavours to guide and interest them by taking them on excursions and entering into their pleasures. Another correspondent urges the provision of suitable "hobbies," and that parents should make themselves one with their children, thus encouraging their love and confidence. Yet another "Grateful Mother" says:—"My husband and I were believers when we were married. As the Lord gave us children, we gave them back to Him. As soon as they could understand, we taught them their need of a Saviour, and set before them the blessedness of a

LIFE SPENT FOR JESUS AND ETERNITY.

We aimed also, both by precept and example, to teach them that to live for God was one thing, and to live for the world quite another. To the praise and glory of God I can say that in the case of each, before they were fourteen years of age, all seven gave evidence of being born again. As to Christmas parties, etc., they are as numerous with us as in any other locality; but we have had no trouble with our children on that point. They never seemed to care for such things. If, however, as has sometimes been the case, they have expressed a wish to go somewhere or do something which, as parents, we were not quite certain was right, we never considered it wise sternly to refuse them permission, but we have reasoned with them, and if after all they did not seem satisfied, I have gone to the mercy-seat and told the Lord, and left it with Him. Invariably they would seek me out afterwards, and say, 'Mother, I think I won't go now.' We have entered into their troubles and helped them; also made the home bright and cheerful with music and sacred song. One dear girl departed to be with Christ at twenty-two, and a beloved son at twenty-four years of age, leaving behind them glorious testimonies to the power of Christ to save and keep; and this fills our souls with adoring praise to God."

A father, "H.," has followed a somewhat different plan. He says: "My children are not all grown up, but my third child (second son) is just entering college. All have taken dancing lessons, because we felt that it would be more likely to hinder than to help, if we left them no alternative but to say 'we cannot dance.' A few years ago we called the elder ones into a conference at the beginning of the Christmas holidays, and placed the matter before them somewhat as follows:—'There may be nothing inherently wrong in dancing, and if it can be regarded by young people as part of an evening's entertainment, like any other game, or music, or charades, then the line is perfectly clear. On the other hand, dancing parties involve late hours, indiscriminate partners, and whether you call them so or not, and there is no line.' Our young people did not hesitate a moment, and it was agreed that we should refuse every invitation to an exclusively dancing party. There have been some passing disappointments, but we have stedfastly carried out the rule—always with their approval—and have acted upon it with our own parties. We engage some professional entertainer, who occupies an hour and a half, and then about the same time is given up to dancing. I am more and more convinced that we have been led to a right plan. Our five eldest children have definitely given their hearts to the Lord, and our house is the centre of much real religious work amongst young people.

"One or two words of caution I would add:—I would never teach boys that it is proper for them to join in amusements to which their sisters could not as properly go, that is, if other girls went. Also, I would always make great efforts to secure for the children friends and associates that are refined, and out-and-out Christians; and I would make it a most important point that the children should coincide in the plan adopted, as being based on principle and not on prejudice. As to theatricals, there may be nothing inherently wrong in acting, as a relaxation; but there is very little that is not wrong in the associations of a theatre. Our young people have never been to a theatre, and have never asked to go, nor has their private acting gone beyond an occasional school play. If there is a spirit of worldliness in the young people, then any such line as we have adopted may look to them merely a concession, hereafter to be further relaxed; whereas my belief is, and it is apparently confirmed by my experience, that as the children grow older, the dancing will be thrown off with other youthful amusements."

Other correspondents make useful suggestions. "Materfamilias" suggests a perusal of Rev. Andrew Murray's book, "The Children for Christ" (Nisbet). A mother of six, three of them boys, who in youth professed themselves on the Lord's side, "E. J. B.," writes:—"Our children were from their birth, trained for Him, and taught, to the best of our ability, by precept and example in the home, that religion was a reality, salvation through Christ the only source of real joy, and obedience better than sacrifice. I always felt it was mockery to pray for our children to be delivered from temptation, if we knowingly placed them therein; therefore we never allowed them to go to any entertainments or parties which were even doubtful, teaching them that there was no real pleasure in going where anything was said or done likely to grieve our Saviour King, or if He could not go with us. At the same time, it was our endeavour to make home as bright and lively as possible, and to allow the young people to do everything we could that was a healthy recreation, or combined instruction with amusement."

Miss E. E. Baynes, of 48, Gayton-road, Hampstead, N.W., writes: "In the memoir of Rev. Edward Bickersteth, late rector of Watton, Herts. (Seeley), is a most lovely ideal actualised in the chapter headed 'Private Life at Watton, A.D. 1842.' This has been my ideal for years. No 'novel' I ever read has charmed me more, or proved more elevating in its power over my own aims and efforts, or aspirations, or 'toned' my life to a healthier atmosphere."

"A Father" writes:—"Though the question is asked in regard to 'Our Boys,' I would rather put it 'Our Children.' The temptations and the difficulties for boys may be different in character and degree from those affecting girls; yet the principles involved in every case are the same, whether approached from the child's or from the parents' point of view. What is the duty of the parent in any doubtful case? What is the duty of the child? If we can arrive at an answer to these questions, as in the sight of God, I believe we shall also, if we seek always to be guided by Him, find the path will be made clear, and that blessing will follow.

"What is the parents' duty? It is clearly to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Not merely in a general and indefinite way, but by making this the first and absolute end and aim before us, by prayer, by faith, by precept, by example. Two instances in the Word of God have always been to us, the one a guide, the other a beacon, in steering through these troubled seas:—Abraham, 'I know him, that he will command his children, and his household after him' (Gen. xviii. 19); and Eli, who 'restrained them not' (1 Sam. iii, 13). I believe the Divine law is responsibility on the parents' side, with the right to command. The child's duty is as clearly to obey. But if they do not obey? Here a most difficult problem comes in. It is certain command and obedience must be no spasmodic things, but the result of early training and continued habit, as in the sight of God. With this I believe in dependence on God's power that the result will be gained and the control be effective. At least, in our experience, we have thankfully to say 'Ebenezer' after a married life of nearly twenty-nine years. We have often been brought to an end of self, and yet his word has been made true. We have always endeavoured to make our home as whilst we have set our faces against the theatre, dancing, and questionable amusements, explaining that, though perhaps some might be engaged in by others, and arguments be put forward for them, we were convinced that their tendency was to draw the soul away from Christ, and to entangle it in the world; and therefore we did not allow them in our family and our household. I ought perhaps to say, with great thankfulness to God for his mercy to us, that all our children, ten of whom are living, early gave their hearts to Him, and that active Christian work, suitable to their ages and powers, has filled many an hour which otherwise would have been open for the claims of the world, and in this way lessened the questions that have from time to time arisen amongst the children on these subjects. As we can say 'Hitherto,' so I believe we shall find it true 'unto the end.'"

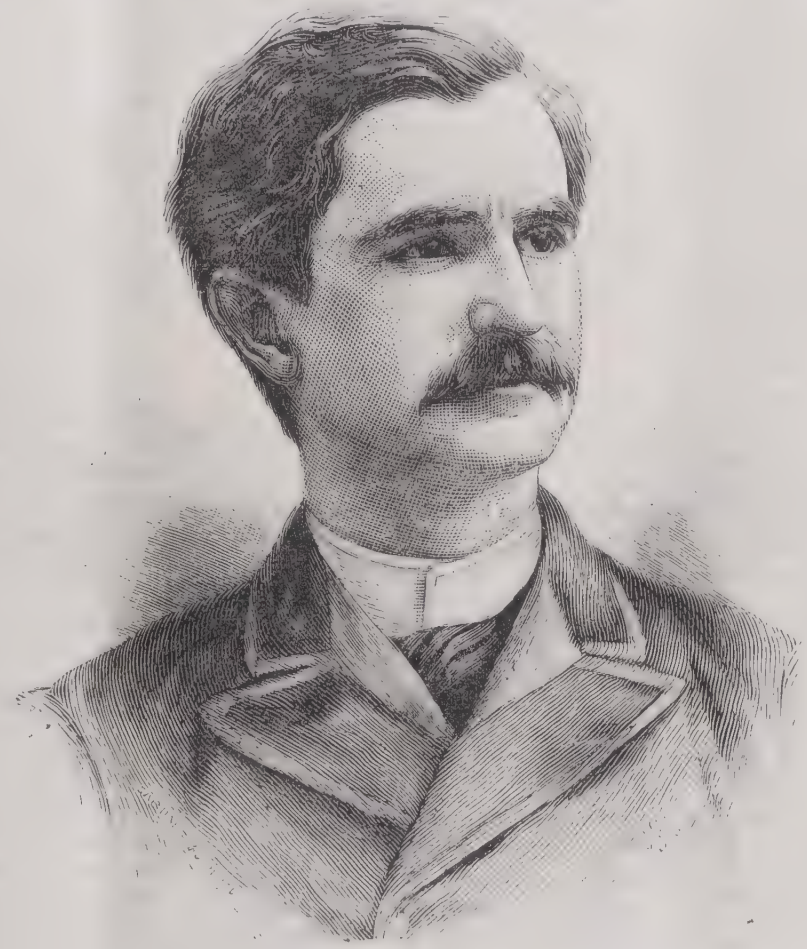
ROBERTSON MISSION CHURCH.—The report of this working men's church, carried on in the Grassmarket, Edinburgh, in connection with New Greyfriars Church, shows steady, earnest, useful service for the past year, with increasing attendance and many encouraging results. Communications for the mission should be made to Rev. Robert Stewart, D.D., 18, Royal-terrace, Edinburgh.

HOUSE OF REST, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—Rev. Newman Hall visited Miss Mason's House of Rest on Friday, and addressed a large meeting in the afternoon. He spoke on the privilege of prayer, and from the parable of the importunate widow pointed out the contrast between the hard judge and the loving Heavenly Father. Later, at the prayer meeting, Miss Mason asked prayer for the sum still needed to complete the Aged Workers' Home. In the evening Dr. Montague Miller spoke upon God's plan for his children. Taking the life of Abraham as an illustration, he drew a picture of the steps of a truly surrendered life.

CREATION, REVELATION, AND SCIENCE.—The first of a series of leetures on the above important subjects was given by Mr. J. H. Burridge at Clapham Conference Hall, on Friday, February 3. It was of necessity a mere outline of matters of weighty importance to all Bible students. As the faith of the young is being assailed by books of science falsely so called, and the foundation truths of Holy Writ are being sapped often by those to whom the Word of God is either unknown or falsely quoted, such lectures as Mr. Burridge's ought to be very useful to many. The lectures are given twice a week Tuesdays and Fridays, at 8 p.m.



REV. A. C. DIXON,

PREACHER, LECTURER, AND AUTHOR.

IN recent years a goodly band of loyal-hearted men have arisen in the United States who do not shun to proclaim the message of Salvation through a crucified Redeemer. Prominent among these is Pastor AMAZI CLARENCE DIXON, preacher, lecturer, and author. Mr. Dixon is a typical Southerner, fiery, intense, dramatic, eloquent. His father belongs to that great army of frontier preachers who follow the plough and use the spade during six days, thereby supplementing a meagre salary in order that they may bring up their families respectably and preach the Gospel on the seventh.

While yet a child, Clarence accompanied his father to the preaching stations, where religious impressions were made upon his young heart. During his eleventh year he was converted, and at once joined the church of which his father was pastor. At the age of fifteen he entered Wake Forest College, graduating therefrom four years later. He next decided to study law, but some country churches in his neighbourhood needing his youthful energy, he was persuaded to accept the ministry of two congregations. During nine months of this double oversight he baptized a hundred converts.

Thereafter he took a six months' course in systematic theology, after which he accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the Chapel Hill Church, under the shadow of the South Carolina State University. During his fruitful ministry of three years, seventy-five of the University students were won to the Saviour.

Mr. Dixon possesses in large measure the evangelistic spirit; he felt therefore impelled to enter upon a new charge in the rising town of Asheville, N.C. There, within three months of his aggressive ministry, two hundred and fifty persons confessed faith in the Son of God. After a prosperous ministry of three and a-half years, the young pastor was elected to the presidency of Wake Forest College, which he wisely declined, preferring the call to the pastorate of a little Baptist Church which had been previously organised in the city of Baltimore. While at Asheville Mr. Dixon received a great access of the power of the Holy Spirit. This became evident in his growing love for the Bible, and in the unction with which he preached its living themes. The reality of a life of faith also possessed him; he was led to enjoy the fact of union with a risen Christ, and to rejoice in the hope of our Lord's personal advent.

Soon after his arrival in Baltimore, the little church under Pastor Dixon's care began to expand, first by internal spiritual development, and thereafter by accessions of converts saved out of the world. A large tabernacle had to be erected to accommodate the crowds pressing forward to enjoy his ministry. The sterling character of his teaching was well illustrated by the active part he took, in company with Rev. G. C. Needham, in organising an inter-denominational conference in Baltimore on "The Person and Ministry of the Holy Spirit." He afterwards edited in a useful volume (Baltimore: Wharton, Barron & Co.) the addresses—thirteen in number—delivered during the four days of the conference.

While at Baltimore Mr. Dixon turned his guns on the doctrines and deeds of Papal Rome. In that city Romanism is strongly entrenched, and, under the lead of a vigilant Cardinal, is startlingly aggressive. In the power of God he fairly bearded the lion in his lair. His crushing sermons were heard by a multitude, including many Romanists, and were published widely by the religious journals. During the time of excitement, when priests were publicly praying for his death, Mr. Dixon received a unanimous call from one of the largest churches in the denomination, with promise of abundant salary. He made reply that his acceptance now would be a victory for Rome, and the priests would advertise his removal as an answer to their prayers.

Some of Pastor Dixon's sermons were included in an instructive book, issued by his publishers (already named), with the title, "The True and the False." The first nine chapters set forth the truth as it is in Jesus, and are calculated to prove helpful to such as are involved in intellectual perplexity. The last ten view Romanism in the light of the Bible, and deal ably and faithfully with a tremendous subject.

Two years later he believed it his duty to come to Brooklyn, where he is at present fighting the good fight of faith. Already he has won a front place in the army of preachers in a city designated "the sleeping place of New York." Pastor Dixon realises the need of Bible schools, and he accordingly opened one during the past winter, where twice each week nearly 300 students sat at the feet of the best teachers he could secure. He is an ambassador to the common people. He was a delegate to the great International Sunday School Convention, held in London a few years since, where his tall figure, hearty address, and social qualities brought him into favourable recognition. The late C. H. Spurgeon was captivated by the breezy young Southerner, to whom he wittily remarked as he eyed him slowly from feet to face, "You carry things in America to a great length." It is now the burning desire of Pastor Dixon to preach the Gospel in Ireland also, whose fretting millions lie closely on his great loving heart. Some day "the cloud" may lead him to Erin's harvest fields.

Mr. Dixon is a man of profound conviction; to him the Bible is the Book of Life. He is a man of prayer, a believer in the Holy Spirit, tender and gentle in dealing with inquirers, ever beseeching sinners to be reconciled to God. He writes:—

> Christianity is a book religion. The trite saying, "Christianity is Christ" is no more than that "Christianity is the Bible." Those who oppose Christianity, and those who would subtitute something else than personal faith in Christ as the condition of salvation, must get rid of the Bible. The Book is its own best champion, and has a way of taking care of itself. God is its author, and, like the Christ it reveals, it is perfectly human and perfectly divine.

Mr. Dixon is happily married. His wife is a noble Christian woman, and her husband has been helped by her counsel. Her home is always open to the friends of Jesus, and in that home she shines steadily as a fixed star. The death of her eldest boy, a lad of ten years, has tinged her amiable life with subdued grief, but it is not selfish; towards her guests and children she reflects the joy that is profounder than sorrow. Her tears are for herself, her smiles for others.

AN AMERICAN "ELECT LADY."

I send you Press notices of a noble life devoted to the sinful, the wretched, and the needy for fully sixty years in the city of New York. The friendship of many years leads me to testify to the godliness of Abby Hopper Gibbons. Not long ago she told me that in the home of her childhood the Bible was always at hand. Her mother, a lovely Quakeress, was wont to gather her family around her to read and explain to them the sacred truths of God's Word. Such teaching developed the faith which bore abundant fruit beyond fourscore years. She had the hopeful spirit of a Christian, for notwithstanding her long experience in labours for the degraded and in measures for the defeat of vicious legislation, she said that she never despaired of anybody. God grant to our country for all time women who shall follow her bright example!

THE STORY OF A REMARKABLE LIFE.

Mrs. Abby Hopper Gibbons, daughter of Isaac Tatem Hopper, the Quaker philanthropist, and herself a philanthropist of national reputation, died on Monday, January 16, at her home, No. 55, West Forty-seventh-street. Her death ended an eventful life. Mrs. Gibbons was born on December 7, 1801, in Philadelphia. She was the third of sixteen children. Her father was a Hicksite Quaker, an active Abolitionist, a most energetic prison reformer, and was identified with works of charity all his lifetime. His daughter, after teaching school in Philadelphia and New York for several years, was married in 1833 to James Sloan Gibbons, a Philadelphia merchant, who moved to this city in 1835, and who was for many years connected with banks and financial institutions here. He was the author of the song, "We're Coming, Father Abraham, Three Hundred Thousand More," and of several books and articles in magazines on financial subjects. Mr. Gibbons died last October.

Mrs. Gibbons's life was devoted in great part to works of charity. In 1845 she aided her father in forming the Women's Prison Association in this city and in founding homes for discharged prisoners. She was the first director of the Women's Prison Association. She also assisted her father in forming the Isaac T. Hopper Home, and for twelve years she was president of a German industrial home for children found in the streets. The school was a great success, the attendance increasing in four months from seven to 200.

The years just before and during the Civil War were most active ones for Mrs. Gibbons. She was an unrelenting Abolitionist. Her house was a meeting place for all the principal Abolitionists. Horace Greeley, Theodore Parker, and Wendell Phillips were often visitors there. The strongest friendship existed between her and Mr. Greeley. He made long visits to her home, and at one time lived there five weeks.

During the draft riots in 1863 the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gibbons was early selected by the mob as an object of attack. The attention of the rioters was first drawn to their house by some one pointing it out as the home of Horace Greeley. It was at once sacked and partially burned.

The strong anti-slavery sentiments of Mrs. Gibbons were due in part, no doubt, to the great activity of her father as an Abolitionist. Her father's home was a refuge for escaped slaves. It is said that through his efforts not less than 2000 slaves escaped by the "underground railroad." Many of these were concealed in his house. He was "disowned" from the Society of Friends for being associated in publishing The Anti-Slavery Standard in this city.

With such a father it was not surprising that when the Civil War broke out Mrs. Gibbons was willing to risk her life by serving as a nurse in hospital and camp. She was in the army hospitals and camps for three years and a-half, making a record of which any woman might be proud.

About the first thing Mrs. Gibbons did after she returned from the army hospitals at the end of the war, was to establish a labour and aid society for the benefit of soldiers' families. She thought if it proved a success that it could be extended so as to aid the poor of all classes. It was carried on successfully one year and then given up, partly because of the discouragement of some of Mrs. Gibbons' friends, and partly because of an illness which prevented her from doing any work. In 1871 she helped to establish the New York Infant Asylum, and in 1873 she established the Diet Kitchen Association. She was for many years president of the Diet Kitchen Association, and presided over its last meeting on January 4 this year. One of the crowning events in her labours for the unfortunate took place last year, when she was successful in her efforts to secure the passage of a bill through the State Legislature establishing a reformatory for women and girls of New York and Westchester, at Bedford, Westchester County. The bill was signed by Governor Flower. It was passed by both Houses of the Legislature in 1889, and was vetoed by Governor Hill. Mrs. Gibbons began working personally for the passage of the bill when she was eighty-nine years old. She went to Albany last year and the year before and made personal appeals, which were successful.

During all the years Mrs. Gibbons lived in New York, she took great interest in the inmates of Tombs prison. She listened to every story of suffering, and did much to relieve and comfort the unfortunate prisoners. Fifty years ago she and Catherine M. Sedgwick, the author, went to Randall's Island, and inaugurated many reforms there. She took some Christmas presents to the children on the island on her first visit, and every year since then she sent hundreds of presents at Christmas time to the children there.

Among Mrs. Gibbons's most striking characteristics were great executive ability and firmness, which account for the success which attended all her undertakings. Her house was always open for the reception of all sorts of unhappy children. Frequently it was so filled with the special objects of her care that her own children and all the members of the household were obliged to seek temporary quarters elsewhere. Mrs. Gibbons was a woman of exceptionally wide views; her charity was never obscured by sectarianism. The last words she uttered were in reference to the reformatory to be built at Bedford.—New York Tribune.

The death of Mrs. Gibbons, widow of James S. Gibbons, closed one of the most useful and unselfish lives ever given to the cause of humanity. The current of her remarkable career was determined by pre-natal influences, for a daughter of Isaac T. Hopper must have been foreordained to devote herself to works of philanthropy.

Mrs. Gibbons has left nothing for us to regret in all her more than fourscore-and-ten years. She kept nothing for herself, but gave all she had with a spendthrift hand to the charities, which she directed with wonderful executive ability. Her last achievement was the reformatory for women, and when that task was accomplished she was ready to exchange "this mortal for immortality." At eighty-nine she summoned her failing strength, took the troublesome journey to Albany, held long conferences with the legislative committee, and came home to learn that the Bill had passed.

A close friend of Mr. Lincoln during the terrible years of the war, she took her place in the hospitals, ministered to the comfort of the dying, and performed such signal service that it has become a part of the annals of the time. When the story of her life is written, as it assuredly will be, it will be known that she had more than a man's courage combined with more than a woman's tenderness. She was such an exceptional character that nature gives but few of them to any single generation.

She has closed the book, and, like one who falls asleep, has passed from the dreams of the present to the realities of the future.—New York Herald.

SPURGEON MEMORIAL SERVICES.

The memorial services held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday week, and reported in our last issue, were continued with growing interest throughout the day. The afternoon meeting, intended for ministers and workers, was held in the Tabernacle, Mr. George Williams presiding.

Rev. Robert Taylor spoke of his intimate friendship with Mr. Spurgeon, and of the importance of maintaining well the Orphanage. Concluding, he told how, just before his departure on his last journey to Mentone, Mr. Spurgeon sent for him to the sick room, and said to him, "I believe, brother, I am dying." "Ah!" I replied, "we are all dying." Mr. Spurgeon continued, "It may be God's will to raise me up again, but whether it be so or not"—and then he closed his eyes and said with the music of soul that was in that voice of his—"the Father's will be done." Then a moment passed, and I remaining perfectly silent, he said, "What could all their German theories do for me now when I am lying here dying?" And then his eye brightened with a smile, and he said, "Do you know my theology has become very simple, but it is quite sufficient? It may not be quite enough to preach, but it is quite enough to die on, and I can put it into four words—'Jesus died for me'—that is enough, brother."

Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson said that the secret of Mr. Spurgeon's successful ministry lay in his close and constant communion with God. He never knew a man who dwelt so constantly in the presence of the King. At any moment he was ready for prayer, and he was always in the mood in which he could hear God speaking to him. This was the greatest thing we could cultivate. Mr. Spurgeon was also a hard worker. He was indeed always working and praying. If men were earnest in prayer, God would drive them into his work.

Rev. James Douglas dwelt on Mr. Spurgeon's deep sense of the "Truth of Truths." One great reason for the downgrade tendency was a disposition in the human mind to philosophise. But he saw that Divine things were not to be made to dovetail so as to suit the exigencies of the human reason or of man's understanding. He realised that the foolishness of God was more than men, and the weakness of God was stronger than men.

Dr. Pierson concluded the proceedings of the afternoon with a few stirring sentences, finding in the character of the departed pastor an illustration of the words, "This one thing I do"; for he had one theme, Christ and Him crucified; one aim, to be of service to God and man; and one Person as the object of his love, even Jesus Christ; so that he could say with Count Zinzendorf, "I have one passion, and it is He, even He, and He alone."

In the evening the Tabernacle was crowded. Mr. Thomas Olney, who presided, said that during the year £9300 had been contributed to the memorial fund to Mr. Spurgeon, of which £3800 was allotted to the general fund by the donors, £3000 to the orphanage, £900 to the college, and the rest to other institutions and objects. Many who had been to Norwood regretted to see the tomb as it was; the reason was that several months ago a monument was ordered, but the slab of granite selected had been found to contain a flaw, and the work had to be begun afresh. The mason, however, had promised that the monument should be ready by April. It had been decided to build at the orphanage a memorial hall for dining purposes and for the accommodation of large gatherings. As an evidence that Christian generosity was not played out, he would mention that on Monday last a cheque was received from Scotland by the secretary of the orphanage for the large sum of £1000.

Addresses followed by Revs. David Davies, F. A. C. Lillingston, John Robertson, and in conclusion,

Dr. A. T. Pierson said that a giant had fallen amongst us. Charles Spurgeon stood in the range of intellectual and moral mountains which adorn this nineteenth century. It would be at least ten years before we should be at a sufficient distance from him dispassionately to estimate his true place among great men. There was no question he had a great mind, and if to be an educated man means to have power to work with the brain, and make the most of oneself for the glory of God and the good of men, Mr. Spurgeon was one of the most highly educated men in England. But even more did his greatness lie in the warmth and volume of his affection.

WORKERS IN CHICAGO.

THURSDAY, Jan. 19, was a great day at the Chicago Bible Institute. It was the annual gathering of the converts of the Chicago Evangelisation Society to meet Mr. Moody. Over 6000 invitations were sent out to those who had been blessed in the work, besides about 1000 invitations to friends. Of these 6000, 1000 were children, only those who had been converted to the work being invited. Of course, a great many could not come, but it was found necessary to hold three separate meetings in the Chicago Avenue Church.

The first meeting was for women, from 3 to 4.30 p.m. It took the character of a large mothers' meeting. After a brief prayer and exposition by Mrs. CAPRON, superintendent of the Women's Department, Miss E. S. STRONG, assistant superintendent, spoke of those who were now telling the story of the Cross in the remote corners of the earth. Twenty-five students of the Women's Department are working as missionaries in India, China, Japan, Syria, Africa. Miss EDITH METCALF, author of "Rich Folks and Poor Folks," told in an effective way the story of a boy who was held in slavery to the greed for money, and in this way emphasised the need of the boys' work.

Opportunity was given for testimony from the women who had been brought to Christ by the institute workers. They told of the transformations that had been wrought in their own lives and how their homes had been entirely changed through the visits of these ladies. One woman told how first she was reached, then her husband, then her sister and her sister's husband, then her brother and sister-in-law, and other members of the family, seven in all.

Many more were ready to speak, but the time allotted to the women's meeting had come to an end, and they gave way to a troop of 300 children who came marching in, singing the songs that they had learned in the tents. Though these boys and girls came largely from homes of poverty and sin, we do not remember ever to have seen a more orderly company of children. For an hour they listened to songs and addresses with intensest interest. Their very faces told the story of the joy that Jesus brings into the lives of those who accept Him.

At the close of the children's meeting, tea was served to them in the lecture-room of the church; to such of the women as wished to stay to the evening meeting with their husbands, and to the men who came right from their work, in the institute building. About 1100 in this way took supper with Mr. Moody.

The evening meeting was principally for men. The Chicago Avenue Church, with a capacity of 2500, was crowded, even the aisles being blocked. Mr. Moody expressed himself as being astonished at the work that had been accomplished. Among those who had been reached were people from all classes of society, from the most hardened criminals to professional men. Three lawyers from one firm, who had been blessed in the meetings, were present with their wives.

A great deal was made of the music at this evening gathering. Male quartettes and mixed quartettes and male choruses from the institute sang with excellent effect. Mr. James McGranahan for the first time in five years sang in public. He had no intention of singing when he came, but was so carried away by the spirit of the meeting that, when Mr. Moody suggested that he should sing something, he replied, "I feel more like it than I have for years." Yielding to the urgent importunities of Mr. Moody and the audience, he and Mrs. McGranahan sang "Some time we'll understand."

The programme was entirely impromptu. Mr. Moody, noticing in the audience one of the first students, Mr. C. L. Kirk, now pastor of the Central Baptist Church in Chicago, called upon him, and he told what the Institute had done for him. He said that the only theological education he had received had been at the Institute, and that he was called out of the railway work into that of preaching the Gospel. Seeing a notice of the Institute while working among the miners in the Rocky Mountains, he and his wife sold their household effects and came on to the Institute, trusting God to carry them through. He had found work in one of the Baptist Churches shortly after reaching the Institute; at the institute he had acquired a love for the Word of God, and a belief in its inspiration, which he had before doubted; he had found there a spiritual atmosphere and communion with God such as he had not known before; he had learned how to take the Word of God and sit down beside a man and lead him, step by step, to the Saviour, he had learnt to exalt the Holy Spirit as well as the word of God, and to realise that a man could do nothing of real worth in Christ's sight without the baptism of the Holy Ghost; he had learnt how to study the Bible for himself and dig out of it in a systematic and thorough way these wonderful truths. Mr. Kirk is a magnetic speaker, and held the audience intensely interested to the end.

Mr. MOODY followed, in a few words calling attention to the way in which Mr. Kirk had been pushed from the railway service into the ministry, and how it would have been impossible for him, at his age, and with his family, to have taken the regular preparation for the ministry. He said the Institute was intended for just such cases as these.

Mr. TORREY gave a report of the year's work. He made special reference to the new effort taken up during the year—work in the jail. During the last two months there have been about 140 conversions in the county jail. Of course, it is impossible to tell at present how many of these are genuine, but a great many of these men give every evidence of being truly born again. Mr. Torrey read a very touching letter from a man still in prison, who had been invited to the meeting, and who replied that he greatly regretted his inability to accept the invitation, as he had not yet been discharged from custody, but saying he would keep the invitation as long as he lived, for it was the first one he had ever received in his life. This little incident deeply moved the audience. Mr. Torrey gave very encouraging statistics as to the attendance at the different classes, and said the present membership of the institute comes from forty-six churches, representing eleven denominations.

Mr. CHAS. HERALD, of Bethesda Tabernacle, Brooklyn, followed with a few words, telling how he was brought into the ministry without regular education, and how God had blessed his work among the poor in Brooklyn. He testified to the spiritual atmosphere he found in the Institute and the wonderful help it had been to him in his personal life.

At this point Mr. Moody called upon two students to tell what the Institute had done for them. One of these students was in charge of a tent last summer. The audience was so aroused by his words that Mr. Moody jumped up, and said "I did not intend to take a collection to-night, but I must do it. Let us make an offering to put this young man in a tent this summer. How many are in favour of doing it?" There was a great deal of enthusiasm; hats were passed, and a very generous offering made.

The hour was getting late; it was nearly ten o'clock. Mr. Moody asked whether they should close the meeting or go on. There was a cry from every quarter to go on, and a motion was made that Mr. Moody himself should speak for thirty minutes. This he thought it not wise to do, and the formal part of the meeting was brought to an end by singing "God be with You till we Meet Again." It was a long time, however, before the church was emptied, the people lingering to talk with Mr. Moody and the workers. The amount of solid and permanent work done by the students and officers of the Institute, as seen in this meeting, was a revelation even to many of the best friends of the Institute.

Missionaries on Furlough.

IT has been observed that many missionaries coming home on furlough are compelled to suffer very serious loss through having to seek for a house, furnish it, and then, at the expiration of their time, sell at great sacrifice. A few friends of the L.M.S., in view of this state of things, have resolved to endeavour to provide suitable furnished houses for the occupation of missionaries who need them at a moderate charge. A good freehold house has been secured at Catford, which is now in the occupation of Mr. Lawes, of Savage Island, and will be put in trust as soon as the funds for its purchase and furniture (£550) have been obtained. Other houses in suitable localities will be provided as funds come in, and also put in trust, with a clause that if one or more be sold and not replaced, the proceeds should go to the London Missionary Society. Many missionaries have written warmly on the great value of such homes. All communications on the matter should be made to Rev. S. T. Williams, Belvin Lodge, Catford, S.E.

CITY YOUNG WORKWOMEN.

A most interesting conference was recently held in the lecture-hall of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street. A large number of workers and friends assembled. A continued stream of testimony was given by various friends engaged in the evangelistic work and meetings in connection with "The Old Welcome" at Cross Keys-square. It would be impossible to convey adequately by pen the very cheering and encouraging accounts given of results flowing out of services extending over a period of about sixteen years.

A lady who has laboured in one large workroom many years has been led to form a "snowdrop band" amongst the Christians in order to encourage them to exert a good influence amongst the unsaved. Monthly meetings are held for prayer and instruction. Another lady spoke of the great blessing in her workrooms, where she holds a general meeting once a week, and has a meeting another day in the week for Christians, and those who desire to be such.

Miss Berton and her sisters each gave very encouraging accounts of blessing in the large number of workrooms they visit, of many cheering letters received from the girls, of the Bible classes, etc. Scarcely a meeting is held without someone being saved or receiving fuller blessing. They told of the large number that had joined "The Young People's Scripture Union" from one dinner hour service alone. They have formed a "King's Messengers' Band" amongst the Christian young women who distribute tracts and meet at stated times for prayer to seek God's blessing on the Word.

The testimony of one friend will be given in her own words, but, as she has made no reference to her early trials in the work, that must be to help and encourage others. The workroom she visited had many in it. The girls had determined not to receive her. They talked and made a great noise the first visit, and things went on in the same way up to the fourth visit. Then the worker was feeling ill, and quite broken down in spirit. She could do nothing, neither could the friend with her, so she prayed and wept. There was silence; her humiliation and brokenness of spirit quieted every heart. Let her now tell the story.

"I praise the Lord for leading us into the work of visiting the City work-rooms. He has made the crooked places straight. We have seen the hearts of the girls softened by the Spirit; they now look forward to our weekly visits. Four of them have been converted, and are shining brightly for Jesus. Many have told us that they are longing to be right with God, but feel their circumstances pressing heavily upon them. We are praying that the light of the Holy Spirit may illuminate their dark hearts. One girl has been converted about five months. She is now working for God in the lodging-houses."

The evangelistic services held on Tuesday evenings, which are provided for by Mr. Garstin and his Christian employés, are a source of much blessing. Many souls have been saved. We have interesting and touching letters from those who have benefited by "The Home of Rest" at Lancing-on-Sea. We must thank all our kind friends who send us flowers, tracts, books, etc., also clothing and many other gifts. (Mrs.) E. FISHER.

A Country Home.

THE friends at Abbey-road, St. John's Wood, secured in the early spring of last year a house and grounds in the village of Fingrinhoe, near Colchester. To this rural retreat batches of poor children were sent during summer, and in autumn adults, who need such a rest even more than the children. Arrangements are now completed, and the committee for a small payment will receive tired and weary girls or women convalescents needing fresh air and rest. Last autumn some kind-hearted mistresses sent their servants. Some sought out mothers, worn and weary, and gave them a fortnight and three weeks', in some cases a month's, holiday.

Some of our readers may be glad to know of such a home under Christian influence, to which the orphan toilers found in all kinds of situations may be sent. Communications should be sent to Mr. A. H. Cutler, 48, Clifton-hill, N.W.

THE GOOD WORK AMONG THE SHOW PEOPLE, which for some years past has been carried on at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, by members of the B.W.T.A., is still being prosecuted with marked success.

An Appeal from India.

The following appeal, by the 600 missionaries who attended the recent conference in Bombay, has been issued to the secretaries of missionary societies throughout the world :—

The members of the Decennial Missionary Conference of India, assembled in Bombay, overwhelmed by the vastness of the work contrasted with the utterly inadequate supply of workers, earnestly appeal to the Church of Christ in Europe, America, Australasia, and Asia.

We re-echo to you the cry of the unsatisfied heart of India. With it we pass on the Master's word for the perishing multitude, "Give ye them to eat." An opportunity and a responsibility never known before now confront us.

The work among the educated and English-speaking classes has reached a crisis. The faithful labours of godly men in the class-room need to be followed up by men of consecrated culture, free to devote their whole time to aggressive work among India's thinking men. Who will come and help to bring young India to the feet of Christ?

Medical missionaries of both sexes are urgently required. We hold up before medical students and young doctors the splendid opportunity here offered of reaching the souls of men through their bodies.

The women of India must be evangelised by women. Ten times the present number of such workers could not overtake the task. Missionary ladies now working are so taxed by the care of converts and inquirers already gained that often no strength is left for entering thousands of unentered but open doors. Can our sisters in Protestant Christendom permit this to continue?

India has fifty millions of Mohammedans — a larger number than are found in the Turkish Empire, and far more free to embrace Christianity. Who will come to work for them?

Scores of missionaries should be set apart to promote the production of Christian literature in the languages of the people.

Sunday-schools, into which hundreds of thousands of India's children can readily be brought and moulded for Christ, furnish one of India's greatest opportunities for yet more workers.

Industrial schools are urgently needed to help in developing a robust character in Christian youths and to open new avenues for honest work for them. These call for capable Christian workers of special qualifications.

The population of India is largely rural. In hundreds and thousands of villages there is a distinct mass movement toward Christianity. There are millions who would speedily become Christians if messengers of Christ could reach them, take them by the hand, and not only baptize but lead them into all Christian living. Most of these people belong to the depressed classes. They are none the less heirs to our common salvation, and, whatever admixture of less spiritual motives may exist, God Himself is stirring their hearts and turning their thoughts toward the things which belong to his kingdom.

In the name of Christ and these unevangelised masses for whom He died we appeal to you to send more labourers at once. May every church hear the voice of the Spirit saying, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them"! In every church may there be a Barnabas and a Saul ready to obey the Spirit's promptings!

Face to face with two hundred and eighty-four millions in this land, for whom in this generation you as well as we are responsible, we ask, will you not speedily double the present number of labourers?

Will you not also lend your choicest pastors to labour for a term of years among the millions who can be reached through the English tongue?

Is this too great a demand to make upon the resources of those saved by omnipotent love? At the beginning of another century of missions in India let us all "expect great things from God—attempt great things for God."

For the reflex blessings to yourselves, as well as for India's sake, we beseech you to "hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." The manifestation of Christ is greater to those who keep his commandments, and this is his commandment—

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

A. Manwaring,
J. L. Phillips, M.D.,
Secretaries, Decennial Conference.

Rev. R. J. Ward, of Madras, late of St. Helen's, writes:—I was present at the conference when the appeal was read, and I can testify to the earnestness and solemnity with which it was adopted. May I be allowed to add, as one recently brought for the first time actually face to face with heathenism and the work of Christian missions in India, that I am simply overwhelmed with the vastness of the field and the utterly inadequate supply of the workers. "What are these among so many?" May all your readers hear the voice of the Spirit uttering, through the overtaxed missionary and the uninstructed "man of India," who is crying for the light, the plain and the plaintive plea which surely no heart that knows the love of Christ can resist—"Come over and help us."

OPPOSITION IN JAPAN.

The following extract from a letter recently received from Japan by Dr. A. T. Pierson, will be read with deep interest :—

Thanksgiving Day, 1892.—We are having quite an agitation in Hiroshima just now, in the shape of very active opposition on the part of the Buddhists, amounting even to persecution. Several weeks ago some of the priests hired young men to break up our chapel preaching services, and last week, for a number of nights in succession, they held large lecture meetings in a theatre, for the express purpose of running down Christianity and driving it out of the city. These meetings were attended by large crowds of from 1500 to 2000 people each night. The avowed determination of these opposers is :—

1. To close up the preaching places and churches.
2. To harass the Christians.
3. To drive out the missionaries and preachers.

Last Saturday evening they attempted to put some of these principles into action. Our preaching place in the west central part of the city at "Shusamba" is directly opposite the theatre where the Buddhist lectures were going on. On Saturday night, before the time for opening the meeting, a crowd had filled our preaching place, the theatre, and the entire courtyard between. Our chapel steps were so crowded it was with difficulty that I entered.

The first speaker, a young licentiate, Mr. Fujita, had barely begun when a young man in a loud tone demanded an answer to the question, "Of what use was it for God to create man?" Not being noticed by the speaker, he reiterated his question in still louder tones, and, announcing himself as the representative of a large part of the hearers, appealed to the latter as to whether or not his question deserved an answer. Some fifty young men and boys, evidently well trained for the occasion, supported him most vociferously, and in spite of the efforts of the president of the meeting and several policemen (who told him that the meeting was for preaching and not lecture, and therefore questions could not be publicly answered), the meeting was disturbed for some fifteen minutes, so that the speaker could not proceed. However, at the close of this time the disturbers arose in a body and left the hall in great disorder. While they were thus leaving the Christians united in singing "God is love," and the meeting was resumed with no further serious interruption. The pastor of the Hiroshima Church, near Tomegawa, preached, and I followed him.

At the close of the meeting we found the doorway and steps blocked with people, with some two or three hundred standing in the courtyard. When we appeared the crowd shouted in derision, using the contemptuous term for foreigner, "Ketojin." Several policemen advanced and cleared an opening for us in the crowd, so that we were able to go on, though the crowd pressed after us, into the narrow exit leading to the main street; here for about a minute the police held the crowd back, and we three walked on into the main street and around the corner, where I bade the Japanese brethren good-night, and went to the back of a store to get my bicycle. I had no sooner entered this store than the crowd came surging out. I supposed that I should find it waiting for me when I should go out. However, supposing we had all taken to our heels, the crowd rushed on, not only past me, but past the other two, and a short distance up a side street, but failing in their search, they returned to the main street, though this place was at a considerable distance from the store where I had left my bicycle. So after lighting my lamp, I quietly rode home.

On returning to the main street, the mob of some 200 to 300 people, finding the two Japanese preachers, began to deride and jostle and pelt them with gravel. A police-station being near by, they entered this, and cast themselves upon the protection of the two or three policemen there. The crowd refused to disperse, and the brethren were obliged to wait till midnight before venturing to return to their homes.

This occurrence is neither the beginning nor the end of a persistent opposition of the Buddhists. They have been attempting to break up meetings, to intimidate the Christians, and to injure their property in a mild way with much talk, but very little violence. Several weeks ago they published a list of the Christians' names, with all sorts of slander concerning them, and calling upon the people to refuse to elect any bearing that detestable name. The four churches in Hiroshima, in view of all this, have united, and, beginning to-night, will hold union preaching meetings each week in various parts of the city.

For some weeks we have been praying for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon the Church, and we believe this to be the beginning of God's answer, and we believe, too, that of the death-struggle of Buddhism.

December 5.—Since writing the above, we held a large union preaching service which was crowded with listeners. Very little demonstration was made on the part of opposers, until we were about to leave the building, when a noisy crowd of some 200 people greeted us with jeers, and followed us some half-a-dozen blocks, but no violence was attempted. It is most blessed to think that they can only do what "his hand and his counsel have determined beforehand to be done." Our smaller meetings have been undisturbed, and, since the Buddhist Theatre lectures have ceased, everything has been quiet.

CONGO BALOLO MISSION.

The greatest work in which Christians can be engaged is in carrying the glad news of redemption to our fellow-creatures in the dark quarters of the globe. Oh! to think of the millions in heathen darkness, their degradation, many without a ray of light, living in ignorance, cruelty, regardless of the value of human life, hating one another, actually devouring one another, for cannibalism is rife in many places.

Something is being done for them. Dr. Harry Guinness, lately returned from the Congo, came this way the other day and told us about it. With intense earnestness, with commanding ability, with a heart of love, he depicted the efforts made in the Congo districts to reach the dismal depth of sin, and the wondrous elevation to which the Gospel of the glory of God is raising these swarthy sons of Africa. Even there, where polygamy, cannibalism, and vices unmentionable once reigned, there is being taken out a people to his Name. Beginnings only, but progression established.

Great interest has been elicited in Cannes by the stirring tales unfolded by the young pioneer (tales verified from personal observation), who riveted the attention of audiences in the drawing room of Chalet des Syrphes, and in the Scotch Church—interest manifested by substantial contributions in silver and gold, and in the gift of pictures, etc. One friend, Mr. J. F. Tufnell, promised £80 a year to support a missionary on the Congo. Others, pricked in conscience by a sense of neglect hitherto, formed in their inmost hearts a determination to do what they could in the future. One High Church clergyman sat up all night reading with avidity "Our Last Two Years," written by the talented authoress, Miss Lucy E. Guinness, and said that he felt he must give up his parish and become a missionary.

Great is the sphere of work for Christ in heathen countries. Hasten to bear a hand; hasten to spread the glad tidings, personally or substitutionally, with your gold, for the business presses.

CHRISTIAN MISSION COLONY.—Mr. W. F. Davis, of Mount Washington, Chelsea, Mass., is now organising a "Christian Mission Colony," where people can live for 100 doll. a year. All who join must sign a covenant that they repent of their sins, give all to God, take God as their Father, Jesus for their Saviour, the Holy Spirit for their Sanctifier, the Word of God for their Creed and rule, Christians only for their intimate friends, and God's promises for their inheritance.

ON THE BLAENAVON MOUNTAINS.

THE town of Blaenavon, with a population of about 10,000 souls, composed principally of steel-workers and iron-workers, is located in one of the bleakest spots in northern Monmouthshire. The major portion of the town is built on the slopes of the barren hills which environ it on either side. The inhabitants are chiefly poor people of the industrial class, their average earnings being about 2s. per day when working a full week. Most of them, having large families to provide for, find it no easy matter to make both ends meet.

In this district in 1878 Pastor Owen Tidman commenced pastoral evangelistic work. He set about preaching the Gospel in halls, cottages, and every other available building; also in the open air throughout the district. He made personal visits from house to house, distributing tracts, inviting the inmates to come to the Gospel meetings and to send their children to the Sunday-school. This was attended at the outset with great opposition and much persecution, but with wonderful results for good.

After some months, the liquidation of the Iron and Steel Company was followed by indescribable scenes of poverty and distress among the people. During the twelve months of its existence many were compelled to go and seek employment elsewhere, traversing the mountains by day and by night, and often returning to their desolate and dreary homes having failed in their quest. Houses were stripped of their furniture, which was disposed of in order that the families might have bread. In this crisis Mr. Tidman and his devoted wife indefatigably laboured, cheering the poor with words of consolation and sympathy, and providing free meals by the help of kind friends both from far and near who had heard of the distress. And such was the love for the souls of these people and their families that both Mr. and Mrs. Tidman divested themselves of all the garments they and their family of seven children could spare in order to cover the half-naked ones and be instrumental in bringing them to Jesus.

Although the works were re-opened the neighbourhood has never fully recovered from the effects of the failure, and with the continued low standard of wages the workpeople have not been able to do much to better themselves or their families. In the winter months many are greatly tried through the severe weather which prevails on these bleak mountain sides. Through the instrumentality of Mr. and Mrs. Tidman various efforts have been put forth to reach the people. Gospel services, cottage meetings, children's services, Band of Hope and temperance meetings for adults, Bible readings and evangelistic services, etc., have been held, besides visitation of the sick, personal dealing from house to house, Sunday-school, and a free lending and circulating library. Addresses have been given in the brick-works, and the whole has been abundantly blessed of the Lord.

The Sunday-school numbers about 400 scholars, most of whom have been gathered from the woods and lanes. There are about 130 in Christian fellowship, most of whom have been brought to Christ through the earnest and unwearied labours of Mr. Tidman and his devoted wife. The majority of them were people who spent their earnings in the alehouse, and lived in practical ignorance of God and his salvation. Many cases could be cited of both men and women who have embraced Christ through the Gospel, and whose once wretched homes have been exchanged for comfort, cleanliness, and happiness.

Mr. Tidman has been remarkably successful in healing the sick, many of whom had been given up as hopeless by medical practitioners. Some thousands of patients, who have passed through suffering from various painful and sometimes long-standing maladies, have had these cases most kindly and patiently considered, and have been treated in a most skilful manner. The evangelist is frequently called up during the night to attend on sick ones far and near, and he may be often seen wading through deep snow or plodding through heavy rain to administer relief or speak a few comforting words to the dying. He keeps open house, to which the poor sick ones are invited for succour or advice. Little children have been brought in blankets, perambulators, &c., to seek the advice and assistance of this devoted servant of God, and have been greatly benefited. The names of Mr. and Mrs. Tidman have become as household words among these poor people throughout the district.

In addition to the labours enumerated, Mr. Tidman holds evangelistic services in the adjoining towns and villages, and has been eminently successful in the "edifying of the body of Christ" and the conversion of his fellows, many of whom are living earnest, godly lives, and are instrumental in leading others to Christ.

A change, however, we understand is to take place owing to the continued ill-health of Mrs. Tidman, and some of the family for whom Mr. Tidman has had deep solicitude for about three years. The result of an interview with a physician was that the very changeable weather on these bleak mountains was militating seriously against Mrs. Tidman's health, and a removal was urged. Still they laboured on, looking to the Lord, and hoping for improvement, being reluctant to quit the scene of labour in which they had been so greatly blessed. Last year, however, Mrs. Tidman was so prostrate that deep anxiety prevailed as to her recovery, and Mr. Tidman was compelled to think of removing to another sphere as soon as the Lord should open a door. We are glad to state Mrs. Tidman is a little better.

After prayerful consideration Mr. Tidman has been led to undertake a sphere of labour in South Monmouthshire. We believe it is his intention to open up some special Gospel effort among the tin-workers, etc., large numbers of whom are being ruined by the drink and live totally unconcerned about salvation. Great sadness prevails among all the poor people at Mr. and Mrs. Tidman's removal, which is stated to be a great loss to the entire district. The pastor and his wife will be leaving about the end of February. They will be thankful for any books, tracts, etc., which may be addressed to Pastor Owen Tidman, 39, Park-street, Blaenavon, up to the end of the month; after that the address will be Ebenezer Cottage, Magor, Mon. W. J. M.

MESSRS. MERTON SMITH AND BELL.

THESE evangelists have been continuing the services during the week here under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. On Monday night Mr. Smith told the story of his early life and subsequent conversion to God, taking the opportunity at the different stages of the address of pointing out the loving kindness and mercy of God, and urged his audience to immediate decision. At the close of the meeting a large number made public profession of their decision for Christ.

Deep regret was felt when it became known that Mr. Smith had received a wire stating that his father had become unconscious. When he announced that he felt it to be his duty to cross to Scotland on Tuesday night, hope was entertained that in the providence of God he would be back for Thursday's meetings, but the death of his father prevented this. His place at the night meetings was filled successively from Tuesday to Friday night by the Rev. Dr. Williamson (Belfast), Mr. D. A. Black (sec. Belfast Y.M.C.A.), Rev. Henry Montgomery (Belfast), and Mr. J. Ritchie Bell. The afternoon meetings have been well attended and have been much enjoyed.

Mrs. Smith gave on Wednesday afternoon an interesting account of Christian work in Chicago, and urged the ladies who were present to take part at once in some active Christian work.

The mission has now closed, although large numbers of people were very anxious to have it continued, but can it be truthfully stated that it was a time of real blessing to many? Regarding the numbers who have made public profession of their conversion, suffice it to say that they far exceeded the expectations of the promoters of the mission.

It should be added that Mr. Bell's sweet power of song proved a great attraction to the meetings, and doubtless the Gospel sung so tenderly and sweetly, and listened to so eagerly, found a lodging place in many hearts. C.

WORLD'S FAIR.—For the convenience of visitors to Chicago during the forthcoming Exposition, a mammoth hotel is being erected by the World's Fair Co-operative Bureau. The hotel is in blocks, somewhat after the plan of St. Thomas's Hospital, Thames Embankment, and will contain over 6000 rooms. These rooms will be let at a uniform rate of a dollar a day to those who pay a nominal registration fee beforehand, and thus secure the right of occupancy at any time during the Exposition. Apply to City Press Agency, 51, Coleman-street, London, E.C.

REV. J. McNEILL at ST. ANDREWS.

A SPECIAL evangelistic mission has been conducted during the past few days by Mr. McNeill in the Volunteer Hall, one of the largest in the town. Two meetings were held on Sabbath, Jan. 29. There were 1200 present at the first meeting and 1500 at the second. At the week-evening services large congregations assembled, over a thousand being present on the Wednesday. The afternoon meetings were also well attended.

The services have been characterised by great spiritual power. Mr. McNeill's fresh, faithful, and earnest expositions of the simple verities of the Gospel stirred many a heart to the centre, and led to unconditional surrender to the Lord Jesus. We have had proof upon proof that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. Many had the courage given to them to stand up and openly confess Christ. It was a time of deep solemnity and joy, and only eternity will reveal the full issues of this week's work for the Master.

Mr. Burke assisted Mr. McNeill by singing at each service several Gospel hymns. Many were moved as Mr. Burke set forth the Gospel in holy song.

This gray city by the sea has been considered a hard soil for evangelistic effort, but Mr. McNeill's mission has proved that there are many here eager to receive and ready to obey the Word when it is set forth in the demonstration of the Spirit and in power. SIM HIRST.

TEN YEARS IN TEMBULAND.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to thank the kind friend who continues to send us week by week a copy of your excellent paper? It is very stimulating to us lonely workers in the mission field to realise that friends in the home country are thinking about and praying for us.

It is now ten years since we left Lovedale Institution to found the new mission here. The Lord has heard the prayers of his people who have been pleading for the work here. We have now ten stations, thirty-five preachers (natives), nine day schools, including an industrial class for teaching shoe-making, with sixteen native teachers (male and female), and attended by 562 pupils. We have 469 communicants, and have received into full communion during the ten years no fewer than 339 converts. At present we have 172 converts under instruction with a view to admission into church membership. £1,176 have been contributed locally for the carrying on of the work. Of that amount we have sent out to help the Gospel in other parts over £198.

From these few facts it will be seen that we have very good cause for thanking God and going forward to a second decade with courage. The promise is sure if we only had more faith in it: "According to your faith be it unto you." But in this great battle which we are waging with heathenism does not much of the success depend upon those who are up on the mount holding up our hands? Any way, we feel that we need the prayers of the Lord's people, and we do hope that will not be denied us, but will be kept up unceasingly. Brethren, pray for us.

Yours sincerely, D. DOIG YOUNG.

Main Tembuland, South Africa, January 5.

Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS has just concluded a month's mission at Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle Mission Church, E. The Sunday services have been well attended, the large hall, which seats 3200, being almost filled. Large numbers entered the inquiry rooms, and there is every reason to believe that much real good has been accomplished.

At the week-night services, Mr. Inglis has spoken more especially to Christians, and only those who know his thorough acquaintance with the Word, and his happy manner of dealing with it, will be able to understand how greatly his services have been appreciated. Mr. Inglis also conducted a weekly Gospel Temperance meeting, and many pledges were taken.

Mr. Henry Thorne will be the missioner at the Edinburgh Castle during the month of February.

ORPHAN HOUSES, BRISTOL.

As we have now a great number of vacancies for girls in our five large orphan houses, erected to ceive 2,050 boys and girls who have lost both parents by death, I earnestly request Christian friends kindly to assist me in filling up these vacancies by seeking out suitable cases for admission into our institution, by letting the relatives or friends of orphan girls know that they can be received at the Ashley Down Orphan Houses, and by advising them to write to me for their admission.

We receive both boys and girls, bereaved of both parents by death, from their earliest days; keep the boys until they are between fourteen and fifteen years of age, when they are apprenticed; and the girls till they are about seventeen years old, when they are provided with suitable situations. Up to the time that our orphans leave the institution they have a most comfortable and happy home, they are boarded, lodged, clothed, and educated entirely free of all expense to their relatives, and, when leaving, each orphan is provided with an outfit.

When I began the orphan work, fifty-seven years ago, there was accommodation in this country for 3600 orphans only; but since that time, through the blessing of God which has rested so abundantly upon my labours, such an impetus has been given to orphan work that institutions have sprung up in various parts of Great Britain, by means of which more than 100,000 orphans can now be provided for, and for this reason it is that we have so many vacancies at the present time, and find it so difficult to fill them up.

I repeat, therefore, that I shall consider it an especial kindness if Christian friends will take the trouble to seek out destitute orphans, and advise the relatives of such to apply to me for their admission, as we have good and abundant accommodation for them and a large number of efficient helpers.

THE HILL TRIBES OF ASSAM.

The Welsh mission to the Khasi Hills in Assam has recently been visited by a medical missionary, Dr. Macphail, who labours among the Santals. His report of this out-of-the-world quarter may come as a glad surprise even to the diligent student of missions. The mission field is now so wide, and so rich in information, that it seems impossible to keep in touch with all that is going on. He writes:—

"They are an enterprising, industrious, and well-educated people; once amongst the most troublesome of the hill tribes, they are now the most prosperous. Out of a population of 200,000, about 8000 are now Christians, and there is every probability that in a few years the whole country will be Christian. Their chapel at Shillong is the largest and best-built mission church I have seen in India. It holds a thousand people with comfort, and is often well filled."

One of the most beautiful features of this mission is that the Welsh missionaries have carried with them that peculiar institution—the Welsh Sunday-school. Dr. Macphail writes: "It is attended by the entire congregation, some classes consisting of grey-headed men and women. Two advantages are that it affords a good field for voluntary mission-workers, and of these there are no lack; and it ensures that the great bulk of the people, old as well as young, non-readers as well as readers, are thoroughly well-drilled in the Scriptures."

We should not be surprised if the Welsh Sunday-school system became a favourite means of instruction in many other fields of missionary effort.

A THOUSAND BLIND AT TEA.—The annual tea and entertainment to the blind of London was recently held in the Queen's Hall of the People's Palace. About 1,500 sat down to tea, of this number 1,000 were blind, the remainder were guides. These unfortunate people appeared to be happy and contented, and greatly enjoyed their meal. On leaving each was presented with a new shilling, an orange, and a bag of biscuits. During the evening addresses were given by Mr. Spencer Charrington, M.P., Mr. Geo. Nokes, Mr. Wainwright, and others. The Christian Blind Relief Society has done good service in relieving the necessities of this afflicted class in a practical way.

LIVERPOOL WESLEYAN MISSION.

The anniversary of the Liverpool Wesleyan Methodist Mission, superintended by Rev. Charles Garrett, was celebrated on Monday last week. Some "living epistles" were produced, to the delight of the assembled supporters of the work.

Sam Myers, a former inmate of the Boys' Home, now a local preacher, told how he owed all he was at present to the home in Shaw-street. Another young man related the sad story of his life up to some eight months ago. He had been stoker on board a steamship, and on both sides of the ocean had sunk low in sin. A young man, the son of a well-known clergyman, bore in simple language the next testimony. He had been the despair of his father and mother, and had been in various institutions up and down the country. His reformation had been attempted in vain. He had gone from hospital in Liverpool to Woolton Convalescent Home, and from there to the home in Shaw-street. There Jesus had come to him just like a bright shining light. Mr. Garrett carried the hearty assent of all present when he said that no question of money could be put alongside such facts as these.

Mr. Edward Hutchinson presided over the meeting, at which an abstract of the annual report was read by Rev. J. Hodson Smith. The income for the year had been £3,450 1s. 3d., and the expenditure £3,438 18s. 3d., leaving a balance in hand of £11 3s. One class has over 200 names on the book, and an attendance of 120 at the quarterly visitation; another adult Bible-class has 200 attending. Temperance work is kept well to the front.

Rev. Charles Garrett spoke strongly of the needs of Liverpool. He held that every citizen is bound to interest himself, not only with the material, but also with the moral and religious condition of the city; he ought to make himself acquainted with the number of public-houses, as well as with the number of docks and the tonnage that entered the port. There are 700,000 people in Liverpool; and the census taken a while ago by The Daily Post, he believed, was not only just but generous, in showing that two-thirds of the people never cross the threshold of any place of worship. Power has passed into the hands of the people; and the vote of a dock labourer is as valuable as that of a millionaire. What follows? Power is in the hands of those who do not know how to use it. Cobden said we have made the people our masters, and must educate them. Further, we must Christianise them. Leave the people in the hands of the publicans, and you leave them in hands which will, under the influence of a Jingo song, put a man at the head of national affairs who will drive the vessel on the rocks of destruction. Mr. Garrett laid blame for the present state of things on legislators, who have gone on the principle of making it hard to do right and easy to do wrong by allowing drink shops to be planted in every street, and by leaving the people at the mercy of wealthy capitalists, who get out of property all they can and put into it as little as possible. Yet he had seen a marvellous change in Liverpool. Twenty years ago he had stood on that platform and denounced these evils, and next day received a lawyer's letter, from the Town Clerk, threatening him with a prosecution for the statements he had made. Liverpool was now awake, as witness the agencies at work in it. The Christian Church ought to feel this is their work, and come to the help of those who are doing it.

Literature for Manitoba.

Sir,—In response to an appeal from me two years ago, readers of The Christian have supplied me with religious papers, tracts, and books for distribution in my pastoral work through North-Western Manitoba. I thank one and all for their kind liberality, and would request a continuance of their valuable aid. Our young country needs the diffusion of sound Evangelical reading matter, particularly such as deals with Romish aggression. Recently the electorate of Manitoba declared emphatically at the polls in favour of one national system of education free from clerical control. Notwithstanding this, the Ultramontane hierarchy, backed by the Catholic vote of other provinces, demand that public money and the authority of the State shall be employed to establish and maintain separate schools to teach Roman Catholic dogma. Yours truly,

James Lang, Presbyterian Missionary.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

A meeting was held in Exeter Hall on Monday evening in order to hear from representatives of the American Council of the China Inland Mission some account of the movement beyond the sea.

Mr. Robert Scott, who presided, read Psa. lxxii., and very briefly introduced the proceedings.

Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner, who was lately expelled from Song-p'an, then gave a brief account of his experiences on the borders of Tibet. His wife and he were permitted to spend only a few months in that city, but that time was full of peril and anxiety. Recounting modestly and quietly the story of the persecution endured, and of the threatened drought, which was attributed to the presence of the foreigner, the speaker gave a vivid idea of the ignorance and prejudices of the people, the devotion of his own Christian servants in suffering gladly for the missionaries' sake, and illustrated by his own uncomplaining method of narration the simple heroism which still animates many of the messengers of the Cross among the heathen.

Miss Broomhall sought to plead the cause of the poor ignorant weary women of China, who lead loveless, hopeless lives into which, save for the story of the Gospel, where it has reached, no ray of hope ever penetrates. There is great need of sympathy and prayer; for it is not in every district that as yet there are tokens of fruit. There is need for much power, as well as of great patience in sowing the seed where for the time there seems little result. Still, even in the darkest places there are souls to be won—and this our sister illustrated by one or two encouraging incidents.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor indicated the purpose of the meeting—to meet transatlantic co-workers and hear something of what North America is doing for China. Already forty-three workers have gone out from the States and Canada to witness for God in China. Mr. Taylor made also loving reference to Miss Geraldine Guinness, who has rendered so much service, and who is now laid aside for a time. A letter was also read from Mr. Stanley Smith, telling of a safe voyage and of blessing en route amongst seamen and passengers.

Mr. H. W. Frost told how the Lord led him to give himself for China. His first offer of personal service in the mission-field had been rejected, to his intense sorrow. In his bitter disappointment he seemed to feel forsaken, but casting himself on God he was led in strange and wonderful ways into a position of responsibility of which he had never dreamed. He had been taught truly that God has more than one way of answering prayer. The Lord laid it on the hearts of some to give for the support of missionaries to represent them in China. Then came a very wave of blessing, many offers of personal service being received; and by and by in the leadings of the Lord an American Council was formed. Telling how he was led to move from Atica to Toronto and open, in simple dependence on God, a Home for those preparing for China, he showed how wonderfully the hand of the Lord had been made known in the whole matter. Story after story followed, illustrating afresh the beauty and joy of simply following day by day the leading of God, realising that in serving Him He gives every grace, and provides absolutely for every need. Lastly, and at the special request of the meeting, Mr. Frost added a few words on his visit to China, and the scenes he had witnessed there.

NUMBER IN SCRIPTURE.—Rev. Dr. Bullinger has arranged to deliver another course of Biblical lectures in Brunswick Chapel, Upper Berkeley-street, W. The special subject will be "The Supernatural Design and Significance of Number in Scripture." The lectures will be five in number, and delivered on Wednesday mornings at 11.30; the first on Feb. 22, and the other four on successive Wednesdays in March.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.—We are glad to note that at length, after nearly three years' effort, Mr Bright has succeeded by quite exceptional energy and perseverance in freeing the new buildings at Crouch Hill of the debt which pressed upon them. In the attention given to this, however, the General Maintenance Fund has somewhat suffered, and is now about £400 behind. Earnest efforts are being made to raise this amount by June next, and thus free every department from debt. In this endeavour we trust this helper of the blind will be successful. The address is—Rev. H. Bright, Homes for Aged Christian Blind, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N.

DOWN LODGE, WANDSWORTH.

For eight years a good and vigorous work has been going on at Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth—a work which, it will be remembered, grew out of Mr. Moody's successful mission in that South-Western suburb. The report just issued shows that the Sunday evening services have been well attended throughout the year. No difficulty is experienced in filling the hall and keeping it full. The Gospel is preached in its simplicity, and attracts all classes. The Sunday morning adult school has done good and useful service among working-men. The week evening prayer and other meetings and classes have been very encouraging in result—the men's and women's Bible classes have been specially fruitful.

As to the latter, it is stated that several of the men have not missed a single Friday for three years, and one has not been absent from the class once during the last six years! Some have left the neighbourhood, and several have been taken by death, but in each case "in sure and certain hope of the resurrection to eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Other branches, such as the children's services, open-air preaching, temperance effort, as well as the Benevolent Fund, have been carried on actively and usefully.

Closing, the committee urge the need of funds, and remark:—"Of the spiritual results of our labours we do not speak. We dare not reckon up conversions, even for our own encouragement, still less attempt to tabulate the varied sacred experiences that week by week call forth the thanksgivings of our workers. But we must record it to the glory of our prayer-hearing God that He does vouchsafe a rich and constant blessing to our work for Him. We have abundant cause, wherever we look, to thank Him and take courage; and for the full joy of the harvest we are content to wait.

Communications should be addressed, Mr. Clement F. Davis, 4, Westover-road, Wandsworth Common.

Mr. Spurr at Reading

A MISSION of ten days has been held in Wycliffe Chapel, Reading, by Rev. F. C. Spurr. The mission followed close upon much affliction in the church consequent upon the death of Mrs. Hailstone, but the cloud was big with blessing. From the first very large congregations assembled, until, on the Sunday, an overflow meeting was held. The closing service was a hallowed time—the building crowded in every part, and much evident blessing. God's hand was manifest throughout.

The congregations at the afternoon Bible Readings have been made up of all sections of the church. Large audiences assembled daily.

Miss Ada Rose sang the Gospel daily at the mission with wonderful sweetness. Her songs, rendered with telling effect, brought blessing to many.

SHIPWRECKED MARINERS' SOCIETY.—A well-attended meeting of this society was held on Friday, Feb. 3, at the Board Room, 28, Great George-street, Westminster, Admiral E. S. Adeane, C.M.G., presiding. For the current year, since Jan. 1, urgent relief issues were sanctioned in direct aid of 723 persons, comprising 570 shipwrecked or distressed mariners and fishermen, and 153 widows and orphans. The vessels concerned numbered altogether sixty-seven.

THE ORPHAN APPRENTICE HOME.—Mrs. Clarkson, Uplands, Bath, states in a modest little report, that this home was commenced in 1877 to receive orphan boys old enough to be apprenticed to different trades, so that they may be safely sheltered in a Christian home, out of the way of many temptations incident to youth, into which they might fall had they to go out into the world at so early an age. The number at present in the home is ten. Owing to the death of old friends, an urgent appeal is made for help.

"IN HIS NAME" is the record of the Ragged School Union, which, by its numerous and excellent agencies, is accomplishing a noble work amongst the outcast children of the metropolis. Ragged-school teaching may not be a popular ministry, but it is nevertheless a Christ-like service; and while there is much to discourage the most zealous teacher—for the discomfort, the stifling atmosphere, and the insults so often experienced are extremely depressing—yet the prospect of saving the precious souls of those for whom Christ died enables him to plod on, year in year out, in the most self-denying manner. The volume before us tells of various works and workers under the auspices of the R.S.U., and the record of the past year's efforts should bespeak for ragged-school toilers the prayers and sympathy of God's people throughout the kingdom.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF, E.

AT the usual monthly workers' meeting on Friday last, an address on "Praying in the Holy Ghost" was delivered by Rev. J. R. Wood, Dr. Soltau Eccles being in the chair. Basing his remarks on Jude xx., and observing that it must be taken in connection with Rom. viii. 26, Mr. Wood pointed out that to be enlightened and successful, prayer must be in union with the Spirit of God, and that this union would govern the quality, direction, and fruitfulness of our prayers. Prayer in the Holy Ghost will not be loud, because God's Spirit is a "still, small voice," neither will its worth be measured by its frequency or length, but by its quiet intensity and faith and love. It will be guided by a knowledge of the plans, aims, and objects of the Spirit, and it cannot fail because it is charged with the energy of the Holy Ghost, and must reach its mark.

Mr. Glenny, of the North Africa Mission, gave a brief account of the work, and introduced a small band of workers who are going out with him. Mr. Fenn, of Madrid, and Miss Hoff, on the eve of sailing for China, were also present.

THE CARRUBBERS' CLOSE MISSION.

CARRUBBERS' CLOSE is known far and near as the centre of an energetic, aggressive, and thoroughly evangelistic mission work. The new report just to hand shows that this good reputation is well maintained. The outdoor and indoor meetings of all kinds have continued to be greatly blessed, the Calton Hill services appearing to have been specially fruitful last year. The mission hall open, as in bygone years, nightly all the year round, has been well attended, while the great meetings in the Free Assembly Hall have been marvellously maintained. The Mizpah Band, Male Choir, and the little bands of workers in the Grass Market, and in cottage and kitchen meetings, have been very greatly cheered. Still further, in the summer, the Gospel has been carried afar into many country places.

Situated as the mission is in Edinburgh, it has been a necessity from the first that Gospel temperance should be kept well to the front. "We do not care (says the report) to hazard a guess at results. Cases of complete change of heart and aim in life having their beginning in our meetings are known to us, but there are doubtless many cases of conversion of which we know nothing, as every now and again we gain the knowledge of a case in an unexpected quarter."

The Band of Hope, Sabbath-school, meetings for Bible study and fellowship, together with the efforts for policemen, railway men, and many other special classes, have all shown token of fruit. In short, the impression left on the mind after a careful perusal of this report is that this mission, which we have known and valued in the past, is to-day as full of life and vigour as ever, and promises continue to yield, a rich reward in rescued souls.

We note with regret the statement of the directors that the support accorded to the mission has not been quite so liberal as in former years. They trust that the mere mention of this fact will suffice to awaken sympathy and call forth aid. The secretary is Mr. W. Robertson, 49, Warrender Park-road, Edinburgh.

Evangelistic Mission.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER is this month holding special services in connection with the Evangelistic Mission at Malden Hall, commencing on Sunday.

Mr. Shuldham Henry has paid a fortnight's visit to Beckenham, preaching with acceptance and blessing in the New Hall and other places, including two drawing-room meetings, all of which were well attended. "Many, we are all sure" (writes a correspondent), "have received the glad tidings, and are rejoicing in the knowledge of sins forgiven."

Mr. Russell Hurditch is witnessing increased blessing in the newly-opened hall in Willesden-lane, Brondesbury. It is believed that not a meeting has been held since the opening without some being converted. Several pleasing instances were witnessed on Sunday last.

The paragraphs given above will recall to many the glad scenes in which the three brethren referred to were associated in the times of the memorable revival which began in 1859, and the seasons of refreshing that were witnessed in the following years.

MR. MATTHEW BURNETT has concluded a temperance mission in Newmarket, with the most encouraging results, nearly 100 adult pledges were taken and much spiritual strength was received by the old members of the various societies.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

CAMBRIDGE.

AT the Cambridge Inter-Collegiate Christian Union, on Sunday evening, January 29, Captain Baring gave the address, enforcing in a very heart-searching and telling manner the elementary truths of the Gospel. An after-meeting was held, to which a good number remained. It was characterised by quiet yet real power, many making the relationship between them and their God a very real matter.

Rev. F. W. Alexander, Telegu missionary, gave the address, on Monday week, at the weekly C.U.S. meeting, Principal Moule presiding. A vigorous and deeply interesting account was given of the successful work being done in the central and eastern parts of India. Mr. Moule expressed his pleasure at welcoming a "veteran" soldier of Christ, whose work had been "patient with the grand patience of the Gospel, and who seemed actually vivified by the mere mention of his labours."

Rev. Dr. Perowne, Master of Corpus Christi College, presided on Monday week, over the annual meeting of the Cambridge branch of the Church of England Young Men's Society. In connection with this society, Mr. Moule, during October and onward, gave fortnightly Bible readings, on such subjects as Acceptance, Holiness, Glory, etc. Mr. Pratt (hon. sec.) records steadily growing interest in the Missionary Union, a decided impetus having been received from the visit of Mr. Wilder in February last.

A public meeting was held in the Guildhall on Tuesday week, in aid of the China Inland Mission. Rev. J. Hudson-Taylor presided. Mr. A. Polhill-Turner, one of the Cambridge "Seven" who went out to China about eight years ago, recalled his hearers to the time when the spiritual life of Cambridge was so marvellously revived by the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, to which visit he owed his conversion. He earnestly appealed for Holy-Ghost-filled men and women for the work in China. Mrs. Polhill-Turner, Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner, and Miss Broomhall also spoke.

Rev. Mr. Grubb's mission commenced on Saturday evening last, with a Bible reading in Trinity College. Among Christian circles in the University there is a spirit of great expectancy and of dependence upon God.

Mr. T. W. Canning in Edinburgh.

DURING the past fortnight this evangelist has conducted a special mission in Viewforth Free Church congregation. Mr. Morgan, the pastor, has been well known for many years for his evangelical ministry, and Mr. Canning had consequently a splendid opportunity for his peculiar gifts. The blessing has extended to all classes, both old and young; even those who have been believers for a long time have received much spiritual encouragement and stimulus. Mr. Canning has shown himself well adapted to deal with young men, one of the features of this special mission being the large number of young men who have made a stand for Christ. In all Mr. Canning addressed twenty-one meetings. Mr. Canning will conduct a similar mission in the Barclay Church, Edinburgh (Dr. J. H. Wilson's) beginning next Sabbath.

"Protestant."

THE London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes: "There is, I am told, considerable difference of opinion amongst some of the Evangelical leaders as to whether it is wise for them to continue to band themselves together under the name of 'Protestant.' A clergyman in London, who is looked upon as the future chief of the Evangelical party, holds very strongly that they are losing the sympathy and support of moderate men because of their close adherence to the term. It has come to be used in a sense in which it was never intended, and things are done in the name of 'Protestantism' which it is felt are not a credit to Christian men. He therefore holds that they should favour the title 'Reformed.' On the other hand, Rev. Handley Moule insists strongly upon the retention of the word 'Protestant.' He argues that is a positive, not a negative word, and represents vital Christian tenets."

SWEATING.—The Woman's Herald gives a painful account of the condition of things at many of the fashionable dressmakers in regard to the hours worked by the assistants, the time given being generally from 8.30 a.m. to 8 p.m., or 10 or 10.30 p.m. The statement made by one of those toilers is almost too painful for reading, yet if there is a vacancy, it is stated, fifteen or twenty candidates will apply for it, though the wage may be only five shillings per week.

Letters to the Editor.

THE GOSPEL IN IRELAND.

Sir,—We notice in your issue of last week a paragraph in "Irish Notes," which we should be thankful to you to let us amend. It was the generosity of English friends and sympathisers with the isolated Protestants of the south and west of Ireland which gave the £1,000 in aid of the Church of Ireland Sustentation Fund for the maintenance of its Gospel in the poorest parishes. We, as the honorary secretaries of the fund in London, had the honour and joy of transmitting it to the representative Church body in Dublin, as a token of the fellowship of English Christians.—Yours sincerely,

Sophia M. and A. St. G. C. Nugent.

SACRAMENTALISM.

Dear Sir,—I have read with interest the letters in The Christian upon this important subject. Will you permit me to call attention to a striking omission in Scripture, which is most suggestive, when the circumstances are taken into account? I refer to the epistles addressed by the Apostle Paul to Timothy and to Titus. In not one of the three is there any mention of, or direction as to the ministration of, the Lord's Supper, or of baptism. Special prominence is given to the preaching of the Word. Other matters connected with church arrangements are treated of, but not one word as to the Lord's Supper.

I am aware that Titus iii. 5 is considered by many to refer to baptism. I do not think that it does; but if we allow that it does, it will make it but the more remarkable that there is no allusion to the Lord's Supper.

What were the circumstances under which these epistles were written? They proceeded from an apostle to the presiding bishop or presbyter of the churches. Could it be possible that under such circumstances St. Paul could have written such letters to such men, if sacramentalism occupied his mind, or demanded his injunctions.

The fact is that the glorious Gospel of the grace of God in Jesus Christ shone brightly into his heart, from whence issued the solemn and loving admonitions to those two ministers of the early Church. May we all be taught and led to "speak the things which become sound doctrine."

I am, dear Sir, sincerely yours,

John Hawker.

Cotleigh Rectory, Honiton.

P.S.—I do not wish to esteem lightly any Christian institution. Above all do I value the ministry of the Word, for the efficacy and blessing attaching to baptism and the Holy Communion are closely connected with that.

POPERY IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Sir,—During a brief visit to Buxton last week I entered the remarkable old parish church of St. Anne, which, I believe, was closed for some years, but is open again for regular services. Moving about the country a good deal, I see many churches and varied degrees of Ritualistic surroundings, but I must confess I was quite unprepared for the unblushing Popery which obtains in this church, where the Mass, High or Low, is evidently performed daily. The order of services conspicuously placed in the porch I have carefully copied, and as it is so remarkable and startling, I do hope you will be able to present it to your many readers just as it is. It needs no comment from me, but if this is what our beloved Church of England is drifting into, then the sooner all her faithful and loyal members come out of her the better. In addition to the order of services alluded to, there is side by side with it the following notice:—

"Intercession.

"Of your charity pray for the souls of" (here follow the names of thirty-two deceased persons, including the late vicar, "William Lear, priest," who died three years ago).

I will now, as briefly as I can, describe what we saw inside the church (for I had a friend with me). Round the walls I counted eighteen framed pictures, representing scenes in the life of our Lord (stations of the Cross, etc.). In front of the "altar" are suspended seven sanctuary lamps, in ruby glass, which, we understand, are kept always burning; on each side stands a gigantic candlestick, and above the "altar" six smaller ones, with a large bronze crucifix between them, and immediately on the left is a still more conspicuous painted crucifix. On the centre of the "altar," which is a narrow shelf, and not a table, stands the Romish Tabernacle, and on the covering of the "altar" the following Latin words are embroidered: "Adoremus in aeternum sanctissimum sacramentum." In addition to all this, there are many other things utterly inconsistent in a Protestant church, such as a processional crucifix, banners, Sanctus bell, etc., and in a large rustic grotto in the north wall lies a painted figure of the infant Saviour.

The state of things thus revealed is calculated to sadden the heart of every loyal member of the Church of England; and I would here ask, what is the Bishop of the diocese about, to permit these illegal practices, and innovations in the Protestant Church of England? Buxton is in the new diocese of Southwell, I believe, and as the High Church sympathies of the Bishop are only too well known, I fear he will hardly take action against the "priest" he has placed in charge since the death of the late vicar. I have, however, written to his Lordship, and sent him a copy of the order of services, etc., and await his reply with some curiosity.

It is quite evident that since the unfortunate Lincoln judgment these Romanising "priests" are making rapid advances, and are introducing, without fear of interference from their Bishops, services and ritual utterly foreign to the Reformed Church during the last 300 years, and are converting their churches into Popish mass houses. What is to be the end thereof? God's blessing must depart from those churches where idolatry and superstition prevail, for "He loves simplicity and purity in our worship, and deems that service most acceptable which is most spiritual and least tainted with the material and sensuous."

This letter is already too long, and I refrain from further comment, but trust that in one of your next issues you will find room for the facts I have given, and which I hope may be the means under God of opening the eyes of those who view with indifference the introduction of strange ritual and services into their churches, seeing what it will inevitably lead to if unchecked.

Yours truly,

Francis Palin.

ROME AND THE BIBLE.

Sir,—It is astounding to see how rare are the Protestants who really understand the position taken by the Papal Church in reference to the circulation and the reading of the Bible, and how few of these consider it their duty to make the blessed Book known among the millions of souls that are groping after truth in the darkness of that baneful system. Bible societies among Roman Catholics are an altogether forbidden thing, being formally anathematised in the Syllabus; and in Romish lands the colporteurs who go about trying to disseminate the Scriptures have to face much opposition that is due solely to the priest.

It is only recently that in Barcelona the Protestants managed to open a kiosk in one of the most central avenues of the city (which, very curiously, was the property of the corporation) for the exclusive sale of Bibles in the languages of the Peninsula. And what impression did this new departure make on the captains of the Papal host? Did they set up a rival kiosk to sell their own Bibles, and thus compete with the Protestants in the good cause? No, indeed! All that they did is found in a copy of El Correo Catalan, which thunders the strongest possible protest against it as being "an awful scandal." I cannot give the whole of this philippic, but in it we are informed that in doing this "the accursed children of Luther's reformation" were allowed far more freedom than is conceded by the law of the country. After making the gratuitous statement "that the filthy merchandise that is usually sold there at a low price has not found many purchasers," which is attributed to "the mercy of God and the stupidity of the Protestants themselves," it goes on to petition the local authorities "that the agents of iniquity be expelled from the Catholic city of Barcelona, even as Christ expelled from his Father's house the traffickers whom He found desecrating it!"

Your readers may ask if this is not merely a private view of the subject. The publication in question is the semi-official organ of the Ultramontanists in the north-east of Spain, issued under the express patronage of the Episcopate, and with the Pope's blessing. Not very long ago its editor was presented with a golden quill, to which most of the eleven hundred clergymen who are set as parish priests over the Catalan provinces had subscribed.—Very truly yours,

F. de P. Castells.

ANGLO-AMERICAN ARBITRATION TREATY.

Sir,—At the Peace Congress, held in Berne in August last, a resolution was adopted in favour of a universal petitioning in favour of peace by the peoples of all countries. In accordance with this resolution, a meeting of representatives of British Peace Societies was held recently, when it was considered that the most practical step to take in this country would be to endeavour to obtain signatures to a petition in favour of the adoption of a Treaty of Arbitration between Great Britain and the United States of America.

Many of your readers are probably aware that in accordance with a resolution of Congress, the President of the United States of America has already invited other nations to conclude Treaties of Arbitration with the United States, so that all that remains to be done is for any Government to accept the invitation.

Mr. W. R. Cremer, M.P., has given notice of a motion in the House of Commons urging the Government to accept the invitation of the President, and it will be desirable that petitions should be presented when Mr. Cremer's motion comes on. Forms of petitions for signature may be obtained at the offices of the Peace Society, 47, New Broad-street, E.C.; or of the International Arbitration and Peace Association, 40, Outer Temple, Strand, W.C.

Yours sincerely,

W. Evans Darby,

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

If I were walking on the cliffs of Dover in company with my sons, I should not go, with my clear head, and stand on a jutting bit of crag, in case I should endanger their lives. Even so with drink: I abstain for my children's sake, for my neighbours' sake. —Spurgeon.

It is very touching to observe in all these poor little things a yearning after the idea of a mother, poor little orphans that they are! They are encouraged to speak of all their little troubles. And one came and said, "Oh, ma'am, tell me, have I got a mother?"—A Mildmay Deaconess.

You ought to go to your class, not to utter some excellent general truths, but to carry a message to children whose individual names you know, whose characters you have studied, whose growth and progress you are interested in, and whose future development is your care.—The Bishop of Peterborough.

Workhouse children have nothing, can acquire nothing they can call their own—no toys, books, money. Their life is a species of socialism and communism of the worst type. They grow up without an idea or elementary conception of property. Their very articles of clothing are interchangeable.—Rev. J. O. Bevan, M.A.

Joseph and Mary went one whole day supposing the child to be in their company. Just what fathers and mothers do still. But the children, without their noticing it, have left them—dropped out of the line. They cannot be what we were. They have something to think, to do for God, that we never thought, that we never did.—Canon Scott Holland.

My impression is that the Bible occupies a less prominent position in the teaching of the young than it did twenty or thirty years ago. But I trust that better days are coming, or that we shall find out some other means of bringing home to the hearts of the children those truths which they used once to learn in their day-schools.—The Archbishop of York.

I but faintly realised the extent of the practice of giving opium to mere babies until I called a meeting of my native helpers especially to consider the subject. A few days afterwards I called upon nine native families—Christians—and six of them confessed to me that it was given to their children. "The little things," they said, "gave less trouble." —Rev. A. W. Pruntch.

See the mother with her children! What a genius she displays! How she cheats their little hours of temptations, and tides them over the rough places that her eyes sees lying like sunken rocks before her little ships. How skilfully she stills and heals their impulsive little passions by her sudden and absorbing surprise at some miracle in a picture-book, or some astonishing sight under the window.—Dr. Alex. Whyte.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

THERE are now forty-four Associations in Germany which open their rooms daily.

Y.M.C.A. work progresses in Ceylon, there being now twenty-one branches, with 631 members.

A Y.M.C.A. has recently been formed at Kilmeny, Islay, and already a number of young men have become members.

The International Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations takes place at Indianapolis, Ind., May 10 to 14.

The Association at Aintab, Turkey, has a building of its own, the gift of a Christian friend. Its membership is 120, with a youths' section numbering 150.

The Record of Winnipeg states that the work of the Y.M.C.A. in the Manitoban capital has lately been pushed with great vigour, and accompanied by much interest.

A series of evangelistic meetings are being conducted by the members of the Aberfeldy Association every Sabbath evening. They are largely attended, much appreciated, and full of promise.

The German Y.M.C.A. League has decided to employ a second agent to visit the different Associations, in order to bring the general work and the Associations more in touch with each other.

Mr. J. J. Atkinson, for twenty-eight years secretary of the Islington and Highbury Y.M.C.A., has been heartily co-operating in Y.M.C.A. work in Cambridge, where he is now residing, and his services have been much appreciated.

During the past year, 741 new members and associates joined the Manchester Y.M.C.A., and 1434 entries were made in forty-five evening commercial classes. 543 Bible classes and other religious meetings were held, with an attendance of 9739.

The Camden-road Association gives in the February issue of its little magazine encouraging accounts of progress and real result. A series of missionary meetings is proving a great success. The annual meeting is announced for the 26th inst.

The "Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. Bulletin" for February contains portraits of Mr. William Henderson, Devanha House, the late Dr. Andrew Bonar, and of Dr. Pierson, of America. The late Colonel Kirby left the Association a splendid collection of books.

The Bradford Monthly (Y.M.C.A.) gives a bright and encouraging account of the work of the past month. The mission bands have been in full operation, the P.S.A. has gone on well, and the evangelistic meetings have been well attended and fruitful.

The annual meeting of the Devonport Y.M.C.A. was held on Wednesday, February 1st. The secretary (Mr. S. R. Mabin) reported an increased membership and many signs of spiritual blessing. The financial statement showed a slightly reduced deficit.

A crowded meeting was held by the Greenwich Y.M.C.A. to celebrate the opening of new premises at 31, London-street. Mr. George Lidgett, L.C.C., occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. Hind Smith, R. Hughman, W. A. Wilson, and others.

The annual meeting of the Alva Y.M.C.A. was lately held in the Christian Institute. The president, Mr. John M'Whirter, presided over a large gathering. The secretary's report showed that fifteen names had been added to the roll, making the membership at present sixty.

The following towns were visited during the past month by Mr. W. A. Boyd, District Travelling Secretary for the midlands of Ireland, Athlone, Athy, Bray, Kingstown. Good meetings were held and a great opening for Y.M.C.A. work is manifest. The Dublin Association reports an increasing membership.

The annual members' meeting of the Penge and Anerley Association was held on February 1. The report told an encouraging story of revived interest in the work, and the outlook for the future is a cheering one. Major-General Lewis presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. J. Walmsley and others.

Mr. Matthew Lochhead, who has been compelled by ill-health to give up his work at Lovedale, and is now settled in Johannesburg, writes that the Y.M.C.A. there has ceased to exist, and the building is being used as a court-house. Efforts are, however, being made to revive it. A Scotch firm has made an offer which has enabled the Association to build new premises. The great evil of the town, he states, is drink.

A conference of Christian workers was held on Tuesday last at Princess House, Brompton-road. Dr. Gage Brown presided, and an address was delivered by Mr. Thorne, who told of the remarkable growth of the P.S.A. movement and advocated the adoption of its principles. He also urged special meetings for different classes, e.g., a meeting for butchers, bakers, and for milliners, etc., in the Young Women's Association. A short conference followed the address.

The Sheerness Association has been celebrating its seventh anniversary. The hon. secretary's (Mr. E. J. Penney) report showed that the spiritual work was never better than at the present time, for the members are doing a grand work at the lodging-houses on Sunday evenings, village work, and early Sunday-morning prayer meetings. The building fund has not met with the success the committee hoped. The Association are greatly in need of rooms, for at present only one meeting a week is possible.

The work this quarter at the City of London Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, is going forward with much blessing and success. The Sunday-afternoon meeting commands an attendance of more than a hundred. Rev. F. B. Meyer's class on Saturday afternoon fills the Lecture Hall; he is lecturing on lessons from the Ten Commandments. Professor Adeney, of New College, commenced on Tuesday evening last an interesting course of four weekly lectures on "The Progress of New Testament Revelation," with questions at the close.

The N.B. Daily Mail has an interesting article on "The Religious and Educational Work" of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., pointing out that, with a roll of over 9000 members, the united Associations of that city are the largest in the world. During his investigations the writer of the article saw and heard "much, alike gratifying and significant, as to the amount of good being accomplished in countless ways amongst the members, the majority of whom belong to that most impressionable and fateful period of life, between seventeen and twenty-one years of age."

Speaking in the Kilburn Town Hall on Friday night, at the annual meeting of the local Y.M.C.A., the Ven. Archdeacon Sinclair said that during the last few months he had visited a great many association centres in London and the provinces, and had seen a great deal that had been very delightful and encouraging. A real hearty good work was going on. Y.M.C.A. work had this very distinct advantage—that, while providing for the spiritual, intellectual, and physical functions of young men, it had, from the very beginning and throughout its remarkable development, been guided by the strong and undeviating principle, that the spiritual should be put first.

The Archdeacon of London, speaking last week at the annual meeting of the Manchester Association, said he regarded the leading object of such associations as the encouragement of members in their Christian course, and the criticisms which had been passed upon them were not of very great force, because they failed to recognise that this was the chief object of the associations. He did not believe in such associations as that except they were founded on such principles. Other clubs might be very useful in their way, but they did not very much concern Christian people. But while the chief object of the association was such as he had indicated, it had many important secondary objects, such as the intellectual and physical recreation of its members.

The assertion made in some quarters that "Y.M.C.A.'s are a failure," has certainly not shaken the spirit of Fulham Y.M.C.A. workers or sympathisers, for on Wednesday last the Town Hall, Fulham, was filled with a most enthusiastic audience. Sir Charles Bernard presided. The secretary's report showed a membership of 134, representing a wide Christian influence brought to bear in the neighbourhood; the new premises at Fairlawn have proved most suitable, and the various meetings, Bible classes, &c., are encouraging. A mortgage of about £1600 upon the building must be paid off in September next, and an effort is to be made to raise this amount. The Foreign Missionary branch has been well sustained. Sir Charles Bernard, who presided, highly commended the work on the ground of economy and direct evangelical effort. Rev. R. Moore, formerly of St. John's, Fulham, gave a stirring address on "Sonship."

BIBLE SOCIETY NOTES.

AT its last meeting the Bible Society Committee made, at the request of the South American Missionary Society, a grant of 1000 copies of the Gospels and Acts at reduced prices and in various languages, for use in the River Plate.

The circulation of Scriptures for the year 1892 in the Society's South Russian Agency, which includes Transcaucasia and Turkestan, as well as the Southern provinces of European Russia, has been the largest on record—about 178,000 copies having been issued.

Recent advices from Antananarivo report that the whole of the consignment of shilling Bibles sent out not long since by the Bible Society, and amounting to 10,000 copies, have been sold, and that thousands of the people are still eager to obtain copies. A new edition of the book is now leaving the press, and full supplies will soon be despatched to the Northern and Southern Committees of Madagascar.

IRISH NOTES.

THE agents of the Belfast Town Mission visited last year 52,000 homes, and induced 127 families to connect themselves with Christian Churches.

The nurses of the Belfast Society for the Sick Poor visit patients at their homes, give them a supply of milk and other comforts, and have at present 178 families on their list.

Gospel missions have been held at Ballingrane by Mr. T. M. Carleton, of the Irish Evangelisation Society; at Larne, by Mr. F. Inwood, of Scotland; at Portrush, by Rev. W. J. Christie; and at Blackhall-place, Dublin, by Rev. Jas. Kirkwood.

Mr. Foster Green, a member of the Society of Friends, well known for his large-hearted philanthropy towards various objects, gave on Friday last a cheque for £1000 to aid the Belfast Society for home mission work among the blind.

Rev. Peter Thompson, of the East London Mission, lectured on Thursday night to a crowded audience in St. Enoch's Presbyterian Church, Belfast, on behalf of the fund for the relief of the city arabs of Belfast, in connection with the Belfast City Mission.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

REV. A. HALLIDAY DOUGLAS, F.C. minister at Huntly, has received a call to the Presbyterian Church, Cambridge.

Mr. W. T. Stead will address a meeting on social questions in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, to-morrow (Friday) evening.

Numerous cases of cruelty to children have lately come to light in different parts of Scotland through the energetic action of the N.P.S.C.C.

In one of his Gifford lectures on "Natural Religion" at Glasgow, Principal Caird made a strong defence of the Bible doctrine of the Trinity.

The Dundee Tract Society aims at visiting the whole city with Gospel leaflets. A speaker at its annual meeting said there are many districts never visited by the workers.

The condition of female farm labourers in Scotland is being brought to the attention of the Home Secretary with a view to Government inspection of the circumstances under which they work.

Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard have aroused much interest in temperance circles in Edinburgh during the past week by their earnest and telling appeals. They were received with great enthusiasm.

At a temperance meeting in Edinburgh last week, Rev. John Kirk said it was his solemn conviction, based on observation and experience, that either the Church must destroy the drink traffic or the traffic would destroy the Church.

A lady and gentleman have not only sent £100 to the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland to pay the first year's rent of a country home, but have guaranteed the rent for some years to come. About £200 will be needed to furnish the Home.

Lady Aberdeen held a conference last week with a number of Aberdeen ministers and ladies of the "Onward and Upward" and cognate societies, the object being to consider how the association might become more effectual among women and girls.

A prominent figure has disappeared from social and civic circles in Aberdeen through the death of Mr. Geo. Jamieson, who was at one time Provost of the city. He was a warm adherent of the U.P. Church, and a ready helper of all educational and philanthropic work.

The Episcopal Mission in Edinburgh last week was sustained with energy by the various missioners. The mid-day services were not very largely attended, but some of the evening meetings were large and marked by an earnest spirit. A leading feature of the mission has been the five evidential addresses in St. George's Hall by Rev. A. J. Harrison.

The anniversary of the Y.W.C.A. in Glasgow was an interesting occasion. It was reported that the membership of the Glasgow branches is over 3000. An institute is needed in the East-end of the city. At the meeting Mr. J. Campbell White, of Overton, promised £2000 towards the institute. Dr. Stalker, Lady H. Somerset, and Miss Willard addressed the gathering.

THE NEW HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN, 144, Euston-road, N.W., which enables poor women to consult qualified physicians of their own sex, was begun in 1872 with ten beds; but these were in such demand that since 1875 the number has been increased from time to time until in July, 1890, the New Hospital for Women, with forty-two beds, was opened. The beds have been continuously occupied ever since, and during this year no less than 450 patients have been treated in the hospital, and over 20,000 visits have been paid by out-patients.

Personalia.

Prebendary Calthrop attained yesterday (8th) his seventieth birthday.

Rev. Dr. T. C. Finlayson, of Rusholme Congregational Church, is lying seriously ill at Glasgow.

Mr. William Oatts, the esteemed secretary of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., is about to make a tour in Palestine.

Rev. T. and Mrs. Rutland, of the Orissa Baptist Mission, have just returned to England, Mr. Rutland being invalided.

The Bishop of Norwich, one of the oldest of English bishops, has felt needful to resign, to the regret of many who know and value his labour and influence.

Canon Henry Postance has, owing to ill-health, resigned the vicarage of Holy Trinity, Toxteth Park, Liverpool, to which he was appointed thirty-five years ago.

Canon C. Wareing Bardsley, Vicar of Ulverston, and brother of the Bishop of Carlisle, has, we hear, resigned his pastoral charge as a result of failing health and impaired eyesight.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, who left England several months ago on a visit to Australia, hoping to benefit by the sea voyage, has, according to intelligence just received, been ordered to Spain to recruit his health.

The Duke of York, our prospective King, made his entrance into public life as a speaker by presiding at a dinner on Monday on behalf of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Upwards of £2800 was subscribed by those present.

Rev. W. Ruthven Pym, Vicar of St. Andrew's, Sharrow, has been offered by the Archbishop of York the charge of Rotherham, vacant by the death of Rev. W. Law. Mr. Pym is an Evangelical, and would make a worthy successor to Mr. Law and Canon Quirk.

Rev. Glezen A. Reeder, pastor of Meth. Epis. Church at Olmstead Falls, Ohio, and his wife were suffocated by gas on the evening of Dec 26. Mr. Reeder was a devoted friend of missions, having recently given, from his limited means, 10,000 dols. for mission work in Rome, Italy.

Mr. Henry Varley left Bombay on January 11 for Poona, where a theatre has been taken for meetings. Subsequently he hopes to go on to Madras, Calcutta, and Lucknow. He must be back in Melbourne in March, but intends later on visiting China, Japan, and the Straits Settlements.

The late Mr. A. M. Ferguson, of Colombo, will be greatly missed in many circles, not least by passing missionaries, for whom he kept "open house." In his conduct of the Ceylon Observer he showed a strong spirit of independent and fearless judgment, especially in condemning what he believed to be against righteousness. He was a native of Ross-shire, N.B.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, from the island of Tongoa, in the New Hebrides, has been telling to delighted London audiences his story of Gospel perils and triumphs in the South Seas. He is open to accept invitations to address meetings in England during this month, and in Scotland during March. His present address is 7, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, London, N. When he is travelling we shall be glad to receive and forward letters to him.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson, whose illness at Hull we have already mentioned, is gaining strength, but very slowly. He is in a very feeble state, and requires constant care to avoid a relapse. Mr. Watkinson is not likely to resume work for a long time. The physicians insist on six months of absolute rest. When he is able to be moved they recommend that he should go to Bournemouth for a few months. It will, however, be several weeks before he will be able to undertake the journey.

Mr. C. T. Lipshytz, of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, started on Saturday last on a mission tour through France and Spain, in company with a friend who has for some years resided in the latter country. After visiting various French cities and towns, he will seek out the Jewish communities in Spain, in order to open up the Gospel to them and distribute the Word of God and evangelical literature. The home agencies of the mission will proceed as usual, under the direction of Mrs. Lipshytz.

The late Mr. John MacGregor.—It is proposed to raise a fund in memory of the late Mr. John MacGregor, who was one of the founders of the Pure Literature Society, and was specially interested in the libraries granted at half price by the society. More than 8500 of such libraries have been sent out for working-men, schools, and various institutions The committee feel that few things would be more suitable to perpetuate his memory than a fund to assist and to increase the number of these grants.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. William Forbes closed an eight days' mission on Sunday last at Stockton-on-Tees.

Richard Weaver's meetings on Sunday last at Eccleston Conference Hall were well attended, and many professed conversion, while Christians received a fresh impetus in the spiritual life.

Mr. James Sprunt has during the past three weeks been conducting evangelistic services and delivering Bible addresses to Christians at the Temperance Institute and Welcome Hall, Southport, Lancashire.

Rev. C. H. Yatman, the well-known evangelist, has been conducting a series of noon meetings in the Union Square Theatre, New York. They are known as the "Metropolitan Meetings," and have been much blessed.

A mission has closed at the Baptist Chapel, Breachwood Green, conducted by Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelisation Society. Large numbers attended the meetings every evening, and much blessing has resulted, especially among the elder scholars of the Sunday-school, several of whom have been brought to decision for Christ.

Mr. William Noble has conducted a brief Gospel Temperance mission at Cavendish Baptist Church, Ramsgate, with very cheering results. Very large audiences listened with rapt attention to his stirring appeals, and Christians have been helped by the high tone of the addresses, always founded on some text, or Bible incident.—George Greenway.

Mr. T. Goudie, a Scotch evangelist, has concluded a seven days' mission at Two Waters Wesleyan Chapel. It has been exceedingly fruitful. The services were largely attended, but the spiritual interest deepened every night; many anxious inquirers were dealt with in the inquiry room, and not a few have professed to give their hearts to the Saviour.

Glasgow.—Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver began a ten days' mission in the Tolbooth Hall on Tuesday week. The meetings have been very large indeed. The Word has been preached and sung with manifest power, and every meeting souls have enquired the way of salvation. Next Saturday these two young evangelists begin a mission in Renfrew Town Hall.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey had a very encouraging opening in their mission at Wilmington, Del. There were great crowds on the Sabbath in the Rink, with overflows. Mr. Sankey sang at both meetings, besides speaking at the overflows. Mr. Moody's rousing addresses at the Rink were chiefly bearing on the Christian life. At the after meeting in the church several rose for prayer.

Mr. Rowland Sturt, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting an eighteen days' mission under the auspices of the Leicester Ragged School Mission, and large congregations have been drawn together to listen to the old, old story which has been faithfully told. Many, both men and women, have been drawn to the Saviour. The meetings were brought to a close on Monday, Jan. 30, by a praise meeting, at which many testified as to their conversion.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—This servant of God has been with us for the last six days, in connection with the Chingford Congregational Church (Spicer memorial), and we have much reason to praise God for his visit. Believers have been roused and sinners saved. Though the ground was hard the Lord's power has been manifest, and eternity alone will reveal all that has been done. Our brother's addresses were with power, and many prayers are being offered that his work at Cardiff may be a blessed one. Would that his time with us had been prolonged.—H. M. S.

Westmancote.—Great interest has been manifested and much spiritual good accomplished as the result of a mission conducted at the Baptist Church here by Rev. Colin Chrystal, of Dunnington, from January 23 to February 2. Some forty or fifty have been deeply impressed, and several of these have professed decision for Christ. The earnest, quiet, touching appeals went straight to the conscience and heart. At the close of the service a large number of Christians stood and testified as having received blessing, and I do not remember a mission that seemed to promise more gracious, happy, and lasting results.—Edward Balmford.

Fulham.—A fortnight's mission has just been held by Mr. Henry Thorne at Fulham. The work was heartily taken up by Christians of all denominations, and special prayer-meetings were held beforehand at the Y.M.C.A. rooms. Mr. Thorne's afternoon Bible readings have been greatly appreciated, his clear expositions of Scripture helping many to understand and love their Bible better. The Gospel meetings in the Lecture Hall, Dawes-road, has drawn many to hear the Word, and the tokens of God's power unto salvation have been abundantly seen in the enquiry rooms. Workers in Fulham rejoice that a real fresh impetus has been given in the direction of revival; Christians have been aroused to more vigorous service, and sinners have been awakened to flee from the wrath to come.

Mr. Henry Lakin held during the last two weeks of January a deeply interesting mission in St. Alban's Parish, Liverpool. The vicar, Rev. C. J. Musgrave Brown, writes that his band of workers who for months had been earnestly sowing the seed, are now rejoicing over the harvest. The parish is one of the hardest and most degraded in Liverpool, seven-eighths of the population being Irish Roman Catholics of the lowest class, sunk in superstition, drunkenness, and sin. "Many have found peace, while others have been quickened to open their lips in praise and testimony. Whole families have been blessed. In one family the father, mother, three married sons, and son-in-law have come out for the Lord, and two of the sons are already seeking the salvation of their wives. Many other cases might be cited proving the manifest outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon our people."

Obituary.

DR. J. H. HEWER, HIGHBURY.

One of the most useful men and one of the brightest types of a Christian in the North of London, has been suddenly called to his reward, aged sixty-two. A medical man of wide and mature experience, he was, at the same time, a well-read Bible student, helpful alike to the saint and the sinner. His kindly services as a Christian doctor were given to Mildmay Conference Hall, China Inland Mission, and other religious institutions for many years. He was the friend and trusted medical adviser of the late Mrs. Pennefather—whom he did not long survive—and of very many others who now deeply mourn his loss.

REV. THOS. PEARSON, BELFAST.

Irish Methodist ministers have been cut down in rapid succession of late. Rev. Thos. Pearson is the third called away during the month of January. Deceased entered the ministry in 1850, and for several years acted as temperance secretary to the Methodist Conference. He was an ardent total abstainer, and wrote and published much on the subject, including a bulky volume entitled, "The Bible and Temperance." He also published several pamphlets and tracts on various subjects, and had a work ready for the Press on "Church Government." He was also an earnest student of the Apocalypse, and was a good preacher, a faithful pastor, and a true friend. He was sixty-six years of age, and his death is widely regretted.

MRS. MASSY.

Many will hear with regret of the sudden call "home" of this honoured servant of Christ, who died on Jan. 23, after five days' illness, at her residence, Newcourt, Bray, co. Wicklow. God had blessed her with many talents, which were laid at his feet for service. She had ever an open heart and ready sympathy for the needs of his work. At the Rescue Home in Marlborough-street, Dublin, she will be particularly missed, as she took a deep interest in this work, and did much for its improvement. In the Protestant Infirmary of the North Dublin Union Mrs. Massy was well known. Every week the wards were visited by her, and many a word of Gospel truth she dropped by the bedside of the sick and dying. At the Rescue Home in Kingstown she was a constant visitor, aiding with her means and counsel the good work carried on by that excellent institution. The grief of the inmates at the news of her death was very touching. Mrs. Massy leaves a husband and seven children to mourn her loss.

"Slipped on the Ice."

How wonderfully God uses trivial (as men call them) occurrences to work out his will, finds fresh illustration in the following testimonies borne at a recent noonday prayer-meeting in Willard Hall, Chicago, and given in The Union Signal:—Said one man, "I was passing and slipped upon the ice in the Temple doorway. In recovering myself I noticed the unusual character of the decorations of the arch (the State shields), and entered, following your beautiful corridor into this hall, where this prayer-meeting is going on. Here I have been converted to God—I, who have not been inside a church for twenty-eight years."

The same day another man stated: "I am only a transient in your city, but I chanced to step into this beautiful building, and found myself here with you, where I have found Christ, and go out into the world a new man."

Like testimonies multiply, and the hour is crowded with spontaneous expression from hearts too full for silence.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

MR. WOOLLEY has been giving a series of Gospel Temperance addresses in the Friends' Meeting House, Kendal.

Dr. Atkins, of Waterford, succeeds Mr. Henry Barcroft as president of the Irish Temperance League.

During the year 1891, £8,978 2s. 7d. was expended on intoxicating drinks in Irish workhouses—a sum which comes entirely out of the Poor Rates.

A convention of temperance workers was held on Monday week in the Wesleyan Chapel, Eastbourne. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. J. R. Berry and G. Armstrong Bennetts.

The Manchester Retreat for Inebriate Women, The Grove, Fallowfield, appears to be doing a very valuable work in the reclamation and restoration of women addicted to intemperance.

The Manchester W.C.T.U. held its annual meetings in Manchester last week. Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard were among the speakers. An encouraging report of the work was presented.

During the past year 1,045 persons have signed the pledge as the result of the Police-court Mission in Belfast, while 768 persons have signed the pledge at the office of the Irish Temperance League.

A Police Temperance Society at Hull which has just been holding its annual meeting consists of two superintendents, one inspector, eleven sergeants, ninety-one constables, and several ex-constables.

The annual meeting of the Bristol Temperance Society and Gospel Temperance Union was held at the Y.M.C.A. Hall on Monday week. Mr. J. S. Fry presided, and the large hall was crowded in every part.

The date of the public Methodist welcome to Miss Frances Willard has now been definitely fixed as Monday, February 27. The meeting will be held at Wesley's Chapel, and may be expected to be of great interest.

There are about 1,000 public-houses in the neighbourhood of the Irwell-street Mission, Manchester. Rev. J. S. Harris is, however, working hard against them, and drunkards are being steadily reclaimed almost every week.

"Poverty is only an accident and consequence of inebriety; is very rarely a cause. I have never seen a case in which poverty was a primary cause. . . . I never knew a case where drinking began in conditions of destitution."—Dr. T. D. Crothers.

The Manchester Police Court Mission records 458 cases dealt with during the past year, while the Salford missionary in connection with the Police Court has dealt with 846 women and girls during the year, making a total of 7,723 since the commencement of the mission.

The Leeds Wesleyan Sunday-school Superintendents' Union has passed a resolution urging "that in any measure of licensing reform it is essentially necessary that a clause should be inserted which will prohibit the selling of intoxicating drink in any form to children under sixteen years of age."

The Woolwich and Plumstead Temperance Council has addressed a circular letter to medical men in the locality, calling their attention to the terrible prevalence of intemperance, more particularly among women, and the responsibility which rests upon the medical profession with regard to the prescription of alcohol.

"The People's Café," opened in Cork, in the midst of a densely populous district, where there are few home comforts, is doing a good work. For the men it is a public-house without the drink; for the women it is a bright, cheery place where they can learn to sew or cook, and where they can get friendly advice and words of encouragement in the up-hill fight against their surroundings.

When (says Professor Goldwin Smith) I see the havoc—the ever-increasing havoc—which drink is making with the industry, the vigour, the character of the British race, I have sometimes asked myself whether, if it is incumbent on legislators to stop a cattle plague by closing the ports against contagion, the most deadly of all man plagues ought to be allowed to spread without control.

In an article on "the Increase of Insanity," which appears in the current number of the Fortnightly Review, Mr. W. J. Corbet says: "The fact cannot be contradicted that a large proportion of the annual admissions into lunatic asylums is to be ascribed to intemperance," and asserts that with the exception of "hereditary predisposition," intemperance is the most fruitful exciting cause of lunacy.

The World's Fair Temperance Headquarters, the hotel just completed at Chicago under the auspices of the W.C.T.U., was burned down Jan. 9, but only a few hours elapsed before lumber was on the ground for the beginning of a new structure. The hotel company announce that they stand by the enterprise and will make the new "headquarters" a greater success than at first contemplated.

The Book World.

WORTHIES OF THE PAST.

JOHN WYCLIF: Last of the Schoolmen and First of the English Reformers. By Lewis Sergeant. (5s. G. P. Putnam's Sons.) This valuable addition to the "Heroes of the Nations" series embodies the important results of modern historical research. The religious and political condition of England in the fourteenth century is admirably delineated. Perhaps no book for popular use has shown so clearly the extent and depth of Wyclif's work and influence. Mr. Sergeant's position may be expressed in two sentences taken from his final paragraph: "Wyclif was no mere forerunner of the Protestant Reformation, but the Reformer-in-chief. In the intellectual domain, in the field of ideas and of spiritual activity, he originated the movement which had its issue in the sixteenth century, when the Tudor monarchs rode but did not raise the storm." Of the reputed portraits of Wyclif, six are here reproduced. It is claimed in the preface that these have never before been brought together. It is not easy to determine which is most likely to be a faithful representation of the man while living in the flesh and fighting against ecclesiastical principalities and powers.

BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX: The Times, the Man, and His Work. By Richard S. Storrs, D.D., LL.D. (9s. Hodder & Stoughton.) This handsome volume of six hundred pages contains eight exhaustive lectures, and fills an important gap in English literature. The tenth and eleventh centuries are depicted with much vividness from social, ecclesiastical, and political points of view; and the personal characteristics of the great Abbot are set forth at length and his life-story developed in chapters which deal with him as a monk, a theologian, and a preacher. Finally Dr. Storrs writes upon Bernard's controversy with Abélard, and his relation to general European affairs. He says of the preacher of the Second Crusade: "Taking him for all in all, he stands before us, I am sure, by no means the supreme philosopher of his time, or its most untiring acquisitive scholar, but as noble an example as that time offers, or any time, of the power which intensity of spiritual force imparts to speech; of the power of that speech, as thus vitalised and glorified, to control and exalt the souls of men. I think of him in his physical frailty and his tender humility, refusing office and spurning all enticements of station, yet confronting Kings, Cardinals, and Popes, ruling and inspiring vast assemblies, raising armies, subduing rebellious minds and wills—sweeping, in fact, the nations before him with his impetuous and passionate discourse, over which brooded eternal shadows, through which streamed celestial lights, and which shot to its purpose from a soul full charged with energy." The work is the result of wide reading and much independent thought, and as there are many valuable foot-notes and a good index, it will prove of special service to students. To most people it will throw a flood of light upon the career of one of whom little is commonly known beyond the fact that he wrote the grand hymn which has been translated into English as "Jesus, the very thought of Thee."

EVANS' TEMPERANCE ANNUAL, 1893 (6d. Marshall Bros.), is a varied and useful miscellany of temperance facts, stories, and readings; well adapted for workers in the cause of total abstinence.

BIRTHDAY CARDS.—Here we have a pretty set of floral cards outlined for painting, and accompanied by helpful hints as to colouring. These may be had of N. E. F. C., 29, Avonmore Road, West Kensington, W. (6½d. per packet, post free). They will afford pleasant occupation for deft young fingers.

BURDETT'S HOSPITAL ANNUAL AND YEAR BOOK OF PHILANTHROPY, 1893.—This is a most useful compilation, containing details of a large number of charities. It will be found of great service as a guide to British, American, and colonial hospitals and asylums, medical schools and colleges, religious and benevolent dispensaries, nursing and convalescent institutions. (5s. Scientific Press, 140, Strand, W.C.)

CLEANSING, PURITY, AND POWER. By V. D. David, Tamil Evangelist. (Marshall Bros.) Visitors to Keswick last year made the acquaintance of the interesting author of these collected tracts. David writes from his own very real experience, and if his method of describing it sometimes involves incorrect theology, this does not render the experience untrue, nor in any sense lessen its importance. Many who could correct him in theology may be behind him in experience. There are a simplicity and quaintness about the style which make the book not only easy, but pleasant to read.

THE HIDDEN MYSTERY; OR, THE REVELATION OF THE WORD. By Robert Brown. (London: Nisbet.) Second series. Of this work the author says, "It is intended as an illustration of the origin, character, progress, and final issue of the life of God in the soul of man; as manifested in Jehovah-Jesus, pictured in the book of creation, unfolded in the book of the Divine Word, and wrought out in the heart of the sinner saved by grace." Starting with an exposition of the latter part of Psa. xix., the author proceeds to work out a parallel between creation and the work of God in man. No one who is familiar with the method of instruction adopted throughout Scripture will regard this parallel as too fanciful. The author is certainly not open to any such charge. Many striking and suggestive expositions will be found in the book, which indicates a careful and devout study of the Scripture, on the principle of "comparing spiritual things with spiritual." Considerable interest is added to the work by the wealth and variety of illustration which it contains. The author is not only a careful observer, but an omnivorous reader, and knows how to make good use of what he has acquired. Science, history, biography, poetry, and fiction are all pressed into his service. No devout student of Scripture will fail to find both profit and interest in this work.

A new series of TEACHERS' BIBLES is about to be issued by Messrs. Wm. Collins, Sons, & Co., Limited. As an addition to their Reference Bible, a supplement, entitled THE BIBLE READERS' MANUAL, and edited by Rev. Chas. H. H. Wright, D.D., Bampton Lecturer, will be bound up with it, the whole forming COLLINS'S TEACHERS' BIBLE. This new volume of Aids to Biblical Study will also include an Index of subjects, a Concordance, a Gazetteer, and a series of Maps.

Christian Endeavour.

THE society in connection with Richmond Hill Congregational Church at Bournemouth reports very gratifying success. There are now seventy-three active members on the roll, and the weekly prayer meeting has proved most hopeful, and is always well attended, as a rule over 120 being present.

The Myrtle-street Baptist Society at Liverpool has enrolled forty-one active and twelve associate members in the first six months of its existence. Four of the members have professed their faith in Christ, and two others have joined the church. Various methods of service have been adopted, and it is felt that there is every reason to be thankful for the society.

The Manchester and District Union Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour held good meetings on Saturday in the Congregational Church, Openshaw. In the afternoon Mr. Louis P. Nott presided over a large gathering. A paper on "Consecration—its relation to success in Christian work," was contributed by Mrs. Higgs, of Greenacres, Oldham. A testimony meeting followed, with addresses on "What has the Christian Endeavour Society done for me." Afterwards Rev. J. E. Roberts took the chair at an open meeting, and reports of the work of the Union were presented by Revs R. Sutton (Openshaw) and W. H. Towers. The latter said that in the Manchester and District Union he found that morning that they had sixteen affiliated societies, with over 1,200 members.

Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

ON Thursday last a meeting was held in the schoolroom of the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, in connection with the work of this home. Miss Perks and Miss Marsland told their interesting stories with much naturalness and simplicity. In visiting a sick wife, in dealing with an infidel husband, in giving the Gospel to the poor children, or in helping young converts to get to work, the lady workers appear to be equally successful.

Miss Marsland awakened interest in herself by telling how she had been educated in a convent school on the Continent, had intended to devote herself to convent life, and how she had been won to give herself to the work of the Soldiers' Home by seeing the practical Christian life displayed in connection with that work. She is occupied chiefly in correspondence, and some of the soldiers' letters from which she read were of the most touching description.

A collection was taken on behalf of the work. The addresses by the ladies and by Mr. Pericles Green secured for Miss Perks many true praying friends.

THE MISSIONARY PENCE ASSOCIATION has, during the past six months, made steady progress, having now a membership of 170, who are receiving the weekly pence of nearly 2000 contributors. More than £100 have already been secured, whilst the funds of more than twenty missionary societies have benefited.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A GENERAL Church Mission was held last week in Manchester and Salford.

Archdeacon Blakeney, we regret to learn, has been suffering from an attack of influenza.

The Curates' Augmentation Fund has just benefited to the extent of £2000 by the will of the late Mr. G. C. Ash.

Canon Honeyburne, of Liverpool, is announced to preside at a meeting to further the building fund of a Wesleyan Chapel.

The Bishop of London has been paying a visit to Rugby, with the object of forming a branch of the Church of England Temperance Society.

Bishop Hornby preached his farewell sermon before leaving for his new diocese of Nyassaland last Thursday evening at St. Matthew's Church, Great Peter-steet, Westminster.

A site has been acquired for the erection of a church in Parliament-street, Liverpool, for the Welsh-speaking Church people in that part of the city. Rev. Owen F. Williams will be the first pastor.

On Sunday last collections were made in the churches and chapels of Sheffield for the medical charities of the town, when the amount realised was £2094. Of this Church of England congregations contributed £1240.

Rev. C. T. Porter intimates that during the sixteen years he has been Vicar of All Saints', Southport, the members of his congregation have contributed about £50,000 to philanthropic, parochial, and various missionary objects.

An interesting meeting was held last week in the Church Missionary House, when the venerable Canon Hoare delivered an impressive address, full of sympathy and fatherly counsel, to the workers in the F.S.M.

The Bishops of London, Rochester, and St. Albans will speak at a meeting to be held at the Mansion House on Friday afternoon, 17th, to consider the question of providing for the spiritual needs of the rapidly increasing population of the Metropolis.

The S.P.G. is shortly about to publish, in two octavo volumes, a digest of its proceedings, journals, manuscripts, letters, and reports, from a record of all the missionaries whom it has supported, from the date of its incorporation by Royal Charter in 1701 to the present time.

We learn from The Intelligencer that Rev. Robert Clark, who only returned to Amritsar in November, has since had a serious attack of pneumonia. Happily Dr. and Mrs. Jukes were at hand to assist Dr. Lankester in administering to his needs, and to nurse him in his sickness with assiduous care.

The annual prayer-meeting in commemoration of the entry of the first Protestant Bishop into Jerusalem and the consecration of Christ Church on Mount Zion was lately held at the Inns of Court Hotel. Mr. W. N. West presided, and was supported by several members of the committee of the London Jews' Society.

The discussion on evening communion will be brought before the Canterbury House of Laymen at their ensuing session by Colonel Savile, who has given notice that he will move a resolution affirming the undesirability of restricting the liberty hitherto enjoyed as to the hour in which the service for Holy Communion may take place.

The lady who gave the "Francis Goode" Protestant van to the Church Association has now kindly offered to contribute £100 to pay for another, to be called the "William Goode" van, in memory of the late Dean of Ripon, whose invaluable controversial writings are so well known. This will make the third van out of the six now required.

The Protestant Churchmen's Alliance, says The Westminster Gazette, is about to amalgamate with the Clerical and Lay Union. The leaders of the party are said to be not without hope that this amalgamation may do much to reunite the Evangelical party. The Church Association is likely to continue to work on independent lines.

The Bishop of Carlisle, speaking at the annual meeting of the Liverpool Scripture Readers' Society last week, said we were living in a day of very much discussion in reference to the authority of Holy Scripture. He advised his hearers to leave on one side these controversies and test the Book by its results. The Bible was the living memorial of a Divine Person.

The third annual meeting of the Hampstead and Kilburn Branch of the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance was held on Thursday week at the Kilburn Town Hall. The President, Mr. J. O. Chadwick, said that the extravagance of Ritualism went on apace, and the doctrines which the ritual symbolised were assiduously taught by clergymen in defiance of vows taken at perhaps the most solemn hour of their lives. He urged courage and perseverance upon those who were striving to maintain the purity of the faith, for the work was the Lord's and He would surely maintain it. The report showed that during the year a large number of meetings had been held, at which lectures on subjects bearing upon matters of current interest to Churchmen had been given.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. E. W. Evans, of Abergele, has accepted the pastorate at Derwenlas.

East Finchley Church reports 241 members, with 319 scholars in the Sunday-school.

Dr. Newman Hall will preach at Westminster Chapel on Sunday, Feb. 12, and four following Sundays.

The site of Fetter-lane Chapel is at last to be sold, the proceeds being devoted probably to fresh work in the suburbs.

Rev. T. Anthony, B.A., has resigned the pastorate at Victoria-road Church, Newport, which he has held for nearly seven years.

The annual meeting of Dulwich-grove Church was held on Thursday, Mr. Evan Spicer in the chair. The secretary's report showed very satisfactory progress in the various institutions.

Rev. J. R. Bailey, the well-known minister of Park Church, Halifax, is being urged to accept the pastorate at Eccles, Lancs.

Moat Church, East Grinstead, reports fifty-three members, fifteen having been added during the year. In the Sunday-school there are 166 scholars.

The meetings of the Sussex County Association and Home Missionary Society were held last week in Brighton. Eastbourne has been decided on for the autumnal meetings of the association.

A meeting was held last week at Falkland Hall, Green-lanes, to celebrate the anniversary of Harringay Church, which has now sixty-three members and various agencies in active operation.

A course of public lectures is being delivered at Mansfield College, Oxford, by Rev. Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon, on "The Congregational Idea as affected by the conditions of English religious life."

[1521]

Rev. B. T. Hallowes, for several years secretary of the Herts Congregational Union, has resigned his charge at Hertford, with the intention of entering upon ministerial service in New Zealand.

Hawkshead-street Church, Southport, reports twenty-one new members, including six from the Young Disciples' Class and Christian Endeavour Society. The Sunday-school has 218 scholars, with twenty-one teachers.

Grange Park-road Church, Leyton, reports 187 members and an income of £322. It has been decided to enlarge the Sunday-schools, and a deaconess has been appointed to administer to the wants of the poorer members.

The Central Congregational Church at Brooklyn, with a membership of 1625, has just celebrated the tenth anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. A. J. F. Behrends. During the last year it raised about fifty thousand dollars in all.

At Belgrave Chapel, Leeds, which is now worked on the weekly offering system, the collections for all purposes during the year realised over £1000, and a small deficit on the year of £50 has since been wiped out by special donations.

The manual just issued in connection with Chorlton-road, Manchester (Rev. Dr. Goodrich), gives a total membership of 1104. The Sunday-schools had an addition last year of 229 new scholars, and the Band of Hope of twenty-five fresh members.

At the annual meeting of Great George-street Church, Liverpool, it was reported that, as a result of the first year's working of the weekly offering system, a deficit had been cleared off, and for the first time for many years the treasurer had a balance in hand.

The annual meeting at the Mission Hall in Oatlands, Surrey, took place on Friday. This hall is a branch of the Weybridge Congregational Church. Several gave testimony to the blessing they had received at the meetings conducted by a lady resident, and addresses were given by Revs. T. Pack and F. H. Dawe.

The annual meetings of the Sussex County Association and Home Missionary Society have been held at Brighton. At the public meeting in Clifton-road Church Mr. Halley-Stewart, M.P., presided, and in his address dwelt on the importance of extending aid and sympathy to the village churches. Revs. W. J. Woods, A. W. Johnson, and W. C. Willoughby delivered addresses.

The anniversary meeting of the Lewisham High-road Church was held on Wednesday week. The pastor, Rev. Morley Wright, and Rev. F. B. Meyer addressed the meeting; while the secretary's report recorded the admission of 156 new members, the loss by death and removal of ninety-seven, thus leaving the church-roll at 1062, probably the largest in the United Kingdom.

The annual meetings in connection with the Manchester district of the Lancashire Congregational Union were held in Milton Church Rochdale, on Thursday. In the evening a public meeting was held in the church, the Rev. Dr. Goodrich presiding. Rev. C. H. Hickling spoke on "Free Church Life, the Lever and the Leveller," and Rev. J. M'Dougall gave an address on "The truth we believe and the work we have to do."

BAPTIST.

Westgate Church, Bradford, reports 406 members.

The Baptist Missionary Centenary Fund has now reached £109,000.

Rev. T. Gardiner has been heartily welcomed in his new charge at Penzance.

Rev. J. C. Jones, M.A., at Spalding, on Sunday week, baptized six persons, one being the pastor's grandson.

The anniversary services at Bishop Auckland produced evidence of good faithful work during the past year.

A week's temperance mission at the Bow and Bromley Tabernacle has been brought to a close. 110 pledges have been taken.

Rev. A. G. Everett, on Sunday week, at Ely-place Church, Wisbech, baptized six persons, two of whom were seventy years of age.

Mr. W. Blair Neatby, M.A., has accepted an invitation to succeed the late Rev. Charles Graham at Avenue-road, Goldhawk-road, W.

Rev. T. J. Stockley, pastor of the Portmahon Chapel, Sheffield, has resigned his position on account of ill-health, and will remove to Eastbourne at the end of the present month.

The Quarterly Reporter of the German Baptist Mission states that the baptisms and additions to the churches last year have exceeded 2000. The mission is working among nations with an aggregate population of seventy-five millions. A new church has been formed in Dresden.

At the annual church meeting of the Westcliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, held on Jan. 30, the reports of various organisations connected with the Church were of an encouraging character, and the membership of the Church showed a net increase for the year of twenty members.

Two Brahmins, father and son, were recently received into the church at Rangoon by Rev. F. T. Whitman, who writes that Rangoon is a most favourable place for work among the caste people of India. There are thousands of them there, and the power of their caste is greatly weakened.

In consequence of Dr. James Spurgeon's illness, the Metropolitan Tabernacle annual church meeting, which was to have taken place on Wednesday, has been postponed. At that meeting the question of the temporary pastorate must be raised, and it is to be earnestly hoped that to its consideration, not only impartial minds, but hearts sanctified by the spirit of prayer will be devoted.

The coloured Baptists of the South, forming the Baptist African Mission Convention of North America, are making an earnest effort to develop their missionary work in Liberia. Some six years ago they sent a missionary and his wife to the Congo, under an agreement of co-operation with the American Baptist Missionary Union. The Baptists in Liberia have favourably responded to the proposition to co-operate with their American brethren in work among the heathen tribes, extending from their borders toward the Soudan.

METHODIST.

A successful mission has been held at Magdalen, Norfolk.

Rev. John Pugh has conducted a successful mission at Pwllheli.

Seth Joshua has commenced a week's mission at Crughowell, Breconshire.

Mr. W. H. Archer, formerly a collier, has been conducting special services in Bridlington, which have been blessed to many.

Mr. Gerald Coultas has conducted a seven days' special mission in the Wesleyan Chapel, Thornwood Common, Epping.

At the West London Mission arrangements are being made for a special mission on the lines that proved so successful four years ago.

The total amount received by Rev. Thomas Champness, founder of the Joyful News Wesleyan Mission, since its establishment eight years ago, is £30,737.

The West London Mission is in the midst of extremely encouraging special mission services, at which there are numerous conversions every night in the week.

Rev. W. N. Barleycorn, who has now fully recovered from the surgical operation for which he came to this country three months ago, is about to return to his home and work in West Africa.

The Connexion has seven circuits in Sheffield, with eleven ministers in active work. These circuits have just held a united mission at eleven chapels. About thirty persons professed conversion, and the congregations have much benefited.

The district of the Aliwal North Mission is now 150 miles long. In the town of Aliwal is a capital minister's residence, a well-built church, also a native church, and another residence for the native minister, Rev. John Msikinya. What are called "the Boys," in the training school, range from twenty to forty years of age.

The fourth annual missionary meeting—home and foreign—was held on Tuesday by the students of the Wesleyan College, Didsbury. Mr. Thomas Dargue occupied the chair, and recalled the fact that the chairman of the first of these meetings, Mr. Malkin, perished in the Roumania a few months ago when on his way to the mission field.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the Liverpool Wesleyan Mission was held on Monday week. The report stated that the income for the year had been £3450, and the expenditure £3438. Rev. Charles Garrett, the superintendent, gave stirring accounts of what the Lord had done in the mission, and referred to the change which had taken place in the city with reference to the drink question during the last twenty years.

The last Wesleyan Conference appointed a special committee to investigate and report upon the existing condition of Methodism in East London. The committee have agreed to report that, notwithstanding undoubted deterioration arising from the great influx of foreign population and the recent establishment of large undenominational missions and social institutions, Wesleyan Methodism in East London is still doing a great evangelising work, and, with some aid, will continue to hold its own.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At Silver Hill, Hastings, thirty-two new members were added last year.

Jesmond Church reports 565 members, and the funds are in a healthy condition.

The chapel at Pentre, Flint, has been enlarged, and the Welsh chapel at Maerdy, Pontypridd, has been rebuilt.

A new school, to seat 300 persons, is to be erected in connection with the Capel Mawr Church, Bala.

Heaton congregation, Newcastle-on-Tyne, reports a membership of 442, a net gain on the year of 111.

Fifty-one new members have been added to the roll of St. Andrew's Church, Nottingham, during the year, making the total 300.

The membership at Sefton-park (Rev. John Watson's) is now nearly 700. Since its formation in 1879, about £75,000 has been raised.

The annual meeting of the Reading congregation was of an encouraging character. Progress was reported in various departments of church work. The church membership stood at 150.

Revs. Dr. Walter Morison, Moderator-elect of Synod, C. Alexander, of Stoke Newington, and A. Sutherland, of Perth, have started for a tour in the Holy Land. They purpose returning about the middle of April.

Dr. Pentecost will make application to the London Presbytery North at its next meeting for admission into the Presbyterian Church. The matter will come before the Synod in the usual form three months hence.

The annual meeting of the Forest Hill congregation was presided over by Rev. R. Taylor. The work and finances were reported to be highly satisfactory. The meeting was addressed by Revs. J. G. Train, J. Reid Howatt, Hugh McIntosh, and D. Matheson.

The annual meeting of the Regent-square congregation was held last week. The report showed that the membership is now 618, a loss of 130 during the year. The income for the year was £2209. The Women's Missionary Association raised £115, against 107 last year. The institute and missions conducted by Regent-square friends are all in vigorous operation.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Continental Congress has been postponed to April.

Two days of special meetings have been arranged for Feb. 28 and March 1, in the Colston Hall, Bristol.

General Booth was in the midst last week of enthusiastic meetings at Sheffield, Halifax, Bradford, and Wakefield.

The War Cry says:—The Two Days with God in Exeter Hall, which concluded on Wednesday evening last, registered the High-Water Mark of Spiritual Light, and immediate and manifest results, following any gatherings we have yet been permitted to organise.

Speaking at Halifax on Monday week, General Booth said he had ceased to make personal appeals. He could not spend his days in begging, and if rich people did not feel the responsibility and assist in working out the scheme for the regeneration of the submerged, then the responsibility would be on them.

Prof. G. A. Smith, speaking the other day to the Students' Missionary Society, described a conversation he had held with General Booth on the Army's method of evangelising India, arguing that there had been a needless sacrifice of human life, since seventy per cent. of their missionaries had broken down or retired. General Booth defended his work, but exclaimed, "I'll never send another officer to India. India has been the plague of my life. Nearly all my officers have broken down, or got married, or come home to get married."

(Fallen Asleep.—See Page 30.)

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For grace and guidance in endeavouring to reach the Roman Catholics of St. Albans, Liverpool.—For a mission to be held at Clavering by Mr. Henry Murch, February 19 to March 5.—That the "mercy-drops" now falling upon the efforts of the Sedgley Temperance Home Mission may be followed by the "Showers of blessing.—For a sorely bereaved mother.—For one who is in the greatest trouble, that God will send deliverance.—For "showers of blessing" on a united mission in Dalkeith, N.B., conducted by Mr. John M. Scroggie, from February 12 to 20. PRAISE:—For great blessing granted on Mr. Lakin's mission in Liverpool.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Mrs. PENNEFATHER, of Mildmay.

 There are still some subscriptions for 1893 outstanding. These being payable in advance, we must request our friends to give their attention to this matter at once, in order to secure the due despatch of future copies. Full particulars will be found in the special announcement above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard must be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

One of our notes last week was, perhaps, not well expressed, and it has led to some misconception which we desire to remove. We are very far from undervaluing the two ordinances of the Christian dispensation—Baptism and the Lord's Supper. We do not think that the abuse of them is any justification of their disuse. We regard them as Divinely ordained object lessons, the former relating to our spiritual birth, and the latter to the maintenance of our spiritual life; and the more that priestcraft perverts them into pagan ceremonies, the more would we hold fast their simple form, and their profound significance.

The circular asking the conveners of Conferences to give special prominence to the Lord's coming, has led "E. J." to ask, "Will all believers be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, when He appears a second time unto salvation?" Our correspondent "cannot believe it can be otherwise, although so many seem to throw a doubt on this subject." We think a great responsibility rests upon those who press speculative questions of this kind. Not only because they are difficult to answer, but because they have a tendency to divide Christians into separate sects and camps. All such queries come under the same category as that of the man who said, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" And that of Peter, "Lord, and what shall this man do?" Neither question did the Lord answer. To each questioner He administered a rebuke as well as a direction: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." "What is that to thee? Follow thou Me."

Such a discrimination, if it be true, must affect not only the generation on earth when the Lord comes, but all those who have fallen asleep. Yet the Apostle says, "Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him. . . . Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." These words were to comfort living saints concerning them which were asleep. But the comfort would have been greatly modified if only some of the dead and living saints are to be caught up; and if that is true it is strange that Paul did not mention it.

It seems to us that this theory fails to recognise that the vital distinction is between life and death. We are either dead in trespasses and sins, or we have heard Jesus words, and have believed in Him that sent Him. If so, we have everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment, except at the tribunal of Christ (2 Cor. v. 13; compare 1 Jno. iii. 2), before which we must all be manifested, that every one may receive the things done in his body, whether good or bad. At this tribunal it will be decided whether we have built on the one foundation gold, silver, precious stones, or wood, hay, stubble; whether our work shall abide and we receive a reward; or whether it shall be burned, and we suffer loss, though ourselves saved, yet so as through fire.

Let each be fully persuaded in his own mind as to what is revealed in the Word of God; but do not let any speculation be urged as if it were the indisputable truth of God. "Strive to enter in," "Follow thou Me." These behests are based on certainties, and have far more weight than expectations founded on views which, to say the least, cannot be affirmed to be verities of God.

It appears to be seriously considered by some pastors and teachers whether the recent developments of spiritualism do not provide a way of escape from the scepticism, agnosticism, and infidelity which flourish under the influence of modern thought. Organs of professedly Christian opinion, which have for years been undermining confidence in the Scriptures of Truth, seem now to be blindly following the delusions of evil spirits. We entreat our readers to walk in the old paths and to heed the warnings given by God through the Prophet Isaiah: "When they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits and unto the wizzards, that chirp and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? On behalf of the living should they seek unto the dead? To the law and to the testimony! if they speak not according to this word, surely there is no morning for them...They shall look unto the earth, and behold, distress and darkness, the gloom of anguish; and into thick darkness they shall be driven away."

If Christian people were better acquainted with their Bibles, there would not be so much mental perplexity and spiritual distress as there is. Rationalistic criticisms and questionings are often as shallow in reality as they are imposing in appearance; and the man who knows his Bible may detect their true character, while others are being bedazzled by specious theories, and ensnared by faith-destroying errors. In an instructive sermon, in the current issue of The Homiletic Review, the celebrated Professor Luthardt, of Leipzig, admirably remarks:—

> Ours is indeed an age of reading; but it is newspapers, periodicals, and secular books that monopolise our time and attention, and the Scriptures are being more and more neglected. The more we forget how to trust the Scriptures as an old friend, by the daily use of them, the more easily objections and foolish ideas of our own and other minds are able to disturb our trust in them as the revelation of our God.
> And thus it happens that while we are proud of our Protestant name, and freedom of thought on matters of faith, we are deserting one of the fundamental Protestant principles—namely, that in all matters of faith, of doctrine, and of Christian life, the Scriptures are the highest court of appeal, over against which human opinions and wisdom of all kinds and character are in no way an authority. . .
> The Scriptures are God's gardens, in which, as Luther says, there are always ripe fruit, no matter when or how often we come. Therefore, my beloved, when doubts and anxieties come to us in regard to the Holy Scriptures, come and see, come and read, come and hear. Live and move and have your being in the Scriptures—this is the best means of overcoming all erring thoughts.

Our religious and philanthropic societies are busy arranging for their anniversaries in May. Is it too much to hope that some of them may have the originality, the courage, and the faith to get a chairman who is not rich and some speakers who are not popular? Is the custom for ever to prevail of looking, in a chairman, for wealth and social position in addition to sympathy with the object to be promoted? Sometimes, alas! even the sympathy is a very doubtful quantity. No doubt it is good to rally to the help of a cause all the force we can command, but when occasion is given for the sarcasm of "mammon in the chair," the cause is hindered, and other good undertakings suffer.

One of the ablest men in the ranks of Congregational ministers said, after the last May meeting of the London Missionary Society, that he had attended meetings where the intellectual force had been greater, but none where the spiritual power was greater, or where more manifest blessing was experienced. The speakers had, in this case, been sought for their well-known devotion to missionary work, and their anxiety to see the heathen enlightened and saved. And there could be no doubt as to the holy influence they exerted. Intellectual power can as easily be baptized with the Holy Ghost as intellectual feebleness; but the temptation is always presented to seek for a speaker striking in thought and brilliant in expression, thus ignoring the worth of some who have inferior gifts but much grace.

Mr. Stephen Massey, of Manchester, writing from Amoy, points out the new and great danger which is threatening the village churches of China, from the growth of the poppy and the manufacture of opium in that country. Native Christians are now exposed to the temptation of getting rich on the vices of their fellows. He says that at Tong-a-be great anxiety has been caused by eight of the members beginning to grow opium. Three of them, after being remonstrated with, promised to destroy it. The missionary was in favour of their having a week in which to do so, but the native Christians would have it done at once. The five members who were obdurate were suspended from attendance at the Lord's Supper.

Strict purity of church communion is confessedly difficult of attainment, though eminently desirable. It is possible only through great sensitiveness of conscience, great courage, and much faith in God. To judge an erring brother is not right until he has been spoken to in a loving spirit, for he may be ruled, for the time being, by some worldly conventional standard which he has never tested by the Word of God and by Christian principle. If doubtful things were looked at aright by the churches, would it be possible for men who sell intoxicating drink to remain members of them? Setting aside anything in the way of hard-and-fast regulation, and being guided only by love to others, would not that principle lead every Christian grocer to give up selling it? And if all the Christian grocers did so, would not their conduct be one of the most impressive sermons that ever was preached? Would it not give new force to conscience and new sanctity to truth?

The Review of the Churches for February gives important details of the recent Decennial Missionary Conference at Bombay. The Conference refused to pass resolutions dealing with the Government traffic in opium and alcohol; it passed a resolution condemning State-regulated vice, but afterwards rescinded the same, to the great grief of many of the missionaries. Explaining the proceedings in The Indian Witness, Bishop Thoburn says:—

The resolution in support of the abolition of the C.D. Acts, and in condemnation of the policy of regulating vice, had first been approved unanimously by the business committee of nine. It was of such a straightforward character that the members of this committee felt certain that it would encounter no opposition in the open conference. It was presented and passed by an overwhelming vote, and amid tumultuous applause. At a subsequent stage of the proceedings the chairman stated that the majority had not been less than six to one. Objection, however, was taken and protests entered, and after a good deal of parliamentary manœuvring a motion was made to permit the committee to withdraw the resolution. The nine members of the committee were still unanimously in favour of it, but wished to withdraw it for the sake of harmony. A gentleman arose, and moved to grant the permission, stating at the same time that he fully approved the resolution and would vote for it, although making the motion in the interests of fairness. Another gentleman made a similar statement in seconding this motion. By a very narrow majority the committee were finally permitted to withdraw the resolution, but the sentiment of the conference had already been expressed, and it can be said that the conference expressed its condemnation of an Act which is universally reprobated among evangelical Christian men and cordially execrated by every Christian woman, by a majority of six to one. The small minority, who insisted on having the resolution withdrawn, were respected solely because many missionaries present doubted the power of a body constituted as the Decennial Conference was, to take action of that kind, and also felt that no such action would be effective unless the vote was practically unanimous.

Bishop Thoburn recommends that the Decennial Conference should be constituted a deliberate assembly, having a delegated membership not exceeding two or three hundred persons, chosen from all the leading missionary societies. This would facilitate the substantial expression of missionary opinion in India, and doubtless the proposal will receive the attention it unquestionably deserves.

Considerable interest has been aroused in Ireland by the somewhat remarkable development of a case which has been occupying the attention of the Queen's Bench Division of the Courts in Dublin. The litigation related to the custody of an orphan girl, who, having been placed in one of Mrs. Smyly's Homes, was now claimed, against her own wishes, by Roman Catholics. Certain features in the pleas curiously recalled recent suits in which Dr. Barnardo has been involved. On this occasion, however, the case came to a strange and well-nigh dramatic conclusion. On the affidavits the Judges were about to make absolute the order for habeas corpus, when it transpired that some of the papers were forged and some of the evidence perjured. The counsel for the applicant withdrew from the case, and the whole came to a precipitate end—the child remaining of course in the care of the Homes. The friend who brings the matter under our notice, and supplies the information, regards it as an instructive object lesson in Rome's methods.

The local Press in Birmingham lately contained some terrible revelations in regard to juvenile depravity in that large centre of population. A few days ago a committee of Nonconformist pastors met to receive a special report with reference to the condition of things amongst match-box girls. The report was of an alarming and painful character. Various suggestions were adopted as to the methods to be undertaken to deal with the depravity, which, it was acknowledged, existed to "a horrible extent." The committee asserted that no attempted solution of the great problems could be successful which left the question of the large number of licensed houses and the great facilities for drinking out of consideration. In many of our reformatory movements we begin at the wrong end, and deal with the effects rather than the evident cause.

The Book of the Kingdom.—3.

OLD TESTAMENT.—II.

There remain five books, not in the line of direct historical sequence, to which we have not yet alluded—Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song. Have these any connection with the Kingdom?

The theme of the book of Job is the rule of God in relation to the individual soul. The sons of God—the angels—his ministers who do his pleasure, hearkening to the voice of his word—appear before Him. "Like the ministers and agents of an earthly sovereign, the powers of the universe are responsible to God for their proceedings, and have to give account of all transactions in his dominions."

Jehovah asks the Adversary, "Hast thou considered my servant Job. . . . one that feareth God and escheweth evil?" Satan answers, "Doth Job fear God for nought?" And Jehovah said unto Satan, "Behold all that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thy hand," and later, "Only spare his life."

The main purpose of the book is not to develop the character of Job, but to make manifest the equitable government of God. Job's three friends condemn him, because of their false conception of the principles and method of God's rule. Job, while rebutting their unfounded charges against himself, is betrayed into questioning the righteousness of God. Elihu reproves Job for this, and declares, "Touching the Almighty, we cannot find Him out; He is excellent in power."

Then Jehovah Himself answers Job out of the whirlwind, and "the Almighty Maker and King brings before his mind a vast and comprehensive picture of his providential administration of the universe."

He does not argue with his creature, but He reveals Himself by an appeal to "the wondrous works of Him who is perfect in knowledge." He who created and controls the universe with infinite love and wisdom and power cannot deny Himself in his government of the individual members of the race made in his own image. And Job's repentance, followed by Jehovah's vindication of his righteous servant, his acceptance of the three friends upon Job's intercession, and the blessing awarded to the patriarch, show that the Great King sits upon a throne of grace.

The Psalms are sacred songs in praise of the King and his kingdom. The first psalm shows that under his equal government the righteous are like trees planted by rivers of water, and the ungodly like the chaff which the wind driveth away. The last psalm shouts his praise in the firmament of his power, "where his might and majesty are displayed," and the intervening psalms declare his righteous acts toward individual men, toward his special people, and toward the nations of the earth.

The three following are books of royal authorship:—

Proverbs is an educational book, chiefly for the young, but not for them alone. It is such a book as we should expect to emanate from a king to whom the Great King had given such wisdom, that none were equal to him before or after, except the King of Righteousness and Peace, of whom he was the type.

Ecclesiastes is a book of homilies, by the same royal writer, on the providential government of the world. He fitly concludes the whole matter with "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil."

Solomon's Song, however interpreted, is a song of loves, in which the bridegroom is the king.

These books find an appropriate and essential place in the Book of the Kingdom.

Visiting in North London.

A correspondent writes:—"I spent the morning and afternoon of Lord's Day, February 5th, in visiting two of the infirmaries near Highgate Archway, and had the opportunity of pressing the claims of Christ on about a hundred people, either personally from bed to bed or collectively in the various wards, having reason to believe one soul moved definitely towards Christ.

"There is a blessed work for God, which any intelligent and devout person may engage in. About twenty-five workers are needed in the North of London at the present time, either ladies or gentlemen, to give some part of the Lord's Day to such work—the love of souls being the chief qualification. Any friends may write to Mr. Josiah Leaver, 13, Pemberton-terrace, St. John's-park, Upper Holloway."

Comfort for Tried Ones.

"All things work together for good to them that love God." What peace, what comfort, yea what joy, we should have in the midst of trial, if we could habitually lay hold of this truth. Here is an aged servant before you who has had to pass through many a heavy trial, and it has been his experience that every one of these numberless trials have proved blessings to him, and some of the greatest trials have proved some of the choicest blessings to him.

As it has been with this aged servant, so it will be with all who are believers in our Lord Jesus Christ when they look back at the end of the journey; yea, even before the journey comes to an end you may yet find in numberless instances how trials turn out to be real blessings, as I have found it to be times without number. Through these trials we get an acquaintance with God, an acquaintance with the vanity of the things of this world, an acquaintance with ourselves, an acquaintance with the power of the devil, an acquaintance with the sustaining power of the Holy Ghost. You will find with these very trials and difficulties in which you are sustained and helped, that they prove you to be not merely a professing child of God, but a partaker of grace, and truly united to our Lord Jesus Christ.—George Müller.

Joshua and the Land of Promise.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,

CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD.

LAND TO BE POSSESSED.—Joshua xiii. 1.

JOSHUA was probably about ninety years of age when the conquest of Canaan was complete. But a very important part of his work had yet to be performed. It would not have been enough for him to have asserted Israel's supremacy over the Canaanites unless he had taken measures to follow up his victories by settling the people in their stead. The work of destruction must be succeeded by that of construction. The warrior must give place to the administrator and statesman.

The first step towards the occupation of Canaan was taken in the summons of the Lord to his servant, who had so faithfully performed all his word. Though he was old and well stricken in years, he was still the confidant of Jehovah, the depositary of his secrets, the executor of his plans. Happy are they whose life knows no cessation in its ever-expanding energies, who pass from the prime of early manhood to the sundown of old age with a perpetual reinforcement and renewal of spiritual force. To bear fruit in old age, to put forth leaves and fruit amid the decay of physical vigour, to sweep on from the rapids of youth to the abundance of the river's mouth with ever-increasing fulness and abundance; to be as able to build up the people of God in the golden autumn, as to lead them to victory in the early spring—this is no common honour, no ordinary achievement. And it was a high tribute to Joshua, that when he had overstepped the ordinary limit of human life by twenty years he was summoned to put the crown on the work of his life.

The method adopted seems to have been, first, a careful survey of the land not yet possessed; then its apportionment among the several tribes according to their size; and lastly the actual appropriation and acquisition of each portion by the efforts of the tribe to which it was assigned. It is with the first of these that we have now to deal. After the Divine voice had summoned the veteran leader to the last great work of his life, it proceeded to enumerate the lands that yet remained; and some time after, when seven of the tribes were as yet unsettled, and there was urgent need for the completion of the task, seven commissioners were appointed to pass through the land, and examine it, and make a report concerning it to the assembled congregation.

It would be interesting, did space permit, to examine the area designated by the Divine Spirit. This at least we must notice as we pass, that it included all the region of Philistia, inhabited by some of the stoutest foes that Israel ever encountered, and who were a perpetual source of weakness and danger till the times of the kings. There were also the rich pasture-lands of the south, and in addition the luxuriant plain of Phœnicia and the fertile upland valleys, cooled by the snow-capped summits and watered from the rills of Lebanon, all portions of the land on which Israel had always a very slender hold. Compare this outline sketch of the Divine intentions, with the territories then actually held, and afterwards possessed by Israel, and the difference between God's ideal and their real inheritance becomes very striking.

The same appalling contrast appears when we recall the original promise made to Joshua, at the beginning of this book. "From the wilderness and this Lebanon, even unto the great river, the River Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the Great Sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your border." Yet as a matter of fact, Israel filled up the measure of this prediction for once only, and for a very short time, during its tenure of Canaan. Solomon did for a brief space realise the Divine ideal, but the radiant glory of his kingdom was soon hemmed in and obscured by the clouds that drew up their dark veils over the sky. Men have sometimes used this as an argument against the Divine veracity. It should rather be quoted as a melancholy confession of human frailty, and of failure to claim and appropriate the promises of God. There is no variableness in God. It is impossible even for our unbelief to make his promises of none effect.

Let us consider whether there may not be a similar contrast between that which God has intended for us and that which we have made our own. Spread out in the Bible, and set forth in the life of Jesus, there is for us, as for Joshua, a map of what God desires for his people. Here, as in a Divine Domesday book, is a list of the mountains of vision and the valleys of blessing, of the green pasture lands and the waters of rest, of the cities we may occupy and the foes we may expel. All is mapped out for us, and we shall do wisely carefully to ponder it, that we may be humbled as we see the slow progress we have made, and may be stirred up to apprehend all that for which we were apprehended in Christ Jesus. It is more than likely that God is continually saying to us, as to his people of old, "There remaineth yet very much land to be possessed. This is the land that yet remaineth. How long are ye slack to go in to possess the land, which the Lord, the God of your fathers, hath given you?" Let us, then, as Lord Bacon advises in his Advancement of Learning, map out the directions in which we should grow towards the Divine outlines.

I.—IN THE DIRECTION OF KNOWLEDGE.

We must distinguish between intellectualism and knowledge. It is not so difficult to acquire the former, with all those aids for acquiring information which abound around us. The very newspaper press, awaking to discover that man has other needs than those of the politician, is beginning to bring the discoveries of science and the contents of books to our breakfast tables. Leisure and taste, memory and mental discipline, observation and society, will do a good deal towards imparting that strange veneer called culture, but this is a very different thing from knowledge. A man may be utterly destitute of culture, and yet may have that direct and intuitive perception of truth, which as much surpasses it as the blue of heaven does the painted scenery of a theatre. Whereas a man may be quick, clever, and intellectual, well-informed, and able to lay his hands readily on his information, and yet be utterly destitute of the true knowledge.

God meant us to know himself even as Jesus knew Him, in his human life. Remember how often He said, I know Him. No mist ever crept up between the outspread landscape of God's nature and the loving ravished gaze that swept over it, passing from the high mountains of his righteousness to the great sea of his judgments, and dwelling with rapture on the verdant tracts of his love and pity and grace, on the mighty rivers that represent the fertilising out-goings of his being, and on the wealth of that blessed existence, like a summer-land, every inch of which is full of ripening fruit. Such knowledge, high and wonderful though it is, and unattainable by our own endeavours, is brought within our reach by our blessed Lord. He gives us eternal life in order that we might know the only true God. He bids us stand on Calvary that we may behold the heart of the Father. He reveals God to us in his own life, so that to know him is to know God. And yet how little do we know Him. We know little about Him and less of Him by personal intimacy and fellowship.

To take the lowest test, our knowledge of God's Word. Whilst some individual explorers have pressed on into unknown and untrodden lands, the large majority of professing Christians are content with a few familiar and well-trodden patches. They read and re-read the same passages in the Gospels, the Psalms, or Isaiah, but they never venture into the unexplored territory beyond. And the saddest point of all is that they have no deeper perception of the words which have become so familiar to them than at the first. They are like the busy crowds which pass lightly over the graves of martyrs, obliterating the sacred inscriptions, and missing the deeper thoughts which crowd in on the historian who bends over them in reverent meditation.

There are many subjects which the bulk of Christian people, by a tacit understanding, refuse to enter. Such are, amongst others, the Second Advent, the Restoration of Israel, and its future mission to mankind, the great question of fulfilled and unfulfilled prophecy, the mystical union of Christ with those who believe in Him. In all these repects there is much land to be possessed. Well may we be rebuked by the example of the Psalmist, who took days and nights to master his scanty and meagre Bible! We have much to learn from Nehemiah, and many other characters in Holy Writ, whose prayers and songs are little else than chains of Scriptural quotations. Let us mend our ways, quit the well-trodden paths, and seek for a completer acquaintance with the entire range of truth as given in God's Word. Remember, as Robinson said to the voyagers of the Mayflower, that there is much truth yet to break forth from God's Word, and why should not you be its first discoverer: the first to burst into those unknown seas, to tread on those virgin summits, and to behold that fair landscape of truth?

And if we know comparatively little of the Bible, we know less of God. Some of us dwell on one side of his character, in complete ignorance of others. We magnify his mercy at the expense of his righteousness; or his justice at the cost of his grace. Our knowledge of Him, moreover, is borrowed from hearsay evidence, and from the reports of others. We do not hear and know Him for ourselves. We are not content to know at second-hand the symphonies of Beethoven, or the pictures of Murillo. And we ought not to rest content till we can say with the patriarch, "I have heard of Thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee." Oh, to know God, to follow on to know Him, until He break on our hearts as the morning or as the early rain. What ecstasy there is in discovering new traits of character, new beauties in our friends, as we come across some undreamt-of excellence. So there would be a new meaning in life if we began to explore what is to many of us a terra incognita, the Being of God. There is much land here to be possessed.

II.—IN THE DIRECTION OF CHRISTIAN ATTAINMENT.

In us, as in Canaan of old, there are the seven nations of sin. Hereditary tendencies to evil. Unholy habits that have entrenched and fortified themselves. Worldly compliances which have become part of our existence. When first we became Christians we made a determined onslaught on these things, and met with much success. But we have become weary of incessant watchfulness and conflict. We have no taste for the girt loin and the erect, alert soldier-attitude. Our heart is only touched here and there by Christ, and our peace is incessantly broken by the raids of those unextirpated evils, which swoop down from time to time, carrying everything before them. There is much land still to be possessed.

Would it not be well to enumerate the points in which we are deficient? Not in a spirit of morbid self-scrutiny, but of honest self-analysis. Is not the first step towards an amended life, a clear appreciation of what needs amending? We may well turn from our own efforts at self-knowledge and bare our hearts to the inspection of the Spirit of God, asking Him to search us and show us what wicked way there is in us, ere He leads us in the way everlasting.

In some cases it is the business life, the workshop, or the counting-house, which is not possessed by Christ; and is kept altogether and constantly outside the range of his influence. In other cases it is the social element, or the home-relationship, in our nature which is not brought into captivity to Him. The spirit is yielded but not the soul, or the soul and not the body. We accept God's reign over the principal departments of our being, but there are certain outstanding habits over which we are reluctant to admit his sway.

Consider how great is God's ideal for each of us. To be conformed to the image of his Son! Scan his fair proportions. His strength and sweetness. His holiness and pity. His hatred of sin and love to the sinner. His devotion to God. His life of self-sacrifice for man. Is that God's ideal? And does He predestinate each of us to be conformed to it? Then who of us need renounce hope? But oh, how much there is to be possessed! How little do we possess of his beauty, or strength, or tenderness, or holiness! We can almost hear the voice that spake to Abraham speaking again to us, "Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and the breadth of it"? But we have done that till we are almost in despair. Yet notice the succeeding promise: "For unto thee will I give it, and unto thy seed."

The soul is first possessed by Christ, and then it begins to possess Christ. We are apprehended by our Divine Captor, and then we come to apprehend Him. We open our hearts to receive Him into their depths, and then learn to appropriate Him by a living faith. In other words, consecration must precede appropriation. Only when we have given ourselves to Christ does He give Himself to us, that we may feed on Him, and drink of his life, and possess the fulness of his grace.

But when once the act of consecration is complete we may begin to possess Him. This blessed habit may be initiated in a single act, but it is built up by a series of such acts, which are maintained, through the grace of the Holy Spirit, till it becomes as natural for us to look up to Jesus and to claim whatever we need as to breathe. Ah, soul! why pine in poverty and starvation? Is it not because thou hast withheld thyself from Jesus? Arise, and yield thyself to Him. Let Him possess thee, and then do thou claim a reciprocal possession of thy Lord. Thus shalt thou begin to enter upon thine eternal inheritance, and commence to spend thyself on pursuits that shall engage thee when sun and moon are no more. For eternity will be spent in learning how to possess more and more of Jesus.

III.—IN THE DIRECTION OF THE GIFTS OF THE HOLY GHOST.

"To each one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ." And the context clearly shows that this is not the common grace needed for daily living; but the special gifts of grace of the Pentecostal fulness of the Holy Ghost, acquired for us by the ascended Lord.

If we understand the teaching of the Epistles aright, there is for each member of the mystical body of Christ a distinct share in the Pentecostal gift. We may describe it as a share in his baptism or in his fulness. This is immaterial. But there is surely something more than is ordinarily understood by regeneration, or the gift of faith, or the revelation of the living Saviour. There is a power, an overflowing love, an assurance, an exuberant joy, a freedom, which are not enjoyed by all Christians, but which are as evidently their birthright as they are to be desired.

And, in addition, there are the bestowments of the Holy Spirit, by which we are specially qualified to do Christ's work in the world. Tact in leadership: wisdom to win souls: power to help believers into a fuller life: utility to administer or to speak or to teach: sympathy, facility in utterance, power in prayer. These may be named amongst others. The whole continent of Pentecostal blessing is avoided by many believers as if it were full of swamps, of fever, noisome pestilence; it stands upon their globes as Africa did in the days of our childhood. There is surely here much land to be possessed.

What is meant by the fulness of the Holy Spirit, how that fulness is to be obtained, what differences it will make in the life when it is received, how far our service depends on receiving it,—these are pertinent questions, and if seriously asked will lead some of my readers to see that there is much land to be possessed.

But oh! let us not be content simply to know our failures and deficiencies. Let us arise and quit ourselves like men. Let us ask our heavenly Joshua to settle us in this good land, so that there may be no rill, or valley, or mountain, or tract of territory unpossessed. God has given us in Christ all things which pertain unto life and godliness: let us claim the whole of our inheritance by a living faith, so that we may enter on the possession of all that is possible for us on this side of Heaven.

MR. W. R. LANE AT CARDIFF.

We are very grateful for the visit of our brother and his co-worker, Lord Bennet, to Cardiff. The eight days' mission has been in every way encouraging. The great meeting at the Park Hall and Philharmonic Music Hall on the Sunday evening were times of much blessing, and Mr. Lane was listened to with great attention, and after the evening service not a few gave in their names as concerned about spiritual things.

The weekday meetings for Christians in the Y.M.C.A. Lecture Hall, afternoons, proved very helpful to the Lord's people who were present, and the Gospel messages delivered to the large numbers attending the evening services at the Wood-street Chapel were really owned and blessed of God, especially on the Friday night, when Lord Bennet and Mr. Lane gave the history of their conversion. Eternity alone will reveal the results of the loving appeals to the hearts and consciences of those present, pressed home from the lips of the two speakers. To God be all the praise.

From a Worker's Note Book.

III.

THE DISCIPLINE OF FAILURE.

Verily this ancient note book might be called a diary of failures, so large a proportion do the latter bear to the other records, and yet, looking back dispassionately at the work as a whole, I believe the average amount of success fell to my lot. It may seem a hard thing to say, but in these last days is there not a tendency to twist all into some sort of success?

But to return to the last pages of the note book, and to take one or two entries from them. "Have tried every means to influence 'M.' (a wild Irish girl, constantly in prison for drunkenness and assault). Never lecture her, or 'preach' at her, or try to make her uncomfortable, and yet I get no influence whatever over the girl. To-night she was in a softer mood, perhaps because she came out of gaol to-day, and Miss —— had talked to her, 'M.' said to me, 'Oh, that lady, she did talk beautiful, she did, I can tell you; she made us cry!' Query: Why does Miss —— succeed where I fail?"

Ah, if I had known; the reason was not far to seek. It all lay in those last four words, "She made us cry." Herein lay a sermon never to be forgotten. I had never made the girl cry, never got below the surface and touched those deeper motives and springs of action which were buried in that wreck of girlhood. I had talked pleasant nothings to her, done little kindnesses, tried to gloss over the ugly scars and seams in her nature, but all these "say nothingisms," as Carlyle calls them, had had no effect whatever on the girl's character.

On the other hand, this prison visitor had been wise. She had gone deeper, and probed to the very heart, and in the intense earnestness of her pleading had brushed aside the mass of rubbish and brought to the light, if but for a moment, a germ of human love and feeling that was hidden underneath. She had made her cry.

Is such a failure as mine an infrequent one, I ask? We are brought into contact with some soul, be it scholar or servant, still more friend or relation, and while we would help the one, ay, yearn to do so, we yet shrink from anything below the surface, maybe with the fear of wounding or from a certain curious shame which makes us blush to go deeper. "For years," said a teacher to me some time ago, "I did not dare to speak to my class about the most sacred, most intensely personal part, of my religion. I could speak of Christ as a Divine Being far remote in the ages and as the Pattern for all lives, but as regards reference to Him as the present master and sovereign of my life to whom I owed a daily, hourly obedience—somehow the words died on my lips."

To my shame, be it said, I could have re-echoed these words, and I could have answered that again and again I have faced a lad of seventeen or eighteen knowing that I ought to have spoken out "straight," and yet struck dumb with a shyness of religious speech. Or if I did manage to blurt out the deep truth I sought to drive home, have done it with the red-hot blush of shame, that raised to a higher power, is nothing else than the absolute denial of a Peter. Johnson said bitterly, "Nobody speaks in earnest, sir; there is no serious conversation." How true this is in much of our philanthropic and religious work. We do not get deep enough into the hearts of men and women to influence them. Kindly triflings, chatty gossip, civilising, culturing conversation, as we are pleased to call it, may satisfy ourselves; but as to any lasting deep impression on the life and character of those we strive to benefit—that is produced only by the spirit embodied in the girl's answer, "She talked beautiful, she did; she made us cry."

Near this last entry there stands another, which may be taken as an illustration of many of a similar kind, and about which there hovers a certain grim prosaicness, which is the back-side to the romance of charity. "Asked five days ago to visit ——, who was ill. Bad weather, the long tramp, and plans already fixed, made me put off the visit till next week. To-night shocked to hear —— was dead!"

The spirit which underlies such a record as this reappears in a dozen ways, though in various disguises and in different degrees. Here it is the case of workhouse visiting, and the combined causes of a snowy afternoon and a fit of laziness, interrupt the regular visit, and next time there is added to the diary a brief note by way of appendix. "Found ——, with whom I had planned a talk, had gone out."

Or, again, I find in the notes expressed intentions of helping someone "after a while"; but the "while" has passed away, and often the intention has passed away with it, or perhaps even the possibility for its being put into effect. "Fixed engagements" are the virtuous garb in which this self-same spirit of putting off is apt to clothe itself. Some sudden call on our time and energy comes in the midst of the day's work, when our plans have all been made, good plans of useful benevolence, and to break into these for unforeseen interruptions argues a distinct want of method. Humanly it may do so, but I doubt if in this, as in other things, it is not enough for the disciple to be as his Master.

The life of Jesus Christ was one of perpetual interruption. He might cross to the desert shore of Gennesaret for a few hours' rest, but if the multitude stole that rest from Him, He could throw Himself unhesitatingly into their needs. He might start with Jairus to his house, but if someone wanted Him on the way thither, that want must straightway be met. And for us the lesson is no easy one; to be heedless of personal moods and tenses, ready without chafe or murmur to meet the special need of the moment with the God-given power of the moment, is to copy the Divine pattern.

As I close the book of notes, my eye falls on yet one failure more, over which I cannot pass without a glance. It is a type of at once the saddest and yet most instructive records in the diary—I mean the register of an absolute failure. A failure to effect any reformation in a person when every device has been tried for this end. Prayer, pleadings, time, thought, and trouble, every kindness, all have been in vain; humanly, no one could have done more, but still the character seems harder rather than softer. Sad, yes; such failures are sad to every worker, but in spite of their sadness they have taught us the priceless discipline of waiting, instead of that eternal hurry and scurry to see good results directly we would wish them.

Sometimes it has been granted us to see that the success of years afterwards was doubly increased by the very failures of our desire at the time. But if it has not been so, and any failure still mocks us in the face, it is good to remember that the enforced waiting is only the pause before the inevitable music and harmony that sometime must follow. Some one has said, "There's no music in a rest, but there's the making of music in it."

And what is our failure here but a triumph's evidence
For the fulness of the days? Have we withered or agonised?
Why else was the pause prolonged but that singing might issue thence?
Why rushed the discords in, but that harmony should be prized?

NICARAGUA INDIANS AND CREOLES.

The work of the Moravian Church in Moskito has been carried on for a little more than forty years, and has been blessed remarkably, especially since a great revival took place among the Indians, about ten years ago. The people travelled great distances on foot across the Savannahs, or in their "doris" (boats), in order to find out the way of salvation. Asked how they knew that in such and such a place they could be told some glad news, they could only reply that "the Spirit had told them." Our work has been confined, so far, to the Moskito Reservation, because the laws of Romish Nicaragua have been against Protestant missions. Only recently our Church received permission to enter the Roman Catholic territory, a forward movement long looked for and prayed for, as there are a goodly number of Indian Christians or others wishing to be taught just beyond the boundaries of the reservation. Before long, we hope, one of our native helpers will have opened a Christian school in Dakura, in Nicaragua.

The work here in Bluefields is different. It is chiefly among English-speaking Creoles, and is becoming more and more difficult. A great many foreigners come here, and scarcely one of them is a regular church-attendant, while many are given to drinking and gambling. Our earnest prayer is that it might be given to us to preach the Kingdom faithfully and with power. The development of Bluefields is so rapid that the spread of the Kingdom of God is needed to prevent it from becoming a godless town. (Rev) Leonard Reichel.

Singing Christians.

BY REV. THEO. L. CULYER.

SINGING plays a great part in the Christian life of this world, and if we may take the Bible descriptions of heaven with any good degree of literalness, it will play a great part in the next world. It is more than likely that Adam and Eve sang a duet in the garden of Eden; the birds there might have taught them music, even if they had not taken to it spontaneously. The first song that is mentioned in the Bible was that jubilant anthem which rang out over the Red Sea, when Moses and the children of Israel "sang a song unto the Lord." Jubal may have accompanied his harp and organ with his voice; and Laban told Jacob that he could have cheered his departure with "songs and tabret and harp." The most glorious days of ancient Israel were her singing days, and none of the "higher critics" will ever dislodge my strong conviction that Israel's greatest king was a psalmist. Our blessed Lord probably joined often in a service of song with his disciples. Who supposes that when they chanted together that solemn hymn on that memorable night of the paschal supper that it was the first or the only time in which their voices ever blended together in sacred melody?

What an exquisite touch that is in the Book of Job, where the "widow's heart is made to sing for joy." So Paul and Silas were so filled with the sweet spirit of gratitude and praise that at midnight they made the filthy dungeon of Philippi ring with music. When a devout soul is filled with the love of Jesus, the voice of praise is irrepressible. Martyr's cells and beds of anguish and the wards of hospitals have all been cheered with holy song. The only fault I have to find with the gentle brotherhood of Quakers is that their mode of worship so long discouraged vocal praise: but even they have got their tongues unloosed, and now a "Friends' meeting-house" hears the unwonted sounds of psalmody.

My near neighbour and beloved friend, Mr. Sankey, is one of the greatest benefactors of this age. He has done for English-speaking nations what Luther did for Germany; he has popularised the Gospel in metre, and set the masses to singing. His pieces are heard in the sailors' forecastle and in the soldiers' barracks, and in the cottages of the humblest peasantry. I have even heard an aristocratic old English earl play Sankey's tunes in his private chapel of an ancient feudal castle, while his servants joined in the chorus of "Wash me and I shall be whiter than show." Thackeray says that he could not keep back the tears when in walking through one of the slums of London he came upon a group of little ragged children who were singing:—

There is a happy land,
Far, far away!

The same tender hymn, one of the sweetest ever composed, was sung over the grave of the eloquent Guthrie in Edinburgh. No sermon, no exhortation, no discourse of consolation seems to go so closely to the heart's core as the Gospel of Jesus Christ in the voice of song.

What does all this mean but that God intends that the service of praise shall fill an immense space in his spiritual kingdom. None of us sing enough. I verily believe that those hours in which we do the least sinning are those which we spend in singing the praises of our Lord. Nothing so lifts the soul heavenward as to spread the pinions of song and go up with the lark to the very gates of the celestial city. And in the hours of anguish, what a relief it is to pour out our sorrows into the ears of our loving Saviour, and then to leave our burthens at his feet, and bear away a song.

Our religion is too prosaic; it ought to be more melodious, like the vernacular of heaven. It is too often pitched to a doleful dirge or a querulous whine of despondency. We are saved by hope. However dark may be the skies, and however fiercely the storm may beat in our faces, we should tighten the girdle of trust about our loins, and push upward. While blind unbelief is railing at God and trying to hamstring our courage, let us grasp hold of the joyous assurance that all things work together for good to them that love God, and whom God loves. Let us press our way out of the lower regions of mist and doubt and despondency, and we may

Hear Hope singing, sweetly singing
Softly in an undertone.
Singing as if God had taught her
'Twill be better further on!

This is the melody to march to heaven by. This is the temper to make religion attractive and win converts to Christ. The doom of sin is "wailing and gnashing of teeth"; the spirit of our Gospel is love and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost; and whatever else may be there, heaven will be full of singing Christians.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS BAPTISM.

WE have already seen why it was needful that Christ should die to save us: why He who died for us should be God and man in one person; why He needed also to be spotlessly holy. Let us now think of the fact of his baptism, and see how far it concerns us.

The story is well known. For 400 years there had been no prophet among the Jews. Now one has appeared who, by his manner of life, by his strange dress, by his fearless testimony against sin, and by his announcement of the Kingdom of God, causes a great stir among the people. No wonder that they flocked in crowds down to Bethabara, in the Jordan Valley, to hear his strange message; and no wonder, too, if "they mused in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ" (Luke iii. 15).

Among those who came to his baptism was Jesus of Nazareth. From the account as given by Luke, we learn that Jesus was baptised when He was thirty years of age, and that as He came up out of the water He was "praying" (iii. 21—23). And from Matthew we learn that Jesus attached such importance to it that He took the long journey from Nazareth in order to be baptized, and that He regarded it, both for John and for Himself, as a necessary part of "all righteousness" (iii. 13—15). Both Evangelists tell of the opened heavens, the descending Spirit, and the voice from heaven. "Go to Jordan if you would see the Trinity"; there God the Son is baptised, God the Spirit descends in shape of a dove, and God the Father speaks. An event so wondrously marked ought to have some importance to us. Do we understand it?

Think of this. John's baptism was a "baptism of repentance unto the remission of sins" (Luke iii. 3). All who submitted to it were "baptised of him in Jordan confessing their sins" (Matt. iii. 6). How could such a baptism be right for Jesus? He had no sin to confess, therefore nothing to repent of, and could promise no amendment in the future; yet He came to John's baptism. Why? Do not read any further until you have thought of the question.

Of course, the rite was symbolical. The washing of the body in water symbolised the cleansing of the soul from sin. Jesus came to John "when all the people were baptised" (Luke iii. 21), and when the water was symbolically fouled with their sins. The first act of his public ministry was, therefore, to identify Himself by this rite with our sins. As you think of John immersing Him beneath Jordan's wave, read the words of the Apostle, "For He hath made Him to be sin for us, who know no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 21). Could He have "fulfilled all righteousness" if He had not thus symbolically taken our sins? Jesus says not (Matt. iii. 15). From this time He looks forward to a further baptism of suffering and death (Luke xii. 50), which He will meet because of our sins, and by which sin is judged and put away.

Can you not see now one important reason why our Lord was baptised? Contrast his baptism with yours. His baptism identified Him with us sinners, ours identifies us with Him—the Righteous one (Rom. vi. 2—4). He then became answerable for all our guilt; we become sharers of all his merit. He the Holy One becomes one with me—(what condescension!); I, the unholy one, become one with Him (what grace!). Have we in any measure understood his baptism? Do not lay this paper aside carelessly. If we have learned the truth with the intellect, let us wait before God until He makes it living and powerful upon the heart.

SOUTHSEA MISSION.—Mr. John Denning, in his new report, tells of steady, earnest work on Southsea Common, and in short missions in different towns and villages. God has been pleased to use these efforts in blessing to many. Mr. Denning's address is Myrtle Cottage, 91, St. James's-road, Southsea.

PASTOR A. G. BROWN'S RECORD.

WE have just received from our friend Mr. Archibald G. Brown his annual "Record of Mission Service." This he opens with a "Letter to my Helpers," in which he dwells on the loss sustained in the death of Mr. Spurgeon, and gives the memorable tribute he (Mr. Brown) was permitted to bear a year ago over the open grave in Norwood Cemetery. As to his own home sorrow, and the work among the East End poor, Pastor Brown says:—

"At this time a deep family sorrow broke with terrible suddenness over the home. My dear wife was laid low with phthisis. In the early spring she was removed to the South Coast, and has been there ever since—a patient, but great sufferer. This has changed all the usual experience of life, and necessitated the change in this annual record of service. To write the usual full account of every branch of the work is impossible. Ceaseless travelling to and fro consumes both time and strength, and makes the idea of writing a book an unbearable burden. Let it, however, be remembered that the work itself has gone on the same, if its records be diminished.

"Never, indeed, has any year been so full of blessing as this sorrowful one. The preaching of the Word has been with the 'demonstration of the Spirit,' and many are the souls that have been won to the Saviour. Over one hundred and eighty have avowed their allegiance to Christ by baptism. While repudiating what is termed 'a social Gospel,' we have seen 'the Gospel of the grace of God' bring forth rich philanthropic fruit. The Orphan Homes have been maintained; the Seaside Home has had its full number of visitors; the 'Christian Dwellings' have proved a blessing to the poor saints of God. Here they have been able to possess three rooms and a wash-house for the small sum of 2s. per week. The Soup Kitchen, besides its sales over the counter, has given away tens of thousands of quarts of soup and puddings to the hungry. Hundreds have been clothed, and many widows have been aided in their hard struggle to live by little weekly pensions. The missionaries have been incessantly carrying on their house-to-house visitation, and the sick and dying have been specially cared for. While first and foremost we seek to win the soul to Christ, sorrow, poverty, and the needs of earthly life are not forgotten.

"My whole heart goes out in gratitude to those who have, year after year, enabled me to be 'the hand of help' to many. I pray my Master to reward them, for I cannot. Whether the work will suffer because, through stress of trouble, there is 'only a letter,' instead of 'a report,' I must leave with you. Perhaps, dear reader, if you were in my place, you would not do more. Will you who have helped me when all was bright, leave, now that the clouds hang low? For the poor to suffer loss through my sorrow would be a double grief. Remember my dear one in prayer. Remember my poor ones in gifts.

"Yours in the work and witness of Christ,
"ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

"Families visited, 19,600; cases relieved, 9,500; sick ones, 4,100; deaths, 99."

We trust these homely and direct words may touch many hearts, and evoke hearty sympathy and generous support for a work which God has greatly blessed, and which has been the means of dispelling the darkness of despair in thousands in many a sin-darkened and sorrow-stricken home. Mr. Brown may be addressed 22, Bow-road, E.

Annexed to the "Record" is a suggestive and characteristic paper by Pastor Brown on "A Holy Ghost Church," which we feel sure will be read with great interest by many.

BRIGHTON.—The president of the Brighton and Hove Cabmen's Temperance Society, Mr. W. Willett, invited the cabmen of Brighton and Hove, with their wives, to tea at Hove, on Feb. 1. About 150 responded to the invitation. Next evening at the Brighton Town Hall it was estimated that about 400 guests were present. On both occasions earnest Gospel and temperance addresses were given.

PORT OF HULL.—The united committee of the Port of Hull Society and Sailors' Orphan Home have sent us their report, showing earnest evangelical labour in Hull, Grimsby, the Hartlepools, Goole, and the Yorkshire Coast. The missionary agencies have been very successful. Since the establishment of the Home 1233 orphans have been received—769 boys and 464 girls. Full details of this good work may be had of the Secretary, Orphan Home, Park-street, Hull.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

V.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE BOOK.

"The orderly arrangement of the Book of the Revelation is," as Canon Garratt says, "too striking to escape notice, and the interpretation of the symbols must be greatly affected by ascertaining correctly the true outlines"; and again, "Everything in the clear understanding of the prophecy depends upon getting the skeleton outlines of the Apocalypse firmly fixed in the mind."

This is indeed of paramount importance. As perhaps nothing is more helpful to the reader of ordinary literature than a methodical table of contents, and appropriate division into chapters, so is it of the greatest assistance to the student of the prophetic word to apprehend at the outset the plan upon which the particular book is framed. The present paper will be devoted to such an inquiry. For some portion of it we have Divine explanation; for others we are left to the resources of prayerful examination and conjecture.

About the first grand division of the Apocalypse there can neither be doubt nor difference of opinion. All are agreed that the Giver of the Revelation has Himself declared its character. His command to the seer ran thus:—

"Write—
"The things which thou hast seen,"
"The things which are,"
"The things which shall be hereafter."

This was to be the threefold division of the contents of the book that he was to write.

"The things which thou hast seen" were clearly the vision described in the first chapter. "The things which are" were those which related to the Seven Churches in Asia. Whilst, however, they had primarily to do with the then actually existing Churches situated in the places named, the symbolical number seven indicated that those Churches were regarded as representative of the whole Church, and the character and contents of the seven letters with the accompanying promises to the individual "overcomer," and the urgent call for attention by the Spirit, leave no room for doubt that "the things which are" were meant to exhibit the spiritual phases and features of the professing people of God during the whole of the dispensation. The applicability of the admonitions, commendations, warnings, and encouragements to the various conditions of spiritual life which have all along obtained, has been recognised by all.

Whether the Seven Churches are to be regarded as prefiguring or illustrating successive chronological conditions of the Church, from the time when the Revelation was given until the end of the dispensation, is another question, and one into which I do not now enter. In its first and simpler meaning "the things which are" must, it is submitted, be understood in the sense in which the Apostle would have understood it, as applying to the whole Church then "militant here on earth," and represented by the seven selected examples.

"The things which shall be hereafter"—"the things which must shortly come to pass" (ch. i. 1)—"the things which must shortly be done" (xxii. 6) would consequently commence when the description of "the things which are" had been concluded. And this is exactly what we find; for no sooner is the seventh epistle ended than an altogether fresh vision is presented to the seer, and the trumpet-toned voice of the Divine Revealer is heard, saying: "I will show thee things which must be hereafter"—or literally "after these things." The prophetic history of the future then commences—that is to say, after a preliminary manifestation of certain glorious scenes in that heaven into which the seer had been spiritually rapt. The prophecy thenceforward deals with that which should immediately begin to take place, and continues to unfold the things which were to come to pass; it ends only when "the mystery of God" is finished, "as He hath declared to his servants the prophets," and the new heaven and the new earth, with all the glories of the New Jerusalem, and the blessedness of the redeemed, have been brought before the entranced gaze of the beloved disciple.

Such are the main divisions of the book. But subordinate to these, and not less important, is the arrangement of that part which is contained in the last of the three sections. This arrangement is a twofold one: that is to say, the things which were to come to pass were exhibited to the seer in two series of visions, each of them covering the same chronological period, and consisting of a double sevenfold succession of prophetic figurations.

This duplication of visions is in accordance with what appears to be the Divine plan in foretelling future events, if we may judge from other examples. Such, for instance, was the method employed when, in his dreams, Joseph foresaw his exaltation to be head over his brethren. It was revealed to him in the double visions of the sheaves and the stars. So again in the case of the dreams of Pharaoh concerning the seven years of plenty and the seven years of famine, which were made known to him under the symbolic forms of the seven fat and lean kine, and the seven good and bad ears. And on that occasion we are told the reason for the double revelation, "For that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twice, it is because the thing is established by God, and God will shortly bring it to pass." It was to indicate the absolute certainty of accomplishment of the things revealed. And so, once again, when the future history of the world, extending over at least a period of 2500 years, is to be disclosed, it is in a twofold form that the revelation is given; first to the king Nebuchadnezzar, under the figure of the great image, and then to the prophet Daniel, under that of the four wild beasts.

It is, therefore, reasonable to expect that, when communicating to his servants in the Churches the things which were shortly to come to pass, and which were to end in the completion of the mystery of God, and the establishment of his kingdom for ever, a similar method would be adopted, and a double prefiguration of the future be vouchsafed. And such we find to be the case. The Revelation declares the future history of the Church militant here on earth, and of that part of the world which had been the subject of previous prophecies, in a twofold series of visions, for "the thing is established by God."

The structure of that part of the Book which deals with the things that were to happen immediately after the then existing condition of the churches is, I believe, as follows. (The scene and action recorded in the fourth and fifth chapters are introductory to the actually prophetic portion, which accordingly commences with the opening of the first seal, as recorded in the sixth chapter.)

First Series (ch. vi.—xi.)

The seven seals, the seventh of which expands into the seven trumpets, ending with the "last trump," under which the assumption of power by the Lord Jesus Christ, the resurrection, and judgment take place.

Second Series (ch. xii.—xvi.)

Seven signs (the first two and the last of which are thus designated, the intervening ones being left to be discovered); the seventh expanding into the seven vials, ending with the completion of the mystery ("It is done"), the fall of great Babylon, and the final "shaking" of all things.

Both series end, it will be observed, with the "great hail" (ch. xi. 19; xvi. 21.)

These two sets of visions are followed by the explanation of the mystery of Babylon given in ch. xvii.; the fuller delineation of her fall in ch. xviii.; the marriage of the Lamb and the victorious advent of the King of kings in ch. xix.; the millennium and first and second resurrections and judgment of the great white throne in ch. xx.; and the manifestation of the Church, "having the glory of God," in chs. xxi. and xxii.

It will at once be seen that this view of the structure of the Apocalypse differs in one important respect from that which has so long been held with practical unanimity by Protestant interpreters, who have regarded the book as consisting, in its main prophetic portion, of three septenaries, or series of seven visions—the seven seals, the seven trumpets, the seven vials. To that theory the very serious objection attaches that, whereas the trumpet series concludes at the end of ch. xi., the next series, that of the vials, does not commence till chap. xv., thus making a great gap or break in the orderly arrangement of the book of no less than three chapters, xii., xiii., and xiv. Elliott, of whose grand work, "Horæ Apocalypticæ," it is impossible to speak too highly, as the greatest expository classic of later days relating to this marvellous book, treats that portion as a great "retrospective digression, somewhat long and varied." This view involves so violent a breach in the symmetrical structure of a work which, of all the various parts of the holy volume, bears the most distinct marks of, one may almost say, mathematical order in its composition, that it, primâ facie, arouses serious doubt of its correctness. The view just given leads, on the contrary, to no such consequence, while it has, as it seems to me, very strong internal evidence in its favour. The great difficulty is, of course, the exact definition of the seven "signs," since though, as I have said, three are specifically mentioned, the remainder are left to be discovered. This fact, however, so far from forming an argument against the correctness of the view, may be regarded rather as telling in its favour; for, in the first place, such a construction would tend to maintain the enigmatical character of the book, making its interpretation the reverse of easy; and in the next, the fact that it had not been apprehended till so late in the dispensation would go to show that it was only in those latter days to which the concluding "signs" related, that it was of peculiar importance to discern such arrangement.

I now subjoin the following enumeration of the seven signs, taken from Canon Garratt's admirable "Commentary on the Revelation," wherein he expounds the view which, so far as I am aware, he was the first to set forth, with much force.

First sign (and thus designated). The woman clothed with the sun, ch. xii. 1, 2.

Second sign (and thus designated). The ten-horned wild beast, ch. xii. 3—17 and xiii. 1—10.

Third sign. The beast with the lamb-like horns, ch. xiii. 11—18.

Fourth sign. The 144,000 on Mount Zion, ch. xiv. 1—5.

Fifth sign. The three angels flying through the midst of heaven, ch. xiv. 6—13.

The sixth sign. The harvest and the vintage, ch. xiv. 14—20.

The seventh sign (and thus designated). The seven angels having the seven last plagues, ch. xv. and xvi.

To some, the foregoing division may at first sight appear arbitrary. The arguments on which it is based will, however, be presented in subsequent papers; when I venture to think it will be admitted that the view thus afforded of the symmetrical structure of the book is one greatly calculated to aid inquiry into the meaning of its marvellous revelations concerning "the things which were shortly to come to pass."

AMONG THE EAST-END JEWS.

Since the opening of the New Central Hall, Philpot-street, E., many more Jews than formerly have been brought under the sound of the Gospel. At week-night services men and women have quietly listened to the preaching of salvation through Christ and Him crucified, while hundreds have been visited in their homes. On Tuesday, Feb. 7, the workers had a hard but blessed day's work at this centre. From 8.30 a.m. till 5 p.m. the doctors and their helpers were engaged in attending to the needs of a hundred patients — women and children. At 10.30 a.m. a party of destitute Jews partook of a hearty meal in the shelter, which is situated in the basement of the building, after which the Gospel was preached to them. The chief event of the day took place at 5 p.m., when about 270 Jewesses belonging to the sewing class sat down to tea in the large hall.

After tea Rev. John Wilkinson delivered a short address. This was followed by a lecture, with dissolving views representing scenes from the lives of the Patriarchs. Great was their pleasure and interest as scene after scene appeared on the sheet, Mr. Redwood drawing spiritual lessons from each, speaking in German. Afterwards the night school for Jewish children was held as usual, and thus, on that Tuesday alone, the Mildmay Mission preached Christ to nearly five hundred Jews and Jewesses.

On Saturday last there were a hundred Jews present at the dispensary, twenty-one at the shelter, and a hundred at the afternoon meeting in the large hall. Needless to say that the work is not carried on without opposition and difficulty.

OUR SAILORS. — The general distress is felt keenly among sailors just now. To help such, Miss Child, of the "Welcome Home," 173, Ratcliffe-highway, has been giving soup suppers. Miss Child finds she can provide soup for eighty men at a cost of fifteen shillings.

MRS. SPURGEON'S BOOK FUND.

MRS. SPURGEON has endeavoured, to the best of her ability, to make the story of her Book Fund on this occasion a song. It is an "In Memoriam" narrative weighted by an ever-present sense of sorrow, which, however, is warmed by the sunshine of grateful retrospect and fond anticipation. The present story of the Book Fund is mainly the story of her soul's grief, and of the many memories and the glorious faith which transfigure it and stud the recital with bells of praise. No one can fail to note how deeply the iron has entered her soul; yet is sorrow swallowed up of joy, both in the incentives to service that remain, and in the sure confidence that "He hath done all things well." "Mercy has outrun misery. Divine love has pierced the gloom of an unspeakable sorrow with a ray of celestial glory."

Interrupted about the middle of 1891 by that terrible time of suffering during which for many weeks the late Mr. Spurgeon's life trembled in the balance, and by that further period of watchful care which the promise of recovery necessitated, the work in connection with the Book Fund was suspended for months, and was not resumed till the spring of last year. The report for 1891 is, therefore, brief. The interruption of the work itself, however, did not interrupt the flow of funds into the exchequer. An embarrassment of riches ensued, which has been overcome by the bestowal of larger grants.

As in former years, Mrs. Spurgeon gives numerous extracts from letters received from ministers, missionaries, and friends from all parts of the world. The area of distribution is as wide as John Wesley's parish, and voices are heard from many lands telling substantially the same tale of thankfulness and appreciation. To one Mrs. Spurgeon's gift of books "came like a ray of sunshine on a dark and cloudy day." Another is unable to tell what such a gift means either to his own life or his work for others. A third, who apparently takes ample time to awake to a sense of his mercies, writes, after three years to say, concerning himself and his father, that "they are just beginning to thoroughly appreciate the gift."

It is pleasing to note in respect of this case how acceptable even slow returns are to the large-hearted donor. Generally speaking, the acknowledgments of recipients leave nothing to be desired on the score of fervency. "I make no secret of it," writes a clergyman, "that I get more help in preaching from Mr. Spurgeon, than from all our bishops and English Church preachers put together." Another clergyman divides his indebtedness between the gift of books and the letter which accompanied the gift, wherein this message was given him as from the Lord—"The Lord keep you clear from the blood of souls." Only in one instance does the characteristic feature of playfulness assert itself in the narrator, and that is when a poor minister, here dubbed "Mr. Diffidence," is taken to task for being so backward in asking, and has his portrait further sketched in the Adam Slowman of "Expectation Corner." The piquant serves as a good spice; and, we are glad there is some of the flavour of it in these "in memoriam" pages.

Part—and perhaps the most important part—of the work of the Book Fund concerns the circulation of the Metropolitan Tabernacle sermons in all parts of the world. For nine years even Russia has been accessible to the evangel of peace in this form. God be praised that in a country so inaccessible to Gospel influences from without, a door has been opened whereby 300 copies of these invaluable sermons reach St. Petersburg, month by month, to be afterwards sown broadcast from Arkangel to Odessa, and from Riga to Siberia! We can recall now as we write this notice, how some two or three years before the end, Mr. Spurgeon said, pointing to where his sermons were, "These sermons will be a tongue for me, when I am gone, to speak for God and his truth, and my hope is God may bless them to many even where the Gospel in other forms may cease to be." This forecast is being verified. "The Book Fund and its Work" is especially strong as to the Divine blessing attendant on the sermons far and near, and the consciousness of this does much to make the "Story" or "Report" a glad song.

There is one matter, however, on which Mrs. Spurgeon enlarges which seriously affects the glad ring of the music, and that is the extraordinary financial distress of multitudes of Pastors at the present hour. We are satisfied that the picture Mrs. Spurgeon draws of their condition is not overdrawn. With scores and, indeed, hundreds of them the question of ways and means presses, morning, noon, and night, so that it is, indeed, and that in cases often where not suspected, a constant scene of "grinding poverty," which, as Mrs. Spurgeon observes "almost crushes the life out of these good men and women." Mrs. Spurgeon's sympathy has ever been practical, and we trust there may be ever a balance in her exchequer, to cheer her on in her philanthropic service to many who, under great privation, labour in word and doctrine.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

MANY of the churches in Leicester, and the Baptist churches especially, will have reason gratefully to remember the visit of the brethren—Messrs. Fullerton and Smith. Through their united ministry a tide of spiritual blessing has flowed in upon our hearts and churches such as we have seldom witnessed.

By their genial and brotherly manner of associating themselves with the pastors and workers of the churches visited; by their bright, helpful, and stimulating afternoon "hours with the Bible"; and by their Sunday and week-evening evangelistic services, in which Mr. J. Manton Smith so sweetly sings the Gospel, and Mr. Fullerton so tenderly, reasonably, and persuasively presses the truth upon the minds, hearts, consciences of the people, the brethren have made their way into the esteem, confidence, and love of all with whom they have worked. We thank God for his servants and for their "work of faith and labour of love."

They began their mission at the historic chapel in Harvey-lane, associated for ever with the noble William Carey, who went from the pastorage of the church worshipping there in 1792 to undertake his immortal work in India. Commencing on Saturday, January 7, services were held, with ever-growing interest till the 12th. Showers of blessing descended and gladdened the hearts of the pastor, Rev. J. Cornish, and his devoted people.

Next week the evangelists moved to the Carley-street Baptist Chapel (Rev. J. C. Forth's) and the Clarence Hall. There the work gathered volume and power. Many were touched by the message of the Gospel, and confessed Christ in the inquiry room. But it was at Archdeacon-lane, to which the mission was transferred on the 21st, that the work of the brethren reached a point of spiritual power and gracious success that filled us there with a glad and grateful surprise. Our expectations of good had been quickened by preliminary meetings for prayer and evangelistic effort. But so great and abounding a blessing as God gave through the service of the brethren we did not dream of. A crowded chapel opened the mission week on Saturday, the 21st. On Sunday evening numbers went away unable to get into the packed chapel. Up to Thursday evening, the 26th, large and interested gatherings assembled.

Mr. Fullerton and Mr. Smith wisely and admirably, conduct their after-meetings in which they endeavour to focus the influences of the earlier service, and bring the wavering ones to decision. On the Sunday night, amid a stillness most impressive, one and another rose to confess Christ, till the chapel was dotted over with converts and inquirers. Invited to the inquiry room, in twos and threes they trooped into the place set apart for the purpose. Night after night this good work went on, and by Thursday night between 120 and 130 names had been registered of persons who had professed to find Christ, or were anxiously seeking Him. As we look back, we can say, "We were like them that dream. Then was our mouth filled with laughter and our tongues with singing. The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

The week beginning January 28th, was spent at the Victoria-road Church, under the pastorate of Rev. J. G. Greenhough, where also the afternoon meetings have been mostly held, the rest at the Presbyterian Church. How great has been the blessing to the church and congregation at "Victoria" is testified by the hearty and appreciative words of Mr. Greenhough at a social meeting, and again at the close of the mission at his church. He expressed his regret that the services were ended, and his devout thankfulness for the visit of the evangelists, and the results already accomplished in the converts now for the Redeemer's service.

Last week our brethren moved to Humberstone-road Congregational Church—for they are unrestricted by denominational bounds. Crowded congregations and continued blessings attend the services and gladden the hearts of Rev. A. James and his workers in their service for the Master.

This week the two evangelists pass to Melbourne Hall, Rev. C. B. Sawday's centre of work. Here we are looking for a crowning blessing, for to Mr. Sawday's generosity in sharing with us and our churches the service of the brethren—engaged in the first instance to visit Melbourne Hall only—we owe it, under God, that we have partaken of the benefit. May our brother, and the evangelists who visit his church, have a rich reward in spiritual gladness and the ingathering of multitudes who are now outside the kingdom of God, and may "great grace rest upon them."

WILLIAM BISHOP.

REV. J. McNEILL IN PERTH.

THIS evangelist, accompanied by Mr. J. H. Burke, "a sweet singer," began a week of evangelistic services in Perth, on Sabbath, February 5. Perth is not the easiest place for an evangelist to move. Evangelists have left it again and again disappointed. The reason of this is not far to seek. The Perth Christian Conference, which has been in existence for over thirty years, has made evangelistic services a feature of its annual gatherings, and has brought to the "fair city" the most powerful preachers and evangelists of our time. Besides, there is an Evangelistic Association or committee, that is ever on the watch for successful preachers whose services may be secured. All this tends to familiarise the people of Perth with evangelistic preaching and methods.

This, however, seemed in no way to hinder the success of Mr. McNeill's mission. The audiences were very large; indeed on several occasions they were beyond the expectations of the evangelists themselves, and that is saying a good deal. Mr. Burke sang the Gospel story with great beauty, and Mr. McNeill expounded familiar Gospel truth with remarkable freshness and power. Several of the addresses showed quite an extraordinary combination of preaching power in the evangelist. Mr. McNeill used humour as a handmaid in his work; but the handmaid did not often usurp the place of her mistress; almost invariably his intense spiritual earnestness subordinated and overshadowed the humour. To ministers, many of whom from the city and neighbourhood were present, the services were full of interest.

To Christians the preaching was quickening and "searching," while his clear and simple statement of Gospel truth, his intensely powerful appeals, and perhaps also some of his methods, were eminently fitted to bring sinners to decision. Sometimes he had no "after meetings"; at other times to get men to confess Christ he used "after-meeting" methods at the ordinary service. That many were led to decision it is not possible to doubt, but Mr. McNeill did not count them for us. He has left the good people of Perth to do that for themselves.

That God may bless his servants in their mission, and guide them in the use of those gifts with which He has blessed them, is the prayer of many to whom their labours have been helpful.

Christianity, not a theory, but a Relationship.

I. The Christian's Privilege.—Sons of God.
Sons by birth (1, 20, v. 1).
Sons by confession (Jer. iii. 19).
Sons by adoption (Rom. viii. 15).
Sons by reception (xx. 1-12).
Sons by separation (2 Cor. vi. 18).

II. The Christian's Boast—"Behold what love."
1. The objects of this love—"us."
2. The Author of it—"the Father."
3. The manner of it—"bestowed."

III. The Christian's Relationships.
1. To God as sons.
2. To the world as strangers—"Therefore, the world knoweth us not."

IV. The Christian's Prospects.
1. To behold his glory—"We shall see Him as He is."
2. To resemble his Person—"We shall be like Him."

LITTLE THINGS.

Who hath despised the day of small things.—Zech. iv. 10.

Perhaps we sometimes think the little things of childhood are rather tiresome; we want to be grown-up men and women at once. There are two books which will help us to be patient, which teach us that the little done well is very important—the Book of God around us, Nature, and the written Book of God, the Bible.

If we open our first book at the page "Harvest Field," what lesson do we find? "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." If the full corn could speak, it would tell us, "Once I was a tiny seed down in the damp, dark earth, with just enough life to send up a little shoot towards the surface, and little stringy feelers of roots downwards. And I struggled and persevered, and I ate and drank with my little roots, and I slowly crept up and up till I met the air and the sun. And then they helped me on, and I shot up green and hopeful, and the rain drenched me, but it fed me, and the wind came bustling across the field, and bowed me down till I thought I should break in two, but that made me strong, and so everything did me good, and I kept on growing till I was tall, and then my corn grew faster, and the warm sun, and the rain, and the earth, and the air were all good friends to me. And now I am a full ripe ear of corn, and I can feed hungry men and women, and if I am sown again I can go on working away making corn over again." "Ah," we say, "sensible little seed! It did the little thing well."

And if we turn over the pages of our book, we shall see the busy bee going from flower to flower working patiently gathering honey, doing apparently such a little at a time. Yet all the little of all the hard-working bees fills the honeycomb, and the gloomy winter has no terrors for the hive. Or we shall look down through the smooth blue Pacific and see the coral-polype living its little life, and dying, leave its little crust (armour and memorial-stone in one) behind, just a twig of a stone tree. Only that for all its life work. And generations of corals come and go, and at last an island toils up to the surface, a monument of innumerable little lives content to do little.

And if we take our Bible we shall find God shows us often how much He thinks of the little things, for God's other book is full of small things doing great works, always where God Himself has been making use of them. Think how often Jesus spoke about small things in such a way as to suggest sermons to us about the smallest—the mustard-seed, the hairs of our head, the sparrows, the lilies of the field. And you remember what He did with small things, when the disciples mentioned the "five barley loaves and two small fishes," almost apologising for speaking of them, "What are they among so many?" But with them Jesus fed the 5000 men. And it was a boy who had them. So when children bring their little to Jesus, He does wonderful things with it. He made a sermon of a little child once (Luke ix. 47), to teach great grown men humility.

In the Old Testament, too, we find the importance of little things. Elijah was learning about little things as the ravens came morning and evening, morning and evening, always with the meal God had told them to bring. And to keep up the lesson of the little at a time, the "daily bread," after this came the "handful of meal" and the "little oil" that wasted not and did not fail. And it is wonderful to think with what very small things God destroyed the land of Egypt, flies and locusts, hail, frogs, and lice. With these small things could God render waste that mighty kingdom and bring down the proud hearts of Pharaoh and his Court to humble obedience. It was as if God were showing that his power was so great that the smallest things were enough for him to break men's evil wills with, "the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty" (1 Cor. i. 27). Think of the tiny stone striking down the boastful Goliath, the rough stick opening up the Red Sea, the jawbone of the ass, and the ox-goad, laying men dead by hundreds. All strong because God was making use of them. If we have despised the day of small things, it is time we began to think differently.

We must not forget that little things are powerful for harm as well as good. A keeper in the Zoo was bitten by a cobra. He was quickly taken away to an hospital, and everything of any use was done for him, but in one short hour, in spite of surgeons and nurses, he was dead. Only a little puncture in the skin, only a few drops of poison, but nothing in the wide world could save him. What a little thing a gnat is, and how tiny its sting is, but how very uncomfortable it can make us feel. What a very little thing is one rude word, or one unkind retort, but from those we love they make us very unhappy. We all remember the passage in the Epistle of St. James that speaks of the tongue. "The tongue is a little member and boasteth great things." And we all know what follows, that the uncontrolled tongue "setteth on fire the course of nature." Let us ask God to keep our tongues for us, or we shall bitterly repent the doings of our "little member."

How well Satan knows the value of little things. He does not tempt us to some great sin—it is always such a very little thing he begins with; one evil word, that he may lead us on to swearing. One small theft as the foundation for forgery and prison; one little falsehood to pave the way to a life of lying and deceit. See how God shows us the end in the beginning, "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer" (1 John iii. 15). Dislike, hatred, murder.

Little things are a test. A straw will show which way the wind blows. Joseph, faithful as a slave, and honoured next as ruler of the kingdom. David, brave and honest as a shepherd-lad, full of zeal for the honour of God against the great Goliath, and raised up to the throne of God's chosen people, with the promise of the Messiah to be of his family. God tried them first as shepherd-boy and slave; faithful there, the honour and power followed. Many who would do the great things of life well, break down over the little things. But if we think, we must admit that our life is made up of trifles for the greater part, with the great events coming but now and then. If we feel inclined to be discontented with having such small things given us to do, it will do us good to remember that Jesus, the Lord of heaven and earth, was content to live a quiet, humble village life for thirty years. And in his public ministry He sent the disciples to gather up the fragments that remained, lest they should waste; when He had raised up Jairus' daughter from the dead, He did not forget that she had need of food. If we would be like Him, we must leave no part of our work undone. And at the end it will be the one who has been faithful in the "very little" (the little life of earth), who shall meet with the praise of his Lord. (Luke xix. 17.)

MRS. NASBY VISITS BETHESDA MISSION.

In the fifty-nine year o' my life I havn't saw so much Christmas all put together as there wus in Shekawgo this winter. I'm going to just tell you about the thing I sot most store by. That wus the holiday doin's at Bethesda Mission that the Shekawgo Central W.C.T.U. keeps up. They had three spells at it. Fust wus Christmas eve. We went to the mission and bimeby in they come, a passel of youngsters. The girls' cheeks was a glowin' and their eyes danced jigs every minit, no matter how demure and preachified they tried to be. One of the girls told how a church wus built somewhere out west, and it "took" to beet all. Then another sung, "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," and I declare it wus the purtiest love song you ever heerd. A young man disclaimed something, and one of the other girls sung "While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks." Where the minx learned that, I'd like to know. I hain't heerd it these forty year. Why, it broke the meetin' all down. Old gray-headed men told how their mother used to sing that at Christmas time. Then the leader made a soft little speech like, and seven men riz up for prayers. I hain't seen so many folks want to be prayed for in the two year sence I wus at that mission before. They've been comin' right along this month, and they look as if they do considerable prayin' for theirselves now.

The second spell was New Year's eve. There was more young folks than ever that night, and they had the little room behind the platform in an awful litter with their turkey and oranges and grapes and cake, and lots of bread and butter and ham. The house was crowded. There's grate drawin' power in turkey. The young folks this time that gave the entertainment wus from Plymouth church. A beautiful lot they were, and such good cookin'! The singin' wus lovely, too. There wus sole in it. And underneath, like the roll of the sea under a sailin' vessel, wus the notes of the organ. 'Peared like the voices played on the swell of that organ as porpuses sport on the white caps off Hatteras. I used to have the name of bein' the best treble singer in Pike county, and I hain't lost my ear yit, if my voice is cracked. . . .

I am forgettin' to tell you the best of it, and that's about the meetin' after the turkey, New Year's night. Forty-seven of 'em signed the pledge after the speech, and then they set down for a prayer-meetin', and 'twas half-past twelve, 1893, before we started fer home. A good number of 'em made a splendid start and have been coming to the meetin's ever sence. One of the best things about that meetin' wus the testimony of the men who started there one, two, and some of 'em three and four years ago. Jack says of Keeley hed cured them men the hull United States and Great Britain'd have heerd on't, and he beleeves from what he sees of both, and Jack's where he sees both, that more men is truly and lastingly "cured" in that one mission than in any gold cure. When I asked him why on airth folks don't believe more in it then, he said, "The Lord Jesus Christ don't advertise." That's what Jack said, and I'm tellin' ye of it. Ye kin take it for what its wuth.

The last spell was at the end of the week of prayer, when the young folks come from the Blue Island church with a supper. I reckon the best prayin' them dear children did, wus done that night in feedin' the hungry, and tellin 'em where ther's bread enough and to spare. Besides, they have gathered up and sent in over five hundred garments to clothe the poor. That will go into their own weddin' garments when they come to the marriage of the King's Son.—Union Signal.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

Lady William Lennox and a party of friends visited Ogle Mews Ragged Schools on Wednesday week and delighted the children and parents with an instrumental concert. Many might thus cheer and aid mission workers among the poor by showing a genuine interest and taking pains to impart some amount of pleasure.

The Rosemary Mission, which, notwithstanding its name, is by no means located in the most fragrant district of Islington, held its annual tea on Monday week. The hon. superintendent, Mr. F. Warman, presided and vigorous addresses were given by Rev. G. Plaford, Mr. John Kirk and others.

RESIGNATION.

"Thy will be done."—St. Matt. vi. 10.

O, blessed Christ, the yearning and repining,
All, all are past;
Gold-fringed death's robe, grief's cloud hath silver lining.
At last, at last.

As the lone dove, unto the ark door flying,
To Thee I flew;
As the lost lamb, amidst the desert crying,
Thy voice I knew.

Sweet is thy love, I feel its gentle soothing,
In Thee I rest;
Dear were earth's loves, each rugged pathway smoothing,
But thine is best.

Thus would I trust Thee, as each joy or sorrow
From Thee I take;
Till, in the light of thine eternal morrow,
My soul shall wake.

PERSECUTION NEAR CORUNNA.—Mr. G. J. Chesterman, writing to friends at home, describes how cruelly priests and officials at Monforte have been persecuting a poor dying believer, besides casting into prison two Spanish brethren found ministering to the sick one. After six days' incessant besetment and temptation the priests gave up the case as hopeless, and Mr. Chesterman, being permitted once more to visit his member, found him cleaving fast to the Lord, having been wonderfully sustained in it all.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 19.—1 KINGS XV.

How long after David's sun had set did the light of his life glimmer over his house! God keeps his covenant and mercy unto thousands of generations. We may all be inheriting more than we know from the prayers and tears of those who have gone before us. What a pathetic sigh of regret that mention of Uriah is! Oh that we might never turn aside from anything He commands all the days of our life, without any exception! One moment of indulged passion may cast a shadow over long years.

A bad father may have a good son. Let no one feel that a noble life is impossible because of the difficulties of his birth or home surroundings. Through all the true life emerges into the light, as a water lily from the muddy sediment of the pond. There were some things which might have been better even in Asa's reign (14), yet Asa's heart was perfect with God, from which we may infer that the perfect heart is that which lives up to the limit of its light. The work of reformation always must begin in our home, and even if our nearest, like Maachah, encourage idolatry, they must be removed. The Book of Chronicles gives some further interesting details of Asa's life, which show the war of good and evil, and how at last he succumbed to mistrust.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20.—1 KINGS XVI.

A noble figure crosses the canvas for a moment, Jehu, the son of Hanani, shining like a star in the night. No age has been without its prophets; no life, however abandoned, without some remonstrating voice; no soul goes over the cataract without a warning cry. And these things, answering to the voice of conscience within, reveal the merciful, pitying love of the Father, not willing that any should perish.

Elah the son of Baasha, and all his house, were so utterly exterminated that none were left to avenge their fate (11 R. V.), but the avenger fell into their sins, and himself was slain by Omri, for in his brief reign of seven days Zimri had found time to walk in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin. Seven days are long enough to test a man; and in that period he made manifest so great obstinacy and sin as to make longer probation needless, and all thought of reformation hopeless.

Omri's course was even darker than that of any before him. He seems even to have made statutes for idolatrous practices (Micah vi. 16). And Ahab not only set aside the Second Commandment, but the First. The young, beautiful Syrian wife plunged him and his kingdom even further into the darkness, and the inspired artist does not hesitate to paint with Rembrandt colours, that the dark background may show up the illustrious glory of Elijah. The darkest hour before dawn; the keenest suffering before birth; desperation before the step of the Saviour over the wave; Ahab and Jezebel before Elijah.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21.—1 KINGS XVII.

The R.V. suggests that Elijah was of a pilgrim race, and certainly he learnt to stand by himself in fellowship with the living God. He was ever standing in his presence chamber, like the archangel Gabriel, who uses the same words of himself in his address to the mother of our Lord. Oh, that we might always stand in the presence of the living God! The God of an undivided Israel, the ideal Israel.

This drought was the result of prayer. It was as if Elijah felt that nothing else would arrest the king and people (James v. 17). The man who stands before God is not afraid to stand before Ahab. His name meant, Jehovah is my strength, whom therefore should he fear, and of whom should he be afraid? It is not necessary to think that he was possessed of any striking physical or mental attributes; what he was, he was by faith.

Not unseldom God bids his servants hide themselves towards the sunrising, but in these periods of enforced seclusion, He makes Himself responsible for the supply of their want. The brook may dwindle, only to reveal other resources. Not nature only, but human hearts are at the disposal of our Master, who can make a cruse of oil and an handful of meal outlast a famine. Our one aim must be to know God's plan and live on it, then no good thing can fail.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22.—1 KINGS XVIII.

Obadiah was in a very anomalous position, but we must not judge him too harshly for being in Ahab's house, unless he was there at the expense of his testimony. Our loyalty to God does not involve leaving the service of men like Ahab, unless we are called upon to violate our conscience. The apostle said distinctly that we were to abide in the calling in which we were when we became Christians. Still, Obadiah was doing what he could, and used his position as a means of sheltering the prophets, and keeping the light burning. He, too, spoke about the living God, but not as his own, "The Lord thy God liveth."

A sinner is strangely oblivious to the real cause of his troubles, attributing them to any other source than to his own sin. When a man forsakes God, he brings drought upon his life. Evil things multiply as the parasites amid decay, and the false prophets in Israel. It is an evil thing, and a bitter. Put God in his right place again, near his altar, and the blood of Baal's priests encrimsons the brook, while the clouds cover the sky.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23.—1 KINGS XIX.

As long as Elijah looked at God he was strong, but when he looked at Jezebel's threat it seemed as if the communication of Divine strength was cut off: "when he saw that he arose and went for his life." It was a fatal mistake, as the movement which had been inaugurated collapsed in his absence. Oh! man of like passions with us, we would not excuse ourselves by thy fall, but we are glad to know that thy strength was not thine own, for thou wert naturally as weak as we are, and we may be as strong as thou. Let those who long to die leave God to fix the day, else they may miss the horses and chariots of fire.

To every erring child God sends merciful help. In the wilderness the meal is spread, and instead of remonstrance angel hands soothe the weary and despondent prophet. Our fits of depression and apparent desertion as often arise from physical as spiritual causes, and God knows our frame. Often the Father pays a surprise visit to his lonely and sorrowful child.

Nature is often the vehicle of God's voice. Its storm and passion relieve us by expressing our emotion; its calm melts and soothes us. There is much of God's presence when sounds of gentle stillness (R.V. mar.) steal around. Not the storm of Sinai but the whispers of Calvary touch and open hearts. We all need to get alone with God; our Carmels must be followed by our Horebs. There we receive fresh commissions, and there God teaches us to inspire others with the purposes with which He has filled our own hearts.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 24.—1 KINGS XX.

The insolence of Benhadad's demand shows how low idolatry had sunk Israel. He presumed on the cowardice which moral decrepitude always induces. There are no hours when we are tempted to such mean and abject sin as those which follow a great appeal which we have refused to heed. The story of this chapter well succeeds that of the convocation of Carmel.

Through Obadiah's care some prophets were still left to remonstrate with Ahab, and to speak God's word even though Elijah had gone. God is not shut up to one great voice speaking like a trumpet; if that fails Him He will call in another. His work must go on, if not by an Elijah, then by an unknown prophet.

The mercy of the kings of Israel was proverbial and in this case the plea made to it was not in vain. Is it not so that the rebel sinner is encouraged by the thought of the mercy of God which is in Jesus Christ our Lord? From the throne the Saviour stoops to call him "Brother," so soon as he sues for pardon, girded with sackcloth and with the rope around his neck, as one who confesses that he deserves the extreme penalty of the law.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25.—1 KINGS XXI.

Naboth's refusal was probably based upon religious grounds. He said, "The Lord forbid it me." He emphasised the fact that it had come from his fathers, according to the divine institution. And when the king learnt that it was not based on mean and selfish reasons he might have given way with good grace. Jezebel, however, was his evil genius, and initiated the policy which gave him Naboth's vineyard, but made him Naboth's murderer, for, even though he took no conspicuous part in giving the orders for Naboth's death, by his silence he constituted himself an accessory to all that Jezebel did. At God's bar at least he was held guilty. We cannot invest others with our power without being responsible for their use of it. We cannot shut our eyes to what is being done by our employés, and the same time open our hands for the gains of their misdeeds.

We may win the vineyard, but all enjoyment is taken away by the presence of Elijah, like an incarnate conscience. We are blind enough, however, to count conscience our enemy, and God's prophets our foes. Yet these only tell us the natural outworking of our sins, not adding aught of their own, but indicating their inevitable result. Sold unto sin; stirred up to do evil; doing very abominably in following idols; these are the successive records of Ahab's sin, and yet because he humbled himself for a little, the love of God held back the judgment which was nevertheless certain. Let the wicked forsake his way, and our God will abundantly pardon.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

FEBRUARY 26.

READING THE LAW. Neh. viii. 1—12.
GOLDEN TEXT, Psa. cxix. 18.

THIS incident took place only about a week after the completion of the city wall (see vi. 15). The seventh month was the first of the civil year (comp. i. with vii. 73). Three great feasts were appointed for this month—the Feast of Trumpets on the first day; the Day of Atonement on the 10th; and the Feast of Tabernacles from 15th to 21st (Lev. xxiii. 24—43). It was called Tisri, and corresponds to our September and October.

It was appropriate that the building of the city walls should be celebrated in such a way. For the real strength of a city is not its outward defences, but the character of its people. God is the defence of a people who know and obey his word. The strongest ramparts are worthless if He is disobeyed.

The public reading of the Law (1-8).—"All the people" (1) includes many from the surrounding country, besides those residing in Jerusalem. The number is variously estimated at from 20,000 to 50,000. "As one man" (see Ezra iii. 1). They were united in their desire and purpose to hear the message of God. "All that could hear with understanding" (2)—children as well as parents. The Bible is a book for young and old. We may begin the instruction of our children too late, but we cannot begin too soon. The seeds first sown have first use of the soil; let not the enemy sow tares before we sow wheat. "Before the water gate" (1)—a large open space south of the temple, near the gate through which water was carried for the temple service.

For the first time in this book we meet with Ezra (1, 2). Twelve years have elapsed since the incidents recorded in Ezra vii.—x. During that time it is not known whether he has been back to the court of Artaxerxes, or whether, leaving Nehemiah to do his great work, he has been in retirement occupied in the writing and exposition of the Law. As a scribe (1) this was his special work, and as a priest (2) the people might look to have instruction from him (Mal. ii. 7). He devoutly studied and diligently kept the Law himself (Ezra vii. 10). They are the best teachers whose lives express what they teach. The "pulpit" (4) on which Ezra stood was an elevated platform, sufficiently large to hold thirteen others who stood with him, six on his right hand and seven on his left (4).

Two things are noteworthy:—1. The work of the teachers. Ezra led in prayer and worship (6). This is the true way to begin the reading of God's Word. The Bible is like a sundial, for which no light is of any use save the light of the sun. Only in God's light can we see the light of his Word. Of the reading we are told that it was distinct, and was accompanied by exposition (8). Probably Ezra read in Hebrew, while his assistants translated into the vernacular of the people. The reading lasted for about five or six hours (3). It is said of one preacher that on one occasion he wanted so much time for his sermon that he omitted the reading of the Scripture. An old deacon afterwards reproved him, and suggested that he should leave out some of his sermon and give more of God's word. Our teaching is valuable only so far as it teaches the Word of God.

2. The attitude of the people.—Their hearty response (6) indicated that they made the prayer their own. They stood when the book was opened (5) as an expression of their reverence. And they were attentive to what they heard (3). These are the conditions that make a lesson enjoyable and profitable. Does not the Word of God deserve to be heard so!

The joy of the people (9—12).—Holy joy is sure to be the ultimate effect of careful and obedient study of the Word of God. Yet it was reached through sorrow (9). The first effect is painful. The Bible is the sword of the Spirit. It cuts and wounds before it becomes like the healing balm. It is well when the Word produces godly sorrow for sin. If you see yourself in the mirror of the Bible as a guilty sinner, don't be like the heathen, who sought to destroy the mirror because it revealed his own ugliness. To know the worst of your case is the first condition of experiencing the healing of the Great Physician. It was grounded in their understanding of the Word (12). The same Scripture that made them sad also made them joyous. They grieved because they learned what they were; they rejoiced because they learned what God was. It was holy joy (10)—in the Lord, his person, his fellowship, his service. Godless joy is the greatest delusion. What true joy can anyone have who is afraid to think of God? This joy is unselfish, prompting to generous sympathy for others. "God's bounty should make us bountiful." And it is our strength for conflict with evil, and for every holy duty. The best security against being drawn into the pleasures of the world is to have our hearts filled with the joy of the Lord. "They that have no joy seek pleasure."

"Our Boys and Girls."

Several other correspondents have addressed us on the subject of holiday amusements for the young. Rev. C. F. Harford-Battersby speaks as the son of a father who had a high sense of duty, giving a testimony which, he does not doubt, his three brothers would gladly support:—"My father discouraged all kinds of doubtful worldly amusements and pleasures, and took great care not to put temptation in our way. At the same time it was an unwritten code of laws by which we were ruled; but it was an understood thing in the family that such things had better be avoided. This was quite enough for me. I would have stood up for my father's opinion anywhere against all comers. I believed that what he said was the best, without a shadow of doubt, and I never remember regarding these virtual restrictions as in the least a hardship. Theatres and dances, worthless novels and cards, alcohol and tobacco, were thus avoided, and never desired, and I am thankful to be able to-day to bear witness to the wisdom of my father in thus leading us in the right direction."

Mrs. James, the mother of two high-spirited boys, gives the following advice:—"We need to study the dispositions of our boys, to find out what best pleases them, and to that they may never feel dull, and thus gain the impression that 'Christianity is a pleasureless thing.' Many parents do not, I fear, take the trouble to interest their children, but leave them to their own resources. There are so many pleasures we can and ought to give them in exchange for mere worldly amusements. For instance, I sincerely believe that every child ought to be allowed to learn some musical instrument; and if the boy or girl is fond of reading, he or she should be kept supplied with interesting and entertaining reading matter—history, travel, adventure, etc. Again, some boys take delight in some special study. I think that it is pleasant for them to be allowed to have a few chosen young friends occasionally to spend an evening together in romping and the enjoyment of innocent games."

The attractions of the theatre have been felt in the circles of several of our correspondents. "R. H. B." writes:—"Much the greatest part of my life I have spent in Sunday-school work, and I am now in my seventy-fourth year. Some twelve or fifteen years ago, when I had a class of lads and young men, Alfred B. put me this question: 'Do you think there is any harm in going to a theatre?' The Lord was very prompt in giving me a reply. 'Not if you can kneel down and ask God's blessing upon it, Alfred.' The rejoinder was, 'I don't think I could do that.' 'Then,' said I, 'it is not right to go.' Here is the line of demarcation which must not be overstepped. The boy could see plainly that, though he could not kneel down and ask God's blessing upon a visit to a theatre, yet he could do so upon a game of cricket, provided his companions there were not of a dangerous class. Let us all aim to realise more and more that "God is love," and we shall feel that we must make our children understand it; and when once this is realised, then comes the joy of serving Him. The devil is so busy with his temptations to try and make us believe that God is a hard taskmaster, whereas He is more than a loving Father to all his children."

Another writer, "S.," says that, being taken to the pantomime by his mother, he became possessed with an insatiable craving for more amusement of the same kind. In order to indulge the desire, he employed theft, falsehood, and intrigue; and grew up with a taste for the theatre which drew him into the society of actors, and light, chaffy, godless companions. He solemnly warns Christian people against allowing their children to be TEMPTED INTO THEATRE-GOING.

"An Inquiring Mother" writes:—"A picture of my childhood comes to mind. It is of two Christian grandmothers with a large flock of little ones. The children were dressed to go to a children's party where dancing was to be the order of the day. The children went for a farewell kiss to both the old ladies. One with her Bible on her knee shook her head gravely, and said in a way that awed the young ones sadly, 'I fear it is all the broad road that leadeth to destruction.' The other granny was in her own room, and likewise had her Bible on her knee and spectacles on her nose, but two kind eyes smiled sweetly as she wished the merry party a very happy evening. 'We only wish you were coming too, dear Gran.' 'Ah! darlings, I have something better here,' and she patted the old worn book. The dear old saint is at rest, yet her loving happy words first showed me (her eldest grandchild) that the things belonging to Christ's Kingdom were able to satisfy the heart's craving for true happiness. I now have strong-willed boys and girls of my own, full of life and fun, and it is my humble hope that showing them the 'something better' may lead them to seek those things that are above, and able to satisfy. Whereas, I fear, if the check-string is pulled too tight, inward murmuring at 'mother's strictness,' and lack of caring for their little joys, may do them real harm. These thoughts and questions often arise in my mind, and I am thankful to read, and, I trust, profit by the suggestions of wiser heads than my own."

"A Mother of Ten Children" urges parents not to cease praying while they work. She writes: "Pray for guidance, and then trust the Lord and watch how wonderfully He will lead you and your beloved ones in the way of truth. He will even take away the desires of the children to join in worldly amusements, seeing how happy people can be without them." "A Mother of Boys" says: "Train children from early infancy to read God's Word, prayerfully, early in the morning, asking the Holy Spirit's teaching.

EXPECT THEIR CONVERSION

as children, and use all possible means to help them in a bright, happy way, showing them the privilege of being Christians, and the joy and rest in the true life. Let every decision in the detail of life be made according to the verse, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God,' not what even Christian friends think right, but what is first for the glory of God. It is important, in withholding worldly pleasures, to provide innocent recreation according to the taste of the boy, and to make home the happiest place in the world."

Mr. W. Marshall, writes from Haverstock Hill:—"Permit me as a grandfather to give my opinion. We must remember that since our children are not machines, but beings gifted with powers like our own,—and who will sooner or later be more or less thrown into the wide world, as we are, to fare well or ill according as they independently use their powers,—our labour for their future welfare should be, not to control them, so much as to teach them to control themselves aright. If, therefore, they are kept back from worldly amusements of which we disapprove as simply dangerous and of evil tendency, it should be by their own self-control, and in accordance with reasons of which they themselves approve. If, after time allowed for consideration, their reason in spite of our arguments tells them they should be allowed to go, they should be permitted to do so; but should see that their going grieved and pained us very much.

"They should, however, go fully armed, not only with religious principles and with the habit of prayer, but with such a knowledge of evil and of its evil consequences as is necessary. We should at least answer their questions as to evil, and not leave them to get the answers from evil persons. Only we should impress upon them that the evil was not to be talked about even to each other. Above all, we should, from the very first, gain and always afterwards love, and confidence. The mother should be the confidante of her daughters, and, as far as possible, of her sons; the father should be the confidant of his sons, and, as far as possible, of his daughters. The children should be told that when they have done wrong, we shall bring them out of their scrape, and shall be their pleaders and advisers rather than their judges. They should be encouraged to give an account every day of what they have been doing and saying and where they have been, not as confession or as a gratification of our inquisitiveness, but from a feeling that we are deeply interested in them and share in their joys and sorrows; and their frankness should never be turned against themselves either by a course of unpleasant action, manifestly in consequence of it, or by reproach.

"Harsh as it may appear, I would not keep the very best servant or governess long enough to secure the first place in my child's confidence. I need not say that all our efforts are useless without the most fervent prayer on our children's behalf; and our precepts to them should be always under our practice and not above it, for they are very quick-sighted to discover inconsistency. Much may be done by putting good and interesting books in their way, especially for Sunday use. By thus guiding the powers of our children, rather than by forcing their conduct ourselves, we should be both giving to them the very best of education, and also be getting them to regard home as the place not only of religious blessing and love, but of well-ordered liberty."

SIGNOR BONGHI AND THE POPE.

Signor Bonghi, whose "Life of Christ" has made so much stir in Italy, is assuming an increasingly defiant attitude to the Romish priesthood. The organ of the Jesuits, La Civilta Catolica, described his work in the following hostile terms:—"It abounds in errors, all put forth with a view to obscure the divinity of the Redeemer, and does not deserve the least confidence or consideration, not only with regard to sound doctrine, but also from the standpoint of biblical criticism."

The following sentences from his work will speak for themselves: "This we must think of and believe regarding the Christ—God in eternity, man in time; the Mediator, by whom human nature is taken up into the Divine, without, however, the one being confounded with the other. Incomprehensible to us it may be, but still, in Him alone the story of humanity has a unity and a significance."

The Rome correspondent of Evangelical Christendom, from whose February letter we take the foregoing, writes:—

"The reply of Signor Bonghi to his critics is published in the Civilta. In it he says: 'Such writers are past grand masters of falsehood. They intend only to damage a layman who dares to call himself a Christian, although he is not of their ilk, and ventures to tell them to their face what untruths they are guilty of, and to assert that Christ can be adored, followed, and exalted by men who disdain to use Him as a means of gaining worldly power, and scorn to sell Him for filthy lucre. My accusers may well talk of the unity of the Godhead with the manhood of the Saviour, for in the name of his Godhead they send forth anathema, and in the name of his manhood, as men, they exalt themselves above all their fellows. Let them alone! look, and pass on.'

"The 'Open Letter' to the Pope, by Signor Bonghi, published in the first Review of the day in Italy, is exciting universal attention, and carries great weight. In it the writer asks Leo. XIII. whether religion has made progress in his Pontificate or not; and answers the question in the negative. He touches on the Reformation of the fifteenth century, and says that that arose not so much from a revolt against tradition as from a thirst for God and salvation. Italy of to-day is awakening in the same way; and as then, so now, he warns the Pope that if he does not provide them with the water of life (which, he says, the priests are totally unfitted to do), Italians will turn to those who will and can do so, and he will lose a very large proportion of the people. Signor Bonghi goes on to say that 'in matters of reform—for instance, Count Campello's movement—money comes from without, but what the Government should decide is that when the majority in a commune desire a pastor rather than a priest, the salary of the priest should go to the pastor, or at least be divided between them.' The article is a masterly and scathing warning to the Vatican and the course it is pursuing both temporally and spiritually. Although Signor Bonghi states that he intends to remain in the church in which he was baptised, yet the spirit pervading his utterances is absolutely that of the early Roman Church, embodying de facto the inspired principles set forth in the Epistle to the Romans."

THE BEST MISSIONARY BOOKS.—The current issue of Regions Beyond (Partridge) gives particulars of a very interesting plébiscite regarding the best missionary books. It is not easy to pronounce a judgment in such a matter—to select from a growingly large literature—so a number of well-known Christian writers and workers declined to express an opinion. A score or more lists are given, however, and the result is to single out thirteen men as having, above all others, left a lasting impress in the work and literature of missions—Carey, Livingstone, Burns, Martyn, Brainerd, Judson, Patteson, Zinzendorf, Mackay, Williams, Gilmour, Paton, and Hannington. A study of the various lists should prove very helpful to such as desire to prosecute a course of reading on missionary enterprise.

The Late RICHARD J. MAHONY, J.P., D.L.

OF DROMORE CASTLE, CO. KERRY.

On Thursday, December 22, Richard Mahony, of Dromore, entered into rest. His death occurred in London, and on the following Tuesday his body was laid in the grave in the family burial-place by the Kenmare river, not far from the stately home which forms so notable a feature in a landscape of striking beauty. "The funeral" (we quote from the county newspaper) "was, without exception, the largest that has ever been seen in the county. The road was crowded with people who had travelled long distances all the previous night to pay their last respects to the memory of a man whose life, during nearly half a century in their midst, won their warmest feelings of affection and esteem."

Born sixty-five years ago, Mr. Mahony succeeded to his father, who died very suddenly in the year of the potato famine, in the midst of the most earnest efforts for the temporal and spiritual good of those who surrounded him; feeding the hungry, tending the sick and dying, and teaching the people (sometimes even at the peril of his life) to look to the Lord Jesus Christ alone as their Saviour. In all these efforts he was faithfully and ably seconded by his wife, who still survives him, and in her old age is an unwearied worker for her Lord and Master.

Though marked out by his friends for a public career, and fitted by natural gifts for almost any position, Mr. Mahony set himself with characteristic devotion to promote the good of his tenantry and neighbours. In his earlier years it was their temporal affairs which chiefly engaged his thoughts, and these were not forgotten even to the last. In common with many another district in Ireland, South Kerry has emerged from semi-barbarism within the last half-century. Forty years ago the cottages were but rudely-thatched hovels. The bye-roads were but mountain tracks. On some of the large estates there was not a stone bridge and not a wheeled vehicle in use, and agriculture was of the crudest and most primitive type. The Dromore of to-day is a pattern estate which would compare favourably with the best even of English properties.

Here is the testimony of the Dublin Freeman's Journal, a paper flagrantly hostile to the landed gentry of Ireland. The quotation is from an article written upon a remonstrance and appeal which Mr. Mahony addressed to Government, when the Land Act confiscated the result of his life work, and closed his career as the pioneer of agricultural reforms in Ireland:—

> From all we have heard of Mr. Mahony, he rather underrates his own kindly relations with his tenants, for he has the reputation of being more a father to his people than a landlord—a doctor and a nurse to them in sickness, a wise and sympathetic counsellor in distress, a kindly and forbearing creditor when they are in difficulties, as well as a captain of industry, directing the operations for the reclamation and improvement of the waste lands in South Kerry. His estate is an oasis in the desert, and has attracted the attention of all travellers and Press correspondents.

None but those who are fully aware of the extreme bitterness which marks religious and class differences in Ireland can appreciate the meaning of such a testimony from such a quarter to a man who never swerved one hair-breadth from the path of duty in search of favour or applause.

The article speaks of his work in land-reclamation. His last achievement in this line is still pointed to with admiration and wonder. The hopeless indolence of the Irish peasantry was the greatest bar to their prosperity. The people were almost Oriental in the dull tenacity with which they clung to old methods and an existing condition of things. Mr. Mahony determined to give them an object lesson in land-reclamation and dairy-farming. For the scene of his experiment he selected a tract of waste land of the most worthless type, a mountain swamp studded with boulders and covered with stones. This land he cleared and drained, there he established his dairies, and the butter he sent to the London market from that farm at once commanded double the price which his tenants had been content to receive for theirs. The particulars of his achievements in this direction attracted the notice of the Duke of Richmond's Commission in 1880.

All this, however, is but a background to set off what we wish to tell about the friend who is gone. The Ulster Revival of 1859 ran its course and waned, without extending to the other provinces of Ireland. In the following year, Dublin was the centre of a spiritual work as real, but wholly dissimilar in its outward aspects. It was not till 1861 that the south was thus visited and blessed. Five years before, Mr. Mahony had married Miss Waller, of Shannon Grove, co. Limerick. Trained up in a religious home, this lady was a true helpmeet to her husband in every effort for promoting piety among the people. Her own work among the young was constant and zealous, and a meeting convened in furtherance of that work was reckoned the epoch of a great spiritual movement in Kerry.

One evening at the beginning of January, 1861, the parochial school children were gathered for a distribution of prizes in the great hall of Dromore Castle, and a number of the Protestant parishioners were invited to be present. Before they separated Mr. Mahony expressed a wish to say a few words to them, and in a brief heart-stirring address he spoke of the love of God and the redeeming work of Christ. That simple appeal was the beginning of a great and widespread revival.

A week or two afterwards Mr. Mahony presided at a prayer-meeting held in his house, as a result of the previous gathering, and some of those present became spiritually awakened. Five of the number met for prayer in one of their cottages the following Saturday evening. A third meeting was arranged, when the number increased to a dozen, and at a fourth meeting, held at the parish schoolmaster's, upwards of twenty were present, most of whom were in anxiety about Divine things. They had no "gift of prayer," nor were there any finely-phrased petitions, with the orthodox formula at the close. One and another tried to pray, but the effort often ended abruptly by a fit of sobbing which choked utterance. The meetings continued and spread. They prayed for the Holy Spirit; they prayed for blessing. They scarcely knew what they meant, or what they wanted; but God knew, and He sent the answer.

Subjoined are a few extracts from a circular letter written by these men some weeks later (March 1, 1861), and addressed to their friends in other parishes :—

We take this way of telling you what wonderful things God has done for us. It pleased God to bring some of us together near the beginning of this year to ask Him to give us the true saving knowledge of Him in our hearts. We asked for the rain of the Spirit, and even while we asked it came....There have been no outward bodily manifestations; but there has been a deep inward and mighty influence upon the hearts, bringing formal worshippers to their knees in private before God, and making strong men weep like children. There are now nightly meetings through the parish for prayer and praise to Almighty God; and there are men who, a short time since, never spoke or thought of religion, save to utter or to hear a few formal prayers in Church each Lord's Day, now stand up, with bursting hearts, to tell what great things God has done for them....A spirit of union and love has arisen among us such as we never knew before; and we can follow our occupations with a confidence in God's help and a sense of his care, which makes our troubles light and our homes happy.

All this time they had but little knowledge of the doctrine of the Gospel. They had prayed for the "rain of the Spirit," and God had abundantly answered them. They had yet to receive the great truth of Eternal Life in Christ, and when it was brought to them by one whose words by voice and pen have been blessed to very many, both Mr. and Mrs. Mahony were among the most determined in their resistance to it. That people might have eternal life as a present possession, to be realised and enjoyed on simply believing in Christ, they declared was too presumptuous, too perilous a doctrine to be tolerated. If the peasantry got hold of such teaching, they would cast aside all the safeguards against godlessness, and bring disgrace on Christianity and the Protestant cause in Kerry.

But all the same a meeting was arranged, and the dreaded doctrine was proclaimed. The preacher took for his text that sublime passage in the Epistle to Titus, "The grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." As often happens in the case of active and subtle minds, the platform testimony, which they could not interrupt, availed where discussion had been fruitless, and before the meeting closed Mr. and Mrs. Mahony were themselves rejoicing in the truth of eternal life in Christ, and from that hour they set themselves to spread the glad tidings, not merely among the people round them, but among their friends throughout the country.

One feature of the work in Kerry was the number of the gentry who took part in it. At the next assizes seven or eight members of the grand jury met together for prayer, and stood side by side in publicly preaching the Gospel in the county town. One of the number, a life-long friend of Richard Mahony's, and next to him the most prominent in the work of God in the south of Ireland, writes as follows :—

To treat in detail of this part of his life, and of the far-reaching effects of the work begun through him, would need a volume. Nor would it be expedient to name the many gifts to the Church, whose conversion might be traced directly or indirectly to the work begun at Dromore; they are well known in this country and in America. The movement spread to all parts of the county, and in some parishes it seemed as though the entire adult Protestant population were savingly converted to God.

The state of Mrs. Mahony's health soon afterwards led to a lengthened absence from Dromore. Crossing first to Edinburgh, where Mr. Mahony preached in several Free Church pulpits, Sir James Simpson's advice decided them to visit some of the Continental health resorts. Their first sojourn was at Schwalbach, and thence they turned south as far as Naples and Ischia. In every place Mr. Mahony found opportunities for preaching Christ. Meetings were convened in the fashionable hotels, and not a few of the rich and noble who frequented them were brought to God. In Italy he also addressed many audiences of another class, speaking to the people in their own tongue.

In days when "lay preaching" had the charm of novelty, his testimony could not fail to be specially attractive. A man of striking presence, he combined a commanding dignity of bearing with exquisite gentleness and courtesy, and intellectual gifts of no common order with the guilelessness of a little child. As a speaker, The Times obituary notice of him most truly said that "he possessed in a marked degree the special graces of Irish oratory without any of its extravagances." His addresses were characterised by a poetic richness of thought and an almost classic elegance of diction. Behind all this was a heart aglow with the love of God, and a life entirely devoted to his service. What wonder, then, that his meetings were crowded, and that God owned his ministry in a special manner.

"Having loved this present world," would be a fitting epitaph for some who, in those never-to-be-forgotten days, gave promise for a time of life devotion to God. Not so was it with Richard Mahony. The path to fame was ever open to him, but nothing tempted him from the course he had chosen for himself in earlier days. Though deeply moved by what he deemed the injustice and wrong of recent land legislation in Ireland, and of the still pending agitation for constitutional changes, he refused to be drawn into the strife of political parties. Some brilliantly written pamphlets and one great speech—the chief event at the Duke of Abercorn's famous conference in 1884—were his principal contributions to the controversy. He turned a deaf ear to the appeals of many of his own order that he would take to the platform in England as the champion of their cause. "He served the Lord Christ," may be written over his life to its very close.

Space forbids our noticing specially his gifts as an author. The little he wrote gives proof how much the Church of God has lost from his using his pen so seldom. But he was wholly unconscious of his own genius and worth. As the friend already quoted writes of him, he was "always in advance of his fellows in attainment and grace, and looked up to with peculiar reverence and love, yet ever seeking to efface himself and to take the lowest place."

More than twelve months ago a sudden attack of sickness gave the first warning of the disease which at last proved fatal. During the summer his speech became affected. It was at Totlands in the Isle of Wight, when longing to help in open-air meetings, that he first realised his inability to preach. The discovery was very bitter to him. But, soon recovering himself, he calmly uttered the words, often repeated during the closing days of his illness, "The good Lord knows best." At times too, in the midst of much suffering, he added, "Some day; some day." The good Lord knew best, and some day we shall understand it all. Meanwhile he could calmly rest in "that good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

Thus ended a noble and beautiful life. Those who knew him only at a distance may think the picture overdrawn. His nearer friends will deem it inadequate and poor. Our object, however, is not to exalt the memory of one of the worthiest of men, nor yet to gratify the friends to whom he was so dear. It is in the spirit of the eleventh chapter of Hebrews that we publish this brief record of a life of faith. He is gone hence to join the "cloud of witnesses" by whom we who are still in the arena are "compassed about": let it be our care to "imitate the faith" of such, "considering the issue of their life. Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."

EAST-END CHEER.

In the cold biting month of January, two lady visitors came to attend our sewing class for widows. The first visitor exclaimed as she entered the hall, "These East-end people are all heavy beer-drinkers." What a mistake she made! We knew to the contrary, and rejoiced that all our widows had become staunch temperance women, and were nobly influencing their children and grandchildren.

The other lady who paid a visit to our dear old women came to celebrate her silver wedding, although her husband had been called home eight years previously. Her desire was to celebrate the day by making our poor widows glad with a bright new shilling each, and kind words and bright smiles for every one, which worked wonders in cheering them that dark, foggy afternoon. A happy hour was spent as they sang to this friend a few of their favourite songs.

As we thanked her on their behalf, she told us that it was her habit on the anniversary of her wedding day to spend £25, giving as many surprises as possible to those who were in need. Her visit and gift to each of our widows was a part that day of her expenditure. We wondered, as we gazed into her peaceful, happy face, and that of her daughter and friend, as they waited on the poor old women at their tea, whether givers or receivers had offered the more abundant praise to Him whom they all loved.

January has been a doubly full month, and, as your happy almoners, a couple of thousand of our people have received a warm garment; while coal, bread, and good soup have been given, about a thousand meals weekly, besides medicine and nourishing food administered to the sick and suffering.

Another two or three thousand in our East-end workhouses have had a happy evening with the magic lantern, and a small gift to remind the lonely isolated ones that they were not forgotten. Words cannot express the grateful appreciation showed by all our dear people for the kindness shown them.

Mr. W. R. Lane gave our people several of his loving powerful addresses, and at most of our annual gatherings souls were found deciding for the Lord Jesus. Our last happy evening was by the invitation of a West-end lady to 130 of our young women from the factories and workrooms. Before the close, four more girls, won by the faithful words spoken, and the testimonies of their converted companions, yielded themselves unreservedly to the Lord.

We are busily gathering in the young emigrants for Canada, to sail early in April—only those who stand the best in our Home, and are proved fit for steady work. Already we have a goodly band of little orphans for adoption. We ask your fervent prayers that the work done in Christ's name may be lasting service, which will redound to his praise through all eternity. Annie Macpherson.

SERVICES IN LONDON THEATRES.

ANOTHER report of the Committee for Special Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, etc., in London is issued. Like its predecessors, it abounds with facts of striking interest, showing the growing importance of direct evangelistic efforts for the poor of the metropolis. The services in the various large buildings are conducted with simplicity, directness, and unflinching adherence to the declaration of the saving truths of the Gospel. The report speaks of the greatest and saddest of all facts to every Christian mind, the general alienation of the working classes from places of public worship. Four-fifths of the population of London, now numbering, within its inner circle alone, twice the number it did fifty years ago, are stated to belong to the working classes. One million and a quarter of the four-fifths—a number equal to the united populations of the cities of Liverpool, Manchester, and Bristol—are also so low in the social scale that they have to eke out an existence on something less than 21s. a week. It is these classes that the committee seek to reach with the Gospel of Christ.

During the past series the committee are able to report that 647 services have been held, attended by about 248,800 persons. The following cases of good resulting are selected from many others reported.

THE PAVILION, WHITECHAPEL.

On the last Sunday in October, 1891, a most desperate-looking man was induced by one of my stewards to go into the theatre. The doorkeeper belonging to the theatre came to me and asked if I meant to admit this man, adding that on week evenings he was always a trouble, and had to be ejected by the police. I told him that of course I should admit him, and, in addressing the man, told him that he could go into the boxes. He said, "Sir, I ain't no box gentleman; the pit is my place." But I persuaded him that he would be more comfortable there. After a little hesitation, he said, "Oh! sir, you have knocked the devil out of me. I came here with the intention of getting up a disturbance." I kept a sharp look-out for this man, and was delighted to see how attentive he was. After the service he came to me and said, "Sir, I was knocked down flat by that there preacher; do pray for a hard-hearted wretch like me." I invited him to my mission hall several times, and am pleased to say that this man has become as docile as a lamb, and by the power of Christ has been made whole.

SHOREDITCH TOWN HALL.

A few months since a nurse who attended a man's wife persuaded him to go to the Shoreditch Town Hall. He promised her he would, and he kept his word. The Sunday he came Mr. George Nokes gave the address, and Mr. B—— was powerfully impressed. He went home and told his wife that he knew and felt that what the preacher said was true. From that time he became a regular attendant, and he evidenced by his life that a change had taken place. Such is his love for the services, that he told me if it was the last penny he had in his pocket he would give it to help in the support of the meetings at the Shoreditch Town Hall.

Another cheering case is that of Mr. P——. When I first knew him he believed in having a nap after his dinner on Sundays, and he never went to a place of worship. Some time since he was induced to attend the town hall service, and he has since come regularly, not missing, I believe, a single Sunday. Again and again he has intimated to me that the bright, impressive, and powerful services have been much blessed to him, and he delights to be present. When he heard that they were to be given up for the present, he was greatly concerned, and told me he wished with all his heart they were going to be kept on, as he would be glad to come all through the summer months. Not only has he come himself, but he has induced his wife and two daughters to come likewise. I am sure the whole of this family have got good through attending, and their home has been the happier and brighter for it.

From the Poplar Hall alone during the past year thirty persons have joined various churches and chapels in the neighbourhood. The meetings were held in fourteen centres last winter, and grants of money were made to various smaller halls and mission rooms.

Help is urgently needed at present, the committee commencing their work this season with a debt to their bankers of £150, and with absolutely no funds in hand. The secretary is Mr. C. M. Sawell, 3, Bridewell-place, E.C.

THE CLAIMS OF THE HEATHEN.

THE series of February Simultaneous Meetings organised by the C.M.S. came to an end last week, when two enthusiastic aggregate gatherings were held in Exeter Hall. On Thursday evening the Bishop of WORCESTER presided over a crowded meeting of Sunday-school teachers and lay workers; and stirring addresses were delivered by the Bishop of Ripon, and Revs. A. J. Robinson and E. A. Stuart.

On Friday evening a more general meeting was held, and largely attended by supporters of the mission cause. Rev. B. BARING-GOULD made a short statement on the interest which the simultaneous meetings have excited regarding the claims of the heathen and Mohammedan world on the Church of Christ, showing that the movement is wider than sect, party, organisation, or society, and aims at setting forth the needs of the nations of the earth, as well as impressing upon Christians a sense of their duties and opportunities.

The Bishop of ROCHESTER presided, and delivered an address of warm sympathy with the work of world-wide evangelisation.

Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON, headmaster of Harrow, followed with a capital speech. He told how he had recently been endeavouring to interest his boys in mission work, by giving them a series of addresses on the lives of missionary heroes. He had just received a letter from the father of a Harrow boy, saying that his son had expressed a wish to be a missionary, and adding, "If that wish shall continue and strengthen in his heart, neither his mother nor I will stand in the way." The sphere upon which that young boy's thoughts are centred is Uganda.

This statement was received with much joy. Proceeding, the speaker pointed out that as the grounds upon which a Christian bases his faith are infinitely stronger than he can ever hope to put into words, so the missionary call is irresistible and cannot be subdued. It comes to one and another—who shall say how?—like the breath of heaven, and takes the form, perhaps, of a deep pity for the sin and shame of the world; or an intense longing to do the Master's command; or a feeling of responsibility and thankfulness. That is why the sentiment, the passion, the enthusiasm, for Christian missions is something the world cannot understand. Questions which are canvassed in the newspapers, of whether missions do so much as they are supposed to do, do not exercise the missionary, for he is subject to a Master higher than any worldly statesman or diplomatist. If anything like failure be apparent, it is certainly not real; for the promise of the Master was not that the Gospel should be received by every creature on earth, but that it should be preached to all. When we have carried the Gospel throughout the world our part is done; the rest is his! If there is one thing certain in the future, and one thing only, it is that Christ's promise that his Gospel shall be preached in all the world will be fulfilled.

Mr. Welldon went on to ask: In what spirit should the missionary go forth? The only power in which he can go, with any hope of success, is the simple power of the cross of Jesus Christ. He takes his stand upon certain great indisputable facts—human sin, human suffering, and human salvation. Again, what good have missions done? It is because Christianity has done its main work so effectively, and so utterly abolished and destroyed the abominations which were rife in paganism, that the world is able to ask this question.

Referring to woman's opportunity in the mission field, Mr. Welldon said: Christian womanhood is likely to be a more powerful force in the future of missions than Christian manhood itself. The difficulties which lie before Christian missions arise very much from the position of woman in Oriental countries. The barrier between man and woman is absolutely impassable; but the humblest woman may pass it undaunted and unharmed. There is more waste at present in the lives of women than of men. There are scores of women in England who are at a loss for a life-long and definite occupation. What undertaking is there that they can undertake and prosecute, that will so enhance the utility of their lives, and exalt the dignity of their sex, as the work of Christian missions?

Mr. Welldon closed his address with an appeal for recruits for the foreign mission field. This note was taken up by Rev. R. H. WALKER, of Uganda, who said that in that region of Central Africa there is a deep need for the Gospel and a great thirst for reading the Word of God. The people know now that God has spoken, and they have cast aside their old religion. Hundreds, thousands, of men and women are waiting to be taught. Mr. JAMES MONRO, C.B., late Chief Commissioner of Police, London, now of Nuddea, India, enlarged upon the demands of India upon British Christians, and made an earnest call for a more general obedience to the Lord's parting command, "Go ye into all the world." Finally, Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE emphasised the same appeal, maintaining that Christians must not be deaf to the divine call, nor traitorous to the orders which their Master gives them.

PASTOR A. J. DIAZ IN CUBA.

SIR,—It will interest your readers to hear of the work of Pastor A. J. Diaz, of Havana. His remarkable conversion to God, and his early work, are already familiar to many in England through your excellent journal. In connection with a visit to Cuba in the interests of Protestant missions, I visited this enthusiastic and successful pioneer. Mr. Diaz, with the assistance of friends who sympathise with evangelistic effort, has purchased for the sum of 60,000 dols. a theatre in the best and most frequented part of the city. The building is capable of seating about 2000 persons. It is strongly and elegantly constructed, and presents an attractive appearance. The missionary has lately begun a series of Saturday evening meetings for the people. These are advertised in the Havana press, and tickets of invitation are freely distributed by the workers. Gospel hymns are sung by a children's choir as the people assemble.

The magic-lantern is brought into requisition, and when any picture relating to the Gospel story was projected upon the screen and explained by the missionary, a silent and decorous behaviour on the part of the large audience was noticeable. To a people who are so much interested in the spectacular as are the Cubans, the "Linterna Majica" is capable of being a valuable agency in the dissemination of Christian truths.

The habits of the Cuban people are unfavourable to Sabbath morning services. The Sunday school, however, is fairly well attended. On Lord's Day evenings considerable congregations assemble in this theatre-church. The tokens of saving power are not wanting. No Sunday passes without seeing some "stand up for Jesus," and the church is growing in numbers and in piety.

Several branch missions gather about this central church, and the work of instructing the young receives special attention.

It is impossible to see Mr. Diaz in his work, as I have seen him, without being moved to gratitude to God that in his providence and grace such an agent for the work of Cuban evangelisation should have been raised up. Of all the Protestant agencies with which I became acquainted none impressed me as possessing anything like the enterprise, the adaptation, and the promise of further success as did this under the superintendence of Mr. Diaz, and in connection with the American Board of Missions.

How great is the need for work for God in Cuba! A land of wonderful beauty, and of vast and varied resources, but, for the most part, destitute of true godliness, and consequently destitute of the instincts of morality, virtue, and self-control. The Roman Church has had uninterrupted and undivided privilege for centuries in Cuba. What has it done for "The Pearl of the Antilles"?—Yours in Him, GEORGE LESTER.

MR. LETHABY'S MISSION.—Rev. W. Jackson writes from Cairo:—"Sergeant Cameron has purchased his discharge, and he is going to accompany Mr. Lethaby on his missionary journey across Arabia. Mr. Lethaby is staying with me, and will leave for Port Said to-morrow, and Cameron will join him at Suez about the end of the week. I am proud that a Methodist preacher, accompanied by a Methodist soldier, should be the first to attempt a missionary journey across Arabia . . . Cameron has been a member a long time. He has filled various offices of trust in his regiment, and he enjoys the esteem of his comrades. Sergeant Riley, who was converted at the Covenant service, was also willing to go."

A SUNDAY IN ARKLOW.

(By a Correspondent.)

Since coming to this quaint little town, with a population of four thousand Roman Catholics and one thousand Protestants, I have been daily rejoicing in the work going on here for the Lord Jesus Christ.

The street preaching is now carried on by Rev. R. C. Hallowes and his curate, Rev. J. W. Harrison, without let or hindrance. If every reader could spend one Sunday in Arklow, and be an eye-witness of the things done here, they would praise God, and begin at once to pray that the love of Christ might constrain every clergyman in Ireland to "go and do likewise."

Last Sunday morning I attended the church of which Mr. Hallowes is rector, and listened to the pure, simple Gospel, followed by an earnest appeal to all present to close in with Christ's offer then and there. I am sure there were souls "born again" at that morning service.

Immediately after the service the rector and curate, with about thirty of their people, gathered in front of their church. After singing "Jesus is tenderly calling thee home," prayer was offered, and then the Gospel was proclaimed in a loud voice. It was very noticeable that the prayer and the address consisted chiefly of Gospel verses from the Bible.

The company then moved on, singing:—

I will sing the wondrous story
Of the Christ who died for me.

At a bend in the road they suddenly came upon a funeral procession. Four men were bearing a coffin, and hundreds of men, women, and children followed on foot. There was no priest there to officiate or comfort, for these were poor people, who could not pay sufficient money for the presence of their shepherd!

The company of Christians halted, and sang until the funeral procession was out of sight:—

While I draw this fleeting breath,
When my eyelids close in death,
Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.

Not one word of insult, ridicule, or scoffing was heard during the whole outdoor services, which lasted for three hours. The workers passed from one street to another, proclaiming the glad tidings of a Saviour crucified. The people did not gather in crowds to listen, for they would not dare; but there were many open windows where there were anxious eager faces, listening to the words of life. The remarkably strong, clear voices of the speakers rang up and down the streets and penetrated the walls of every house.

It was wonderful to see a town with so small a proportion of Protestants quietly listening to the Gospel proclaimed from street to street. This result was not accomplished in a day. For three years the Gospel has been preached and sung in this way every Sunday afternoon, with the exception of two Sundays, which were spent by the rector and his curate in prison for Christ's and the Gospel's sake.

The Lord has wonderfully owned his servants here, cleared away all the obstacles, and blessed their own souls, abundantly, as they have had courage and been constrained by the love of Christ and the perishing in their own town to witness thus openly for Him. Eternity alone will show how many weary souls found rest while listening to the story of the Cross recited on the streets of Arklow. Surely those who obey Christ's command to "Preach the Gospel to every creature" are under his banner, and should not be deserted by his followers.

Speaking of the mission held in Arklow last week by Major Whittle, his daughter, and Mr. Stebbins, a writer in the Arklow Reporter, says:—"It will be long remembered as a time of great spiritual blessing to many. From the outset the greatest unity prevailed among the different Christian denominations, and such a spirit cannot be manifested without the special seal of God's approval being set to the work undertaken by his servants. For several weeks past united meetings for prayer have been held; the Christian spirit displayed by all who took part was an earnest of the great blessings in store, and certainly those expectations have not been disappointed."

The services for children were a deeply interesting feature of the week; Major Whittle's illustrative talks were most effective. A prayer meeting presided over by Rev. R. C. Hallowes was held each morning of the mission.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.

Writing from Chicago on Jan. 27, this earnest coloured sister says:—

For a long time I have desired to speak to my many friends in England, the Isles, and the Continent through the columns of The Christian. I had a delightful summer in 1892. After attending the great Methodist General Conference at Omaha, Nebraska, in May last, I proceeded to Ogden, Utah, and attended the First National Holiness Camp Meeting. From there I went to the Annual Conference, held at Provo, Utah. I was appointed to hold special services during the conference time. After spending about two weeks at Salt Lake City, Utah, in evangelistic work, I returned again to Omaha, spent a few days, and held several meetings with blessing. Then on to Chicago.

I spent three weeks and several days at Lake Bluff, at the great W.C.T.U. Convention, and held a number of meetings at different places in the city. Then, by engagement, I went to the great Desplaines Camp Meeting for ten days. There were crowds of people, the presence of the Lord was with us, and souls were blessed and helped of God. Then on to Lena, Ill., to the Camp Meeting. Then on to Decatur, Ill., to another Camp Meeting. There also the Spirit of the Lord was present, and souls were blessed. From there on to St. Louis, and here again we had the assurance that we did not go in vain. The work was signally blessed of God.

From there on to the great Camp Meeting of the season, at Ocean Grove, New Jersey. Oh, what a meeting! For numbers and in spiritual blessing it defies description. Praise the Lord! From there on to Round Lake, New York, to a Camp Meeting. This ended my Camp Meetings for the summer. The next great thing was the Encampment at Washington, D.C. Then the great Holiness Conference held at Boston, in October. From there on to Canada, where I spent two weeks at Hamilton and Toronto. I held several meetings at different places.

From there I came to Chicago to fill a ten days' engagement, commencing October 30th, at South Park Avenue Methodist Church, Rev. Dr. Caldwell pastor. The Lord was with us, and we had a precious time. This was the commencement of my work in this great city of Chicago. God has wonderfully blessed me here, and given me favour among the people. I have just closed two weeks' services at Western Avenue Methodist Church, Dr. Phillips pastor. I expect to be in Chicago most of next summer. It is rather late to make a report of last year's doings, but I have been so busy, and I thought "better late than never."

JEWS IN WEST LONDON.

In connection with the West London Mission to the Jews, a room has been opened at 5, Ganton-street, Regent-street, and a very encouraging work has been carried on by Rev. Joseph Larzen. Meetings for young and old are held during the week, and on Saturdays Gospel addresses are delivered to audiences that steadily increase in numbers.

During the past three or four years there has been a great influx of Jews into West London. Many have come from Russia, and their funds becoming exhausted they have swelled the multitude of poor and destitute. There are now about three thousand Jews in the district in which the Mission Hall is situate. Some houses are entirely inhabited by Jews, and in individual cases they are very hard pressed. Mr. Larzen informs us that in two houses he found sixteen families, some of them with as many as seven children. Each family occupies two small rooms, and occasionally these are shared by a lodger. During the recent severe weather acute poverty has been the lot of these people. In the midst of it Mr. Larzen communicated with the Jewish Board of Guardians, the agent of which refused to render any help when he learned that clothing had been received from the missionary.

So the hunger and nakedness of these distressed families have had to be relieved by the Mission, although no provision had been made for such a painful responsibility. Thus absolute starvation has been prevented; and those whom Pharisaic legality despised have been kindly entreated in the name of Christ, by whose grace, it is hoped, they may be attracted to loving discipleship. Rev. Dr. Bullinger is president of the Mission, the treasurer being Major Hewitt, 25, Argyll-road, Kensington, W.

NAVVY MISSION SOCIETY.

The work of this mission amongst a rough and long-neglected class goes on vigorously and well, and has lately been blessed of God to the conversion of several—one formerly an open infidel. During the winter season very special efforts have been made for the distressed men. The missionary at Walthamstow, who has just died unexpectedly, stated that the last week in December, 1892, was the darkest he had ever known. He had 500 navvies, many of them with families, under his care. Their wages, 4s. a day, depended upon fine weather, and they had had much broken weather and were very poor. When the navvies had sold everything they could part with, their missionary, out of his own poverty, helped many. One man took off his shirt, which his wife washed, and sold it to get a little food for their two children. An old woman (who is now dying) took off her wedding guard and sold it for bread for her lodgers.

John Nicholls visited numbers of such cases daily. From friends he collected the sum of £13 10s. He made soup in his own little house and thus provided over 500 dinners and 150 suppers in eight days, besides sending out 120 to 130 jugs of soup to families. Men walked six miles for this food, and several had nothing to eat from day to day, beyond what they received at his house. Walking long distances in the cold to beg the money, standing for hours in the steam of the soup, frequently giving four or five addresses during the dinner-time, and visiting the sick each day, has, alas! killed this Christ-like missionary. While preparing on Sunday, January 22, he was seized with violent inflammation. The following Thursday he was conveyed to the London Hospital, where an operation was performed, and he died on Friday, the 27th in great agony, leaving a widow and eight children, the eldest fifteen years, the youngest nine months, entirely unprovided for. The Dean of Ripon, or Mrs. Garnett, Ripon, would be glad to receive gifts for the relief of such distressing need.

LEYSIAN HALL MEDICAL MISSION.

This mission has its centre of operation in the densely-populated district of St. Luke's. Chronic destitution is the lot of thousands in that locality. In spite of model dwellings and better sanitary conditions, a vast number of people herd together in poor houses and wretched tenements, under circumstances which invite disease.

The Leysian Medical Mission is quartered in a beautiful hall in Errol street, Whitecross-street, which has rapidly become a busy centre of social and religious enterprise. The mission is under the efficient superintendence of Dr. Griffiths, assisted by Dr. Lowsley, both gentlemen practically giving their time. During the past year 10,600 cases were attended to in the hall, and between 500 to 600 patients were visited in their own homes. Nurses from the Bloomsbury Institute were sent to special cases; while the mission visiting sisters and ladies looked after the necessities of those who were almost destitute. The Gospel is kept prominently before the patients, both at the hall and in their homes. Several cases of conversion have come to light in connection with the work of the Medical Mission.

The treasurer is Mr. J. P. McArthur, 17, Silk-street, Cripplegate, E.C.

Girls' Letter Guild.

The Girls' Letter Guild aims at extending to factory girls instruction, sympathy, and kindly counsel for their daily life by a system of regular and individual correspondence between themselves and cultured Christian women. Each lady in the Guild takes one girl as her charge, and writes to her once a month at least on various subjects which may interest and help her.

Miss A. M. May, hon. sec. of the Leeds branch, writes:—"This branch has much increased of late, and we have now on our books over 1,100 members, of whom 300 (most of them Nonconformists) are waiting for lady correspondents. Some of these have been waiting for months, and ask piteously for lady friends, saying that they would help them so much to lead the better life. I feel sure that numbers of Christian ladies would be glad to render help as soon as they hear of the opportunity. A resident hon. sec. is greatly needed, the head secretary, Miss Porter, being overwhelmed with arrangements for the management of the various classes." Particulars may be obtained by addressing Miss May, High Brooms, Tunbridge Wells.

DRINK IN PARLIAMENT.—Fourteen bills, dealing in various ways with the liquor traffic, are down for second reading in the House of Commons.

MANCHESTER CHURCH MISSION.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

THIS great effort has been brought to a close, with many unmistakeable evidences that God's blessing has largely rested on it. One hundred churches took part in it, and as most of these have been well attended, probably not less than 25,000 persons must have been under the sound of mission preachers' voices night after night, at the very lowest computation. From right and left tidings of great blessing have reached our ears, and we have every reason to believe that a rich harvest of souls has been gathered in.

Canon Knox-Little at the Cathedral, preaching with his customary earnestness and eloquence, has drawn large crowds. He has been working in much physical suffering and weakness, and an additional, though sorrowful, interest attached to his work, from the impression that this was to be his last mission, which for some reason or other had taken possession of people's minds. With admiration for the intense earnestness and undoubted oratorical ability of this missioner, there must blend a feeling of regret on the part of all Evangelical Christians, that so much of the wood, hay, and stubble of extreme sacerdotalism should be built on his foundation of loving devotion to his Lord.

He was not the only preacher to men of business in the midday hour. Rev. W. Hay Aitken and Rev. T. J. Madden also addressed similar gatherings. Mr. Aitken's addresses were largely attended and seemed to produce a profound impression. An interesting incident occurred in connection with these services. The proprietor of certain large works made arrangements for all his employés to the number of some sixty to attend Mr. Aitken's services during the dinner hour, though this involved a great loss to himself. Day by day he came at the head of his men, and it is believed that the opportunity thus afforded to these working men has been of real spiritual value to several of them. In addition to this his kindness has been the means of producing the most cordial relations between employers and employed, whereas before the mission these relations were somewhat strained, owing to the commercial depression which had rendered it impossible for the men to be allowed to work full time. This state of things usually breeds distrust and suspicion between employers and employed, and it had to some extent, we are informed, done so in this case; but now all this has passed away, and the employés are about, we hear, to present their employer with a Bible in memory of this mission, with a suitable inscription expressive of their liveliest gratitude.

Mr. Aitken has also been conducting a parochial mission at All Saints' Church, where the second week's services have been specially encouraging; numbers of anxious souls have met the preacher and his workers night by night in the gallery of the church, seeking for personal help and direction, and there has been much hopeful testimony.

Mr. Madden's mid-day services, too, have been very well attended, chiefly by warehousemen and factory hands. He has held a most encouraging mission at Christ Church, Salford. "We are having a glorious time here," exclaimed the good vicar, in response to our inquiries. Writing from St. Peter's, Levenshulme, Archdeacon Howell says: "I have seen nothing like this since the days of Pentecostal blessing at Cardiff in 1870! Showers of blessing have indeed been falling there." One of the secretaries of the general mission, Mr. Keeling, gives a similar account of the blessing in his parish, where another Mr. Howell, the vicar of Christ Church, Everton, has been at work. One of the most remarkable missions of all has been at Christ Church, Didsbury, where Mr. Foster Pegg has been working with great acceptance and every token of God's blessing on his work. Mr. Kenneth Jones, another local secretary, gives an equally gratifying account of the solid and good work done by Mr. Asquith, of Taunton.

But it is perhaps invidious to particularise where so many churches have been rejoicing in a great spiritual blessing. God has given a very full answer to much earnest prayer, and we may well rejoice. The Church Parochial Mission Society has had about thirty agents in the field, and they have been doing excellent service; amongst them the veteran missioner, Rev. Wm. Haslam, whose advancing years seem in no way to check his energy or diminish his ardour.

GIBRALTAR MISSIONARIES DROWNED.

LAST week the daily papers recorded the wreck, on the Spanish coast, of the Anchor Line s.s. Trinacria. Of the crew of thirty-seven men, only seven were saved by swimming ashore.

The passengers in the Trinacria were all going out to Gibraltar in connection with the "Mission to the Soldiers on the Rock," carried on under the direction of Mrs. Osborne, of Glasgow.

Miss Stirling was one of the lady evangelists of the Lanarkshire Christian Union, and in that capacity she was frequently addressing meetings in Kirkintilloch. Last year she conducted a six months' mission in that town, and by her bright and winning disposition won many friends. She was lately present at a meeting in Kirkintilloch, and spoke with great hopefulness of her future labours in Gibraltar, a work with which in its early stages a Kirkintilloch lady had been closely associated. Miss Carswell was one of the most valued agents of the mission, having learnt to speak Spanish like a native, and on that account her services were highly esteemed. Mrs. Bell was on her way to join her husband, who is engaged in missionary work in Algiers.

Writing from Rysland, Newton Mearns, N.B., Mrs. Todd Osborne says: "Mrs. Bell was going out to Algiers, to her husband Mr. Archibald Bell, who joined our mission in October last. She had remained in Scotland for a short medical training. Mr. and Mrs. Bell hoped to have opened a new station in Tarifa early next month. Miss Carswell was returning off furlough to her post at Algiers, where she has been for three years past much used of God among Spanish women. Miss Stirling, who has been for four years in the Lanarkshire Christian Union, was proceeding to Gibraltar to take up the work among the soldiers and their wives, in connection with our Home Europa, Main Road, Gibraltar.

"Will your readers pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers to take the places of those who have been called to serve Him day and night in his temple, and to comfort and sustain those who with me mourn their loss? Will they also remember the friends of the crew who died with them?"

AT EVENING-TIME.

AT evening time it shall be light:
Dark, darker grows the day.
The shades foretell the coming night,
The cheery sunbeams, golden bright,
Have slowly died away.

At evening time thy light shall rise,
Oh, patient, trustful heart!
Oh, loved of God, lift up thine eyes;
His starlight soon shall gem the skies,
The gloom shall yet depart.

At evening time thy soul shall see
The Lord thy God is love;
When lingering hopes 'mid shadow flee,
He shall eternal sunshine be—
Around, beneath, above.

At evening time, when all grows dim,
And trembling prayers arise,
When oft the wistful tears o'erbrim,
Then, heavy laden, come to Him,
Who wipes the weeping eyes.

At evening time, from fear set free
Thy song of praise shall ring;
The pity of the Lord shall be
A lamp of gold that burns for thee,
Thy footsteps home to bring.

At evening time the bells of peace
Adown thy road shall peal;
The Lord will bid thy sorrow cease,
And grant thee from thy load release:
Thy heartache He will heal.

At evening time it shall be light,
In God's assurance rest!
Thou shalt not grope in lonely night;
His mercy is thy beacon bright;
Steal sunward to his breast.

YOUNG WOMEN AT CHRIST CHURCH.

STEP by step Rev. F. B. Meyer is weaving a network of aggressive Christian agencies in connection with his new charge at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. The latest addition is a Young Women's Christian Union, which will be affiliated with the Y.W.C.A. Mr. Meyer's earnest and sympathetic style of preaching is well fitted to attract young women, and they appear now to form a large contingent in his congregations. At any rate that was the case last Sunday evening, when he preached a sermon specially addressed to young women. His audience was such as would have inspired any man, and the preacher kept it fairly under the spell of his heart-felt discourse while he expounded, with manifold and manifest applications, the story of Christ and the woman at Sychar's well.

The readers of this journal do not need to be told that in Mr. Meyer's utterances there is a wonderful glow of vivid descriptive colour, combined with the utmost modernness and practicality. These qualities were well to the front in this discourse. With many a fine and pathetic touch he portrayed the meeting of the tired Saviour and the sin-weary woman; the self-revelation that came to her as the Saviour put his finger on the dark spot in her life; the unassuaged thirst of the soul of many a young sister in this day, in spite of her repeated draughts from the wells of pleasure and fashion; the lonely and perilous situation of many a young woman in this great city, who is so sorely tempted to eke out in sinful ways the meagre, starvation pittance she can get by her daily toil; the probing of the Samaritan woman's soul that she might be taught of the inward spring and source of satisfaction that Christ alone can create. These and other points embraced in the narrative were made to stand out with startling sharpness and with convincing power. The social allurements of modern city life were depicted with a firm, yet gentle, hand, and their perils faithfully pointed out. Last of all, there came the moving appeal to leave all these unsatisfying waterpots, and accept the gift of everlasting life, which is free to every sincere and penitent soul. Those who were away from home and friends, and who had tasted the forbidden waters of unhallowed pleasure, were tenderly counselled to write a letter to home in these terms:—

"Dear Mother,—I have not been the girl I meant to be when I said good-bye to you. I would not like you to know all that I have been and done; but, mother, Jesus has met me, Jesus has taken me to be his own sister; I have seen a Man that told me all things that ever I did, and that has forgiven me all the things that ever I did. Mother, there have been a lot of letters in the papers lately as to whether Christianity is played out or not; but I know that my Redeemer liveth, for He has met me and forgiven me, and saved me; and I want you and father, and brothers and sisters, to come with me to heaven."

After the sermon, some four or five hundred young women accepted Mr. Meyer's invitation to adjourn to the Lecture Hall, where he explained to them the basis of the newly-formed "Young Women's Christian Union." The main points of this basis are: (1) Consecration and loyalty to Christ as Saviour, Friend, and King; (2) habits of total abstinence; (3) modesty in dress and behaviour; (4) self-sacrifice for the good of others; (5) the abjuring of unkindly speech and action towards others. Mr. Meyer also intimated that the Thursday evenings in each month would be devoted to the Union, thus:—First Thursday, meetings for mental improvement; second, a "Girls' At Home"; third, consecration and devotional meeting; and fourth, the "Home Circle," when young men as well as young women will be invited, and when friendly and Christian acquaintance between the sexes will be encouraged.

At this second meeting in the Lecture Hall, an address was given by Hon. EMILY KINNAIRD, who spoke very wisely and profitably both to her Christian sisters and to those who were still undecided. The former were urged to prayer and to loving service; the latter to an acceptance of the Saviour as the rest-giver, with a view to service for Him.

This somewhat novel but hopeful experiment in church work will be watched, we feel sure, with much sympathetic interest, and with many earnest prayers that it may be richly successful.

WORK FOR THE BLIND IN INDIA.

On my own behalf, and on behalf of the Native English Reading Agents, I thank the kind friend who continues to send us The Christian, and also other kind friends who, hearing of our needs through your columns, send us many helpful publications and books.

The close of the year shows an increase in the number of Christian adherents of over 400, making the total of the Pareychaley district over 15,000. Pray for us that God's Spirit may revive us. Our native contributions for the year have increased by over 600 rupees, making the yearly contributions now over 4300 rupees. Besides this, there are contributions of rice and the money spent directly by the Christians on buildings, etc.

We have thus cause for thankfulness. But, oh! that the Spirit of God might descend upon us, and make us more earnest, more devoted, more consecrated, and more willing to be just his. One little work accomplished during the year has given me the greatest pleasure. I have taught a poor blind Pariah boy to read Tamil, and he is now engaged as a little colporteur, selling religious books and Scriptures. He also plays a concertina.

Many of your readers will know the Braille method of teaching the blind to read by means of raised dots on paper. This method, so successful in France, England, and America, has now been successfully applied by Mr. L. Garthwaite, ex-inspector Government schools, Madras Presidency, etc. (address, Kolar, Mysore, Madras Presidency, S. India), to Hindustani, Urdu, Mahrathi, Bengali, Canarese, Malayalam, Singhalese, Tamil, Burmese, etc., and reading books have been prepared, by means of which any blind person of ordinary intelligence may easily be taught to read and write within a month. All the apparatus necessary for making books is a simple blind writing frame, costing about 5s., and stiff paper. Either Mr. Garthwaite or myself will be glad to communicate with anyone interested in ameliorating the lot of the blind in India or the East.

THE BIBLE IN UGANDA.

At its last meeting the committee of the Bible Society had the opportunity of meeting one of the Christian natives of Uganda. Sema Timba began life as a slave lad, but in the course of a somewhat romantic career became a trusted and capable retainer of the native court. He delivered to the committee, and in his native Ganda, the characteristic message, "Make friends with all black people." Mr. George Williams, struck by the genial and intelligent smile on the dark face, asked, with a responsive smile, its cause. The reply was unaffected and immediate, "It is the words of our Lord."

Sema Timba was accompanied by Rev. R. H. Walker, of the C.M.S., who translated what he said. Mr. Walker gave some very noteworthy items of information on Uganda affairs. There are now, he said, about 500 baptized Protestant converts, and all of these can read. Not a few of the natives commit large portions of the Gospels to memory. The Old Testament story is known partially, and only as yet through the current reading-book; but the New Testament, which those who can read in the Swahili, is studied with exemplary care. The native temples are falling into decay, the priests are disappearing, and the great and general eagerness to read and possess the New Testament is one of the best evidences of the approach of a new period in their history.

THE DAWN IN INDIA is the new title of the organ of the Christian Literature Society for India, and it is a better name than the old "Light for India." Rev. James Johnston, the editor, gives, in the February issue, much valuable information regarding the progress of the Gospel in our great Eastern dependency. CANADIAN PRIESTS AND THE BIBLE.—Several Canadian ministers write to The Montreal Witness of Jan. 5 stating that "the time has come when the public should know how the Roman Catholic priesthood discourage the reading of the Holy Scriptures; and how, in almost every instance where the New Testament is found in a Roman Catholic family, it is condemned to the flames as a book which endangers their salvation."

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

During the last ten days "Father" Ignatius has been holding a mission in Oxford, and attracting large audiences, especially of men, on Sunday evenings at the University Church. He has also conducted Bible readings in College rooms, and the University Daily Prayer Meeting. His public utterances on this visit have been strictly faithful to what is known as evangelical truth, on such subjects as the Atonement, the need of the Holy Spirit, and the consecration of the believer's life. He has also spoken out very clearly on the integrity of God's Word against recent criticism by prominent Oxford professors. But it is impossible to rest satisfied with all this, in the face of his attitude regarding Monasticism, Mariolatry, and the intercession of Saints. On this and other grounds it is regretted by many that the Oxford Y.M.C.A. has permitted him to hold a meeting in its rooms.

Canon Christopher's annual missionary breakfast has once more been an unqualified success, the number of undergraduates being much larger than that of last year. The speaker was Rev. H. M. M. Hackett, of Allahabad, and a more acceptable and appropriate address one could hardly imagine. The gathering cannot but be provocative of increased interest in missionary work.

The breakfast is always the prelude to the annual meetings of the Oxford C.M.S. Sermons were preached on Sunday, and meetings held on Monday and Tuesday. As the deputation, there were, in addition to Mr. Hackett, Mr. James Monro, late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, and Rev. R. H. Walker, of Uganda.

CAMBRIDGE.

Dr. Swete, Regius Professor of Divinity, has given two highly-interesting lectures on the newly-discovered fragment of the Gospel of Peter. Prof. Rendel Harris, of Clare College, is now at St. Catherine's Convent, Mount Sinai, making further researches.

Prof. Ryle has also been drawing attention in his lectures on Joshua, etc., to the recently discovered Tel-el-Amarna tablets, showing their marvellous confirmation of the Biblical history.

A strong factor in the spiritual life of University men is the prayer meeting held daily at 2 p.m. in the Henry Martyn Hall. This is the root from which much of the Christian energy of Cambridge springs.

Principal Moule preached on Sunday evening last in Holy Trinity Church upon "The Natural Depravity of Man." His sermon was closely reasoned, spiritual, and heart-searching. Interesting attention was drawn to the fact that cynics and philosophers attest this great truth by so often attributing all human action to a greater or less degree of self-love.

At the weekly C.M.U. meeting on Monday week, Rev. G. C. Grubb gave the address on "Work among the Jews." Many interesting reminiscences were given of his own experience amongst them.

On Sunday evening last week, the large room of the Guildhall was packed with University men, gathered to hear the Gospel from Mr. Grubb. His subject was the "New Birth." Every evening during the week Gospel addresses have been given to University men only in Holy Trinity Church. These services have been fairly well attended. Very encouraging it is to hear reports of blessing following the missionaries' labours. Every morning Mr. Grubb was at liberty for private interviews upon spiritual matters, and many availed themselves of this privilege. The mission will mark an epoch in the spiritual history of many at the University.

A meeting in support of the Cambridge Mission to Delhi was held in the Divinity School on Sunday week, Rev. Dr. Butler, Master of Trinity, presiding. This mission received its first inspiration from three commanding spirits—Bishop Lightfoot, Bishop Westcott, and Dr. Hort. Rev. A. Haig, missionary at Karnal, near Delhi, gave an interesting account of itinerant work done among the villages around that town. Despite difficulties, the work of raising a native pastorate was progressing. An appeal was made for University men to devote themselves to this work.

Mr. Haig also gave an address upon the work of the mission in Queens' College on Tuesday evening.

OPORTO.—The Sailors' Rest has issued its report for last year, showing that the missionary has been constantly and successfully visiting the men on board ship; while many happy and profitable meetings have been held at the Rest. There has been an increase of 551 in the number of visits to the Rest, and a decrease of seventeen in the ships arriving at this port; by which we sea that the Sailors' Rest has gained ground under Mr. Lamb's administration.

IRISH NOTES.

Another batch of twelve young men leave Dublin on March 8 for Mr. Moody's Chicago Institute. A farewell meeting will be held on March 6.

The half of his fortune, valued at about £38,000, has been left by the late Sir Thomas M'Clure to religious objects chiefly connected with the Presbyterian Church.

The Belfast Prison Gate Mission has had a busy and yet prosperous year, during which 288 discharged prisoners and seventy-one boys passed through the home, and it is believed that the classes and Bible readings have been the means of touching some hearts.

Much regret is felt in Dublin at the death of Surgeon-General Gunn. Deceased was interested in every movement for the social and religious welfare of the country, and took an active part in the work of the Christian Union buildings. He was an ardent temperance worker, and his record of active service was a very distinguished one.

A series of illustrated lectures on the life of Dr. John G. Paton have lately been given by Mr. William Watson in various churches and halls in and around Belfast. These have drawn large and delighted audiences and revived missionary enthusiasm generally. A net sum of no less than £45 has been sent to Dr. Paton for his work in the New Hebrides as a result of Mr. Watson's efforts.

Evangelistic services have been held in Christ's Church, Blackrock, by Rev. F. W. Gason; in the Parish Church, Donaghendry, by Rev. M. B. Hogg, of Keady; in the Methodist Church, Portrush, by Rev. W. J. Christie, of Glenady; in the Presbyterian Church, Magherafelt, by Rev. W. J. Macaulay, of Portadown; in Queen-street Methodist Church, Lurgan, by Mr. Jno. Brandon; and in Stewartstown by Mr. F. A. Elliott. In each case there were professed decisions.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The death is recorded of Rev. R. Reid, U.P. minister, Orkney, at the age of seventy-seven.

The past year has been one of quiet and steady progress at the Soldier's Home, Maryhill, Glasgow.

The Free Church congregation at Queen's Cross, Aberdeen, of which Professor G. Adam Smith was the late pastor, are giving a hearty call to Rev. Martin Lewis, Gravesend.

The proposed Suspensory Bill to be applied to the Established Church of Scotland has awakened no small excitement among the defenders of the union of Church and State.

The Glasgow Free Church Presbytery has declined to sanction the proposed new building for Gorbals' Tabernacle; it was objected that the site chosen is too far from the crowded population.

The Association for Relief of Incurables, at Broomhill Home, Glasgow, is doing a good work. At the annual meeting last week, Mr. W. T. McAusland, sec., reported ninety-six inmates, with 195 outdoor pensioners.

One of the members of the Kelso Free Presbytery, has given notice of motion calling on the Free Church General Assembly to approach the supreme courts of the other Presbyterian communities with a view to uniting them all in one ecclesiastical body.

Mr. Stead's proposals as to the founding of a "Civic Church" in Edinburgh, submitted to a meeting in the Free Assembly Hall, were well received. A resolution was passed calling on the various religious societies in the city to consider some plan for united action.

Rev. John Robertson, of Glasgow, is to move at the next meeting of the Free Church Presbytery that the Assembly be asked to ordain that "no distiller, brewer, publican, licensed grocer, or shareholder in said traffic shall be eligible for the spiritual office of elder in the Free Church of Scotland."

In a conference in Edinburgh on the condition of the poor, Chief-constable Henderson said that since the institution of the scheme for clothing of children over 700 children had been clothed, and there had only been one case of overlapping. In only one case also had there been an attempt to dispose of the clothing that had been supplied.

Dr. Pierson gave his first missionary lecture in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on Sunday evening, the subject being "The New Pentecost and its openings." He maintained that the records of missionary enterprise show that the wonders of Pentecost have been reproduced, and the signs of the times point to a new awakening. There was a crowded audience.

SALOON V. FAMILY.—If a man undertakes to support a saloon and his family, it inevitably happens that the saloon grows richer and the family poorer.

AMERICAN NOTES.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY are about to visit Baltimore.

Jan. 26 was observed as a day of prayer for American colleges.

A Salvation Army Congress has been held in Tremont Temple, Boston.

The death of Dr. G. E. Shipman, founder of the Foundlings' Home, Chicago, is recorded.

A large International Sunday-school building is to be erected near the World's Fair in Chicago.

Gipsy Smith has been evangelising at Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, Harlem, New York.

Dr. Cuyler has been giving a course of lectures on pastoral work at New Brunswick Theological Seminary.

Rev. Dr. H. M. Field, Editor of the New York Evangelist, is spending several weeks on the Barbary coast for literary purposes.

The American religious papers have long obituary and memorial notices of the late Bishop Phillips Brooks, all of them in the highest degree appreciative.

Princeton College, N.J., has been passing through one of the most enthusiastic religious revivals it has ever seen. Nightly meetings have been held, and the building has been crowded at every meeting.

Dr. T. De Witt Talmage, of Brooklyn, who has just entered on his sixty-second year, has received a coadjutor in the work of the Brooklyn Tabernacle in the person of Rev. Chandler A. Oakes, of Stroudsburg, Pa. He will relieve Dr. Talmage of some of the pastoral work.

The Detroit churches continued special evangelistic services after the week of prayer, with good results. Pastors and elders from the different churches held services in other churches than their own, and the intercourse and association were mutually pleasant and profitable. On January 22 a number of additions were made to the churches.

Rev. Joseph Cook inaugurated the "Monday Lectures" for 1893, at Tremont Temple, on February 6. As usual the preludes will touch on current events. Among the subjects to be treated will be: "The Lord's Day, Loyalty and Lawlessness, or Sunday, Its Use, Abuse, Authority, and Assailants, with special reference to the agitation for Sunday Opening of the World's Fair, and the protection of working men's rights to rest a day."

A grand temperance movement on the lines of Gospel work (says our American contemporary) has been inaugurated in the State of Connecticut by Mr. Thomas Edward Murphy, son of Mr. Francis Murphy. As a result, all New England is becoming aroused on the subject. Letters are pouring in upon Mr. Murphy asking his aid in starting the work. Thousands of hard drinkers are being rescued, and many of them have been converted.

Police-superintendent Byrnes, of New York, and Dr. Parkhurst are at swords' points. The issue between them is whether the police shall be held to their sworn legal duty of suppresing open prostitution and gambling. Dr. Parkhurst's demand is that they shall enforce the laws against both vices. They are splendidly paid to do this, and don't do it. Mr. Byrnes says they cannot suppress these harpies, but can drive them into localities out of public sight.

Mr. Quinn, the converted gambler, who not long since made an extensive tour in New England and New York in his anti-gambling railroad car, has just completed two weeks of excellent work in Washington. He spoke twice at the rooms of the Christian Association to a packed house, as a result, a number of young men not only resolved to cease gambling, but as many as a score in each meeting began a Christian life. He also spoke in many of the larger churches in Washington, in the police-court, and at the railroad depots to railroad men.

The Lousiania Lottery, which, by force of a concentrated and educated public opinion, has been compelled to give up business in the United States, has found a home in the Republic of Honduras, whither it will move on Jan. 1, 1894. It has been granted a monopoly of the lottery business among that unfortunate people for a period of fifty years. The use of the Island of Guanaja in the Bay of Honduras has been conceded to it. For these privi leges the company pay the Government 1,000,000dols. in gold and a percentage on the face value of all tickets sold by them.

One of the most effective and encouraging lines of Gospel work carried on in the United States is that among the lumbermen of Wisconsin and Michigan. The mission is under the charge of the King's Daughters and Sons, and reaches a large class of men who are otherwise destitute of all religious privileges, and often reckless, profane, and vile to the last degree. The number of men at work in the forests is estimated at 100,000. Never, it is said, did the Gospel so reach the hearts of the woodsmen. "Godless camps became praying camps. In some cases whole camps were awakened."

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

EIGHTY-SIX new members have been added to the Norwich Y.M.C.A. during the past quarter.

The committee of the Wednesbury Association have just secured the old municipal offices for Y.M.C.A. purposes.

The South Molton Y.M.C.A. reports an increased membership for the past year. The figures have gone from ninety-six to 135.

The Sunderland committee hope soon to have the plans out for their new building before the Corporation. The cost will be £6,000.

New associations have been formed at Lytham, Lancashire, and Thornbury, Gloucestershire; and in Ireland in Killorglin and Fermoy.

The thirty-ninth anniversary of the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A. was observed on Sunday, January 29, in forty-five churches in that city with special services.

The Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. lodging-house workers gave the other evening a supper to some 120 poor persons, who listened to earnest Gospel and Temperance addresses.

Letters from Russia to the Central International Committee state that Association workers there are much hampered by the religious disabilities prevailing in that country.

In reference to a note on the observance of the Week of Prayer at Alexandria, a friend writes that this is not the first time it has been observed, as in 1887 similar meetings were held.

The report of the Birkenhead Association shows 693 members and associates. The Gospel services and other meetings are very interesting, while the P.S.A. gatherings have proved a valuable auxiliary.

The quarterly meeting of the Birmingham Y.M.C.A. was attended by 200 members and associates. The chair was taken by Mr. S. H. Harrison, and the gathering served as a delegates' meeting of the Midland District Union.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Haarlem Association took place on January 30, with Rev. Dr. George R. Van De Water as the principal speaker. The total membership of the branch is 1,017, which is a marked increase over last year.

In view of the growing need in Ireland for open-air testimony, arrangements are being made to bring the Gospel by story and song to every part of the country. The Dublin and other Y.M.C.A.'s will, it is hoped, take up this work in the coming season.

The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, is going on well. Lately, Madame Peyron-Roussel has been giving Gospel addresses. The social and physical departments are not forgotten. Funds are urgently needed from England.

At the fortieth anniversary of the New York Y.M.C.A., Secretary McBurney read an abstract of the annual report, which was most encouraging in its exhibition of growth and usefulness. The association has now fifteen different branches, covering a great amount of varied Christian activity,

The Grays (Essex) Association had a very successful social evening on Monday, February 6. Mr. W. A. Philbey presided in the evening, and Mr. C. W. Mainwaring, the new secretary, gave an address on the past, present, and future of Y.M.C.A. work, urging all to take as their motto, "Young men for Jesus Christ."

Mr. W. Hind Smith, of the National Council, addressed a special meeting convened last week by the Mayor of Chesterfield in behalf of the local association. This meeting was followed by a crowded and most enthusiastic meeting in the Town Hall, presided over by the mayor, the speakers being Mr. Alderman Bemrose and Mr. Howard Lloyd.

An association was started at Hurstpierpoint ten months ago, which has now a membership of nearly seventy, and a reading-room open and supplied with good literature. To maintain this room, £30 per annum is required, of which very little is supplied in the village. The work is kept on spiritual lines, and the need is felt for some help in carrying it on.

The review of the past year, just issued by the Bournemouth Association, shows that the spiritual work has been carried on vigorously and successfully. The Bible classes have been well sustained; while the Sunday services in the Shaftesbury Hall (now incorporated in the work of the Association) have been greatly blessed. The whole work in every department is at present in a healthy condition, and the workers thank God and take courage.

The City Quarterly states that:—No previous quarter in the history of the Cornhill Association can show a better record of work done. The number of meetings held, and the attendances at such, have been larger than in any previous period, resulting in much spiritual blessing and increase of both members and associates. Of course, increased work means increased expense, towards which we would appeal for an increased number of annual subscriptions, that the growing work which has resulted from our new position may not be fettered for lack of funds.

A Voice from Italy states that in the Waldensian Valleys the Y.M.C.A.'s have increased in number and vigour. In 1890 there were twelve, now there are twenty-four. In these last two years several Y.W.C.A.'s have also been formed, having mutual edification for their principal object. In one of the parishes (Angrogna) there are four Y.M.C.A.'s, with 125 members. In another (Villar-Pellice) there are five, with 168 members. The pastor of this last parish is happy to be able to say that he can rely upon the co-operation of eighty persons, who speak and pray in the different meetings.

Y.M.C.A. work in Turkey has received a check in the closing of the conferences by the Government, who fear political designs therein. Says a correspondent: This is a comparatively new experience. Until within two or three years there has never been any question about holding meetings anywhere; but the foolish talk of a few persons about Armenian independence has frightened the Government, and although high officials confess that the Sultan has no more loyal subjects than the Protestants, they cannot understand why conferences should be held, except for some political end. A good many Y.M.C.A.'s have been organised, but they have, for the most part, been given up on this account: sometimes by the advice of friendly officials.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES.

A BRANCH has been successfully started at Sheringham, under the presidency of Mrs. H. Upcher. Forty members have been enrolled.

The Leicester Association reports fifty-six new members, but removals leave the total at about 130. The Duchess of Rutland is president.

In London the Association benefits some 37,000 girls annually, the number benefited by the whole associations being upwards of 138,000.

A conference of members of the Y.W.C.A. is arranged to take place in April next. Only members will read papers and take part in the discussions.

The Dean of Windsor intends holding on Sunday, as opening the Week of Prayer for young women, a special Y.W.C.A. service in St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

Next week is being widely observed as a Week of Prayer for young women. The Y.W.C. Associations are taking up the matter thoroughly, and in many cases arranging for special meetings.

Including fifty-two paid agents, it is estimated that more than 2000 workers are engaged in connection with the London Young Women's Christian Association. The number of workers in the whole Association is upwards of 8600.

By means of a penny trading scheme an endeavour is being made to get members of the Y.W.C.A. to raise funds in aid of the London work. A large number of members in London and the country are taking pennies for this purpose.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

REV. G. W. FURBECK maintains that it is time the Y.P.S.C.E. added definitely to its operations a united forward missionary movement.

Nine Christian Endeavour Societies of Schenectady, N.Y., lately held a union meeting. Two-minute addresses were the order of the evening.

Christian Endeavour Day was observed by many societies on January 29, the Sabbath nearest the exact date of the twelfth anniversary of the organisation of the first Christian Endeavour Society (February 2, 1881).

A correspondent of The New Zealand Methodist regrets that the members of that church in that land have been slow in taking up Christian Endeavour, and adds:—"The Baptists, Congregationalists, and Presbyterians are taking up the work heartily, and it is only natural to expect like results will follow their efforts here as elsewhere."

"Wanted—a crusade," is the title of a telling article in Zion's Herald, concluding thus:—"This whole continent of ours is groaning under the terrible slavery of the liquor power. But how long could that power endure if the Epworth League and the Christian Endeavour Society should join hands and hearts against it, from the Gulf of Mexico to the confines of eternal snow, and from Boston's gilded dome to San Francisco's Golden Gate?"

SABBATH TRADING IN PARIS.—The movement in favour of the observance of the Lord's Day continues to gain ground in Paris. Quite recently one of the largest—if not the very largest—of the business houses in that city requested their customers not to give any orders entailing work on Sundays unless absolutely unavoidable, and it is stated that 99 per cent. of their customers willingly agreed, and expressed their pleasure at the arrangement.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LORD'S SUPPER AND SACRAMENTALISM.

Dear Sir,—In some of the correspondence which has appeared of late in your columns upon the subject of the Lord's Supper, such as the letter of "J. H. F.," a want of comprehension of the full significance of this rite is apparent, with a consequent undervaluing of it. I trust, therefore, in view of the present discussion, you may deem the following from the deeply spiritual mind of the late Adolph Saphir worthy of insertion, as many of your readers may never have seen these words of wisdom and spiritual insight:—

"The great task of our Christian life is to hold fast the beginning of our confidence, and not to depart from the simplicity which is in Christ Jesus. We remain poor and needy, guilty and sinful, dependent entirely and exclusively on the grace of Christ. Were we to live a thousand years after our conversion, at the end of our course we would say, with as much truth and reality as at the commencement—

Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to thy cross I cling.

"Now, see the provision that our Saviour has made for the believer, and this will confirm what I have said, and what some persons, perhaps, may think is too great a narrowing-in of the whole believer's life, that he must know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified. What did our Saviour do? The task was this: He wished to institute something that would secure the believer's growth and well-being upon earth. Christ Himself must be remembered; peace of conscience must be maintained; the mystery of sanctification must be set forth; the doctrine of the Church and the unity of believers must be taught; the position of the believer in the world with regard to sin and everything that is around him must be pointed out; and the bright hope of the future, the return of Christ, must be set before the eye of the believer.

"How is it possible to combine all doctrines into one institution? What seems impossible to human ingenuity was accomplished by the infinite wisdom of the loving Saviour. The same night in which He was betrayed the Lord Jesus took bread and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to his disciples, and said, 'Take, eat; this is my body; this do in remembrance of Me.' Likewise also, when He had supped, He took the cup and said, 'This cup is the new testament in my blood; drink ye all of it, for as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death until He come.'

"Here is the whole doctrine of Christianity, the whole experience of the Christian, all that we need during our pilgrimage, 'Jesus Christ and Him crucified.' For here is Christ for us the broken body; and the wine, the blood shed. Here is Christ in us—we eat the bread and drink the wine. Here is the doctrine of the Church—we are his body, He and the believers are one. Here is the union of all believers—we all eat of the same bread. 'Drink ye all of it.' Here you see the attitude of the believer with regard to the world. He is dead to the world. We show the death of the Lord. And here is the expectation and hope of the believer. He does this 'until He come.' Jesus Christ crucified is thus all the believer's experience."

The author then amplifies each of the above points, and in concluding says:—

"Remember, that it is a joyous thing to be 'a debtor to mercy alone,' to depend on the Lord Jesus Christ; to be at the Lord's Supper. For it is a feast, a festival; here is true rejoicing. The people of the world, whenever they rejoice, or give a festival, banish two thoughts from their minds; that we are sinners, and that we must die. What a strange thing it would be thought by the world if there was announced a great festival of rejoicing, and if the two prominent ideas of this festival were to be sin and death. When we come to rejoice in the Lord Jesus Christ, the two prominent ideas are sin and death. But our sin is forgiven, and our death is swallowed up in victory. Jesus is our righteousness, and Jesus is our life. His joy is thus ours, as He saith: 'I will declare Thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the Church will I sing praise unto Thee.'"

Yours faithfully,

Stuart Lloyd Richards, Lt.-Colonel.

Eversleigh, Preston-road, Southport, Feb. 11.

Dear Sir,—There will be, I feel sure, many thoughtful readers of The Christian who, like myself, deeply regret the tone of your "Notes and Comments" upon the discussion in your columns, of which the letters at page 24 of your issue of the 9th inst. are the latest development.

Kindly permit one, who is not only a decided Evangelical member of the Church of England, but actively employed upon the leading societies of that Church, to reply (very humbly and with all charity towards those who differ) to the position you and some of your correspondents have taken on this very important question.

In doing so, I would premise that I take the Word of God as the only safe standing ground and standard of faith and practice in respect to all such questions.

First, I would ask your assent to this axiom, that to argue, from the abuse of anything against the use of that thing is a dangerous and illogical form of argument. You carry this so far as to write (after giving prominent insertion at page 8 to a letter from a member of the Society of Friends): "We do not think it desirable at the present moment . . . . to enter upon a discussion as to their (the Sacraments) disuse, though it is possible it may come to this." In other words, because some misguided men exalt Christ's ordinance above Christ Himself, you are prepared to contemplate a disobedience to Christ's commands.

Your correspondent, after giving his views about the derivation of the word "sacrament," advises you to adopt the views of the Society of Friends, and to discard all symbolic ceremonies as Christ Himself evidently intended to be done.

I would point out to him and to all your readers that he is wrong on both points. The true etymology of the word is to be found in late Latin, from "sacrare," to render sacred; from the L. sacr—stem of sacer (holy), which is from an old Aryan root, sak, meaning to sever, to set aside; that is, to divide from what is common and of ordinary use. The sacramentum, or military oath, is certainly found in the earlier Latin, and had a similar origin, but it is the later significance of holy, and, therefore, consecrated, that led to the use of the word sacrament in the earliest times of the Christian Church.

Will your correspondent maintain his statement that Christ Himself evidently intended to discard all symbolic representation of deep truths when through the bread and the wine He ordained a perpetual remembrance of his death until He come again; when He called Himself the Bread of Life and the True Vine, and when He spake of the water that He would give, becoming a well of water springing up unto eternal life.

The teaching of the Church of England in her Articles is in strict conformity to the Scriptures, and no better definition of the meaning of the word Sacrament can be given than in the words of the Catechism. "I mean an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace, given unto us, ordained by Christ Himself, as a means whereby we receive the same, and a pledge to assure us thereof."

Again, Article XXVIII. on "the Lord's Supper" is clear in its Scriptural teaching.

The use of the word "administer" and "administration," so objected to by your correspondent, is the Latin form of "minister to." It is, of course, unintelligible to one who rejects every form of Christian ministry as well as the ordinances of the Christian Church; but to those who remember the words, "I came to minister," and the distribution of the loaves and fishes by the hands of the disciples as ministers of his miraculous bounty, it does not seem incongruous that his servants should be called to "administer." There is no idea of the Communion, if by that word is understood the act of fellowship in the breaking of the bread, being administered.

Lastly, is the present state of the Society of Friends such as to induce other denominations of Christians to adopt their views? Is it not notorious that as a body they are dwindling away? There was reason for its inception as a noble protest against mere outward form when there was no spiritual life, but in their desire to emphasise the spiritual to the disregard of the outward and visible, Friends have run upon the rock of disobedience to the commands of the Lord Himself.

Yours faithfully,

February 12. C. E. Chapman.

Dear Sir,—In addition to the argument, referred to by Mr. Hawker, derived from the silence of the three pastoral Epistles of Paul on the subject of baptism and the Lord's Supper, there is another of equal or of even greater weight to be found in 1 Cor. xii. and Eph. iv. In the Epistles to Timothy and Titus are carefully set forth the only two offices in the Christian Church, elder or bishop (and these Dr. Lightfoot conclusively showed were synonymous and interchangeable terms), for rule and for teaching; and deacons, whose special work in the first Christian age (Acts vii.) appears to have been that of guardians of the poor of the flock. With all deference to "the Brethren," who on so many points have brought us back to primitive teaching and practice, I believe that these offices were meant for the whole Christian age; and that if suitable men can be found it is still right to set apart elders (or bishops) and deacons.

But when we turn to 1 Cor. xii. and Eph. iv. we find something additional to offices; we have a great enumeration of gifts in the Church, some temporary, as Apostles, others available to the end of the age. And here is the thing that is memorable and noteworthy—no priests are mentioned in the splendid catalogue of wealthy endowment which the ascended Lord bestows upon his Church. He "will not give his glory to another"; official priesthood as to sacrifice was ended at Calvary (Heb. ix. 26; x. 14), and it "doth not pass to another" (Heb. vii. 24, R.V. margin); official priesthood as to intercession is his sole prerogative now, and it seems to be sacrilege to usurp it in either direction. I stand amazed at the presumption of men who dare call themselves priests if they have acquainted themselves with the first principles of New Testament teaching. In this land of Bibles the marvel is unaccountable.

I am glad to notice in another of your columns that Mr. Handley Moule insists upon the retention of the word "Protestant" amongst all sound Evangelicals. Certainly. What are Protestants? The word simply means "witnesses for" truth, and (by implication) against error. To use this word is said to endanger the loss of moderate men. May I inquire what is the value of moderate men in a time of crisis and of righteous controversy? Of no more use than the lukewarm (Rev. iii. 15, 16), and we know what our Lord thinks of such people.

In the great revival in Scotland, which culminated just fifty years ago in the disruption of the Church of Scotland and the formation of the Free Church, the lukewarm party, which bent its neck to the usurpation of the State, went by the well-remembered name, "The Moderates." A cause that is good and Scriptural will get on admirably without moderate men; it will only enfeeble the cause it champions by drawing into its ranks the half-hearted; an army of such mingled materials will win no victories.

May God open many eyes to see the false positions they occupy in ecclesiastic relationships.

James E. Mathieson.

P.S.—Lest anyone should plead Scriptural authority for being a "moderate man," let me remind him that Phil. iv. 5 is rendered in the Revised Version: "Let your forbearance (or gentleness) be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand."

Dear Sir,—I for one am truly thankful that you are arousing Christians to look into the question of "Sacraments," and may they be led to seek the mind of God in connection therewith. I welcome also with gratitude the exhortation of "A Member of the Society of Friends," more especially as I see so many difficulties in the way of even stopping where we are, that "discarding all symbolic ceremonies as Christ Himself evidently intended to be done," appears to be the only remedy; and the sooner it is done the better for the Church of Christ. At the present time we are having a mission in our neighbourhood, and the young man who is conducting it is faithfully proclaiming the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ as comprised in the five R's, and we are rejoicing that some of our neighbours have been led to accept Jesus as their personal Saviour, and to declare that the burden of their sins has been removed, and they have joyfully accepted his service.

They are now being urged to show their thankfulness by taking "the Sacrament," which they are told by the clergyman is a thanksgiving service specially intended for that purpose! As the mission is under his directions, of course this sacramental service must be only in the form prescribed by the Church of England! The result is that these young converts rejoicing apparently in sins forgiven, clean hearts, etc., will be called upon to declare that they "bewail their manifold sins, they earnestly repent, and are heartily sorry for these their misdoings. The remembrance of them is grievous, the burden is intolerable"! Then, asking for mercy and forgiveness, the "priest" administers "the holy mysteries," and declares that now "they are very members incorporate in the mystical body of the Son." With such teaching implanted in their heads if not in their hearts, can we be surprised if they act up to it, and fall into the hands of the Ritualists or Romanising clergy?

I remain, yours very truly,

A Churchman (?)

Dear Sir,—It is not entirely a matter of regret that you suggest in your columns some discussion of the modes of administration of the Lord's Supper. I think that the time has come for it. But I think it a pity that your correspondent, C. Harford-Battersby, whilst deprecating discussion, should have announced his decision that the mediums of the Lord's Supper should be "ordained ministers," as a wise safeguard against possible abuse.

Surely this is an assumption of almost the whole question. For at all times since early in the second century this administration has been held tenaciously by "ordained ministers," and have they safeguarded the Table of our Lord from possible abuse?

I revive as little as I can help the sad remembrances of ecclesiastical confusions produced by priests, presbyters, or leaders of the people, who have constantly, on questions of discipline or of doctrine, set up tables of their own, opposed one to the other, and the poor affrighted flock had, under pain and penalty of excommunication, to follow their guides into the various sectional divisions of Christendom, until Bethel was turned into Babel, to the grief of the Holy Spirit of God and the triumph of the adversary. For, sad to say, the very table of remembrance of the Lord Jesus was in each case frequently labelled with the distinctive title of division.

Can it be wondered at that many thoughtful men have from time to time asked the question whether the breaking of bread together was not simply a gracious provision on the part of our beloved Lord for his disciples to remember Him by at all times and under all circumstances, a thing which his weakest ones could do as well as the strongest? Two or three believers having no gift or office whatever can remember their Lord because they know Him.

Church office did not exist when He appointed the ordinance, and when all fails in man's hand, as the apostle foretold (Acts xx. 30, etc.), the Lord in Heaven remains the same. The Abiding Comforter and the unchanging Word of his grace are our portion still.—Ever yours,

Stamford Hill. JOHN JEWELL PENSTONE.

SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—My attention has been called to a notice in your last issue of some remarks made by Professor G. A. Smith, at the close of a lecture by Rev. John Forgan, of Simla, to the Glasgow Free Church Students' Missionary Society, and which is calculated, I think, to create a false impression as to the character of our work in India, and which also states that my feelings towards India are as follows: "I'll never send another officer to India. India has been the plague of my life. Nearly all my officers have broken down, or got married, or come home to get married."

This statement is an entire misapprehension.

1. I could never say "India has been the plague of my life," seeing that India is one of the most promising fields of labour occupied by the Army. Our success is beyond our utmost expectations, and we are anticipating far greater things still.

2. Neither could I say that "nearly all my officers have broken down, or got married, or come home to get married." Such is not the fact. It is true that some have failed in health, and some have died at their post, but not a larger proportion than that among ordinary missionary workers.

3. I did argue, and I still argue, that India can only be missioned efficiently by native forces, and that owing to the difficulties of climate, language, and habits, the European is not so well adapted as the Asiatic for the practical fighting of missionary life in that country; and that, this being so, it was not my intention at present to send out Europeans as officers in such large numbers as heretofore.

Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM BOOTH.

EURASIANS IN INDIA.

SIR,—In thanking you for the kindly notices you have lately published about Miss Anstey's orphanage at this station, I would ask you to be good enough to allow me to explain that in writing on behalf of this institution, it was very far from my intention to hurt the feelings of any class of people, and the correspondents who have taken such a view of the matter cannot be aware of what is now of very frequent occurrence in India. I will give an instance to show what I refer to:—A European regiment, after three years' residence in a station, left the place, under orders, for another station, and it was then ascertained that a number of women and children had been left behind, quite destitute, to all appearances. Most of these women had been married at some registrar's office or mission chapel, of course without the leave of the commanding officer, who could not therefore bring them on the strength of the regiment. Under the short-service system the men leave their regiments after a few years and can go home, or to the colonies, and the offspring of such marriages are left in India to be brought up in the bazaars in the best way they can find.

It is amongst these that Miss Anstey is labouring with very insufficient means, and it is on their behalf that I have written to you to obtain any help we can from the "good folks at home." I have only endeavoured to bring to public notice a state of affairs in India which is well known to all who have any knowledge of military matters. England maintains a garrison of over 80,000 English troops in this country, and it is therefore quite certain that what I have referred to as occurring in our station is going on all over the country. A class of paupers is now being brought into existence and left in such ignorance and destitution that no private means can possibly relieve.

I shall be glad to answer any inquiries about Miss Anstey's Orphanage and the good work she is doing here. Having charge of the Poor-house at this station, I am in a position to know a great deal about these matters, and the misery and destitution which is increasing so rapidly around us, and in endeavouring to alleviate this as much as possible. I deeply regret any one could have supposed I was injuring any respectable individual, and I trust you will kindly allow me to repudiate any such intention, but knowing only too well what were the wants of a large and increasing class of unfortunates, I make my appeal through your columns to the charity of England to assist Miss Anstey in her good work.—Yours faithfully, JOHN F. FISCHER, General R.E.

KURKU AND CENTRAL INDIAN HILL MISSION.

SIR,—As we have received many letters showing that considerable confusion and misunderstanding has arisen from the premature publication in THE CHRISTIAN of a manuscript circular giving 10, Drayton-park as the headquarters of the C.I.G.M., we must beg you to insert this letter of explanation.

The C.I.G.M., which has our hearty prayers and warm sympathy, does not, as some of our correspondents suppose, either supersede or in any way oppose the Kurku and Central Indian Hill Mission. But, while the particulars of that society have never yet been officially made public, our mission has been in existence some years, and has thirteen missionaries in connection with it, who have gone out depending upon the Lord alone to supply all their needs in answer to prayer, and are now hard at work, as the paragraph from Rev. A. Müller, our superintendent in the field, which you kindly inserted in your issue of Jan. 12, shows.

After meeting the representatives of the C.I.G.M. for prayer and conference, we wish to state that they will, as they intended from the first, have quite a different address for their society, and that 10, Drayton-park remains therefore the address of the Kurku and Central Indian Hill Mission.

On behalf of the Executive Committee, we are, sir, yours truly,

ELIZABETH BAXTER.

THE QUEEN'S STATUE FOR HONG KONG.

SIR,—In Whitehall, opposite the Horse Guards, is a statue of the Queen, subscribed for as a jubilee gift for Hong Kong. I should like to ask what it is to commemorate? If fifty years of British rule in that island, ceded "for the purpose of careening ships," but, used alas! for the purposes of "a huge opium warehouse," then I do trust the statue will remain where it is till it is sent out to commemorate the abolition of the opium traffic, and, as the island was ceded in 1843, let us trust that ere 1893 closes a jubilee will be proclaimed, and Britain released from being the chief actor in the opium slavery of the East, and her share in this, only to be remembered as such by its abolition in 1893.—Yours faithfully, ROBT. PRINGLE, M.D., Brigade Surgeon.

THE LIBERATOR RELIEF FUND.

SIR,—The failure of the Liberator Building Society and its allied companies involves a loss to the investing public of about £7,000,000. Great as this amount is, it would not, in the ordinary course of things, call for the formation of a special fund to relieve those who have lost by an unfortunate investment. The circumstances connected with these companies are, however, exceptional. An enormous proportion of this loss falls upon a class of people peculiarly unable to bear it. These companies were systematically introduced to thrifty middle-class and working-class people, who have saved small sums, with the view to provision against old age. These savings have been mercilessly sacrificed. As certain persons connected with these companies are now being prosecuted, reticence is necessary in respect to the doings of the directors. A few words will, however, explain the need of the relief fund. The entire savings of many thousands of people in narrow circumstances have been wrecked, and the prospect of any substantial salvage is exceedingly small. The sufferers were not speculators, but investors at a moderate rate of interest in undertakings which they had grounds for believing were perfectly sound. The destitution caused by this calamity is spread all over the country and among all denominations. The mere announcement of a fund for their relief has brought in over a thousand applications, giving heartrending details. Widows, orphans, old people, persons in infirm health, and others more or less helpless, have been deprived of their all.

A representative committee has been formed to raise a fund to deal with the worst cases. No attempt will be made to help those who, though severe losers, are earning regular incomes; but not less than £100,000 is required to give even partial relief to those who, unable to earn their own livings, are deprived of their entire subsistence. The executive committee will carefully investigate every case before granting help. Contributions are slowly coming in, but not at all adequately to the needs of the case, and we therefore appeal to the public in this special calamity to give liberal help. Cheques may be sent to the account of the "Liberator Relief Fund," City Bank, Aldgate, London, or to the Hon. Secretary.

Signed on behalf of the committee, Arnold Morley, R. C. Bedford, Bishop Suffragan.

SCOTTISH NAVVY MISSION.

THERE are at present about 20,000 men doing navvy work in Scotland. Their ranks are largely recruited from those who have failed in other walks of life. From the new report of the Scottish Navvy Mission Society, we learn that besides mechanics and artisans, there are to be found among them clerks, lawyers, doctors, university graduates, lay, and even clerical, who have had good prospects at starting on their professional career, but have failed and fallen—too often through drink.

The society has seven missionaries, not counting Mr. McRae, the organising secretary, who also does missionary duty. The "Quarterly Letter to Navvies," with a Scotch supplement, and a large number of tracts have been distributed, and the workers have met with much encouragement. A singular incident is reported from Glasgow. A young man, lately led to Christ, was, with several others, placed in imminent peril by the fall of a coil of wire rope. "Get out of the road," he shouted to his mates, "and I'll stand—I am ready to die, but you are not." The mass came crashing down, and fell upon his legs. Bruised and stupefied, he was extricated, and happily, as it proved, not seriously hurt. The foreman called for some brandy. "I don't want brandy," was his reply; "take me out of this, and I'll go home and get a draught of the water of life." A quiet afternoon with his Bible helped to set him to rights again.

Another remarkable case is: On pay Saturday M., along with a few kindred spirits, had a regular drinking bout. They sang and drank well into Sunday morning, and, after a short interval, renewed and carried on their carouse well into the afternoon, when they separated for their respective lodgings. M. was returning anything but sober when the missionary met him, and had a long talk with him. He promised to accept Christ as his Saviour, but the missionary greatly doubted the reality of a profession made under such circumstances. That it was a genuine conversion, however, soon became evident by his earning the name of "Praying M.," and by the fact that he has continued to lead a consistent Christian life.

The acting hon. sec. of the society is Sir Archibald S. L. Campbell, Bart., 23, Moray-place, Edinburgh.

THE WORKING MEN'S MISSION.

THE good work carried on for so many years by the brothers Young in Collingwood-street, Blackfriars-road, is familiar to many; but one branch of it demands a passing notice at this time, when all Christian people are anxiously considering what is to be done for the relief of the distress with which they are constantly brought face to face. The soup-kitchen at the Mission premises is a model of what such a place should be, and some idea of the extent to which the poor and destitute avail themselves of it may be formed from the fact that during last winter something like 120,000 meals were served. This number, large as it is, bids fair to be exceeded during this winter, for at present the average is about 1000 meals per day. About 1100 Board-school children are provided with dinners each week. The soup is sold at a penny per quart, including a large slice of bread, and half the quantity can be had for a halfpenny. It says much for the completeness of the organisation and the economy observed when we learn that last winter the kitchen was nearly self-supporting, the loss on the twenty-two weeks being less than £10. Messrs. Young will be pleased to show their model soup-kitchen to any of our readers who are interested in such work.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. William Forbes has taken Finsbury Park Hall for evangelistic services on Sundays.

Mr. Thomas Mormon, a blind evangelist, has conducted a mission at Sowerby Bridge in the Methodist Free Church. There were many inquiries and much interest shown.

Mr. J. Wilbur Chapman is holding, in the Metropolitan Hall, Reading, Pa., special evangelistic services for the masses. The hall, which accommodates 4000, has been well filled, and great interest has been manifested.

Tamworth.—An eight days' mission was concluded here last Sunday, at the Baptist Tabernacle. It was conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. Duxbury, on the completion of the fifth year of his ministry. Many testified to blessing received.

Mr. Joseph Clarke, who has recently completed a six-weeks' mission at the Great Assembly Hall, London, has remained for another month to visit the sick and poor of the neighbourhood, for which work he is eminently fitted. Mr. Clarke is especially loved by the poor, to whom he is a friend indeed.

Hemel Hempstead, Herts.—Mr. Goudie has just conducted a six days' mission in the Congregational Chapel, New-road, Hemel Hempstead. The services were much blessed; God graciously blessed his servants; several, we believe, have accepted the Saviour. Mr. Goudie begins an eight days' mission on the 19th at the Baptist Chapel, Berkhampstead.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, of Birmingham, has lately completed his hundredth mission during the six years in which he has been specially engaged in evangelistic work. While most of his missions have been held in connection with Congregational churches, he has also visited churches of other denominations and Y.M.C.A.'s, and is desirous of utilising all opportunities of service.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been conducting a most successful mission in the St. Giles' Christian Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, W.C. Much interest has been aroused, many have been attracted, and have listened attentively to the clear and vigorous declarations of the Gospel. Men, boys, and women, who were formerly pests of society, have been among the inquirers, and some of these profess to have found peace in believing.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting a series of special services at General Alexander's Mission Hall, Burgess Hill. The Holy Spirit has blessed the word of his grace, several having professed anxiety of soul. It has also been a season of refreshment to the Lord's people. Mr. Notman leaves for Scotland this week, hoping to conduct missions in Dollar and Coalsnaughton. Prayer is asked for this work.

Rev. E. P. Hammond's meetings in Waterford (N.Y.) are increasing in interest and power. Some have supposed that Mr. Hammond's work and chief success are with the children, but wherever he has been, both in America and in Europe, he has reached more adults than children, although he also has a peculiar power over children. Three hundred and fifty children have within a fortnight professed conversion in his meetings in Waterford and Troy.

ROME IN CHINA.

I was glad to see the letters by Mr. Phillips, of C.M.S. Fuh-Kien, re "Rome in China," in your issue of August 18. Some people at home and in the open ports of China talk about the priests being self-denying, but they would say differently, I think, if they knew the style in which a foreign priest lives in inland China. In addition to his riding in official manner (four-men chair), the priest requires the Church members to k'oh t'eo (prostrate themselves, and knock their heads on the ground) to him, just as to the Mandarins. It is well known that the Roman Catholic Church is one of the wealthiest bodies in China. This is not because they are supported by foreign subscription, but because they own a lot of property which they let at high rents, etc.

The Protestant Church in this district numbers but a few members at present, but we are believing and praying for great things. At one of our out-stations—Ngan-suen-cheo—where we have four Christians, the Romanists have several times tried to get an entrance, but cannot. Though many at first mistake us for Romanists, on the other hand many at once distinguish. Cecil Smith.

BONA FIDE TRAVELLERS.—In a Divisional Court, consisting of four judges of the High Court, it has been decided that if a man merely walks three miles on a Sabbath morning in order to get a glass of beer, he is not a bonâ fide traveller within the meaning of the Act of Parliament.

Personalia.

Archdeacon Sinclair, it is stated, is to succeed Archdeacon Farrar as Church editor in the Review of the Churches.

Mr. Eugene Stock expects to leave Bombay on March 4, and intends pausing for a few days, on his way home, at Cairo.

Rev. W. Lockhart Morton, a Presbyterian minister, Melbourne, while continuing his pastoral work, has established Homes of Hope for Inebriates, which have been very successful.

Rev. James Nicholson, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, and one of the veterans of the Eastern mission field, is now busy in deputation work, but hopes, it is stated, ere long to return to Colombo.

Dr. and Mrs. F. E. Clark had a warm welcome in Japan, and spent a few busy weeks visiting various places, addressing many meetings and organising fresh Y.P.S.C.E. From Japan they went on to China for similar service.

Mr. Richard Johnson, a life-like portrait of whom appears in the Manchester Mission Greeting for February, has rendered excellent service in the central mission committee, especially in the Sunday afternoon services, where his earnest and Evangelical addresses have been a great attraction from the beginning.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon is, we are glad to hear from Mrs. Spurgeon, benefiting by his visit to Australia, and the intelligence, published in the Antipodean papers, and given in our last, as to his being ordered to Spain, is incorrect. He is so far restored to health as to be able to preach and lecture to crowded audiences in various cities in the colonies. He hopes to be able to return to England in April, travelling by the s.s. Himalaya.

A SHAMEFUL TRAFFIC.

A St. Petersburg correspondent states that the Russian Press has called attention to the existence of a shameful traffic that is being secretly carried on in the eastern provinces of the Empire. The practice is to abduct young and inexperienced girls from their homes by paid agents, who, under various false pretexts, induce their victims to leave their native country. It is hardly necessary to state that the majority of those who are so foolish as to put themselves in the hands of these agents never see their homes again, and are decoyed over the frontier, where they drag out a shameful existence in houses of ill-fame in Austria, Roumania, Turkey, and other countries.

The Warsaw Courier, alluding to this subject, states that many simple peasant girls in Poland have been decoyed abroad by agents, who systematically visit the villages, and hold out to their victims, amongst other tempting offers, remunerative situations at the Chicago Exhibition. A few days ago one of the agents employed in this "business" was arrested by the police at Kishineff, whilst in the act of conveying two young girls into Austria, whom he had promised situations in a cigarette manufactory in Odessa.

Children and Public-house.

The Ragged School Union has recently distributed upwards of 35,000 of the card entitled "Give the child a Chance" among the scholars, in envelopes addressed to their parents by name. The card contains an appeal, enforced by argument and illustration, to parents to discontinue sending their little ones to the public-house. Upwards of 200,000 copies have been distributed in various parts of the country. It is published by Morgan and Scott, 2s. per 100.

WEST LONDON MISSION.—Rev. A. J. Sherwell writes:—We are forming a Free Loan Library for the poorer classes of Soho. Our sisters, and other workers, visit regularly some thousands of families and find an almost entire absence of anything like healthy literature. The results are so lamentable we propose to establish a library at Lincoln House, 60, Greek-street, Soho, which shall be absolutely free to all the working classes of the district. We shall be most thankful for gifts of books, which may be sent to the above address.

RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.—All enjoyed the muster of the Christian Life Boat Crew at Miss Child's welcome home on Tuesday week, when Mr. Leng led the meeting. Impressive addresses and testimonies were given by Mr. Toner and others, among them two young members, a Russian and a Frenchman, preparing for the foreign field. Many letters were read which proved that the work is progressing in the various branches, whilst others told of blessing resulting from the visits of detachments to the various mission centres. The text for the month given by Miss Child was Ephes. v. 20.

Obituary.

REV. DR. FINLAYSON.

The death is announced of Rev. T. Campbell Finlayson, D.D., for the past twenty-seven years minister of Rusholme Congregational Church. Educated at Glasgow University, after a course of study in the Divinity Hall of the United Presbyterian Church, he was unable to subscribe to the Calvinistic doctrines. Accordingly he migrated into England, and, in 1859, settled at Cambridge as minister of the Congregational church. In 1865 he removed to Rusholme, where he ministered to a warmly attached congregation. Intellectual and quiet, modest and gracious, he was much loved by his people, and though he shrank from public notice, he was called upon to serve as chairman of the Lancashire Congregational Union, and was honoured by his University conferring upon him the degree of D.D. He published several volumes of sermons and lectures. Over a year ago his strength failed, and he went to Glasgow so as to be under the watchful care of his brother, Dr. James Finlayson. Death took place on Tuesday last week, at the age of fifty-seven.

SIDNEY COOPER WESTON, FOLKESTONE.

The loss, at the early age of 50 years, of Sidney C. Weston will be keenly felt, not only by his bereaved family and by friends of Kent and elsewhere, but by the poor, the distressed, the widow, and by the seafaring people of Folkestone. For fifteen years his temperance efforts have been unceasing and unselfish to an extraordinary extent and the liberality with which he supported the cause will never be known on earth. Like the late W. I. Palmer, he shrank from show and praise, but numberless were his quiet acts of beneficence, and many a widow and struggling tradesman will miss his sympathy and timely aid. Largely through his efforts a flourishing congregation of Friends was built up, who will miss him extremely. The funeral on January 28 was very large and representative, and a memorial service was held next day in the Town Hall, in which all classes and creeds united in their love and respect for the deceased. At a public meeting in the Town Hall, on the 1st inst., at which again every church and class was represented, it was decided to have some fitting memorial for so truly good and noble a man, and a committee was appointed accordingly. A new temperance hall was suggested as one in harmony with the life and character and work of love they all wished to honour.

PROFESSOR GRACEY.

We record with much regret the sudden and altogether unlooked-for decease of Professor Gracey, principal of the Pastor's College, Newington Butts. This much-lamented event took place on Thursday night, February 9, the immediate cause being pneumonia, which supervened on a sharp attack of rheumatic fever. The illness altogether was very brief, and to most of his friends the news of his death has come as a profound shock. It was only during the last day or two that grave symptoms were developed, so that even at the college itself, almost to the end, alarm was far distant. Scarce one save those immediately surrounding him—if we may except these—had begun to harbour the thought that he might be taken. But He whose way is in the sea has so ordered it, and now the college, which little more than a year ago lost its beloved president, is bereft of its most valued tutor.

Almost Mr. Gracey's last public act was to preside at the recent memorial service in connection with the anniversary of Mr. Spurgeon's death, which was held in the college buildings on the morning of January 31. The writer of this notice thought him then looking well, but those present who had seen more of him of late remarked how flushed he looked. It occurred to no one, however, that danger was near. Mr. Gracey, after conducting the morning service, attended the afternoon and evening meetings in the Tabernacle. The day following (February 1) he came to the college and took his classes as usual, but complained of feeling stiff and generally out of sorts. He did not again, we believe, return to his college work, but became gradually worse, the illness turning, after a short time, into rheumatic fever, which, being followed by pneumonia, terminated on Thursday night last fatally.

Mr. Gracey has been principal of the Pastor's College for many years, having received his appointment to that office on the retirement from active service of the late venerable Mr. Rogers. Mr. Gracey was much esteemed as a tutor, and was held in very high regard by the students, both present and past. The blow is one which will be much felt, both by his sorrowing household and by the large multitude who have known him personally, and whose course and character he has done so much to shape.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

ALCOHOLISM is yearly becoming more prevalent and more severe in France. Opium intoxication has been superadded to that from alcohol, especially in Paris.

Science shows that a man's normal power of resisting the inroads of infective disease is diminished or lost when his body is under the influence of alcoholic drinks.—Sir James Sawyer, M.D., F.R.C.P.

Mr. William Noble has been conducting a brief Gospel Temperance Mission at Cavendish Baptist Church, Ramsgate. The attendance has been large, and a good number of pledges were taken at each meeting.

Says The Voice, commenting on the different views taken of intemperance:—"On the Bowery, New York, whisky causes drunkenness; on Wall-street it causes alcoholism, and on Fifth Avenue it causes heart failure."

Three most successful and enthusiastic temperance meetings have been held in Northampton on the occasion of Dr. Kate Mitchell's visit to the town. Several pledges were taken, and many new members added to the B.W.T.A.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the Liverpool Women's Union and Shelter, the Bishop of Liverpool said he believed that, if only social questions like temperance were taken up more than mere party politics, it would be a great blessing.

The Church Temperance Society of New York is preparing a bill to be introduced in the Legislature at Albany, providing that no more saloon licences be granted in the State until the number is reduced to one for every 500 of the population.

In connection with the discussion on the Bishop of Chester's licensing scheme, his lordship has received more than ninety independent opinions of consuls, vice-consuls, burgomasters, and chiefs of police in Norway, practically unanimous in their testimony to the beneficial working of the Gothenburg system.

A small boy of eight or nine, lying in a London hospital, being visited by a friend, inquired how his father and mother were going on. "All right," was the reply. "They ain't been drunk for a week." "Oh," said the poor little fellow, "wot a good thing! No one knows the trouble I've 'ad with 'em."—Truth.

The inauguration of a statue to the great Irish apostle of temperance in Dublin the other day was made much of by temperance workers, but it was a matter of comment that few of the co-religionists of Father Mathew were present. The statue will be a silent rebuke to the dreadful intemperance which exists in Dublin.

The Wesleyan Methodist Sheffield and Rotherham Council has had a census taken of the shops, etc., open on Sundays between the hours of nine and eleven in the morning and seven and nine in the evening. The total is 3057. They include 532 sweet-shops, 204 for the sale of provisions, 216 tobacco shops, and 1518 where intoxicating liquors are sold.

At the annual meeting in connection with the Liverpool Women's Union and Shelter, much excellent work was reported. During the year ending December 31, 1892, fifty women had found a refuge in the Shelter from their besetting sin. The whole of these had given way to intemperance, and seemed utterly unable to recover themselves, unless shielded for a time.

The Bishop of Carlisle, while agreeing with much of the plan of the Bishop of Chester, says there is one part of it that he has no faith in, and would at all times lift up his voice against it—that which proposes to make public-houses so respectable that husband and wife could go there together. Anything that made the public-house so respectable was likely to be a source of untold misery to the homes of our working classes.

The Central News says: "The new Licensing Bill will go considerably beyond any previous attempt to give legislative effect to temperance opinions. It may be pointed out that this is the first Queen's Speech which has recognised the aspirations of those who desire 'Direct Local Control' over 'The Liquor Traffic,' and it is also the first in which these phrases have ever appeared. Although the Government Bill will not apply all the checks desired by the temperance party, it will make a distinct advance in that direction."

Dr. Stephenson is appealing to Wesleyan Methodists to use every possible influence with the members of Parliament to induce them during the coming session to pass a satisfactory licensing bill. The minimum, he thinks, should include the Local Veto, an elected licensing authority, Sunday closing where a locality desires, closing of public-houses on election days, three years allowed before a licence is withdrawn, no municipal management of public-houses. But we agree with The Methodist Times that Sunday closing should be national, as in Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, not dependent upon the desire of each locality.

The Book World.

OUR BIBLE CLASS HERALD is the monthly periodical of the young men's Bible-class at Abbey-road Chapel, N.W. (Pastor H. E. Stone). The bound volume for 1892 contains a very complete record of the work carried on by the class. "Holiday Pages" are among the attractive features of the serial. (C. E. Roberts & Co., Chiswell-street, E.C.)

GOOD COMPANY: The first volume of the new series of this excellent monthly, edited by the late Rev. J. Jackson Wray, contains last year's monthly parts. The pages are entertaining and instructive, some of the best features being "Home-Spun Homilies," "Lectures in Little," and "Sermons for the Crowd." (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER. By Amelia A. Barr. 5s. Sampson Low & Co. A clever domestic romance, mingled with not a little serious tragedy, unfolding some phases of experience and character by no means uncommon in real life. The story carries with it the stamp of reality, and it cannot fail to profit, as well as interest, the reader.

LAY DOWN YOUR ARMS: The Autobiography of Martha von Tilling. By Bertha von Sutter; translated from the German. 7s. 6d. Longmans, Green, & Co. Surely a life tale was never penned to better purpose, or with a nobler object in view, than this record of Continental experience dearly bought. The gifted authoress has narrated what purports to be her own career as the daughter of an Austrian officer, and the wife successively of two officers, both of whom were snatched from her by the red and ruthless hand of war. Such a powerful and convincing impeachment of the war spirit and the European military systems, has never before been written we should imagine, and we heartily invite all the friends of peace and arbitration to strengthen their convictions and aspirations by a perusal of the book.

CLEWS TO HOLY WRIT; or, The Chronological Scripture Cycle. By Mary Louisa Georgina Petrie, B.A. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This volume develops a scheme of studying the entire Bible, in its historical order, during a period of three years. The author is president of the College by Post, which has many members, at home and abroad, all desirous of knowing more of the contents of Holy Scripture and the heights and depths of its teaching. The College has followed several lines of study, and the present course, the Chronological Scripture Cycle, has many useful features to commend it. Here are studies for nine terms, beginning with the days of the Patriarchs and ending with the days of St. Paul. The expository sections are helpful and the summaries lucid, while the "clews," whether taking the form of keywords, notes of time, or groupings of contemporaneous events, are such as earnest students will not be slow to appreciate. The book has been written for "plain" readers, and we trust it will have many of them.

GEORGE GILFILLAN: Letters and Journals, with Memoir by Robert A. Watson, M.A., D.D., and Elizabeth S. Watson. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) We have only one fault to find with this book; it is too late in appearing. Fourteen years have passed since Mr. Gilfillan died; and although in and around Dundee his memory is fresh, and all over Scotland, and the north of England even, his name is with many a household word, a new generation has grown up that never was under the influence of the pulpit in School Wynd, and can never be under the spell that held their fathers, of the eager spirit that welcomed all promise of genius to Paradise Road Manse. It is possible, therefore, that this "Life" will not meet with the response it would have secured if it had appeared shortly after Mr. Gilfillan's death. That will be a pity, for it is excellently well done. Dr. and Mrs. Watson's excellent and appreciative memoir is supplemented by tributes by Dr. Hutchinson Stirling, Mr. John Leng, Dr. Parker, and Mr. Hall Caine; while something of the flavour of Gilfillan himself may be extracted from the letters and journal which make up a full half of this attractive book.

THE GOAL OF THE HUMAN RACE; or, The Development of Civilisation: Its Origin and Issue. By Rev. Dr. R. F. Grau. (3s. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) This important work has been translated from the original German by Revs. J. G. Deimler and W. St. Clair Tisdall, M.A. It is commended to the English public, in a prefatory note, by Sir Monier Monier-Williams. Eminently readable throughout, these pages describe the Hamitic, Japhetic, and Semitic civilisations, first separately, and then as affecting one another at different times. Generally speaking, history exhibits the seed of Ham pursuing religious abominations, and with a despotic form of government. The descendants of the other sons of Noah, inheriting peculiar blessings, have yet been influenced by Hamitic principles and practices, and have uniformly suffered consequences such as Noah's curse foretold. Dr. Grau's studies are supported by Scripture quotation; and not only from the sure word of prophecy, but also from the lessons of the past, he forecasts the goal of the human race. He maintains that, as in the individual communion with Christ is the secret of true spiritual life, so in a people or nation Christianity is essential to real development and permanence. Special attention is devoted to the needs of India, and the duties of Great Britain to evangelise its millions of inhabitants. Accordingly, the book should prove specially stimulating to missionaries; and we are glad to learn that it has been offered to missionary societies in quantities of fifty at half price. Such orders should be sent to Rev. James Johnston, 7, Adam-street, Strand, Secretary of the Christian Literature Society for India, from whom further particulars regarding this arrangement may be obtained.

THE CAMBRIDGE COMPANION TO THE BIBLE is a work in course of preparation by the Cambridge University Press. Many scholars have been engaged upon the production of the helps, which will be bound up with various editions of the Bible.

Some readable and useful pamphlets by T. T. Wade are:—GOD'S REMEDY FOR POVERTY AND DEBT; EARLY SHOPPING AND EARLY CLOSING, FROM A SCRIPTURAL POINT OF VIEW; and HEAVENLY BLANK CHEQUES AND THE BANK OF FAITH. The titles have a decidedly commercial ring about them, but the books are full of valuable counsel on spiritual things. (1d. each. Bristol: S. A. Perren, 3, North-street.)

To the list given last week, of booklets setting forth in poetic form the contents and purpose of God's Word, we are glad to add one entitled THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE, published, at 3d. per dozen, by Andrew Stevenson, 8, North Bank-street, Edinburgh. It is a composition which has been frequently reprinted during a generation past; and, as a separate book is named in each line, the rhyme materially assists in the acquisition of the exact order of the books.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

I ONCE heard an aged woman say to a little child, "If you look at the whole length of your seam, you will never get it sewn; look only at the little bit between your thumb and finger." There was a philosophy of life in those humble words.

If a pastor desires to get inspiration, to live in an atmosphere of sunny hopefulness, to be cheered by generous appreciation, to be assured that he is not labouring in vain, let him strengthen by every means in his power the relationships that bind him to the young.—Benjamin Clarke.

There is a phrase which deceives and catches many a lad. It is "seeing the world." When you think of this, think of the noble world, not the ignoble; of the intellectual, not the beastly life; of the high and elevating roads, not the degrading. This is what the phrase truly means.—President Eliot.

The boy who does not like to hear bad words or bad stories will soon cease to hear them, for the boys who speak such things will stop when they see he does not laugh. But the boy who likes to hear them will hear plenty, and every day he will become more wicked.—J. Reid Howatt.

Without doubt, the young people of a pastor's charge are the most important, the most promising, and far and away the most interesting part of his flock. If he wants to have their tender warm love, their contagious enthusiasm, their joyous and ready service, let him cultivate the young people.—Benjamin Clarke.

Respect child nature. Be reverent in handling it. Remember that far more important than emotional outbursts, than cries, and sobs, and tears, is the steady resolve to do the thing that is right, the thing that Christ bids: to be truthful and obedient, and unselfish, and pure and noble.—Rev. Gordon Calthrop.

A family without a mother is like a parlour without a fire in winter. The education of boys who are not "mothered," however orderly and well disciplined, must in many respects be one-sided, verging upon the Spartan system, and more apt to form clever citizens and soldiers than good husbands and masters of families.

This is to me the terrible part of the problem. The children who have never known what sobriety or purity is, who are being trained to be drunkards by the authority of a father's or a mother's example. Does not this summon us to put forth all our strength for the salvation of our city and our land?—Dr. James Stalker.

Would it not be worth while, says James Dobson, to try the experiment in churches where ministers can talk to children, to reverse the present order of things and let the main service in the morning be for the children, and sandwich in a five minutes' address to their seniors, the less hopeful because less impressionable hearers?

The census indicates that in central London the more respectable of the poor are leaving, so poverty there is being intensified. This points to greater support being required by existing ragged schools within the inner radius, and a need for their extension towards the suburbs, whither the respectable poor have gone.—In His Name.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The first baptism is reported from Tank, in North-west India.

The Bishop of Bangor is confined to his room suffering from a severe attack of influenza.

The consecration of Rev. W. W. Perrin, vicar of St. Luke's, Southampton, as Bishop of British Columbia, is fixed for March 25.

At Bangor, last Saturday, the memorial stones of a railway temperance mission hall were placed by the Bishop of Bangor and Lady Penrhyn.

Rev. W. T. McCormick, in his annual report, gives a most cheering account of the progress of the work at St. Matthew's, West Brighton.

Archdeacon Wolfe sends home news of a determined effort to crush out Christian missions in the north-west districts of the Fuh Kien province.

Bishop G. H. Wilkinson, late of Truro, was unanimously chosen on Thursday to succeed the late Bishop Charles Wordsworth in the see of St. Andrews.

Canon Bullock, Vicar of Holy Trinity Church, Leeds, has gone to Canada in order to conduct a series of mission services at Toronto, Quebec, and Sherbrooke.

Rev. W. H. Wright, M.A., of Llandinabo, an earnest evangelical and able preacher, has been appointed to succeed Dr. John Bennett, at St. George's, Worthing.

Rev. W. R. Pym, M.A., vicar of St. Andrew's, Sharrow, announced on Sunday his acceptance of the Vicarage of Rotherham, which was offered him a few days ago by the Archbishop of York.

Rev. W. H. Binney, rector of Witton, Cheshire, who is about to resign the living in order to take up work in Canada, has intimated his intention of contributing £1000 to the funds of the new boys' school for the parish of Witton.

A meeting will be held in the Mansion House, by permission of the Lord Mayor, to-morrow, at 3 p.m., to call public attention to the urgent spiritual wants of the Metropolis, when statements will be made by the Bishops of London, Rochester, and St. Albans.

Distinct results of the mission of Messrs. Stock and Stewart to Australia continue to accumulate. Mr. H. C. Tugwell, the son of an old C.M.S. missionary, Mrs. Saunders, and her two daughters have already been accepted for service, the latter at their own charges. Other offers are before the committee.

Says the London correspondent of The Scottish Leader:—With reference to the controversy on the question of evening communion, I understand that the Bishop of London does not agree with the Archbishop of York. The Bishop has not the slightest objection to the clergy in his diocese, who find evening celebrations appreciated, continuing them.

The Bishop of Nyassaland, with six companion missionaries, left on Friday for their field of labour. The farewell service in connection with their departure was held on the preceding night at St. Matthew's Church, Westminster. There was a large congregation, and the Bishop preached from the words, "We wait for thy loving kindness, O God, in the midst of thy temple."

The Church Parochial Mission Society have arranged for a series of ten lectures, dealing with Christian evidences, and specially intended for the Clergy, to be delivered in St. Martin's Church, Charing Cross, by Rev. A. J. Harrison, B.D., Evidential Missioner of the Church Parochial Mission, Society, at 3.30 p.m., on the Tuesdays and Thursdays in Lent commencing Tuesday, Feb. 21.

In the course of a lecture on "Savonarola," at York, the Dean of Worcester (Dr. Forrest), referring to brotherhoods and sisterhoods, said that when it was advocated that they should leave the world and take upon themselves irrevocable vows, such a course had really neither the sanction of Scripture nor the endorsement of common-sense. It was the act of a coward who fled from the battle, instead of the man who bravely went forward to bear the brunt.

On Sunday afternoon there was a service at Christ Church, Salford, for men only in connection with the Manchester Mission. There was a large congregation, over 1500 being present. Rev. T. J. Madden preached on "Seeing Life," taking as the basis of his discourse the parable of the prodigal son. Mr. Madden has given a course of sermons to business men each day in St. Peter's, Moseley-street, from one to two o'clock on "Some Difficulties—Moral and Scientific—to Belief."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. W. Cander has conducted an eight days' mission at Nether and Over Compton.

The membership at Park Church, Halifax, is 441, and there is an increase of scholars.

Rev. J. Morley Wright and Miss M. C. Gorham have conducted a mission at Cow-end, Woodburn.

Tabernacle Church, Hanley, has 390 church members, and 819 scholars and teachers in the Sunday-school.

East Cliff Church, Bournemouth, reports 213 members, and an income of £664. In the Sunday-school are 500 scholars.

Rev. W. M. Baker, having completed two years' ministry at Oxford-street, Bilston, has accepted the permanent pastorate.

At Preston the membership of Cannon-street Church has increased to 355, the largest number recorded in the history of the church.

Potterspury Church (Rev. J. S. White) testifies to the success of the weekly offering system in substitution for subscriptions and pew-rents.

We regret to hear that Rev. Henry Andrews, of Hitchin, who has been laid aside from his pulpit labours for some time, still remains seriously ill.

Mr. H. E. Fairbairn has accepted the unanimous call to the pastorate of Collier's Rents Congregational Church, Gurney-street, New Kent-road, S.E.

Rev. John Nunn, who after forty-two years' service has resigned the pastorate at Haverstock Chapel, N.W., received last week a regretful and loving farewell.

Sussex Association propose raising £40,000, to be expended in erecting new mission-halls and Sunday-schools and enlarging the present buildings in the villages.

Seaford Church reports 124 members and seventeen non-member communicants. A week of meetings for the deepening of spiritual life is to be held in March.

Russell Town Church reports 460 members on the church roll, exactly 300 more than when the present pastorate began; fifty-seven were received during the past year.

Rev. R. Thomas, Glandwr, Swansea, has accepted the pastorate of the Tabernacle Church, Liverpool, where the late Rev. John Thomas, D.D., was minister for forty years.

On Tuesday afternoon, Rev. Alfred Rowland, of Crouch-end Chapel, delivered the second of a course of four lectures on "The Sayings of Jesus," in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street.

Rev. W. Spurgeon, whose ministry at Wood-street Chapel, Cardiff, began on January 1, has received seventy-nine into church fellowship, forty-seven being the result of a mission conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz.

Rev. G. S. Barrett, preaching at Princes-street Church, Norwich, is reported as saying that to touch the Deity of Christ was to touch the very heart of the Gospel; for without the Incarnation there is no Gospel. For this reason, co-operation in Christian work with those who denied Christ's deity was simply impossible. How could one pray with a man with brotherly affection when one's first word of prayer sounded like blasphemy in his ears—when one prayed to Christ as God?

BAPTIST.

A P.S.A. has been opened hopefully in Eastwoodvale, Hanley.

Rev. E. Haggis, Gosport, has accepted the pastorate of Park-road Church, Ryde.

At John-street, W.C., the work is reported as in a flourishing and hopeful condition.

Rev. A. H. Collins, of Selly Park Church, Birmingham, is leaving for Auckland, N.Z.

Rev. W. Hunter has resigned the pastorate of Grosvenor-street Church, Manchester.

Mr. J. C. Hewson has resigned the pastorate of the church at Gurney-road, Stratford, E.

The church at Woodborough-road, Nottingham, has resolved to erect a new chapel.

Mr. Robert Silvey, of Regent's Park College, has accepted the pastorate at Swaffham, Norfolk.

Rev. T. Bailey, one of the Orissa missionaries, has just arrived in this country for a season of rest.

Rev. W. Smith, after twelve years' labour at Henrietta-street, Brunswick-square, has intimated his resignation.

Mr. W. E. S. Rowland, B.A., of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Bluntisham, Hunts.

Rev. J. W. Comfort has resigned the pastorate of Bromsgrove Church, after eleven years' ministry, on account of an affection of the throat.

Rev. James A. Andrews, having accepted the invitation of the Mursley Group of churches, has resigned the pastorate of the churches at Epworth and Butterwick, which he has held over five years.

Rev. J. E. Perrin, pastor of Esher Chapel, has announced his intention of resigning in consequence of impaired health. Mr. Perrin first became connected with Esher Church in 1866, and it was largely owing to his exertions that the present building was erected.

The Turret Green Chapel, Ipswich, was formed in 1842, and during its history of fifty years has been served by five pastors. Mr. Blomfield (who at present ministers) entered office in 1886. The statistics for the year show an increase of twenty-two and decrease of seventeen, the present membership being 296.

On the anniversary of the death of Mr. Spurgeon, a memorial service was held in the Baptist Chapel, King-street, Oldham, Rev. W. F. Edgerton, pastor, presiding. An address was delivered by Rev. J. Fairhurst, vicar of St. Andrew's, pointing out the lessons afforded by the life of C. H. Spurgeon, and strongly exhorting all present to contend for the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

The Bacup Church, which from a variety of causes had somewhat declined, is renewing its youth; a gracious revival has taken place. During the past seven months over twenty persons have professed conversion, and four of these received baptism last Saturday evening. There is a spirit of deeper consecration manifested among the workers. The church is contemplating building a new chapel; the old one is worn out, and is unsuited to aggressive work. As the people are almost all of the working class, outside help will be welcome.

The fifteenth annual gathering of Highgate-road Chapel was held on Feb. 8. The present number of members was reported as 689; of these sixty had been added upon a first profession of faith during the past year, and forty-one by transfer from other churches. A summary of the receipts for the year showed that £321 had been contributed for general expenses, £308 for Sunday-school and home missions, etc.; £288 for new mission hall, and £887 for foreign missions. Stimulating addresses were given by various friends, and earnest hopes were expressed for the return of the pastor (Mr. James Stephens) to his people in restored health and strength.

At the annual meeting of the Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road, sixteen reports, representing the organisations of the church, were given, and showed hard, honest, Christian work carried on by the members. Mr. Pensam, church secretary, spoke of the increasing power and acceptance of the pastor's ministry. The church roll numbered 640 members. Reports were given of Sunday-schools, mission auxiliary, mission hall services, visitation to 1,000 families every week, the sick and distressed relieved, Bible classes, mother's meetings, temperance organisations. Rev. W. Williams (pastor) spoke of the Lord's goodness, and said that the reports throughout were most encouraging, showing that a great work was being done at Upton Chapel.

METHODIST.

Mr. J. Harkness has conducted a successful mission at Dunstable.

Mr. A. Buddon is now holding a two months' mission in Hexham district.

Rev. Owen Watkins has been conducting a series of successful missionary services in Plymouth.

An interesting Soldiers and Sailors' Convention has just been held in Wesley's Chapel, City-road.

Mr. Councillor Crowdson, of Louth, has conducted a fortnight's evangelistic services at Fulstow, with gratifying results.

Rev. George W. Clutterbuck, late of Bombay, and now of Oakham, has accepted an invitation to Caledonian-road Chapel.

Rev. Frederick Wandby, who lately resigned the Primitive Methodist ministry at Sunderland, has, it is understood, accepted the pastorate of a small Presbyterian church in East London.

The friends at the Grove Chapel, York, have begun Saturday evenings for the people in their schoolroom. The beginning has been very cheering, and affords every promise of growing success.

Wesleyans in Ancoats are preparing for a great forward movement. They are surrounded by a dense population, three-quarters of which go nowhere on the Sabbath. The locality swarms with public-houses and homes of wretchedness and sin.

The evangelistic movement in the Shebbear Circuit continues to extend. Many have professed conversion at Thornhillhead, at Sutcombe, and at Milton. And in seven other places the interest is prevailing, many souls being saved, and still greater things being expected.

The P.S.A. movement commenced some time ago at the Wesley-place Chapel, Dudley-hill, Bradford, continues to have the greatest success. Every Sunday the commodious building is packed. A Monday class has also been commenced for men, to be conducted on P.S.A. lines.

Last week the United Methodist Missionary Committee met in Darlington. Special proposals for inaugurating a great forward movement in Eastern Africa were considered. It is felt by many that the denomination ought to take full advantage of its present openings, and go along the Tana river.

A local preacher of Kibworth, Leicestershire, who has just celebrated his jubilee, estimates that he has travelled, chiefly on foot, 25,000 miles, having many times walked twenty-six miles and taken three services on a Sunday. Only once has he disappointed a congregation, and then because a bridge had been carried away by a storm.

A remarkable example of anonymous generosity to the needs of the mission fund has been shown by one who is spoken of as "a lowly but devoted son of the Connexion." For some time the Connexion has had a block of buildings, purchased about three years ago, suitable for a medical mission at Tang San, China, but completely at a standstill for want of the necessary funds to provide it with instruments, medicines, and furniture. Rev. Dr. Townsend pathetically referred to this at a missionary meeting, and the next day one of his audience, who insisted on anonymity, told him he had been deeply moved by the statement, and had resolved to give £300 by next conference if the work could be commenced at once.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At Bootle the membership is returned at 624, and the Sun day-school numbers 800.

Dr. Pentecost is drawing large congregations to the church in Upper George-street, Marylebone.

Dr. Thain Davidson and his people feel strongly the need for enlargement at St. Andrew's, Ealing.

The annual meeting at Aldershot proved encouraging, and indications appeared of progress and blessing.

The students of Trevecca College have arranged to hold a fortnight's mission in and around Talgarth shortly. Meetings of a similar kind were held last year, with excellent results.

The work at Cheltenham has been much prospered in many ways, and the pastor (Rev. J. More) speaks of the past year as one of the brightest and best of his twenty-one years in Cheltenham.

The report presented at the annual meeting of the St. John's Wood congregation (Dr. Monro Gibson's) showed a membership of 876 in the parent church and 300 connected with the Kilburn Mission.

It is stated that Rev. J. W. Rodger, of Bournemouth, has been recommended by his medical adviser to take a complete rest on account of an affection of the throat, from which he is suffering, and which is aggravated by public speaking.

At Gloucester the annual meeting has just been held. The reports were of an encouraging kind, and showed that the congregation is steadily increasing. Rev. John More, of Cheltenham, was present and gave a cheering and stimulating address.

At the annual meeting of the Campbell Church, Birmingham, all the reports were of a satisfactory nature, and prove the church to be in a sound and healthy condition. The Sunday-school report was particularly pleasing, the number of scholars on the roll having increased. Mr. E. Williams the evangelist of the church, is doing good work.

The membership at West Hartlepool now stands at 292, the highest in the history of the congregation; the two Sunday-schools contain 472 scholars, and there are forty-eight teachers. The Young Men's Society and the Band of Hope continue in vigorous life. A branch of the Women's Missionary Association has been formed during the year.

At the annual meeting of the Crewe Presbyterian Church the Mayor (Dr. Hodgson) made a very happy speech, saying he had believed that Presbyterianism began with John Calvin, but he had since found out that Timothy was Presbyterian. Rev. R. W. Roberts stated that the reports were all of the most satisfactory character, showing as they did what was done in the Sunday-school, day-school, Young People's Guild, Band of Hope, and Women's Missionary Society.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Commissioner Railton has enrolled forty new soldiers in Barmen.

The Marechale reports glorious changes in the west and south of France.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Booth rejoice over glorious victories in Canada.

Enthusiastic meetings have been held in Sweden, Norway, and Denmark.

In Halifax, Bradford, and Wakefield, remarkable meetings have been held by the General.

Colonel McKie finds among the Belgian Catholic populations a deep longing after God, with manifestations of saving power.

The Birmingham corps held the other day a "No-drink demonstration" in their citadel. Over 200 converted drunkards were present.

Commander Ballington Booth is paying England a short visit, and a party of forty officers are being accepted and despatched to the United States in connection therewith.

Captain George Reynolds, of East Dulwich, who is doing a month in prison, has been appointed as captain to Kingswood, Ely, Ilford, Mitcham, and Dulwich. His offence consisted of praying before a public-house after being requested to move.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Dr. Elias Jessup of Newberg, Oregon, was welcomed at the last meeting for suffering, and will probably visit many places in England and Ireland as soon as possible. He comes in the interest of Pacific College, Newberg, and is also a minister of the Gospel.

J. J. Neave and John Bellows are still at work in Russia in the interests of the Stundists, and have been well received and courteously treated by the Russian officials. "Every door rightly opens and at the right time. There is only one iron gate left. I believe the Lord will open it, and will Christ Jesus have all the praise."

Evangelistic efforts sustained in many parts of the country. Successful series of meetings have been held at Bletchingley, in Surrey, and Witney, in Oxon, and at Colchester and elsewhere. A prominent feature in this work is the interest attaching to Bible Readings held in the afternoons, and generally well attended and helpful. The re-opening of old meetings and starting new ones is aimed at and measurably realised.

Sorrowful news comes from Mount Lebanon. The work carried on at Baabdat has been given up, under conditions thus described:—"The Baabdat people, who professed to be Protestants, have succumbed to the repeated inducements held out to them by the Pope—the offer of a boarding-school and large sums of money—and have joined the Latins. In review of the last ten months' work at Baabdat, whilst deeply regretting that the door is now closed to a great extent for friends there, the conference cannot but feel that the good seed of the kingdom has been sown with unsparing hand, and God's promise still remains, 'My Word shall not return unto Me void.'" A few, it is hoped will remain open to teaching and good influence.

Fallen Asleep, see page 30.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of Mr. J. G. Woolley, American temperance advocate.

 Will those who subscribe for The Christian, but who have not yet remitted for 1893, please give immediate attention to the matter (the subscription being due in advance), in order to secure the due despatch of future copies. Full particulars will be found in the special announcement above.

We are informed that Rev. Hubert Brooke, of Reading, Rev. Charles Inwood, of Dublin, and Rev. G. C. Macgregor, of Aberdeen, propose leaving Liverpool on April 5 for New York, en route to Canada, for the purpose of holding conventions in some of the cities of the Dominion for the deepening of spiritual life.

Through the visit of Mr. Eugene Stock, Church Missionary Associations have been formed in New South Wales and Victoria, authorised to select, train, and send out their own missionaries, and to expend their funds upon their maintenance. Plans have been laid for a similar Association in New Zealand. Twelve candidates have been accepted, three of whom are already in the field, and other promising men are offering their services. A training home for candidates has been provided at Sydney by the spontaneous offer of a Christian lady, who has offered her house and her own services for that purpose. There is no missionary church but will rejoice and give thanks at such satisfactory intelligence. It has a significance far beyond the organisation in which it happens.

We recently met Mr. John Currie, of America, who after spending some twenty years evangelising abroad, has returned to Glasgow, his native place, for the purpose of looking up the companions of his young days. All these had belonged to sporting circles. Many of course had passed away during his absence, but among such as remained, and the new generation he found succeeding them, a real work for God has been accomplished. Many of his old companions and friends have been converted, among whom were two prize-fighters. One outcome of this has been the initiation by the men themselves of Gospel effort among their fellow-operatives in the works and factories where they are employed.

We would earnestly suggest to all large employers of labour, the advisability of facilitating such efforts to improve the moral and spiritual condition of their men, by providing suitable accommodation for gatherings of social and religious character, leaving the men free to conduct them in the way best suited to the needs of their fellows. An experiment of this kind has been tried in Glasgow, where a "Gutta-percha Gospel Mission" has been inaugurated in connection with a Gutta-percha factory. We shall be glad to give further particulars to any friends who may interest themselves in such an effort.

There is some small comfort in knowing that the drink bill for 1892 is a trifle less than that for 1891; but it still makes one's heart sad to reflect that we spent £140,886,262 on an indulgence which, even were much of the good that is claimed for it granted, creates the worst of all our evils. No drink, no drunkenness: even The Times has to admit in the face of this bill that "drunkenness is perhaps the greatest social evil of our age and country." Some particularly painful facts come to light when the total sum is analysed and compared with our population. As Dr. Dawson Burns says:—"Considering that throughout 1892 complaints of depression in trade were constant, the slightness of the decline in the drink expenditure of the nation is a striking evidence of the power of alcoholic indulgence in the face of diminished private resources." More money in England means more indulgence and more sin; even naked poverty will somehow have the drink.

If we were asked by what means we should like to see the sin and curse removed, we should reply: First, by means of the Church of Christ; by no member of hers using intoxicating drink as a beverage; by no member selling it for gain; by no Church using it at the Lord's table. Second, by means of the people themselves deciding that it shall not be sold as a beverage. So long as there is an open market, so long will there be an open, notorious, and ruinous sin.

An important discussion keeps breaking out among Congregationalists as to the best way of educating their students for the ministry, some advocating large colleges and the non-residence of the men, others smaller colleges and the residence of the students, much as a family. Experiments in the way of amalgamating some of the colleges which were near together have been made, with results which appear somewhat startling—e.g., there are fewer students and less subscriptions, and in one case the staff of professors remains almost the same for the large colleges as for the small.

It is also a serious view of the case, that the smaller colleges appear to have done a far larger amount of evangelistic work among the poor in towns, and especially in villages and hamlets, than the larger colleges. This touches a vital point. For in these humble congregations great good has been done, and the students have got a training by preaching for preaching, which is far before anything that mere intellectual discipline can impart. Some of our most persuasive ambassadors for Christ have had their true college in the meeting-room or in the village chapel, and any arrangement which makes it less likely that students will get the advantage of these places cannot be conducive to the diffusion of the Gospel. Roman Catholics seem to go upon the plan of having as many colleges for students as ever they can support, for every college is an influence for Romanism in the neighbourhood where it stands.

There is a method of employing sacerdotal words in an evangelical sense, which is greatly in vogue among Evangelical Christians, and which seems to us to be full of danger to the truth. We are, of course, familiar with the way in which Christianity adopted certain terms at the beginning, from the language of heathenism, and imported into them its own peculiar meaning. The same thing is of necessity done in every new language which is made the vehicle of Christian truth. The word "God" is made a new word when "the fulness of the Godhead bodily" is transferred to it, and it remains no longer a symbol for abstract and negative terms. So also with the word "love," which is purified and transfigured when it represents the Christian idea of love.

But this is a different thing from adopting the terms of a debased Christianity, and trying to make them bear a better and evangelical meaning. Not to speak of the term "sacrament," on which a correspondence is going on in our columns, we may mention the term "priest." It has its evangelical Bible sense, as applied to all Christians, but by no possibility can it be Scripturally employed in a limited and exclusive sense to any of the ministers of Christ.

Then again "penance" is a term in use among a large section of professing Christians, but surely neither in a limited nor in an unlimited sense can we employ this evangelically. The very breath of the word is anti-Christian. It is not an equivalent for repentance or sorrow or amendment. It suggests salvation by misery, which is the very opposite of the method of the Gospel. On the whole, it is best to avoid terms that of themselves and by their associations and history at once suggest anything but evangelical ideas, and keep to terms that cannot lead astray. If we can find no fuller, no more expressive terms than those which are used in the New Testament, it seems needless trouble to go further, besides which, to do so is almost sure to mislead the multitude, which does not stay to distinguish between the common and the special use of words.

A fortnight ago we said—

> We do not think it is desirable at the present moment to leave our testimony against the abuse of the two Christian ordinances, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, and to enter upon a discussion as to their disuse, though it is possible we may come to this.

We were taken to mean that we thought it might come to giving up the observance of the two Christian ordinances, whereas we meant that it might come to discussing the subject. We were never farther from looking in the direction of giving up these divinely-ordained symbols of saving truths than now.

Our insertion of the letter of "Beta" must not be considered as yielding this position. We only regret that such a position can be taken by good men in the face of such commanding words as—"This do in remembrance of Me." "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till He come."

For the second time our friendly correspondent, Dr. Harford Battersby, asks, Can we not agree to differ? With courtesy of heart, as well as of expression, towards himself and the brethren to whom he refers, and whom we esteem very highly in love for their work's sake, we reply that we can love each other and be one in heart, while we differ, but how far can we, with loyalty to God, "agree to differ"? We must draw the line somewhere. When the Confederate Ambassadors proposed to President Lincoln that they should agree to differ on the "domestic institution" of slavery, and draw a line between the United and the Confederate States, at the points which the respective armies then occupied, President Lincoln answered: "Gentlemen, this Government must have all." God said to Moses, "See that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the mount." And to Ezekiel, "Shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities, and let them measure the pattern . . . THAT THEY MAY KEEP THE WHOLE FORM THEREOF, AND ALL THE ORDINANCES THEREOF, AND DO THEM." God made no allowance for difference as to what He had commanded.

Papal Paganism is coming in upon us like a plague, and the children of Evangelical men are swelling the numbers in the Ritualistic half-way house to Rome. Aaron did not stay the plague after Korah and his company had been swallowed up, by agreeing to differ. Phinehas did not agree to differ with Zimri and Cozbi; his uncompromising action was accounted to him for righteousness for evermore.

Steel is iron from which all the foreign particles have been hammered out and all the true metal has been compressed together. All the Romish and Babylonish elements must be hammered out of Evangelical Protestantism in order to produce a spear sufficiently highly wrought to slay the Zimri and Cozbi of the present crisis.

In his "Apocalyptic Scenes" article on February 9, Sir S. A. Blackwood, in agreement with ancient and modern expositors of repute, quoted Dan. xii. 4, as showing that at the time of the end many will search the prophecy of the book—"running to and fro" in its pages. A correspondent challenges this interpretation, and maintains that the verse refers to "the increase of locomotion and the advance of science as witnessed in our day." It is hardly needful to point out that mere human activity, whether in knowledge or travel, cannot possibly unfold or make plain predictions regarding the Kingdom of God, as the "running to and fro" is said to do. The view taken by Sir Arthur Blackwood is that of the best lexicographers, who have set out significations not merely empirically, but also in the light of the analogy of languages. Such passages as Amos viii. 12 ("run to and fro to seek") and Jer. v. 1 ("run to and fro and see") illustrate locomotion for the express purposes of survey and inspection. It is but a step, then, to the metaphorical and intensive use of the Hebrew shût in the sense of "examine thoroughly," "read through earnestly," "peruse," as given in lexicons and recent translations of the Old Testament.

Rome invites Divine vengeance by her multiplied blasphemous assumptions. From the last issue of L'Eglise Libre we learn that in a cantata entitled, "Le Noël des Ouvriers," dedicated to Leo XIII., in commemoration of the French working-men's pilgrimage to Rome last autumn, the Pope has been addressed and referred to as "New Christ" and "New Saviour!" (Nouveau Christ...Nouveau Sauveur). We agree with our contemporary's remark:—

This iniquity, this blasphemy, does not surprise us. Rome has long denied the old Saviour, the Christ of the Gospels, and ours, and has put in his place the idol of the Vatican.

When "New Christ" hides "Very Christ," whom do we see but "Anti-Christ"?

The common sense of governors and magistrates has, on some occasions, been of eminent service to the truth. The man who has no prejudices against the truth, but has a way of looking at things exactly as they are, can generally find a good reason for not persecuting good men. Count Ignatieff, the Governor-General of the South-Western Provinces of Russia, seems to have discerned the value of the Stundists. At any rate, he has suggested to the priests who appealed for the help of the secular arm, that "the best way of eradicating heresy was to work against drunkenness and vice in the villages, and to reform the services of the Orthodox Church." Let that be done, and the spirit of Stundism would be dominant in the Church itself.

In the New York Independent, of Feb. 2, Rev. Henry D. Porter, of P'ang Chuang, Shantung, had a useful description of "The Battle of the Books" in China. The literature of the Empire, hoary and powerful though it is, is now confronted by an ever-increasing multitude of books, progressive and spiritual, issued from the presses of the various Bible, Tract, and Missionary Societies. Not only is there a considerable free distribution of papers and books, but, such is the growing interest of the people, there are important and continuous sales. The great centres of this dissemination are Hankow, Shanghai, and Peking. The fierce opposition recently led by Chow Han eventuated in an Imperial edict of toleration for Western influence and religion, and a new era has begun. "It is," writes Mr. Porter, "the era of the exchange of darkness for light, of ignorance for intelligence, of pitiful hesitation for the clear outlook which welcomes every form of helpfulness, whose prophecy is progress and hope." We join in the further remark: "Let the battle go on. It is the battle of truth, the battle of knowledge, the battle of Christian experience, the battle of religious awakening."

The Central Soudan Mission.

Messrs. E. White and T. Holt, pioneer missionaries, sailed on Saturday week per the "Angola," for Akassa, West Africa, en route (via the River Binue) for Central Soudan.

This mission, which is unsectarian, has its headquarters and training home at Tripoli, Barbary, but owing to the Mohammedans closing the roads inland from Tripoli, these two young men have been sent out to work their way to the central regions, via the River Niger. Mr. White, who is a skilled mechanic, takes out with him a valuable quantity of machinery and tools, with which he hopes to reach the natives.

The region they are entering extends 2,000 miles from the Niger to the Nile, and there are sixty millions of inhabitants to whom the Gospel has not yet been preached. Messrs. Bywater, Tanqueray, and Phayre, Limited, 17 Water-street, Liverpool, are the agents for this mission.

SOLDIERS' HOME, SPITAL TONGUES, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Mr. A. Draper writes:—"A Gospel meeting is held almost every night. The gatherings for Bible-reading, prayer, and praise are well attended. Several very encouraging letters were recently received from soldiers, now serving abroad, who once met with us here, but are now engaged in active warfare against sin. We are sadly in need of Testaments and tracts, also other help."

The Book of the Kingdom.—4.

THE GOSPELS.

We have seen that the Kingdom is the commanding subject of the Old Testament; that from the revolt of Adam to the Flood the earth was without government, and therefore became corrupt and filled with violence; that civil government was committed to Noah; that after the rebellion at Babel God called Abraham and established law in Israel; that Moses and Joshua were rulers under God; that after the lawless interim of the Judges, his people rejected God as their King, and demanded a king to rule them, like all the nations; that the experiment of kingship in Israel ended in apostasy and captivity; that under Gentile rule the royal prerogative degenerated from gold to silver, brass, iron, because the kings feared not God nor regarded man. Thus, after four thousand years, Satanic lawlessness and human misrule having been exhaustively demonstrated, God fulfilled the prophecy of Malachi:

Behold I will send my messenger,
And he shall prepare my way before Me:
And the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple,
Even the Messenger of the Covenant, whom ye delight in.

In fulfilment of the second Psalm, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion," Jesus is born King of the Jews, and Rachel's children are murdered at Bethlehem that Herod may rid himself of the dreaded rival. John came, preaching, "Repent, for the Kingdom of the Heavens is at hand," for Daniel had taught the great Gentile monarch that "the Heavens do rule." Jesus, baptized, tempted, and having overcome, preaches, like his herald, "The Kingdom of the Heavens is at hand." Jesus lays down the principles of the Kingdom in the Sermon on the Mount; teaches his disciples to pray, "Thy Kingdom come," and to seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness.

He goes about all the cities and villages of Galilee, preaching the good tidings that the reign of God is at hand, and, in perfect accord with the character of the ideal King of the seventy-second Psalm, heals every sickness and every disease among the people. He opens his mouth in parables, and his exposition of the first, which is the basis of all the rest, is that the seed of the Sower is the Word of the Kingdom (Matt. xiii. 19), and all the rest, as recorded by Matthew, are parables of the Kingdom of the Heavens.

Jesus promises that some of his disciples shall not taste of death until they see the Kingdom of God come with power, and this is fulfilled in the Transfiguration, in which, from the Man Christ Jesus shines forth the glory of God manifested in flesh.

It may be said this is all from Matthew, who wrote specially of Christ as King. But Mark, who writes of Christ as God's Servant, opens in an equally royal way with "The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God." After John is cast into prison Jesus comes into Galilee of the Gentiles, preaching the good tidings of the reign of God; and with authority commanding even the unclean spirits, and they obey Him. He is manifestly Jehovah's elect Servant, but no less manifestly Jehovah's promised King.

Luke, whose view of Jesus is that of Son of Man, tells the same royal story. He went throughout every city and village preaching, and showing, specially to the poor, the glad tidings of the Kingdom of God, with authority forgiving sins, casting out demons, and healing all manner of sickness and disease. He sees in vision the effect of his approaching death—Satan as lightning falls from Heaven—and gives his seventy messengers power to tread on serpents and scorpions and over all the power of the enemy. The people dream the Kingdom is about immediately to appear, and He tells them the parable of the nobleman who went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and the return.

John writes of Jesus as Son of God. Who should be the King of men but the Word made flesh—in whom from the beginning was life, and the life was the light of men?

Nathanael recognises Him as Son of God and King of Israel; but he shall see yet greater things—the angels of Jacob's vision ascending and descending on the Son, not of Israel only, but of man.

To Nicodemus, a man of the Pharisees—representative, therefore, not only of the nation, but of the race—is declared the truth, not only that sons of Adam are incompetent as kings, but disqualified from being subjects of God's Kingdom. They must die out of what they are, and be spiritually reborn; for flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. Jesus' kingdom is not from hence; but He bears this patent of true royalty: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." "Behold your King!" There is no other King. "Behold the Man!" There is no other Man. This is God's Son and King, for this is God's Ideal Man—this is Jehovah's Fellow.

All the Gospels record his death, and all declare that He was crucified as King. They all record his resurrection, and during the forty days before He returned to Heaven He spake to his disciples of the things concerning the Kingdom—the Reign—of God.

The tempter brought in lawlessness; for "sin is lawlessness." Jesus atoned for sin, and brought in everlasting righteousness.

The fourfold record of the Evangelists is the Glad Tidings of the Reign of God. M.

REV. J. McNEILL IN HADDINGTON.

Messrs. McNeill and Burke began a series of meetings in Haddington on Sabbath, Feb. 12. Mr. McNeill preached in the Free Church to a large congregation at the usual forenoon service, and in the evening he addressed a crowded meeting in the Corn Exchange, at which it was thought about 2000 people were present. In the absence of the evangelists in Glasgow, Monday was left open, but meetings were held on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, in the West United Presbyterian Church at three o'clock in the afternoon, and in the Corn Exchange in the evening.

This was the first occasion in which any attempt had been made to have a series of afternoon meetings in Haddington, but the experiment succeeded beyond expectation.

The evening meetings in the Corn Exchange grew night after night until the Friday evening, the whole series being the most largely attended of any such series of meetings ever held in Haddington.

The singing by Mr. Burke was most effective, and was greatly appreciated. Of Mr. McNeill it were superfluous to write. He has to be seen and heard to be understood. He invariably got into fine touch with his audience at the outset, and kept their attention riveted all through the meetings, prolonged, as they were, far beyond the ordinary time. His addresses were most powerful, rich in Gospel truth, and full of apt and telling illustration. A deep impression has been made, and already the fruit is being found. Rev. J. Matthew rightly interpreted the feelings of the people when at an early stage of the Friday evening meeting he expressed gratitude for the visit of the evangelists.

The local ministers who were in sympathy have greatly enjoyed the visit; the meetings have been attended by all classes, Episcopalian as well as Presbyterian. All would have been deeply gratified if Mr. McNeill and his coadjutor could only have prolonged their stay.

Bible Study for Christians.

No. II.

By Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, Birmingham.

No spiritual life is so rich that it needs not daily enrichment through reading and study of the Word of God. Martin Luther had a fresh and forceful life, but he often confessed that unless every day he read the Scriptures, meditated on Christ, repeated the Creed, and prayed the Psalms, his heart became dead and cold, full of dark and hard thoughts of God, and of dreary and tormenting doubts and fears. I would return, then, to the question which I attempted partially to answer in my last article, "How may busy people profitably study the Bible?" further remarking,

V.—Study it devotionally.

You may study it critically; you must study it devotionally. It is well to use maps of Bible lands, to find out the exact translation of Bible words, to cast the light of contemporary history upon Bible records, to know the special characteristics of the ages when Prophets, Priests, Kings, and Psalmists lived and wrote. But all this may be done, and we may fail to read profitably, because we fail to read devotionally. To adjust the telescope is one thing, to take an observation of a star is another. Do all your "helps" enable you to observe the stars of Scripture truth, and especially that orb of pre-eminent splendour, Christ, the bright and Morning Star? You must find Christ in the Scriptures. He Himself said He was there: "In the volume of the Book it is written of Me." Luther asks, "What Book, what Person?" Replying to his own question, "There is only one Book—Scripture; and only one Person—Jesus Christ." In the New Testament Christ is the visible Centre of Scripture. In the Old Testament He is really, though not so apparently, its Centre. The great nation of the Bible, Israel, is a type of Israel's Lord, and the lives and characters of many of her foremost men are typical representations more or less faithful of his life and character.

VI. Study both the Old and the New Testaments, comparing them together.

The Old Testament is the historical basis of the New. Christ came to give the first fulfilment and the second existence. He, the Incarnate Word, binds these two great parts of the Written Word closely together. In the Old Testament He appears as Type, in the New as Antitype. Therefore it has been well said that "the Old Testament is unfolded in the New, and that the New Testament is enfolded in the Old." Nor are we astonished to hear that there are in the New Testament 275 passages which are quotations from the Old. Now, it is a profitable thing to trace out the numerous links between the two books. Compare and contrast the giving of the old law on Mount Sinai with the giving of the new on the Mount of the Beatitudes. Compare and contrast the miracles of the old dispensation with those of the new, and the priesthood of the former with that of the latter.

Thus it will be found that the two Testaments are like two well-polished mirrors placed opposite to each other, having between them a brilliant light, the glory of the "Only Begotten of the Father," which they mutually flash into each other's depths, marvellously multiplying its splendours. And as the pre-established harmony of the two volumes of Scripture are by their comparison more and more discovered, the sense of the inspiration of both will be fortified, and especially will the authority and value of the Old Testament be illustrated. One of the best ways to prove the inspiration of the Old Testament is to show its intimate connection with the New.

The Value of Prayer.

We have reason to believe that a short prayer offered up God on any ordinary day may have results which shall be our glory and rejoicing through all the endless millions of cycles of eternity. As we make our minutes so God will make our ages. All good words and deeds are rendered acceptable by prayer offered silently to the Giver of all good gifts. And energy in prayer gives energy in work.

Let us improve the quality of our gift of prayer as carefully as an artist does his knowledge of colour and design, or a singer his tone of voice. Let us cultivate the power that can raise us up into lofty communion with the Ruler of the universe,

> "And moves the Hand that moves the world,
> To bring salvation down."

That is what prayer can do. What a life of spirituality, of power, of boundless possibilities! Mountains of unbelief would melt away like the mist, and our plans for the good of others would certainly prosper, while our own characters would become bright and hopeful, lovely and dignified, from companionship with "the Lofty One who inhabiteth eternity." We can do our business the same as ever, yet feel a higher and purer and brighter atmosphere around our souls than the air we breathe. That our prayers may be answered, how holy, how beautiful should we make our short stay on earth!

Let us not forget to "wait an answer." The Almighty Father is waiting to be gracious, and his angels minister to the heirs of the promises. His replies are often very striking.

When praying definitely for the spreading of the Gospel of the Kingdom throughout the world, let us sincerely long to see the King of Glory and Beauty. Only He can make us perfectly happy. The vivid electric force of heavenly love and prayer has many a time illuminated my life with flashes of joy far beyond all earthly happiness.

The Lord Almighty, in whom are all the riches of wisdom, makes it possible for the humblest and poorest to have a share in turning "the many to righteousness" through praying fervently for the descent of the Holy Spirit upon missions at home and abroad, and those who do so are true "priests unto God." If the disciples had kept to themselves silver and gold there would have been no Pentecost, as far as they were concerned.

To shine as the stars, for ever and ever, is one of the rewards. There is surely nothing to prevent any of us—pardoned, and clothed in Christ's righteousness, and guided by the Spirit of Truth—from making up our minds to flash brilliantly in the Land of Promise, a glorious constellation, while retaining our own individuality.

Think of Christ's fervent prayers on the Mount of Olives, in Gethsemane, and on the Cross, for our sakes, and pray, oh! pray, that we may add many living jewels to the Saviour's crown. Thus may we melt some of the coldness and indifference of the present day.

Let all of us readers of The Christian make up our minds to say every morning, as we open our eyes, "More fervent in prayer than yesterday!" And soon, "He that seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

Joshua and the Land of Promise.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westbourne Bridge Road.

A VETERAN COMRADE.—Joshua xiv.

It was in Gilgal that the apportionment of Canaan took place. There, where the reproach of Egypt had been rolled away, and where the main camp had stood gathered round the Tabernacle during the years that the warriors had been afar from wives and children, fighting the battles of Jehovah, it was fit that the rewards of victory should be meted out. It was a great epoch in Israelite story, as the tribes gathered around their veteran leader, before whom and Eleazar stood the urns, the one containing the name of each, and the other the name of some specified portion of that fair land, which lay all around, smiling from hills and vales to the blue heaven above.

Judah, first in war and march, was the first to draw nigh. It was a great people, and was destined yet to play a greater part in the history of Israel and of mankind. But an incident intercepted the casting of the lot which calls for earnest heed, for, after all, our religious life is a thing for ourselves, and we learn more from the act and word of individuals than from the movement of a tribe. Stand still, then, O Christian soul, and see some counterpart of thyself in thy best moments, in this demand of the grey-headed warrior, this lion's whelp, for so the name "Caleb" means. Strong, bold, heroic, there was a great deal of the lion in him beside his name. He had been the young lion of the tribe of Judah some fifty years before, but he was as strong, as he stepped out of the ranks of Judah to claim his right, as he was when Moses sent him to spy out the land.

I.—THE PRIME CHARACTERISTIC OF CALEB'S EARLY LIFE HAD BEEN HIS ENTIRE DEVOTION TO GOD.

Repeatedly we are told both of him and of Joshua that they "wholly followed the Lord." And there was some trace of this in the words of the old man, as he addressed his comrade in many a hard-fought fight, in many a weary march. The rest of the spies had turned aside, dismayed by the spectacle of giants, and walled-up cities, and vast battle array. They had ceased to keep the eye stedfastly fixed on the movements of God's will, and on the might of his hand, and instead of following hard after Him, as when Jonathan's armour-bearer stole softly after him up the pass, they had yielded to panic, and had made the hearts of the people melt.

But there had been no panic in the heart of Caleb. He was thinking only of how, when God delights in men, He brings them into the lands of milk and honey, and makes it theirs by deed of gift. And as he thought in his heart, so he spake with his mouth. He brought back word again "as it was in his heart." In his rough soldier's phrase he even dared to boast that the Canaanites were but bread waiting to be eaten by the hosts of Israel. And then in more thoughtful fashion he spoke of the shadow of God's protection as having passed from over the land, as if he had the consciousness of it being God-deserted.

He followed God wholly through the weary years that ensued. Amid the marchings and countermarchings, the innumerable deaths, the murmurings and rebellions of the people, he had retained the stedfastness of his purpose to do only God's will, to please Him, to know no other leader, and to heed no other voice. It was of no use to try and involve that stout lion's cub in any movement against Moses and Aaron. He would be no party to Miriam's jealous spite. He would not be allured by the wiles of the girls of Moab. Always strong, and true, and pure, and noble, like a rock in a changeful sea, like a snow-capped peak amid the change of cloud and storm and sun. A man in whose strong nature weaker men could hide, and who must have been a tower of strength to that new and young generation which grew up to fill the vacant places in the van of Israel. The Nestor of the Hebrew camp, in him the words of the Psalmist were anticipated, that he bore fruit in old age, and to the last was fat and flourishing.

And two things lit the path of this Greatheart, mid the gloom of the wanderings and the chaos of the conquest. There was, first, the consciousness that lay upon his heart, like sunshine on a summer ocean, that God delighted in him, that the outgoings of God's nature towards him were full of love and joy, and that the peace of God that passeth all understanding might be his inalienable possession. Walking in the light, as God was in the light, he had fellowship with God, and he bore with him the rest of the Divine nature long before he entered into its transitory type in the Land of Promise.

There was, next, the thought of Hebron. Forty-five years had passed since he had seen the white buildings of that ancient and holy city nestling beneath its terebinths. Probably he had only dwelt there for a single hour or two, whilst his comrades were bartering for pomegranates and oranges and the rich produce of its vales and hills; but it had left an ineffaceable impression upon his heart. He had seen the Vale of Eshcol where they cut down the bunch of grapes, but it had no attractions to him beside the city on which he had fixed his desire. He had beheld Jerusalem beautiful for situation and girdled by its mountains, but to his lover's eye it had no glory by reason of that greater glory that excelled. And even the Plain of Esdraelon, watered by the Kishon brook, could not steal away his fond attachment to Hebron. Hebron, beneath whose oaks Abraham had pitched his tent; Hebron, whose soil had been trodden by the feet of the Incarnate God, as with two angel attendants He visited the tent of Abraham; Hebron, where Sarah and Abraham, Isaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Leah, lay buried, each in their little niche, holding the land in trust, as the graves of the dead always hold the land for the living, until the promise of God was realised and the seed of Abraham had come back to claim its heritage.

God had read his secret, and had arranged that what his heart loved best his hand should take, and hold, and keep. It was one of the things which God had Himself prepared for those who love Him. He had taught him to love it, and immediately on his return to the camp the Divine order was promulgated, "My servant Caleb, because he hath another spirit with him, and hath followed Me fully, him will I bring into the land whereinto he went, and his seed shall possess it." That promise fell into his heart as water on a thirsty soil, or like a lover's last word cherished through long years. Often, as he lay down to sleep beside the camp fire, his last thought would be of Hebron, and amid the noontide haze, when the mirage gleamed on the horizon, it would sometimes seem to him as if the green hills of Hebron were beckoning to him across the waste. What though his comrades were carried out to die day after day, plague could not touch him, pestilence could not harm him, and death itself must drop the point of its spear when it came near his heart.

We have trace of the attitude of Caleb's heart through those long years in the words he spake at this memorable juncture when he said, "Now, therefore, give us this mountain whereof the Lord spake in that day . . . as the Lord spake. And now, behold the Lord hath kept me alive as He spake." The promise of God was his stay and comfort and exceeding great reward. He had to wait for its fulfilment, and it seemed long, as waiting times always do, especially when man waits for God. The man who knows that God delights in him, who has an assured hope of coming blessing, and who reckons on his promises, is he who can afford to follow fully, and shall live to testify to the generation that succeeds of the Divine faithfulness and truth. It was a great object-lesson for young Israel, as these two old men spoke aloud to each other of the scenes that had vanished behind the mist of the past, and attested the veracity of their covenant-keeping God.

II.—SUCH DEVOTION AS CALEB'S HAS MARVELLOUS RESULTS.

(1) It is the soil from which such a faith springs as can claim the realisation of promise.—Five-and-forty years before, God had promised to give Caleb Hebron, but the fulfilment of the promise awaited his claim. "Now, therefore, give me this mountain, whereof the Lord spake in that day." No common faith was needed to make so great a claim. Think of the time that had elapsed! Think of the greatness of the bequest, such a possession! Think of the Anakim that held it in their giant hands! But faith triumphed, and if the words, "It may be," come into his speech, words with a falter in them, the tremor, as it were, of fear, we must understand that they did not spring from any doubt of God, but of that mistrust of self which is a trait in all moral greatness. No man of noblest mould is ever self-confident. Whilst he reckons infinitely on God he always answers the charge of impending treachery with the whisper, "Lord, is it I?"

There was no misgiving in the heroism of Caleb's faith, and we can only account for its strength and steadfastness by recalling the whole-hearted consecration out of which it sprang. Only those who have wholly yielded themselves to God acquire the art of that faith which laughs at impossibilities, levels mountains, fells city walls, and puts to flight armies of aliens.

The weakness of your faith is due, not to any inherent incapacity for faith, but because you have not yet learnt the meaning of the words, "He wholly followed the Lord his God." There is waiting for you an inheritance, some promised Hebron, some blessed gift of God's infinite love in Christ. It is for you to say, "Give me this mountain." But before you can say it with an accent of assured conviction, the estuary of your life must be cleared of silt and sand, so that the tide of Divine energy may freely flow up into it.

(2) It leads to fellowship.—Hebron stands for friendship, fellowship, love. The old word means that, and perhaps that is why Caleb was so eager to strike out the new giants' name of Kirjath-arba, and to bring back the word that Abraham had often had upon his lips. It spoke to him of that communion with his Unseen Friend that he had enjoyed through the wanderings and vicissitudes of his long life, and which was not to end now, because, in the seclusion of his estate, beneath the shadow of his own vines and fig-trees, he would speak with him as a man with his friend, and anticipate the experiences of Nathanael in the days when the Gospel walked incarnate on our earth.

So is it ever. You must give yourself away to God, and follow Him, as the novice in Alpine climbing does his guide, or you will never be able to live in the Hebron where God gives Himself to the soul in passages of love which it is not lawful for man to utter. "If any man love Me, he will keep my word, and my Father will love him, and we will come to him and make our abode with him."

The world wants love. It is full of tired faces, and aching limbs, and breaking hearts. The love of God is shut away from it by the very circumstances of his nature, which is spiritual and holy, as contrasted with its life of sense and sin. Only through man does the love of God come to men. This is the reason that the Word became flesh, so that God might be able to pour the full exuberance of his love not only over them, as in sunshine and fruitful seasons, but into them. And now redeemed men who are one with the Divine man must through Him become the channels by which that blessed love may flow. But if any of us aspire to this he must take up his abode in Hebron, to go no more out. His must be its balmy air, its terraced slopes, its sunny warmth. Like the beloved apostle, whose first epistle might fairly have been dated from the sweet calm of Hebron rather than from the strife of the heathen Ephesus, we must live in the love of God. His love must dwell unhindered in us. But the only gateway into such an experience is the obedience that counts not the cost, and makes no exceptions, but follows fully its highest convictions of the will and law of God.

Those who follow God know God. He turns and sees them following, and hears their inquiry to know his secret place, and bids them come and see. Oh, bliss of bliss! They tarry with Him in such friendship as Moses had on the Mount. Their hearts burn and glow as the hours pass unheeded, uncounted, by. They come forth with the light of love transfiguring their faces, and making their common dress shine with lustrous beauty, as though they, too, had made light their vesture. Would you live in such a Hebron, then follow fully; or if you do not know which way to take, stand still until the twilight grows into the day, and thou wilt see Him going up to his cross, then follow Him.

(3) It leads to strength.—"Lo," said Caleb, "I am this day fourscore and five years old. As yet I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me; as my strength was then, even so is my strength now for war, and to go out and to come in." Consecration is the source of undecaying strength, because it allows the soul to draw on the strength of God. Just as the sap flows through the tender vine branches in spring, so does the strength of God pass into those that believe, who are not only united to Him, but fully surrendered and given up to his indwelling.

It is this point that Isaiah emphasises in his sublime contrast between the respective strength of youth and of those that wait on Jehovah. He says that under the circumstances, that sap the vigour of early manhood, so that youths faint and are weary and young men utterly fail, those that wait on the Lord renew their strength. They mount up . . . they run . . . they walk. It is the latter of these that is so difficult. It is not so difficult to soar. When the day is young, and the deep blue heavens tempt the exploring wing, and the breeze is soft, it is hard to linger by the few twigs on the top of the bare rocks. It is not very difficult to run. When the sunbeams are still aslant, and the dew is not off the grass, and the dust is not stirred, there is a feeling of exhilaration which intoxicates and compels us to substitute our quickest pace for the crawling walk. But to walk! To go forward in the sultry heat! To have patience and bear for his name's sake and not grow weary! To resist the temptation to lethargy and indolence, and luxurious ease! This is the greatest exploit of all! But for this, which had been Caleb's task for forty-five years of desert wandering, no human energy can suffice. The soul must learn to take the power which God gives to the faint, and to receive the strength He increases to such as have no might.

But this strength is accessible only to obedience. God cannot and will not bestow it except where there is a thoughtful and deliberate purpose to do his will, to follow his path, and to execute his work. But if you are set on this, then adequate strength for body and soul, mind and heart, will and spirit, will be most certainly forthcoming. The outward man may decay, but the inward man will be renewed day by day.

(4) It gives victory.—Of all the Israelites that received their inheritance in the Land of Promise, Caleb appears to have been the only one who succeeded in perfectly expelling the native occupiers of the country. The Israelites generally seem to have made but poor headway against their strong and mighty foes, with chariots of iron and their fenced walls. Repeatedly we encounter the sorrowful affirmation, they were not able to drive them out. But Caleb was a notable exception.

What though Arba was the greatest man among the Anakim (15)! What though his three grandsons Sheshai and Ahiman and Talmai, the sons of Anak, were prepared to yield their lives rather than give up possession (xv. 13)! Yet Caleb drove them out—not he indeed, but the Lord, who was with him, and gave him a victory that must otherwise have eluded even his strong hands. The man who wholly followed the Lord was alone wholly victorious.

How precious and searching is the conclusion! Our failures in expelling the giants of the heart, in dealing with inbred corruption and the assaults of Satan, are almost entirely due to some failure in consecration. We have not wholly followed the Lord. There has been some secret flaw, some leakage, some draining away of strength. This must be put right before the other can be secured. But when, so far as we know, we are entirely yielded to God, then no sin can stand before us, because nothing can stand before Him. We humbly and trustfully put the matter into his hands, and believe that He will go forth against our foes in the chariots of salvation.

(5) It enables us to give blessings to others.—Twice we are told how Achsah, who was such a prize, as well to repay Othniel for his risk of life in taking Debir, the city of the books, lighted down from her ass to ask a blessing from her father's hands. As dowry he had given her a field that lay towards the south, but destitute of springs. To water it entailed the conducting of irrigating streams from a distance. The newly-married pair talked over the matter between themselves, and felt how desirable it was to be possessed of springs; and as Othniel shrank from asking, she took it on herself to obtain the boon from Caleb. "Give me also springs of water. And he gave her the upper and the nether springs."

In the Epistle to the Galatians the Apostle speaks of men who supplied, or ministered, the Spirit to them (iii. 5). It is a remarkable expression, as though through the "hearing of faith" men were able to become channels through which the Spirit was supplied to others. What a marvellous power! Is this the spiritual reality of which the laying on of hands was the sacrament and sign? May we say that even now there is a spiritual contact with men and women who are living in the Hebron of fellowship, through which the upper and nether springs of spiritual grace are communicated?

Follow the Lord fully, so will you dwell in the land; so will your heart become as a watered garden, and a spring of water that does not fail; so will you be able to obtain promises, not for yourself only, but for others; so shall rivers of living water flow through you, and those who know you best, the Othniels and Achsahs of your home circle, will gather round you to ask a blessing, and you shall have power to open springs of spiritual blessing in the heights of the heavenly places, and in the depths of daily practical ministry, in the valley of human life.

CANMIBALS WON FOR CHRIST.*

THE book that has just been issued from the press entitled CANNIBALS WON FOR CHRIST will be regarded by the reader, we think, as one of the most charming and convincing chapters of Christian evidences that modern missionary enterprise and devotion have produced. It is worthy to rank beside the now famous narrative of the life and labours of John G. Paton; and it tells of work undertaken for Christ and humanity in the same romantic region of the far and sunny south—the islands of the New Hebrides. Mr. Michelsen, the Scandinavian missionary, who is the central figure in the story, is a man of an unusually self-effacing temperament, and he has not chosen to invest his tale with the same halo of personal interest that attaches to many records of missionary effort; but the main facts that compose the volume are similar in character. It is a realistic and delightful record of pioneer Christian work among cannibal and otherwise degraded tribes; of wise and patient toil in the face of numberless difficulties and real perils; of marvellous deliverances from what seemed impending death; of the wonder-working power of the Gospel and the efficacy of fearless, prayerful faith; and of savage, superstitious and bloodthirsty heathen turned into sincere worshippers of the living God, and loving followers of the meek and lowly Jesus.

Mr. Michelsen, with the aid of a competent literary collaborateur, has given us a book that it will take many Robert Buchanans to answer: and which ought to give pause to that misguided poet before he attempts any further proof that either Christ or Christianity is being "played out," as the theatrical phrase goes. We hope it will be widely read; by believers for the confirmation of their faith, and by unbelievers for the chasing away of doubts as to the power of Christ and his Gospel to regenerate and reconstruct the worst of men.

The pathetic circumstance that while Mr. Michelsen has been passing these pages through the press, a mysterious providence has taken from his side the loved partner of his home life and public work, will serve, we trust, to awaken in the minds of many readers a prayerful sympathy for this true-hearted missionary, as he returns by-and-by to the field where he has already been so much honoured of God, and where he hopes to prove still further the reality of God's preserving and sustaining grace.

The numerous illustrations, graphically sketched by a Norwegian artist, under the missionary's instruction, greatly enhance the worth of the narrative; as also does the excellent appendix in which the history of Christian missions to the New Hebrides group is briefly but compendiously told. Dr. Lamb's added description of "the islands and the people" is a wonderfully eloquent bit of missionary literature.

THE POPE'S JUBILEE.—On Sunday the Pope received a congratulatory telegram from Queen Victoria on the occasion of his episcopal jubilee. It wished him every happiness; he replied with an expression of sincere thanks.

THE METHODISTS OF VIENNA resumed on Sunday last the household religious services which were some time ago suspended by the authorities. Rev. T. B. Stephenson, LL.D., ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference, preached, his discourse being translated into German.

THE MARGARET LOUISA HOME.

BY MRS. J. FOWLER WILLING, NEW YORK.

THIS is the beautiful name of a beautiful Home for self-supporting women in New York. It is the gift of Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard to the Young Woman's Christian Association. It is an excellent thought excellently carried out, as anyone may see who crosses its kindly threshold.

To a novice this great city is an immense spider's web. The keenest brain that the enemy can command is taxed to the utmost to invent snares and traps. Working women are, of all, most imperilled. The Young Woman's Christian Association is their friend, tried and true; but it has had its hands full to find safe, comfortable boarding-places for them when they first come to the city. God lifted a great load off those noble ladies when he put this Home scheme into the heart of Mrs. Shepard. Né Margaret Louisa Vanderbilt, she had the means, and straightway this sweet sisterly result appeared.

The Home is in the same block with the Association building, and connected by corridors with the chapel, where are held daily religious services for women. A Bible in every room, "prayers" in the parlour every day, guests admitted only upon references from pastors and employers, and nothing allowed that would not be in a well-regulated family—one must be as safe here as in her own home.

It is economical, because the building was a gift, and the managing brain a benevolence. Nice, well-furnished rooms for fifty cents a day, with two beds eighty cents. Good table board for 3.50 dols. a week. None of its seventy-five guests may stay longer than a month. In that time each can learn the ways of the city, and be better able to take care of herself. Then some newer comer takes her place.

Everything that steam, gas, electricity, soft tints, tiles, books, engravings, music, and pretty ornaments can be reasonably expected to do to make a sweet, restful home Mrs. Shepard has furnished, using her own fine taste in it all.

A woman coming alone from the country or across the sea who wants to spend a month in the city, or one who is seeking instruction or employment, can write to the superintendent of the Margaret Louisa Home, 14E, Sixteenth-street, and engage a room. She will find herself in the business heart of the city, with all transit conveniences at hand, as well as the religious services, the helps to find work, and the free classes of the Young Woman's Christian Association.

Mrs. Shepard has set a noble example for women of wealth. Well may others of them go and do likewise. Why cannot a half-dozen or so in each large city, who might not separately be able to do so much, unite in building such a Home? Its receipts would take care of its expenses; and if its management was likely to be a burden, the Young Woman's Christian Association or the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would gladly accept that responsibility.

One fourth of the people of the United States are in large towns. Multitudes of women are dependent upon their own efforts, and have others dependent upon them. They seek their share of the opportunity that comes from this centring of force. They need a little help at the start, just such help as a Home like this can give. This house is always full of new artists, writers, brain and hand workers who are making their venture for success. In the years to come thousands who stand high in their art, profession, or business will thank God for the safe, kind comfort that tided them over the hardest place in the upward climb, by steadying their courage, their self-respect, and their faith.

SAILORS' REST AID SOCIETY. — The sixth annual report of this organisation is a record of vigorous Christian work among sailors in Mediterranean ports. From various centres Gospel truth is disseminated, alike by the printed page and the evangelist's message. Those who do business upon the mighty waters are shown the way of God and weaned from paths of sin. Temperance influence joins hands with Christian love, and there have been, as a result, many trophies of grace in the shape of men reclaimed from habits of drunkenness and vice. Roman Catholics have entered the Naples Rest and been enlightened; the destitute and despairing have made the acquaintance of the mission workers and been cheered and encouraged in a time of need. The report tells of important extension in Sicily. The secretary of the society is Mr. Stephen Burrowes, 7 Vico 2, Del Filiero, Naples.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

VI.

THE SYMBOLISM OF THE BOOK.

The Apocalypse must be a sealed book to us till the fact is clearly apprehended that it is mainly written in hieroglyphic language. To attempt to understand all its expressions literally is to stumble fatally at the very threshold. Nor, indeed, does anyone, or any school of expositors, thus interpret it. Nobody expects to see a real material Lamb in Heaven, a real red dragon with seven heads and ten horns, a real woman clothed with the sun and the moon, under her feet, that the stars of heaven will fall upon the earth, and so on. All admit that these and a number of other expressions in the book are symbols, signs, metaphors, figures, or whatever else you like to call them, and are not to be understood in their literal sense.

The extent to which the language of symbol is used is, however, not so fully apprehended as it should be by many; and as to the exact meaning of the symbols, and their application to this or that fact in history—whether past, present, or future—opinions naturally differ. It is well, then, to consider the symbolic character of the Apocalypse, and in a general way the method by which it should be interpreted.

I.—The symbolic character of the Apocalypse. This is clearly announced in its very first verse. It is "the Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto Him"—and He sent and "signified it," i.e. sign-ified it, or showed it by signs or symbols—"unto his servant John." It is then a disclosure of hidden things, of future events, by means of certain hieroglyphs, to which there is a key.

This was no new method of revelation on the part of the Most High. Though employed to a greater extent and in minuter detail in the Revelation than elsewhere, symbolism or parabolic language appears to have formed an almost constant means of communicating the mind and purposes of God to the children of men. What was the whole sacrificial system, what were the institutions of tabernacle and temple, but an enunciation in symbolic terms or types of the deepest spiritual truths connected with the character of God and the redemption of men? When He would make known future events to Abraham, to Joseph, to Pharaoh, to Nebuchadnezzar, to Daniel, or to disciples in the days of our Lord, we find Him employing the smoking furnace and the burning lamp, the twelve stars and sheaves, the seven kine and ears of corn, the great image, the four beasts, and all the figures of the parables. At all times that word was true, "I have used similitudes." The Book of the Revelation is but a continuation of the methods adopted in both patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations.

And is it not evident that there was a twofold purpose in this?

For one thing, the language of hieroglyph and symbol, of type and similitude, is one that is intelligible to all. People of every nation under heaven can understand "dumb show," or a pictorial expression of thought, without any effort or linguistic attainment. No knowledge of grammar or foreign tongue is needed to convey to the mind of North American Indian, or South Sea Islander, of Greenlander, or Chinese, the needs of human nature. The little child can apprehend the meaning of visible material objects before it can articulate or understand a single word. And so to the illiterate, the simple, the poor of this world, the ranks from which the majority of the people of God appear to be drawn, the language of signs is peculiarly adapted. It is cosmopolitan in the highest degree.

For another thing, it is admirably fitted to conceal as well as to reveal. "Why speakest Thou unto them in parables?" asked the disciples of our Lord. "Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given," was the solemn reply, "Therefore speak I unto them in parables, lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart." "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." The wisdom of this world may master the many tongues of the world; the little child in the kingdom of God can look at his Father's picture-book and learn its object lessons.

To have foretold the future in other ways would, morever, humanly speaking, have supplied a means for frustrating the prediction, or, at least, for attempts to frustrate it. If the haters of God and his truth had been able to perceive, by their unaided intelligence, the things He purposed to do, would they not have sought in every way to prevent their coming to pass? Doubtless they would have failed, and have only helped, as Joseph's brethren, to accomplish them. But the concealment of the plans of God from the world was one of the methods by which He was pleased, silently and unknown to them, to work out his marvellous purposes.

When, therefore, He condescended to give to his servants in the Churches a revelation of the things which were shortly to come to pass, and to map out the course of future history—so far as it concerned them to know it—from the time of his departure to that of his return, and even beyond, our Lord again "used similitudes" and "opened his dark sayings." Such is the character of the book. It is not to be construed literally. Its figurative or allegorical form must be apprehended if its prophetic teachings are to be understood.

It must, however, be borne in mind that mingled with the figurative language of the book there is a great deal of ordinary language. To distinguish where the one or the other is used requires not only spiritual discernment, but also common sense. The latter is apparently often laid aside in handling the Apocalypse. It is forgotten how constantly metaphorical or figurative terms are used conjointly with literal terms in everyday life, and that, as a general rule, common sense suffices to apprehend the distinction between the two. Take, for instance, such expressions as "All London is gone out of town," "Such and such a politician has beat a retreat," "It rained cats and dogs." In each of these both metaphorical and literal language is employed, and no one mistakes the one for the other.

The same obtains in the Revelation, and both spiritual and common sense must be employed in order to decide whether the particular expression is to be understood in a figurative or literal manner. No absolute rule can be laid down. Proper names may denote actual persons or places, e.g., "Jesus," "I John," "Ephesus," "Pergamos," and the other five churches, "Balaam," "Balak," or they may be entirely symbolic in their character, as "Jews" (ch. i. 9, and iii. 9), "Jezebel," "Babylon," "The New Jerusalem"; and both uses may occur in closest juxtaposition. "Here is the mind that hath wisdom." "The wise shall understand."

II.—The method of interpretation. I do not say, How are they to be applied? That is quite another thing. The application of the symbolic prophecy may vary with the position of the student, his knowledge of history, or his appreciation of the comparative importance of its events. Here there may be room for difference of opinion, and such difference is surely as allowable as it is probable. But concerniug the meaning of the symbols there ought to be, and in reality there is, but little difference. When it is expressly declared that the seven kine meant seven years, that the four beasts denoted four great empires, or that the seven candlesticks represented seven churches, no room is left for diversity of view. The meaning is definite and precise. God is his own interpreter. He has spoken. No other solution is either possible or permissible.

Can we, then, find a key which will unlock the mysterious terms, and open to us "the things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world?" I believe we can. Such a key is given to us, first in those symbolic prophecies of the Old Testament, which all admit to have been fulfilled, and then in the explanations vouchsafed by the Divine Author of the Apocalypse itself.

First, in the Old Testament. It is astonishing to notice how almost every symbol which is made use of in the Revelation has been already employed by the prophets of former days, and either interpreted by them, or explained by the accomplishment of their predictions. Thus, to take a few instances, we know that the sun and moon and stars of Genesis xxxvii. denoted the heads of Israel, the powers that rule—"the sun to rule by day, the moon and stars to rule by night," (Gen. i. 16 and Ps. cxxxvi. 8, 9)—that their obscuration or fall figured the overthrow of a dynasty, state, or kingdom—e.g., Is. xiii. 1—10, the fall of Babylon; Ez. xxxii. 2, 7, 8, 11, the destruction of Egypt by Babylon—that the overflowing of a river meant the irruption of a mighty nation over neighbouring territories (Is. viii. 7, 8); that the four wild beasts of Dan. vii. represented four kings or kingdoms which were to arise (verses 17—23); that the locusts of Joel i. prefigured the nations which were to lay Israel waste; that "the sea and the waves roaring" described the tumultuous uprising of peoples and nations (Ps. lxv. 7; Is. v. 30, xvii. 12, lx. 5; Jer. vi. 23, li. 42, 55). Space will not admit of further instances; but the line of study will amply repay the diligent searcher after truth. The Old Testament key will fit many a ward in the Apocalyptic lock.

But, secondly, the Giver of the Revelation, who hath the key of David, has himself placed it in our hands. He has not, it is true, explained every symbol; but he has given explanations of no less than thirteen as a sufficient indication of the way in which his servants are to interpret the remaining ones. They are the following:—

1. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches (ch. i. 20).
2. The seven candlesticks are the seven churches (ch. i. 20).
3. The two witnesses are two candlesticks, or churches (ch. xi. 4).
4. The dragon, or serpent, is the devil (ch. xii. 9).
5. The three frogs are demoniacal spirits (ch. xvi. 14).
6. The seven heads of the beast are seven mountains (ch. xvii. 9).
7. The seven heads are also seven kings, or powers (ch. xvii. 10).
8. The beast is one of those powers (ch. xvii. 11).
9. The ten horns are ten kings or powers (ch. xvii. 12).
10. The many waters are nations (ch. xvii. 15).
11. The woman is a city exercising paramount authority (ch. xvii. 18).
12. The lake of fire is the second death (ch. xx. 14).
13. The New Jerusalem is the Bride, the Lamb's wife (ch. xxi. 9, 10).

Here, then, we have a Divine solution of the enigma, not, indeed, sufficient to disclose all its import to the world at large, but enough to guide the servants of God in their humble and prayerful search into the meaning of the apocalyptic imagery and to show them the lines on which their inquiries should proceed. The key is in their hands.

I can hardly conclude this paper better than by appending the following extract from Sir Isaac Newton's "Observations on the Prophecies," wherein he gives a general indication of the way in which the symbols of the prophetic word should be interpreted:—

PROPHETIC LANGUAGE AND SYMBOL.

"When a beast or man is put for a kingdom, his parts and qualities are put for the analogous parts and qualities of the kingdom; as the head of a beast, for the great men who precede and govern; the tail for the inferior people, who follow and are governed; the heads, if more than one, for the number of capital parts, or dynasties, or dominions in the kingdom, whether collateral or successive, with respect to the civil government; the horns on any head, for the number of kingdoms in that head, with respect to military power; seeing for understanding, and the eyes for men of understanding and policy, and in matters of religion for Ἐπίσκοποι, Bishops; speaking, for making laws; the mouth, for a law-giver, whether civil or sacred; the loudness of the voice, for might and power; the faintness thereof, for weakness; eating and drinking, for acquiring what is signified by the things eaten and drank; the hairs of a beast, or man, and the feathers of a bird, for people; the wings, for the number of kingdoms represented by the beast; the arm of a man, for his power, or for any people wherein his strength and power consists; his feet, for the lowest of the people, or for the latter end of the kingdom; the feet, nails, and teeth of beasts of prey, for armies and squadrons of armies; the bones, for strength, and for fortified places; the flesh, for riches and possessions; and the days of their acting, for years; and when a tree is put for a kingdom, its branches, leaves, and fruit signify as do the wings, feathers, and food of a bird or beast. When a man is taken in a mystical sense, his qualities are often signified by his actions, and by the circumstances of things about him. So a ruler is signified by his riding on a beast; a warrior and conqueror, by his having a sword and bow; a potent man, by his gigantic stature; a judge, by weights and measures; a sentence of absolution, or condemnation, by a white or a black stone; a new dignity, by a new name; moral or civil qualifications, by garments; honour and glory, by splendid apparel; royal dignity, by purple or scarlet, or by a crown; righteousness, by white and clean robes; wickedness, by spotted and filthy garments; affliction, mourning, and humiliation, by clothing in sackcloth; dishonour, shame, and want of good works, by nakedness; error and misery, by drinking a cup of his or her wine that causeth it; propagating any religion for gain, by exercising traffick and merchandise with that people whose religion it is; worshipping or serving the false Gods of any nation, by committing adultery with their princes, or by worshipping them, a Council of a kingdom, by its image; idolatry, by blasphemy; overthrow in war, by a wound of man or beast; a durable plague or war, by a sore and pain; the affliction of persecution which a people suffers in travelling to bring forth a new kingdom, by the pain of a woman in labour to bring forth a man-child; the dissolution of a body politic or ecclesiastic, by the death of a man or beast; and the revival of a dissolved dominion, by the resurrection of the dead."—Sir Isaac Newton: "Observations upon the Prophecies," Chap. II.

May it be ours to follow the steps of the "man greatly beloved" who, when he had seen the vision of his head which troubled him, "came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this," and it is added, "So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things."

LEPERS IN INDIA.

In a letter lately received from Rev. I. B. Bawa, a native minister of the Kolaba District, Bombay Presidency, he says, in speaking of the terrible fate of the leper in his district:—"As soon as a man, or a woman, or even a child, shews some symptoms of leprosy, he is put out of house and village. He cannot put in his appearance in the village, except at the time appointed by the villagers for begging. He must live at a considerable distance from the village, thrown at the mercy of the serpents and scorpions which abound in the Konkan, to say nothing of the wolves, leopards, tigers, etc., which often visit the villages. He can neither pay nor receive visits; he is an outcast, worse than a dog or a pig! His state is worse still if he happens to be from the lower castes."

Mr. Bawa goes on to plead for funds to enable him to erect two small asylums in his district, one near his own home, and one a little further off, at a village. These buildings will cost from £75 to £100 each.

By the same mail by which Mr. Bawa's letter came we received one from Rev. F. Hahn, of Gossner's Evangelical Lutheran Mission, in which, speaking of a visit to our Leper Asylum at Purulia, Chota-Nagpore, he says: "How glad I was to see the happy faces of the leprous women who had got clothes from friends at home, and the bright eyes of the children of the home sparkling with joy about the presents they had received. I questioned several of the leprous men whether they realised the love of Jesus, and if they loved Him in return, and I got very satisfactory replies. I was present at the Lord's Supper on Christmas afternoon, and was overwhelmed at the sight of 154 Christian lepers, men and women, devoutly, and apparently most heartily, partaking of the same. It was indeed a grand spectacle, to see which one might well travel a hundred miles and more, and at which the angels must have rejoiced. The chapel is too small, and some more buildings are required for the accommodation of new-comers. This Leper Asylum at Purulia is indeed the crown of our mission now, and I would be so glad if the means were supplied to carry its work on even on a larger scale."

The contrast between the above two extracts will be sufficient to show the immense benefit which comes to the poor leper when he is taken into one of our Christian asylums.

FLORENCE.—A very interesting and useful medical mission is now being carried on in connection with the San Frediano Mission here, conducted by Signor Luzzi. The dispensary is under the charge of Dr. Henderson, ably assisted by three or four ladies as dressers, etc., who themselves have made 700 surgical dressings during the season. There is an average attendance of from 90 to 100 on the two days a week in which the dispensary is open. The usual method of conducting the operations of a medical mission is adopted.

A MODERN INQUISITION.

The following facts are related in the course of an article in the current issue of The Contemporary Review, entitled "On a Russian Farm":—

One fine day, when the sun was shining kindly, the flowers smiling sweetly, and the birds proclaiming the goodness of God, a panting lad rushed into the place shouting, "Black day!" The peasants flew from their huts to learn more of the sad news; mothers clutched their babies; fathers clenched their teeth; even little children realised that danger was near.

"What have you seen?" asked the mothers.

"A priest with a district inspector in one waggon, and another waggon full of police."

A thick cloud of dust appeared between the last houses of the village, and soon the two waggons drew up in the centre of the wretched place. Out jumped the priest; behind him stood the soldiers, one of whom held a rope.

"Here, you," said the priest sternly, pointing to the nearest villager, "show me your certificate of having come to communion."

"Dearest father," answered the peasant, "I haven't got it."

"You dog," continued the Gospel messenger, "why did you stay away from communion?"

"The harvest, hard work, my wife was ill. Oh, forgive me, dear little father," cried the wretched man. And falling on his knees, he clutched the hem of the priest's robe.

"I'll teach you to find time," said the priest significantly. "Twenty-five will suit him—eh?" said he, turning to the district inspector, whose military cap, rows of brass buttons, belts, boots, and sword gave a strangely military character to the missionary enterprise.

The inspector had been a non-commissioned officer in the army, had served in the Turkoman campaign, and understood the Oriental methods of earning money by official means. He and the priest were working this route on joint profits, and there was no danger, therefore, that the secular arm of the law would be raised to shield the crouching heretic from the sentence of the ecclesiastical one.

The priest's query was answered by an approving nod, and the police servants promptly produced from beneath the second waggon a bench constructed with particular reference to the dimensions of a human body. The peasant was roped down to this with a dexterity born of constant practice, and a police soldier commenced to lay on the blows with a heavy lash. At the ninth blow the back of the priest's victim suggested the meat on a butcher's block, and at the tenth he roared out: "Dearest father, have mercy; I will pay what I can."

The police inspector ordered a halt, and the priest asked gently, "Well, what will you pay for your sins, my sweet child?"

"Five roubles," groaned the victim.

"That's a fine joke," laughed the police inspector. "You take us for fools. Ha, ha! only five roubles. Go on with the flogging."

"You shall have ten," roared the peasant.

"Nonsense; go on with the flogging," answered the police inspector.

"Twenty," finally came from the half-dead body on the butcher's bench.

The priest leaned his mouth to the poor fellow's ear, and said insinuatingly: "Let me intercede for you; make it twenty-five, that is a nice round sum; it breaks my heart to have you suffer. Shall we say twenty-five?"

The peasant could only nod his head feebly in sign of assent. The soldiers unstrapped him, his shirt was thrown over his bleeding body, and away he staggered to his hovel. The little money he had saved in the hopes of buying a cow, or perhaps paying off arrears of taxes, was taken from him and put into the pockets of the priest and his official partner. That night was a bitter one in the hut of that poor man and his family. His only crime had been to worship God as he thought fit. He had harmed no man, had violated no law which a civilised man can respect. That poor peasant is too poor to emigrate, too ignorant to change his occupation, too helpless to avoid the petty tyranny that presses upon him. His cries never reach the outer world, for to him Heaven is high and the Czar far away. No newspaper correspondents penetrate to his miserable corner, and if they did they would never have gone back alive. Priests and police can do there pretty much as they like. No questions will be raised so long as the government receives the amount of taxes it has reason to expect.

Alsenstorm's story made me feel sick, for it went on to tell me how the clerical beast went on from one peasant to the other, flogging each in turn, until he had squeezed out all the money that could reasonably be expected. Afterwards the cabins were searched in turn for any images or emblems that might be unorthodox, and when the visitation was completed, the peasants stared blankly at one another, as people over whom a devastating blizzard has passed. Of course, I suggested to my friend that the case he mentioned must be very exceptional indeed.

"Exceptional!" exclaimed he excitedly. "I wish it were. The Greek Church, backed by the Third Section, is visiting every village of the empire in the same spirit, if not with the same instruments, that I have referred to. The Protestants of the Baltic Provinces, the Finns, the Poles, the nonconforming Russians in every part of the country, the German colonists in Bessarabia, all are the objects of persecution to the very fullest possible extent. The more remote the heretic, the more brutal are the means employed for his conversion. In communities where the people are educated the priests have to be careful, but the spirit that underlies the war cry of 'Russia for the Russians,' is the same that watched the flogging of that bleeding heretic to the eastward of us. The Russian Church improves nothing; it can only drag down, flog, and exterminate. Give it time, and one day we shall lose the little light that still glimmers in Poland and along the Baltic."

WORK IN SOUTH LONDON.

By LADY HOPE,
Authoress of "Our Coffee Room," etc.

Have you ever looked in a face of God's creation and seen there an utterly helpless, miserable blank? Have you ever felt that upon your shoulders there rests a responsibility regarding that soul? And has that responsibility proved a burden on yourself—a burden heavier than you could bear?

This is our case just now! In the neighbourhood where we are working, there are certain evils that reign almost supreme. They are these—atheism, socialism, Romanism, and drink. These have devastated the human garden, and it needs strong forces to compete with them. Nothing short of the divine influence can conquer our difficulties here. And these I am thankful to say we have obtained, amongst the people in answer to prayer, and constant efforts to bring them in contact with the truth.

The room we have been allowed to use is far too small; nor can we continue to use it permanently. We therefore, at the earnest entreaties of the people, desire to carry on the work in larger premises, and more suitable ones.

A large hall, used in the past for music, dancing, and drinking, is now closed. Why should we not use it for Gospel services, meetings, classes, gymnasium, clothing, and coal clubs? Plenty of friends are willing to help us as workers.

We only want (1) the sum of money necessary to enable us to secure the hall and enter it; and (2) a few friends to promise us good annual subscriptions that the work may be carried on well. So important and useful a centre for good would this place become that its influence would spread far and wide.

The sum required at present is £1500, and this is small indeed compared with the vast necessities of the neighbourhood, or the results that would accrue from an extended Gospel work in it by so great a variety of means as could be possible through this agency. We should be able thus to aid and encourage many smaller efforts that need building up and helping, and often require a larger hall for their special meetings.

The poverty is very great here. But we have seen many homes transformed through the power of Christ and the banishment of the drink curse from their midst. Some of our friends have helped us to relieve in some small degree the sufferings in extreme cases. We always have a heavy list of these before us. Nothing but the most strenuous need for both souls and bodies of these poor people, whose intelligence, gratitude, and willing reception of the Gospel message bring us encouragement, could have induced me thus to put before those who have already so many interests this thrilling work.

PUTTING OUT THE FIRES.

Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out.—Prov. xxvi. 20.

Solomon said a great many wise things, and although this little sentence teaches such a simple truth, it is none the less wise on that account. You know very well that if coals were not put on your fires during those frosty winter evenings which we sometimes have, the fires would soon go out, and you would be left in the cold. If the stoker of a railway engine did not keep up the furnace, there would not be much work for the driver, would there?

Very likely some of you will say, "We don't need anyone to prove to us that a fire won't burn without fuel; any child knows that." Agreed; I hope you will say the same when you have read this short paper. First of all we will look at those fires to which we should not add fuel, and which we should allow to die out.

The last part of the verse from which we have taken our text reads thus: "So where there is no talebearer the strife ceaseth." Talebearing is a mean habit, yet how often do boys and girls tell wicked tales about their companions; when they do this, trouble is sure to follow. Both young and old are apt to see the dark side of a person—all his faults and little failings—and so eager are we to find out something against him that we are quite blind to his bright side, all his kind deeds and loving words. We always see his frown—never see his smile.

If we want to avoid strife and quarrelling let us also avoid talebearing. Remember that "it takes two to make a quarrel," in other words, one is the fire and the other is the fuel. If the fuel won't feed the fire, the fire won't burn.

Then there is another fire which greatly troubles some people, and at times it gets so fierce that one almost thinks that it needs a good many fire engines to put it out. I mean "temper." When a boy goes into a temper his schoolfellows often tease him, and make him ten times worse. That is fanning the flame, and piling wood on the fire. How much better to leave the boy alone until the fire has gone out!

Another fire is "selfishness," and we can "keep up" this ourselves, by giving way to selfish habits, by always trying to please ourselves, and by never thinking of the comforts of others.

Another fire is "story-telling." When a girl stoops to falsehoods, she will find the fire within her gives forth such a heat that her friends won't feel comfortable near her, but if she checks the falsehood as it rises to her lips, and forces it back, then the fire would go out for want of fuel.

There is, also, the fire of "covetousness." You know that Commandment which says that we are not to covet anything which is our neighbour's, don't you? Well, how often do you think that Commandment is broken? How often do you break it? Those who have not wealth wish they had. They covet the splendid parks, the high-stepping horses and grand carriages, which belong to other people. Each time this is done a block of wood is added to the fire of covetousness. The rich folks are not always the happiest.

Boys and girls who live in fine houses sometimes treat their companions with contempt. They are thus feeding the fire of "pride" and "vain-glory." There is nothing to be despised more than that feeling which causes some people to look down upon their fellows as "inferior kind of animals." If there is any pride of this kind in our hearts, let us pluck it up by the roots and cast it from us. The love of Christ teaches us that we are all alike in the sight of the Almighty, and if the King makes no difference, surely it must be altogether out of place for one subject to say to another, "I am better than thou."

No doubt you will be able to find many more fires which it would be wise to put out. You can discover them for yourselves. I will just name one or two. The fire of "revenge." A boy is vexed with another boy, and says, "I'll pay him out." "He shall suffer for this." Day by day the wood is piled on the fire, until it suddenly gives vent to its fury, and then—well, sometimes the results are so sad that we don't like to speak of them. We have met a few girls who seem to live only for the display of their "fine clothing." Have you ever seen a peacock strutting about the grounds of a park or pleasure garden? How vain and conceited he looks; and you cannot help thinking what a poor, foolish bird he is after all. Don't you see girls look almost as foolish at times?

But there are fires which should be kept up and even increased. Now we come to the other side of the question, and it is a bright side too. There is the fire of "knowledge," which glows more brightly as it is fed. This applies also to the fires of "purity," "usefulness," "self-denial," and many more. We can add very much to the "happiness" of others—perhaps their fire is low—kind deeds, loving words, true sympathy, are all blocks of wood which we can cast on the fire to make it burn more cheerfully. Very cheap kind of fuel this—is it not? Yet money cannot buy it, and, oh, how much good it can do!

I hope that you have the best fire of all burning right in your heart, "the constraining love of Christ." If you have, feed it by obeying the commands of the Saviour, and by reading of Him in the Holy Book of God. Have you received the promise which He gave to his disciples, "another comforter, even the Holy Spirit"? Does He dwell in the innermost recesses of your heart?

DISCHARGED FOR WILLIE'S SAKE.

There are often pathetic incidents in real life which never get into books. Here is one clipped from a Chicago paper which will appeal to all the children who read it, and make them appreciate better than ever before the father who has no bad habit, and is an honour instead of a disgrace to his children. It does, indeed, seem strange that a father who has such a good boy as Willie is could ever burden him by getting drunk and being arrested for disorderly conduct. Thank God, dear children, that you have never had to appear at court to plead for your father's discharge for drunkenness.

At the armoury yesterday morning, when Justice Lyon opened his mail, he found the following letter written in a boyish hand: "Jan. 21, 1893.—Judge Lyon—Kind Sir,—If my papa's case comes before you, will you please be easy with him, as my sister Lelia and I have no one to care for us. He is kind and good at all times. His only fault is drinking. Please oblige.—Willie Jordon." When the case of O. S. Jordon, charged with disorderly conduct, was called, a bright-faced sunny-haired boy, not more than ten years old, who had been watching the faces of the prisoners as they were led into the dock, gave a cry of joy and rushed into the arms of the prisoner. Child and man wept, and there was a suspicion of moisture in other eyes when Justice Lyon inquired in a subdued tone what the defendant had been doing. "It was a simple case of drunk," replied Sergeant Ward. "Well, he's discharged this time for Willie's sake," said his honour, and Willie led his father from the dock. At the door leading from the court-room the two were joined by the golden-haired Lelia, who wept for joy.—N. Y. Evangelist.

THE SAVIOUR ALONE.

By a Schoolboy.

"When the evening was come He was there alone."—St. Matt. xiv. 23.

Across the lake the sun had nearly set,
The wavelets danced in rippling mellow light,
Soft was the splash as trees and water met,
And low the moaning of the breeze that night.

The day was past and all its trials o'er—
The eager, thronging crowd, the words of love,
The preaching that confounded ancient lore,
The doctrine not of this world, but above.

Now all were gone; deserted was the scene,
No sound disturbed the stillness of the air,
But One of humble though majestic mien,
The only figure on the desert bare.

Slowly He paces on to take his rest,
Gazing with thoughtful eyes where thousands trod,
To get to yonder rugged mountain crest,
The Son of Man ascends to be with God.

Oh, sweet those hours when Son to Father cried,
Upon the Mount to rest and be alone;
E'en though his couch the desert mountain side,
And for a pillow to his head a stone.

The rippling of the lake was but a sound
That seem'd to soothe as wearied down He fell,
And silent were the wings that hover'd round
The sleeping Saviour, Christ Emmanuel.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

An officer in the Imperial Customs, who has been for eleven years in China, bears the following testimony to the C.I.M. and its workers.

I-chang, Nov. 23, 1892.

Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp arrived here by steamer on the 19th inst., en route for Chung-k'ing; they were in charge of a party of ladies, some of whom had but recently arrived in China. The party consisted of thirteen, inclusive of Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp. When they arrive at Chung-k'ing the ladies will be sent on to various stations in the interior; I believe they will go two and two.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp are, to my mind, ideal missionaries; when they came to this country they were prepared for and expected hardship and trouble, therefore, when these things happen they are neither cast down nor discouraged. Mr. Beauchamp is quite free from pride, and considers no duty too humble to perform; his dress, while clean, is certainly not lavish; and he is so taken up with his work as to be at all times at the command of the poorest coolie, if only he can teach Christ; his soul is in all he undertakes to do. A great number of men such as he are at once wanted for China. Let them be rich or poor, if they have but the right spirit, send them.

I have seen a great deal of the members and of the work of the China Inland Mission during my eleven years' residence in China; and I should like to be allowed to add my humble testimony to the great good they are doing as a body, and to the whole-heartedness with which the members perform their work. None endeavour to shirk an unpleasant post or duty, but they push on manfully; and although they may often meet with opposition, they are not discouraged.

THE MONEY GIVEN FOR MISSIONARY WORK is not squandered upon handsome dwelling-houses and sumptuous living; but the members live simply, as becomes those whose main object is the conversion of the Chinese, and who realise the fact that many poor Christians deprive themselves of even necessaries so as to be able to give their mite to the Lord's work; the expenses are watched with jealous care.
